To establish one or more United States Navy mail lines, by employing such vessels of the Navy as in his discretion are available for the purpose of establishing and maintaining regular communication between the east or west coast, or both coasts, of the United States and either or both coasts of South America, and between the United States and the countries of Europe.

That bill was introduced subsequently to the resolution, and came up before the Senate for consideration and was passed by the Senate on the 3d day of August, 1914, after certain of the nations of Europe had engaged in hostilities, one day before the formal declaration of war.

Now, I want to read some things that the Senator from Massachusetts said about this bill and that resolution of his. In his speech on the floor of the Senate he said, among other things:

Mr. President, at the present time South American mails are sent at long and sometimes irregular intervals, and all American mails south of the Equator are carried in vessels sailing under a foreign flag.

He also said:

The service is very slow, and this, it may be easily assumed, militates against the development of our trade with South America.

We are in the position of having spent $400,000,000 in the building of a canal, one of the reasons for doing so being that it would aid in the extension of our foreign trade; but, as far as I know, there are no American steamers prepared to undertake this service.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] added his mite. He characterized the bill as a makeshift. He wanted something better, but he said:

We are without a line from either the Gulf, the Pacific, or the Atlantic coast of the United States to South America.

This bill proposes to put in service a few inadequate ships, if we can spare them from other service; ships that will carry a handful of passengers and a little freight; slow ships, I take it, almost every one of them; and we are to be put in competition with the great countries of the world, with their magnificent steamships, by calling together this conglomeration of third-class or fourth-class ships for this service. I shall not oppose it.

Although it had in it the principle of Government ownership gone to seed in the most flagrant and offensive way possible to one who disapproves of that principle—Government ownership and Government operation, not through a corporation in which the Government is a mere stockholder, its traffic declared by law to be subject to all the regulations and laws that apply to privately owned vessels, but the operation of Government vessels under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy—the Senator says, "I do not oppose it." He does not say he is opposed to it, and you can not gather from his speech that there is any opposition because the vessels are to be operated by the Government; but his criticism is upon the ground that it is a makeshift, inadequate, and that the vessels to be used are small.

I am gratified to observe—

Says the Senator from New Hampshire, continuing his speech, speaking of his speeches made before—that in those speeches, among other things, I called attention to two possible complications which might arise if we did not have an adequate merchant marine. One was that in the event of a great European war we would not have any ships to transport the products of our farms and our factories. Those are the words that I used. That is exactly the situation which confronts us at this very moment—

That was the 3d day of August, 1914—

The other suggestion I made was that in the event of a war between a great foreign nation and our nation we would have no adequate auxiliary ships to supplement our battleship fleet, and that is exactly the situation which exists to-day.

If we only had adequate steamship lines—

He says, at another place—between the United States and South America, there would be a boom in American trade which would astonish not only our own people but the world.

We had then, Mr. President, only such transportation as we could buy from our competitors, just as we have now. What the Senator then said was true at that time, and it is true now. One of the objects of this bill, one of the purposes of this bill, is to do that very thing. We have reserved the right to the Government, in the sale or lease of these vessels, to fix the routes, to prescribe where they shall go, and I trust that if this bill passes and the Government acquires these ships it will see to it that they are used to establish a regular line between this country and North and South America. If that is done the vessels that will be supplied will very largely, if not entirely, supply the needs of our South American trade, and when this war closes we will be in a position to protect and defend our trade with those countries against any comer and any competitor.

I had intended to discuss the various ventures of the Government in recent years in the field of business enterprise, and in every instance with success. One of the measures to which I refer is the Federal reserve act, which was characterized at the time by great Senators on the other side of the Chamber who led in the fight against that great measure as socialistic because it proposed to put the Government to a limited extent into the business of banking. Just as the great shipping associations, whose interests it is claimed will be adversely affected by the Government entering into the shipping business, even in a limited and a collateral way as proposed in the pending measure, have denounced it as socialistic, so the great American Bankers' Association, which met in Boston just before the Federal reserve bill was passed, denounced it as socialistic and as a menace to the private banking business of the country; just as the Postal Savings Bank System was denounced by the savings banks of this country as a menace to private interests and the action of the Government in entering into that field characterized as socialism; just as, when we went into the business of the parcel post, the emissaries and supporters of the express monopoly characterized it as the governmental entrance into the transportation business and as being socialistic and as calculated and intended to destroy private capital and business.

But I do not wish—

Mr. SHAFROTH. While the Senator is on that point, I wish to read the prediction which was made by the Senator from New York, Mr. Root, at the time that the Federal reserve act was being considered.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In carrying out the line of thought the Senator has suggested I wish to call attention to the predictions made by Senator Root with respect to that bill. He said:

There is another thing you must remember. Europe is an armed camp. For many, many years peace has been kept by the most delicate adjustments and by the most strenuous exertions of many men in many countries, who have been alert and solicitous to stop controversy as near its origin as possible and to prevent the frightful effect of general war; but war is always possible. The fear of it is always present. If a war comes, immediately our securities come back to us. Immediately, in every country where they are held, the desire to strengthen up, to increase the amount of gold, will operate to lead to a general conversion of the American securities they hold into immediately available gold.

It is not necessary that we should wait for a war actually to take place. The fear of it leads to the result. The fear of the Balkan war, far off on the edge of civilized Europe, as it was, because of the apprehensions of possible implication of the great commercial nations in a war consequent upon the Balkan war, sent hundreds of millions of securities back to this country, which had to be bought.

So, sir, if we enter upon this career of inflation we shall do it in the face of clearly discernible danger—danger which, if realized, will result in dreadful catastrophe.

Ab. Mr. President, we are turning our faces away from the fundamental principle upon which we have come to our high estate. We are turning them weakly toward practices which history shows have invariably led to decadence, to degradation, and the downfall of nations. We are setting our steps now in the pathway which through the protection of a paternal government brought the mighty power of Rome to its fall.

Further than that he said:

I say that this bill presents the financial heresy twice repudiated by the people of the United States. I say that the central reserve board appointed under this bill will have to represent that very heresy. If this bill passes as it stands, America stands to lose all we saved when Grant vetoed the inflation bill, all we saved when Grover Cleveland abolished the silver purchase, all we saved when we elected McKinley, all the Republicans, all the gold Democrats saved when they helped in the repudiation of the vital principle which has been put into this bill.

I wish to say that the whole speech of Senator Root made at that time was a declaration that the act was simply socialistic and that the disaster would be great upon the American people if the Federal reserve act were passed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thank the Senator for injecting that extract into my speech.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. It seems rather strange to inject into this discussion matter relating to the Federal reserve act. If the time were opportune, I could show to the Senator from Colorado that it was not the reserve act, as the Senator intimates, that stopped the flooding of this country with bonds from the foreign markets in the panic of 1914. The stock exchange in New York was closed, and that stopped the flood, and it was the Aldrich-Vreeland currency plan that furnished the relief to the country, and the reserve act had nothing to do with it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President—

Mr. NELSON. But I am not going into it now. The Senator has seen fit to inject that into the shipping bill, and I thought I would make this brief reply to it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to say to the Senator—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SHAFROTH. For just a second. The Aldrich-Vreeland Act could not have been and was not operative during the panic or the stringency of 1914. It had to be amended by this very Federal reserve act before any person could take out any of the currency provided for issuance under that act, and it had to be amended since that time in order that it might become available.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. SIMMONS. It is apparent that we are getting away from the question altogether as a result of these interruptions. I did not refer to the Federal reserve act for the purpose of getting into a discussion as to its merits, but simply for the purpose of calling attention to the kind of opposition and the character of arguments made against it, to wit, that it was socialistic, just as is claimed with reference to the measure under discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not desire to go into that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator wants to ask me a question about anything pertinent to the line of argument I am pursuing, I have no objection; but if he wants to get into a discussion with the Senator from Colorado over the merits of the Aldrich-Vreeland and Federal reserve acts I must decline to yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to ask—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield or does he not yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator that I do not want to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question, but I did want to place a statement in the Record in order that the facts in the case may be known, if the Record is ever read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that under those conditions the Senator from North Carolina declines to yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not yield for that purpose. I will yield for any purpose that is pertinent to the line of discussion I am pursuing with reference to the bill. I have not gone into the merits of the Federal reserve act at all.

Mr. President, there is just one other matter to which I wish to call attention. We are told that if the Government will just stay out of this business, private capital will take care of it; that it is the menace of such legislation as this that keeps private capital from taking care of it, but they are ready now to come in and take care of it, and will do it if the Government will just hold its hands off and refrain from going into the business.

Mr. President, as I said a little while ago, for 50 years private capital has had ample opportunity to do what it says it will do if let alone. But it did not do it for 50 years before the European war. They now say, "We are getting ready to take care of it"; and as an evidence of that purpose they cite the fact that 600,000 tons of shipping have been brought under the American flag under the provisions of the ship-registry act passed during this administration.

Yes, Mr. President, it is true that about that amount of tonnage has been transferred to American registry. As I said before, it represents largely the vessels of special interests. The Standard Oil Co. have their own vessels to carry their own products. They have been able under conditions existing heretofore to maintain their own upon the seas, to carry their own products more economically than to hire foreign vessels to carry them. So have the United Fruit Co., and so have the United States Steel Co. They have their own vessels, and they have succeeded pretty well notwithstanding the handicapping conditions that we hear so much about, growing out of the difference between the cost of the construction and operating of American as compared with foreign ships. They have found it to their advantage to own and operate their own ships to carry their own goods instead of hiring somebody else to carry them.

Since the war we have built quite a number of ships in our navy yards, and a number have been taken out of the coastwise trade and put into the foreign trade, and others now building will soon be ready to enter the business; but, Mr. President, these vessels are at present engaged or will when finished, if present conditions continue, engage in our foreign trade—but the important question is, Will they stay in when conditions become normal at the close of the war?

Mr. Marvin and others testified on this point in the Senate hearings. I mention particularly Mr. Marvin because he appeared before the committee as representative of the special committee on the merchant marine of the Boston Chamber of Commerce. He has been connected with the shipping business for many years in important official positions. He has for years given special study to the subject and business of shipping. Mr. Marvin was asked the question, if in his opinion the ships that have been transferred to United States registry since the war would continue under our flag after the war, answered that they would probably go back to foreign registry.

When asked what in his opinion would the ships that have been taken out of our coastwise trade and put into the foreign trade do when the war closed, and asked if in his opinion those which have been built and entered in the trade since the war would after the war go into the coastwise or remain in the foreign trade, the answer came that when the war closes the ships that have been taken out of the coastwise trade would probably go back to the coastwise trade; that the vessels that are being built now suitable and designed for the coastwise trade and temporarily put into the foreign trade would probably go into the coastwise trade; that the vessels that have been transferred from foreign to American registry would probably go back to the foreign registry unless, Mr. President, unless Congress shall provide a subsidy or otherwise suitably provide for the difference in the cost of operation under the American flag and under a foreign flag.

So the assistance we are now getting in our foreign trade is temporary; it is expected to be temporary. It is conditioned when the war closes upon Congress granting a subsidy and guaranteeing a profit. I do not know what Congress will do about that. I know if the Democratic Party is in power it will not do it. I do not know what the Republican Party would do about it. I know what they failed to do when they were in power. They talked a great deal and did nothing that resulted in much good.

Now, Mr. President, it had been my intention to enter into a discussion of the regulatory provisions of this bill somewhat at length, but I have taken so much more time than I had expected to take in the discussion of the other parts of the measure, that I think I will leave that, in the main, for future discussion.

In brief I might say, however, by way of explanation, that the regulatory powers of the bill are somewhat analogous to those that are now vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission with reference to railroads. Of course, they are not altogether alike; that would be impossible. A system based altogether upon the interstate-commerce act plan would be unsuited in some respects and would operate very disadvantageously. So while the general plan is adopted it is modified in many material respects.

There is regulation by the Government of our foreign shipping, not only ours but that of foreign nations entering our ports, trading in our ports, and plying to and from our ports, and the bill also provides for the regulation of domestic shipping upon the high seas and the Great Lakes.

Our inland waterways were included in the regulatory provisions of the bill as it came from the House, but we have taken it out because of protests which seemed to us to have merit. I will not enter upon a discussion of that now. Outside of the protests that came to us with reference to the regulation of shipping on our inland waters there seemed to be with some slight exceptions a pretty general assent to the principle of regulation as applied in the bill. There seemed to be a feeling that there was as much need in the conditions which obtain in our foreign water transportation and our coastwise transportation and our lake transportation, for Government regulation now of water carriers as of rail carriers, and that under the limitations of the bill nothing but good could come from it.

At least, Mr. President, if we are to continue to have monopoly, if competition is to continue to be suppressed by agreements and understandings, those agreements should be in the open and be subject to the approval or disapproval of a shipping board.

Mr. President, if there is one thing that is near to my heart it is to secure the future. Facing the future as we do, the greatest of all industrial and commercial nations, with the largest stake upon our foreign trade of any nation in the world, confronted by a situation of absolute dependence upon our competitors for transportation after it reaches the seaboard, feeling as I do that not only in the past but probably to a more pronounced extent in the near future the maintenance, not to say the expansion, of our foreign trade will depend upon our ability to take care of it, feeling as I do that the future of our industries, whether of the field or of the forest or of the mine or of the factory, largely depends upon our foreign trade, believing that if there is a contraction in that trade through any instrumentality whatsoever it must necessarily result in a contraction of our industrial activities in the face of the fact that if our factories as now established were to run at full time six months in the year they could and would supply our domestic demand, I can not escape the conclusion that it is of paramount importance that we should safeguard our foreign commerce by protecting it against the menace and handicap of having to depend upon and buy its transportation to foreign markets from our competitors in those markets. Facing that situation, Mr. President, I feel deeply the importance of doing something for our merchant marine. I see nothing in the future from private capital—nothing whatever—unless the Government reverses all its policies and shall decide to become a guarantor of profits—unless it shall decide to depart from the precedents of the past and say to the people who are now building ships, who are now telling us what they will do after the war closes, for the restoration of our merchant marine: "Go ahead, build your ships, operate them under our flag, keep an account of the difference in cost of operation under the American flag and under a foreign flag, and when the year ends you shall be paid the difference out of the pockets of the people."

Mr. NELSON obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator yield just a moment?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. Add a new section to be known as section 36, and to read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to refuse a clearance to any vessel or other vehicle laden with merchandise, destined for a foreign or domestic port whenever he shall have satisfactory reason to believe that the master, owner, or other officer of such vessel or other vehicle refuses or declines to accept or receive freight or cargo tendered for such port of destination or for some intermediate port of call, together with the proper freight or transportation charges therefor by any citizen of the United States, unless the same is so declined or refused because such vessel or other vehicle is fully laden and has no space accommodations for the freight or cargo so tendered, due regard being had for the proper loading of such vessel or vehicle.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan]. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] and of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who have been called from the Chamber on official business.

Mr. WEEKS. I announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. LODGE]. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I should like to have this statement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, it is my purpose in discussing this bill to call attention, first, to the present condition of our maritime laws as applied to our shipping; in the next place, to call attention to the present status of our shipping, both in foreign and domestic commerce; and, in the next place, I shall aim, in stating the law and the facts, to keep as near terra firma as possible. I shall call attention to the abortive features of the bill and to those features of it which are utterly dangerous and destructive.

The shipping of the United States may be divided into two classes, namely, registered ships and licensed and enrolled ships, the former engaged in the foreign trade, the latter in the coastwise trade.

Under the act of December 31, 1792 (1 Stat., 287, now sec. 4131 of the Revised Statutes), all ships under our flag engaged in foreign trade must be registered and must be owned and commanded by citizens of the United States.

Under the act of December 31, 1792 (1 Stat., 288, now sec. 4132 of the Revised Statutes), only vessels built in the United States, or vessels captured in war or condemned in a prize court or forfeited for some breach of law, can be registered.

Vessels in our coastwise trade must be American built and must be licensed and enrolled. While foreign ships can engage in our foreign trade, no foreign ships can engage in our coastwise trade.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President:—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. NELSON. I do.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator from Minnesota, I presume, means by "foreign ships" American ships with foreign registry?

Mr. NELSON. I mean any ships with foreign registry.

LAW AS TO REGISTERED VESSELS CHANGED.

This law requiring all registered vessels to be American built remained in force until the Panama act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., 562), was enacted, the material part of which is as follows:

And seagoing vessels, whether steam or sail, which have been certified by the Steamboat-Inspection Service as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo, not more than 5 years old at the time they apply for registry, wherever built, which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, being wholly owned by citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, and no others, may be registered as directed in this title.

I call the attention of Senators to the fact that this act was passed in 1912 during the last year of President Taft's administration.

While American shipping had a complete monopoly of the coastwise trade, and while American shipyards had a monopoly of both enrolled and registered ships, yet, as to the latter, it had for many years been of little or no economic value to the shipbuilders, for very few ships were registered in the foreign trade.

I here quote from a valuable compilation issued under the auspices of the National Foreign Trade Council, entitled "Ocean Shipping," page 62:

The foreign-built ships representing American capital but under foreign ownership of record for some years past have been nearly equal in tonnage to the ships registered under the American flag for foreign trade, and in carrying power have been even greater. For many years all these facts have been quite familiar to those who have given the subject attention. All efforts to repeal the law, which was economically a dead letter, received little attention until the Panama Canal act of August 24, 1912. Section 5 of that act provided for the admission to American registry for foreign trade and trade with the Philippines, Guam, and Tutuila, of foreign-built vessels, steam or sail, certified by the Steamboat-Inspection Service as safe to carry dry and perishable cargoes, not more than 5 years old at the time of registration.

In this connection I call attention to the following table from the Statistical Abstract of 1915, page 308, showing the tonnage of the sailing and steam vessels of the merchant marine of the United States employed in the foreign and coastwise trade and in the fisheries, 1889 to 1915:

BURDENS OF OUR SHIPPING.

American shipping in foreign commerce had labored for years under two heavy burdens—the high cost of ships and the high cost of their operation. The Panama act of August 24, 1912, with its subsequent amendment of August 18, 1914 (38 Stat., 698), removed for the first time one of these burdens, the high cost of the ships, and put our foreign shipping in that respect on a par with the shipping of all other countries. This amendment is as follows:

That the words "not more than five years old at the time they apply for registry," in section 5 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized, whenever in his discretion the needs of foreign commerce may require, to suspend by order, so far and for such length of time as he may deem desirable, the provisions of law prescribing that all the watch officers of vessels of the United States registered for foreign trade shall be citizens of the United States. Under like conditions, in like manner, and to like extent the President of the United States is also hereby authorized to suspend the provisions of the law requiring survey, inspection, and measurement by officers of the United States of foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under this act.

FIRST SUBSTANTIAL RELIEF.

These laws, aside from the mail pay acts, were the first substantial relief that was conferred on American shipping; and it was of very little loss to our shipyards, for so very few of their ships had for years been registered in our foreign trade. The yards still had all our coastwise trade and most of our naval construction. The relief given by these acts was broader and more comprehensive than the mail pay acts, for those were confined to a limited number of lines and routes, while the Panama act conferred its benefits upon the ocean tramps as well as upon the ocean liners; in fact, upon all of our foreign shipping.

THE STATUS AND GROWTH OF OUR SHIPPING.

I will now, Mr. President, call the attention of the Senate to the condition of our foreign shipping shortly before the Panama Canal act was passed.

On June 30, 1912, the status of our shipping, sail and steam, was as follows:

	Gross tons.
Foreign tonnage	923,225
Coastwise	6,737,046

As I have already said to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], when I speak of "foreign tonnage," I mean tonnage carried in our ships in the foreign trade.

On March 31, 1916, according to the report of the Commissioner of Navigation, the status of our shipping was as follows:
American merchant shipping, Mar. 31, 1916.

	Registered.		Enrolled and licensed.		Total.
	Number of vessels.	Gross tons.	Number of vessels.	Gross tons.	Number of vessels.	Gross tons.
Sail	597	409,175	4,952	923,728	5,549	1,332,903
Steam	619	1,531,449	6,255	4,341,346	6,874	5,872,795
Gas	627	20,421	8,541	146,210	9,168	166,631
Canal			560	61,994	560	61,994
Barges	1,136	133,120	3,285	889,871	4,421	1,022,991
Total	2,979	2,094,165	23,593	6,363,149	26,572	8,457,314

"Registered vessels," as I have heretofore explained, embrace vessels that can engage in foreign commerce.

The figures I have quoted indicate an increase in our foreign tonnage since June 30, 1912, of 1,170,940 gross tons. But it also appears that there had been, in the meantime, a decrease in our coastwise tonnage of 373,897 gross tons. Nearly half of this consists of abandoned sail ships and, of the residue, about 200,000 gross tons have gone into the foreign trade, so that the net increase in our foreign tonnage is somewhere about 970,940 gross tons since the passage of the Panama act of August 24, 1912, or, to be more exact, since June 30, 1912.

PROSPECTIVE INCREASE IN FOREIGN TONNAGE.

There is going to be a large increase in our foreign tonnage if it is not hampered by adverse and hostile legislation, such as is proposed in this bill.

According to the Daily Commerce Report of July 17, 1916, page 197, on the 1st of July, 1916, there were building, or under contract for building, in American shipyards, to be completed in 1917 and 1918, 385 ships of a tonnage of 1,225,784 tons. I quote from this report as follows:

PROGRESS OF AMERICAN SHIPBUILDING.

Steel merchant vessels building or under contract to be built in private American shipyards at the beginning of the new fiscal year, July 1, 1916, according to builders' returns to the Bureau of Navigation, Department of Commerce, numbered 385 of 1,225,784 gross tons.

The following table shows first the distribution of steel merchant shipbuilding among the private shipyards of the United States and, separately, the number and gross tonnage of the ships building or under contract which the builders expect to launch during the current fiscal year, ending June 30, 1917, and those which will not be launched before the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918. These launches are subject to the usual allowances for delays due to the several causes which affect steel industries. The urgency of the naval construction program may also prove a factor in the situation. Barring delays builders expect to launch 327 steel ships of 927,893 gross tons during the current fiscal year and 58 ships of 297,891 gross tons during the following fiscal year.

Mr. President, I ask that the table giving in detail the yards and the ships built and to be built in the fiscal years 1917 and 1918 be incorporated in my remarks, without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, American shipyards have never been so busy since steel ships came into vogue as now. Probably one-third of this new tonnage, or about 400,000 gross tons, will go into our foreign trade, so that by the end of two years, without regard to any possible increase by purchase, we can count upon 2,500,000 gross tons in foreign trade, and this will be an increase of 1,574,775 gross tons since the Panama act was passed, which surely is not a bad showing of the advantages of that and its amendatory act. This will be our situation if not hampered by the hostile legislation of this bill.

NO IMMEDIATE INCREASE IN OUR SHIPPING POSSIBLE UNDER THIS BILL.

I shall now point out that it is utterly impossible to secure any immediate relief under the provisions of the pending bill by procuring additional ships. It will be impossible to get any immediate relief or any relief in the near future in the shape of increased shipping under this bill for the following reasons:

(1) No ships can be obtained from our own shipyards within the next two years, for it will take them all of that time or more to fill existing contracts; nor can any relief be obtained from foreign shipyards, at least while the war lasts, nor for a long time afterwards, for they will be busy making up the losses of their own countries.

(2) Under the provisions of this bill as amended by the Senate committee ships of belligerents can not be acquired, so that the only possible sources, outside of our own shipyards, will be to acquire ships from neutrals; and all their ships are as busy as they can be in carrying freight and passengers at high and exorbitant rates. None of these ships are for sale, and if for sale it would be at such exorbitant prices that under no circumstances would we be warranted in buying them. Their shipyards, like our own, are overcrowded. The neutrals themselves have been raking the shipping world over to buy more ships, and have in some instances been paying from $100 to $160 per registered ton, while the normal prices before the war were from $30 to $50 per ton for fair cargo boats. I quote from a letter to me from the Commissioner of Navigation, dated July 20, 1916:

The remarkable rise in the price of ships is shown graphically by the diagram I have copied for you from London Fairplay of December 23, 1915, a recognized shipping authority the world over. Fairplay has carried this diagram for a number of years, brought up to date, of course, at the end of each year. The prices are for an average cargo steamer of 7,500 tons dead-weight, equivalent to about 4,500 gross tons, 3,000 net tons. You will notice that the price in July, 1914, was £43,000, say, $215,000, as compared with £125,000 for December, 1915, say, $625,000. I inclose also a statement of the sales of representative cargo steamers in June and July, 1914, just before the European war, taken from the same authority, and some sales taken from the issue of Fairplay for June 29, 1916, just received. Mr. Hughes, the premier of Australia, last month carried through a remarkable shipping deal. Australia has a large amount of wheat which the Government wishes to forward for the use of the allied armies in France and England. Mr. Hughes employed private ship brokers, who did not disclose the interest of the Government in the transaction, to negotiate the purchase of ships. Fifteen were bought. Ten of these, aggregating 44,000 gross tons (75,000 tons dead-weight), were bought for £1,450,000, say, $7,250,000. The price, you see, works out at the rate of about $160 per gross ton, or nearly $100 per ton dead-weight.

If the whole $50,000,000 proposed to be appropriated by the pending bill were invested in ships at this rate of $160 per gross ton, we would only be able to secure an additional tonnage of 300,000. To buy ships at such ruinous prices, even if they could be obtained, would be a great waste of capital, with no possible adequate return in any direction.

The following nations are belligerents from whom purchase is prohibited, viz, Germany, Austria, Turkey, Greece, Italy, Portugal, France, Belgium, England, Russia, and Japan. The war has entirely eliminated all Austrian and all German tonnage, except in the Baltic, from the channels of trade, and over one-third of the English and French tonnage has been eliminated for war purposes. Out of a total world's tonnage of 49,000,000 tons, upward of 20 per cent has been eliminated from the channels of private commerce as a result of the war; but the apparent scarcity of tonnage is not as great as these figures would indicate, for trade with Germany is interdicted and is in a state of blockade, except some local traffic in the Baltic, and, as a consequence, the shipping that would be required for this trade is released. It must further be noted that England, Japan, France, and most of the other belligerent nations that have any shipping of consequence have by law prohibited the sale of ships to anyone except their own citizens. I quote the following from a letter to me from the Commissioner of Navigation, dated July 20, 1916:

Replying to your request for the prices at which cargo steamers are selling now as compared with the prices for which they were sold just before the outbreak of the war, as I told you by telephone, it is quite difficult to make a comparison for this reason—

Now, listen to this—

Nearly all maritime nations have passed laws forbidding the sale of merchant ships under their respective national flags to any others than the citizens or subjects of their own respective countries. Sales to foreigners can be made only with the consent of the Government whose flag the ship flies. For example, a British subject can sell to another British subject, but not to a purchaser of another nation without the consent of the Government; so, too, a Norwegian can sell only to a Norwegian, etc.

This demonstrates that since the war began all the belligerent nations and all the neutral nations have prohibited the sale of any of their shipping to any but citizens of their respective countries.

The principal maritime neutral nations and their tonnage are as follows:

	Tons.
Norway	2,520,188
Holland	1,522,547
Sweden	1,122,883
Denmark	854,996
Total	6,020,614

To this may be added Mexico, South and Central America; in all, about 850,000 tons. All this neutral shipping is employed, and has been employed for the last two years, in the ocean-carrying trade at extraordinarily high rates, such rates as were never known of before, and in consequence none of their ships are for sale. Moreover, under the laws of these countries none of their ships can now be sold to foreigners. I have already referred to the letter of the Commissioner of Navigation which bears out that statement.

If no ships can be purchased, either from belligerents or neutrals, and none can be obtained from our own shipyards for at least two years, it is difficult to see where any addition to our shipping can be secured in the near future under the provisions of this bill.

The American people, when they come to understand the situation and the provisions of this bill, are not likely to be fooled or deceived by such a glaring and cheap political makeshift as this, and yet for such a measure we are to be kept here sweltering in the hot dog days of summer—"de gustibus non est disputandum." Verily, there is no accounting for the Democratic taste.

But it may be asked, if such is the situation, what harm can there be in this bill? The answer is, first, the provisions of the bill relating to the purchase, sale, leasing, and operation of Government-purchased ships remain in force until the expiration of five years from the conclusion of the present European war; and this means a period of not less than six years, perhaps longer. Now, while ships can not be built or purchased within the next two or three years, it may be possible to secure them after that time. Meanwhile Government competition will remain a continuing menace to our shipping interests. By the time ships can be built or purchased our own people will procure the ships if not menaced by Government competition. In the next place, the restrictive regulations of this bill, to which I shall hereafter refer, will prove a continuing embarrassment and handicap to our shipping, especially to tramp vessels.

ADMITTING GOVERNMENT SHIPS TO COASTWISE TRADE.

There can be no valid ground for admitting the proposed Government-owned ships to the coastwise trade. That trade is well supplied with ships; so much so that within the last two years upward of 200,000 tons of that trade have left it and registered and gone into the foreign trade. It is in the foreign trade where there is a dearth, a shortage, of shipping. Then, why should not these proposed Government ships be kept in that trade, where they are needed, and not injected into a trade where they are not needed, to the detriment of the shipbuilding industry of our country? Having left the door open as to ships in foreign trade, we ought not to open the door as to our coastwise trade. That should be kept intact for the American shipyards. Their efficiency is of vital importance to us in peace and in war in order to secure an ample and efficient Navy.

If the coastwise trade is left intact, I have no fears that hereafter our shipbuilders will be able to compete with foreign builders in respect to ships in foreign commerce. The great European war has largely equalized the cost of construction. Labor is higher abroad than ever before, and the cost of living is higher than here. We are better supplied with cheap raw material, and we have a better supply of coal than have many of these nations, whilst our skilled mechanics are of a higher order and our general efficiency is higher. I quote the following from Ocean Shipping, May, 1916, pages 132, 133, and 134:

Shipbuilding methods as carried on in Great Britain and in this country have very little in common. American shipyards have evolved construction methods of their own, and the designing and building of commercial vessels in this country is carried out with a degree of precision and a regard for details unknown in Great Britain. Ship for ship, the American-built boat is always better equipped than any other. American shipyard methods were the result of a natural development along lines of least resistance, due to the paucity of orders for commercial work precluding specialization in any given type; and it is doubtful if the same methods carried out in Great Britain would have enabled the shipbuilders there to turn out work as good for the price as that turned out in American yards.

In recent years the accumulation of experience has brought about a general lowering of prices in American shipyards, and to-day their capabilities in the way of competition are limited only by the amount of berths at their disposal, for, owing to the tremendous rise in the price of materials and labor in Great Britain, British shipbuilders are no longer able to offset the high percentage of overheads in the total cost of American-built ships, besides which the overheads are a factor which is constantly decreasing in this country, while there is no doubt that it has increased considerably in all parts of Europe and will continue to rise as a result of the war.

When comparing prices of American and foreign ships, it is too often forgotten that the American ship is finished with a degree of thoroughness unusual anywhere outside of this country.

In marine engineering, especially, our shipbuilders have set a higher standard than obtains anywhere else in the world, due to the fact that the builders of cargo boats are also the builders of United States warships; hence the very best scientific data are always at the disposal of our shipbuilders, while our machinery trade is certainly superior to the British for the production of auxiliaries.

There have lately been signs that shipbuilding has begun to attract the attention of people who intend laying down yards in this country for the purpose of engaging in the industry on the theory that, whereas American engineers have demonstrated their ability to underbid the world in the cost of erecting the structural material used in our tall buildings, in the face of higher wages than are paid in other countries, it is possible to carry out the same operation with another form of structure, namely, a ship, and shows the same brilliant results from the economic point of view. [Since the above was written several American shipbuilders have begun to carry this idea into execution, through having the midship sections "manufactured" outside by the steel makers, contenting themselves with building the ends at the shipyard. For reasons which can not be dwelt upon here it has not yet been found possible to "manufacture" a ship from end to end at the steel mill.]

Looking at the results obtained by American metallurgists and motor car and locomotive manufacturers in the matter of reducing manufacturing costs, while raising wages, it seems that there is a great future for the shipbuilding industry along those lines in this country. In the meantime the cessation of commercial shipbuilding in England, due to the war, has apparently had very little influence upon the character of the orders placed with American shipyards within recent months, judging from the following table of ocean vessels building in this country under date of December 1, 1915, which has been compiled by the Department of Commerce from data supplied by the shipbuilders. It will be seen from this table—which embraces vessels of all classes on which work has actually commenced and vessels which will not be laid down for several months to come, owing to the crowded condition of the shipyards—that only six steamers were on order in this country on that date for foreign owners, all of which were oil-tank vessels.

From Shipbuilding and Shipping Record, June 3, 1915:

"With practically all berths filled, the American shipbuilding industry is in a better position than it has been for years to wipe out adverse balances accumulated in previous lean periods. So great has been the influx of orders lately that anything like early delivery is out of the question at the moment. As in former years, practically all orders booked by American yards are for vessels intended for trading between American ports, which, according to law, must be built in America. However, here and there one comes across a boat on the stocks that might possibly have gone to British yards had not the war so altered the situation."

Within the past two years a number of ships have been built in our shipyards for foreign countries, and a number of such ships are now under construction, or under contract for construction. England, Russia, Germany, France, and Austria will have their hands full for some years to come in replenishing the losses of the war. Labor will be scarcer and higher than before, and raw material will not be as ample or as cheap as before. The war has enriched our country, while it has of necessity impoverished and handicapped those countries.

COST OF OPERATION EQUALIZED.

In this connection I quote the following from the Morgenbladet, of Christiania, Norway, one of the leading newspapers of that country, in its issue of June 28, 1916:

Shipowner Christopher Hannevig has lately returned from a six months' stay in America. He has purchased two great industries, namely, the Pusey & Jones Co., of Wilmington, Del., and the Pennsylvania Shipbuilding Co., which is distant 20 minutes by rail from the first-named company's plant. The Pusey & Jones Co. manufactures paper machines, which have made the company well known and highly commended. Besides, it includes a shipbuilding plant. The company employs altogether about 1,000 men. The purchase price paid was about $1,000,000. The industries of the plant will be continued, as heretofore, but will be considerably enlarged. The Pennsylvania company can build eight ships of a tonnage of 13,000 each. In August the keel will be laid for two 7,000-ton ships for Norwegian account, and in November a beginning will be made on two 13,000-ton ships. Both plants which together employ between 2,000 and 3,000 men, will be under Norwegian supervision. They will be managed by Engineer Haakon Norbom and Shipbuilder Henry Lysholm, both of whom have had several years' experience in American shipbuilding.

Mr. Hannevig says: "It is of vital importance for Norway to renew her tonnage. It is our tonnage that has made us what we now are, which, in other words, makes us noted. Without this we could not have maintained ourselves economically during this war. There are no others who will come here with their tonnage to carry away our products. This has been brought home to Norwegian ship operators. They have increased their tonnage considerably, especially in America."

I call especial attention to this—

"especially in America, which is now in these embargo times the only place where tonnage can be purchased. Norway has in America alone purchased and contracted for 125,000,000 kroner ($33,750,000) worth of additional shipping. The price is not more than 100 per cent over American normal price. In Europe the prices are from 200 to 300 per cent over European normal prices. Norway has during the war gained a great status. It is now the country that has the greatest amount of free tonnage."

I have read this letter to show the prosperous condition of our shipyards and how the neutral countries, in order to get a national shipping, have to come over here and buy plants to build ships here. In this connection I have another interesting little item which I clipped from the New York Sun of yesterday.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUSTING in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. NELSON. I do.

Mr. HUGHES. Would it interfere with the Senator if I asked him a question at this point, just for information?

Mr. NELSON. No.

Mr. HUGHES. I want to know—I presume the Senator knows—how the law treats a foreign-owned ship which is built in this country in case an attempt should be made afterwards to give it American registry?

Mr. NELSON. Ships built for Norwegians in this country can not get American registry. The owners must be Americans.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; but once having—

Mr. NELSON. These ships are built for Norwegian account.

Mr. HUGHES. And under the law as it was those ships never could obtain American registry.

Mr. NELSON. No; never.

Mr. HUGHES. But as it is now they can, of course?

Mr. NELSON. They can if they are owned by Americans.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. They would have to be owned and controlled by Americans and officered by Americans.

Mr. HUGHES. But under the old law, nothing you could do in the way of ownership or control or officering the ships would permit them to get American registry.

Mr. NELSON. No; they could not by any possibility have come under the American flag.

I have referred to these matters to show the prosperous condition of our shipyards for the purpose of showing how foreign neutral nations, in order to get more ships, in order to get their own shipping increased, have to come to this country and buy ships and have them built. That statement shows that they have purchased in this country 125,000,000 kroner, as they are called—a krone being equivalent to about 27 cents in our money—of American ships already. This gentleman, Mr. Hannevig, has bought two plants here, and they have laid the keels for two 7,500-ton ships for Norwegian account, and in November they intend to start two 13,000-ton ships for Norwegian account. In other words, our shipbuilders not only have the work of our own country to do, but foreigners come here and employ them.

In this connection I desire to read the following item, which I clipped from the New York Sun of yesterday:

NORWEGIAN SHIP BUILT HERE—SAILS FROM CHICAGO TO TAKE CARGO OF CORN ABROAD.

CHICAGO, August 7.

The first ship for the Norwegian merchant marine built on the Great Lakes, the 3,000-ton Nordal, sailed for Montreal to-night. She was chartered by the Rockefeller Foundation to take a cargo of corn from Montreal to Rotterdam for the relief of Belgian war sufferers.

The Nordal is one of 30 ships being built for Norwegian firms in American shipyards.

This does not indicate that our shipyards are not in a prosperous condition. In fact, they are so prosperous that we could get no ships from them. They will be busily employed for the next two years in filling orders already received.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to his colleague?

Mr. NELSON. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. What I want to ask my colleague—it is a matter with which he may be familiar, and I am not—is whether the Norwegian Government is contributing any direct aid to the Norwegian shipbuilders who are having these ships constructed?

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no; no aid at all. Most of the shipping of Norway consists of what are known as tramp vessels. Norway gives subventions to what is called the Mexican Line, which runs to the Gulf of Mexico, and another line of two ships to New York. It also gives subventions to local lines along the coast of Norway. If you will look at the map of the country, you will see that there is a narrow strip along the northern border where there are only local settlements here and there in the valleys and mountains, mostly settlements of fishermen, and to afford them shipping facilities the Government has given subventions to a number of lines that ply along the northern coast clear up to North Cape, Hammerfest, Tromso, and other points. Without those subventions, they probably would not have the necessary shipping facilities.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President—

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator from Minnesota has been describing a condition which undoubtedly exists. American shipyards are busy, and I assume they are prosperous; but I did not notice that he stated that it was a comparatively new condition, and undoubtedly due to the war and the results of the war.

Mr. NELSON. Partly to the war, but partly to improved conditions of manufacturing in this country.

Mr. WEEKS. The necessity to ship our products on account of the demand?

Mr. NELSON. No; it comes from improved conditions, both because our plants are manufacturing more cheaply—I quoted a reliable authority on that point; the Senator may not have heard it—both because they can manufacture their ships more cheaply than ever before and because the cost of labor, the cost of food, and of everything else has vastly increased in the foreign countries, and they are not so well supplied with the raw material as are we. The best evidence, to my mind, that ships can be procured in this country more cheaply than anywhere else is the fact that that Norwegian firm comes over here and buys two shipyards in order to have ships built in this country by American workmen.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, is it not possible, if not probable, that the reason why Norway is coming to our market to get ships is because she can not get them built in the countries that are at war at the present time?

Mr. NELSON. That may have something to do with it; but you will notice that the last part of Mr. Hannevig's statement was that even in these times he could procure ships here at 100 per cent over normal prices, while in Europe the cost would be from 200 to 300 per cent.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, of course; but that is directly and inevitably due to the war.

Mr. NELSON. Partly; but the Senator must admit that the war will leave those countries in a condition such as they never were in before, and that they will be busy in supplying and replenishing their own losses.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very likely.

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator, in that connection, if it is not a fact that Norway levies a very considerable tax on her shipping, especially her domestic and coastwise shipping, devoting the proceeds of that tax very largely toward building up state-owned ships?

Mr. NELSON. They have not any state-owned ships.

Mr. FLETCHER. Are they not applying the taxes they are levying on shipping now in that direction?

Mr. NELSON. No. They have in Norway both an income tax and a property tax; and under the provisions of that law they levy taxes on shipping as property, and then they levy taxes on the income of the shipowners and operators.

I think, Mr. President, I have demonstrated that, under present conditions, for years to come we can at least build ships as cheaply in America as they can be built abroad. The cost of operation is being largely equalized by the war. The supply of sailors has greatly diminished in the foreign maritime countries, and their wages are much higher than before the war, and the cost of their food supply is higher than in this country. There is not much difference in the bill of fare of sailors among the leading maritime nations. Most of the food supply comes from America, and hence it is higher in price abroad than it is here. In Norway, which is next in rank to the United States among neutral countries in her shipping, and which was fourth in rank among the nations of the world before the war, and which has always before had an ample supply of good sailors, there is now, and for some time has been, a serious complaint of the scarcity of sailors and of the high wages that have to be paid.

Norwegian ships which before the war had an ample supply of sailors among their own people, are now compelled to ship a heterogeneous crew of all shades and nationalities. I get this information from one of the leading newspapers of that country. The same conditions prevail to a greater or less extent in Sweden, Denmark, and Holland, and the war must necessarily have had a similar effect in all the belligerent nations.

While the late seaman's law (38 Stat., 1164) may have worked harm on the Pacific because of competition with oriental shipping, yet I think that on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, if properly enforced, its tendency will be to equalize the wages of sailors among all shipping plying to ports on those coasts.

On the whole—though the statement may not be considered as orthodox in some quarters—I am impressed with the idea that under present conditions and under the important relief conferred by the Panama act of 1912 and the amendatory act of 1914, to which I have already referred, if not handicapped, hampered, and discriminated against by such legislation as is contained in this bill or other hostile legislation, our shipping in foreign commerce is on the high road to recovery, and will continue to have from year to year a sure and steady growth, though perhaps not an exceedingly rapid one. Relieved of one burden—that is, the cost of the ships—by legislation and of the other by conditions resulting from the war, it will be a healthy, natural, and steady growth, neither sporadic nor artificial. In most other lines of manufacture and industry America leads the world, and I believe, if given a fair chance, America will take a leading part in foreign shipping.

I am the more confirmed in these views by the fact that most of our import and export tonnage is carried not in route vessels but in ocean tramps, as I shall hereafter point out more in detail. No doubt additional subventions to mail steamers on regular routes would be a help and advantage in enlarging and extending traffic on such routes. In this connection I may add that our ocean shipping has some advantages over English and other foreign shipping—

First. In having no prescribed load line. All who are familiar with shipping matters know that under the Lloyd measurement in England there is a mark on the side of the ship called the load line, and ships are not allowed to carry any load that will sink a vessel lower than that load line. We have no such law in this country.

Second. In the matter of liability for damage to or loss of cargo and for injury to persons or loss of life. Under our laws our ships are only liable to the extent of the value of the ship, if saved, and of freight earned. In the case of the Titanic, which sank, there was nothing left to pay damages with, under our law, except the $100,000 or so freight earned. Under English and other foreign laws the liability is much greater in such cases.

My recollection is that under the English law damages are granted upon the tonnage of the vessel. I am not absolutely sure, but I think a rate of $8 per ton or something of that kind is allowed—that is, the people who sustained loss on the Titanic were able, in the settlement of the case in court, to get considerably more money than the mere freight that was due to the Titanic. I notice in the papers, but it may not be accurate, that they settled for something between six and seven hundred thousand dollars. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], who is listening to me, will, I think, recall the fact.

Mr. HUGHES. I think that was the amount.

REGULATIVE FEATURES OF THE BILL.

Mr. NELSON. I now come to what I call the regulative features of the bill. These relate both to the coastwise and to the foreign trade. The bill provides for a board of five commissioners, who, in addition to their power to buy ships and the power to sell, lease, and operate the purchased ships, are given comprehensive regulatory power and control over all our own shipping, as well as over foreign shipping plying to or from our ports. These powers are far greater than those conferred upon the marine department of the English Board of Trade, which has jurisdiction over English shipping.

As to coastwise shipping, it may, in general terms, be said that the bill gives the board about the same regulatory power over such shipping as is possessed by the Interstate Commerce Commission over our railroads. As to shipping in foreign commerce, the regulative power is more limited and less restrictive. But these regulative powers will in both cases prove, as I shall point out, to be repressive and restrictive of the growth and prosperity of our shipping. The ocean pathway is open to all nations and in its nature is not a monopoly like a line of railroad. All ships can travel on the ocean, but only the cars of a railway company have the right of way over its tracks. The ocean carrier is in competition with all the world.

I have here, and I will insert it in my remarks, a table of our exports and imports for the years 1914, 1915, and 1916. These figures indicate that in value our exports in those years, especially in the last year, were double our imports and more than double in tonnage and in bulk.

Our imports and exports for the years 1914, 1915, and 1916 are as follows:

Exports.
1914	$2,364,579,184
1915	2,768,589,340
1916	4,332,698,604
Total for 3 years	9,466,867,092

Imports.

1914	$1,893,925,657
1915	1,674,169,740
1916	2,197,984,842
Total for 3 years	5,766,080,239

This table indicates that in value our exports were nearly twice our imports, and they were much more than twice in tonnage, if we take into account the bulky character of much of our exports.

It may be said, as a general rule, that a nation pays the freight on its imports, while the freight on its exports is paid by the foreign purchasers. Where imports are of raw material for manufacturing purposes and such manufactures are re-exported in their manufactured state, the ultimate consumer will, to some extent, pay the cost both ways. Our normal freight bill is what we pay for our imports, and this is quite heavy, but it is much less on account of our excessive exports than what the foreigners pay on our exports. I quote from Ocean Shipping of May, 1916, pages 27 and 28, as follows:

It may therefore be taken as a commercial truism that a nation pays the freight on its imports, while the freight on its exports is paid by the foreign buyer. In countries where a large proportion of the imports consists of materials entering into the manufacture of articles which are reexported, a part of the freight thus paid on imports is eventually borne by the ultimate foreign consumer through price adjustments. For this reason, then, the total freight bill is a deceptive measure of the total amount of money which leaves a country for the purpose of paying the foreign owners of vessels engaged in overseas traffic, when, as in the case of the United States, a considerable portion of the carrying trade is in the hands of foreign shipowners. It appears from the foregoing that freight represents payment for an actual service performed. Therefore the American merchant who imports, say, textiles from Germany, or tea from China, must pay freight irrespective of the nationality of the ship carrying his goods; but, looking at the question from a general point of view, the problem is whether the payment of freight to foreign ships impoverishes a nation.

This question is usually linked with the general one of balance of trade, and though free traders would contend that it pays a nation to have foreigners do its carrying, if it is unable to perform the same service at equal price, there is no question that the carrying trade of such a nation as the United States represents a huge business which gives employment to a considerable proportion of the total tonnage owned in the world; and therefore the participation of Americans in this business would open a new source of national income.

Mr. Paish estimates that for the fiscal year 1908-9 the net sum paid by the United States to other countries was about $25,000,000. He says (Ocean Shipping, May, 1916, pp. 32, 33):

There are, however, other credit items to be taken into consideration. The foreign vessels carrying goods from the United States to other countries are usually coaled and provisioned for the outgoing voyage in American ports, and the value of the coal and provisions supplied to them must be deducted from the payments which the United States has to make for freight brought into the country in foreign vessels. After taking all these factors into consideration, I calculate that the net sum which the United States pays to other countries for the transportation is about $25,000,000.

Ocean shipping is generally classified as follows: Mail and passenger steamers (express lines), passenger and cargo steamers (combination lines), fast cargo steamers (cargo liners), ordinary cargo steamers (tramps).

I quote from Ocean Shipping, May, 1916, pages 15 and 16:

LINERS.

Express liners, with exceedingly small cargo space (the Mauretania carries but 1,500 tons of freight out of her gross tonnage of 32,000), may be likened in their relation to freight traffic to the express cars of fast passenger trains. This also applies to combination liners, which, however, do carry a large proportion of bulky commodities, such as grain, cotton, foodstuffs, manufactures of metal, etc., and combine the duties of express cars and fast freight trains. However, out of 25,000 steamers afloat probably not more than 1,600 are included in the two preceding classes. The cargo liner is to the sea what the fast-freight service is to rail transportation. It is a boat carrying cargo exclusively, but which steams regularly and periodically over the same routes. Types of this class of cargo carriers are those employed by, for instance, the Leyland, Prince, Lamport & Holt, and Bucknall Lines, to carry American exports to Europe, South America, South Africa, and the Far East. Cargo liners are almost invariably built for the trade in which they are to engage, and are kept up to the highest standard of efficiency in order to give shippers the advantage of the lowest rate of insurance.

Ordinary cargo or tramp steamers, the marine prototype of the common freight car, are the carriers of most of the bulky commodities and low-grade freight of the world. They are boats of full form, rarely exceeding 375 feet in length, of a speed varying between 8 and 10 knots and ready to go anywhere to pick up any sort of cargo. Tramp steamers are hired on charter by merchants at rates of freight governed by the state of trade and the supply of shipping. While, as a rule, cargo steamers are chartered by intending shippers through brokers at the great seaports or their agents at the smaller ports for a specific voyage only, there is another method by time charter.

WHAT TRAMPS CARRY.

It has been estimated that out of 45,000,000 tons of shipping owned in the world, fully two-thirds of the tonnage used in ocean traffic consists of tramp steamers, of which Great Britain alone owns 70 per cent of the whole. Low-grade freight and bulk goods constitute the tramp steamer's chief means of employment in marine transportation. As three-fifths of the bulk of British exports consist of coal, and as coal can only be shipped by "tramps," it follows that Great Britain has always at hand employment for her vast fleet of cargo boats which leave the home ports with coal for all parts of the world, but chiefly Mediterranean and South American ports.

The bulk of our agricultural, mineral, and forest products is carried in tramp ships, and our coarse, bulky, and heavy imports are carried in similar ships. As a rule, the world over, low-grade freight is carried in tramp ships which do not operate on fixed lines. Tramp steamships are indispensable for our foreign commerce.

I quote from Ocean Shipping of May, 1916, page 104:

TRAMP STEAMSHIPS INDISPENSABLE.

The disparity between import and export tonnage vitally affects the character and cost of the transportation afforded the foreign trade of the United States, for it means that all vessels used in export trade can not obtain direct return cargoes, and therefore must load at foreign ports for destinations other than the United States. For instance, a steamer starting from Savannah across the Atlantic with cotton for Liverpool is likely to be chartered to carry coal from Wales to Argentina to avoid being compelled to return to the United States empty (in ballast). If no cargo offers at Argentine ports, she may proceed in ballast to Chile to take nitrate for Europe, and thus remain away from the United States indefinitely or until, at some port, a profitable cargo or charter to the United States is offered. To lay down Pittsburgh steel at Vancouver in competition with British steel shipped from England via Magellan, steamers from New York, in addition to taking steel for Vancouver, had to take cargo for delivery at intermediate points along the west coast of South America and Mexico. After discharging steel at Vancouver, where no cargo direct for the east coast of the United States is regularly available, these vessels ship lumber or coal for the Gulf of California. They are reloaded with copper matte for Dunkirk, France, and in France take chalk for New York, the whole trip consuming from six to eight months. It was the only process whereby the cheap water rate from Liverpool to Vancouver, made possible by the existence of a large export traffic out of British Columbia to Europe and the Far East, could be overcome. In these voyages the export trade of other countries was served three times, while that of the United States was served once, but it was the toll taken from the commerce of the others that made this export of American steel possible.

Similar examples from other industries might be cited, but this is sufficient to reveal the extent to which American commerce is necessarily interwoven with that of the rest of the world, and the cheap and bulky character of most American exports demands normally the low rates which can be provided only by those vessels—chiefly tramp steamers—which, by taking cargoes for whatever destination is offered, avoid the deadening expense of long return trips in ballast. In the language of a recent report from the United States consul general at Rio de Janeiro: "A freighter follows whatever route insures its receiving the highest prices; owners and charterers maneuver a cargo vessel all over the map with that sole end in view."

The bill under consideration is defective in not making provision for tramp steamers. The bill only provides for "the purchase, construction, equipment, lease, charter, maintenance, and operation of merchant vessels in the commerce of the United States." (See p. 10, sec. 11, lines 13, 14, and 15.)

An American tramp ship, if Government owned, with a cargo of cotton from Mobile to Liverpool, could not take a cargo from there to Brazil or Chile, for that would not be "commerce of the United States." I quote from Ocean Shipping, of May, 1916, page 108:

The bill appears to restrict the operation of these Government vessels (whether operated by the Government or by private corporations) to trade directly between the United States and foreign countries—I. e., in the language of the act, to "use in the transportation of the commerce of the United States with foreign countries," and between the United States and our distant possessions; in other words, to service on certain fixed lines. It fails, therefore, to touch tramp shipping, upon which the greater part of our exports and imports depends.

Such a ship, if a return cargo could not be immediately obtained, would have to wait until a return cargo for the United States could be obtained instead of securing immediately a cargo for a foreign port—or two ports—returning from such port or ports to the United States. The great bulk of our exports to and imports from South America are and will be carried in tramp ships. We would be at a great disadvantage in building up a trade with South America if we put our tramp ships under the restrictive regulations of this bill while the tramps of other countries have a free hand.

It is urged that the application of the law alike to American and foreign vessels precludes discrimination and subjects the American ship to no disadvantage as compared with the foreign ships seeking cargoes from the same American port. American vessels, however, must also meet in their circuitous voyages the competition of foreign ships which never call at American ports, and, therefore, will never be subject to the seamen's act's requirements as to manning and equipment or to the proposed rate regulation of this bill. All American vessels will be obliged to meet the maximum requirements of the American laws, but only that portion of foreign shipping which calls at American ports will be similarly burdened. The struggle for survival would naturally occur in trade wholly foreign to the United States, such as from the United Kingdom to South America or Africa or the Far East, between American ships complying with all our extreme navigation legislation and foreign ships permitted by their Governments to operate on a competitive level with rival maritime enterprise. To live on our own export and import trade American tramp steamships must be able to live on the odd legs of the circuitous voyages necessary to avoid return in ballast. The fact that American shipping is now highly profitable is no criterion of its ability to compete during a shipping depression such as may follow a few years after this war and such as did follow the Boer War.

Ocean shipping is the most competitive of industries, a constant struggle for existence, chiefly among nations for centuries engaged in maritime carrying. It is difficult to conceive success for the American entrant if burdened by legal restrictions not borne by the older and stronger opponents. In so far as such laws apply equally to American and foreign vessels they increase our freight rates and handicap our trade. If they do not apply to foreign vessels they drive our ships out of business.

These foreign tramps plying between Europe and South America can give rates, favors, and drawbacks that our tramps can not give under the restrictive regulations of this bill, and this would place our exporters at a great disadvantage in building up a trade with South America.

But a comparatively small part of our exports, especially of heavy and bulky tonnage, are carried in regular liners plying on fixed routes. It may be observed in this connection that while foreign countries give in one form or another to a greater or less extent subventions to mail and fast passenger and freight lines plying on regular routes, none of them give any such aid, or anything except unshackled freedom, to their tramp ships. Why should not our tramp ships enjoy the freedom that the tramp ships of other countries enjoy, and thus be on a footing of equality?

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask the Senator a question right there?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES. I understand it is the practice of other countries with reference to tramp ships that they are given the privilege of plying between their home ports. I want the Senator to correct me if I am wrong, but I am under the impression that foreign countries give tramp ships the privilege of plying between the different ports of their home countries.

Mr. NELSON. The question the Senator propounds relates to whether foreign countries confine their own ships to the coastwise trade. Most of the countries do not.

Mr. HUGHES. Do not foreign countries as a rule, so far as tramp ships are concerned, give to them the privilege of touching at more than one port in the home country when coming in from a foreign voyage?

Mr. NELSON. They do. They give that advantage, and so our tramps should have that advantage.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; but take the case of an American tramp engaged in the foreign trade, leaving Liverpool with a cargo, it could not touch and break bulk at New York and then go on to Galveston.

Mr. NELSON. No; because that would be entering on the coastwise trade.

Mr. HUGHES. I say that is one of the reasons why we can not have American tramp ships. We do not give them the privilege that other nations give their tramp ships. The Senator has frequently referred to Norway—

Mr. NELSON. I referred to it not because I have any more interest in Norway than has the Senator from New Jersey—

Mr. HUGHES. I understand.

Mr. NELSON. But I referred to it because in the matter of shipping Norway is the greatest country in proportion to population on the face of the earth.

Mr. HUGHES. I know that.

Mr. NELSON. Its shipping is next in rank to that of the shipping of the United States to-day. I referred to it because most of their shipping belongs to the tramp class, for the reason that I will state.

Mr. HUGHES. That is the reason why I asked the Senator the question. I referred to Norway because I thought from what the Senator said that he was exceedingly familiar with the shipping of that country. That is the only object I had.

Mr. NELSON. I will state the reason why most of the ships of Norway are tramp ships. Norway is a small country. It is mountainous and very sterile; it has a small population; and its exports and imports are exceedingly limited; but its shipping is considerable. If the shipping of Norway had nothing to do except to carry the exports and imports of that country there would not be much of it. They make their living by doing what I call a tramp business for all countries over the world. Most of their steamers belong to that class. On the other question to which the Senator referred incidentally, I have a book here which I have not had time to examine carefully, but from what I have seen, most of the maritime countries allow foreign ships to engage in the coastwise trade.

Mr. HUGHES. I agree with the Senator; and I just want to emphasize this point: There is no country except our own which refuses to permit a ship of its own registry in foreign commerce to go from port to port in that country. Does the Senator know of any other country, except the United States, that does not allow its tramp ships in its own commerce, carrying its own registry, to go from port to port in that country?

Mr. NELSON. But that question is not covered by the bill.

Mr. HUGHES. I think it is to a greater or less extent.

Mr. NELSON. It is not covered by the bill in any form or shape, as the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] knows.

Mr. HUGHES. I understand that under the provisions of the bill the ships that are to be built are to be given that privilege.

Mr. NELSON. They are to be given the privilege of the coastwise trade.

Mr. HUGHES. Then it does involve that question.

Mr. NELSON. But it does not apply to other ships.

Mr. HUGHES. It does not apply to other ships.

Mr. NELSON. I repeat, it is comparatively a small part of our exports, especially of heavy and bulky tonnage, that is carried in regular liners plying on fixed routes. It may be observed in this connection that, while foreign countries give, in one form or another, to a greater or less extent, subventions to mail and fast passenger and freight lines plying on regular routes, none of them give any such aid, or anything except unshackled freedom, to their tramp ships. Why should not our tramp ships enjoy the freedom that the tramp ships of other countries enjoy, and thus be on a footing of equality?

An American tramp steamer at Liverpool should have as free a hand as a British tramp at that port. It should be as free at all ports as a British tramp ship. In this connection, and as bearing on tramp steamers, I refer to paragraph 4 of section 15 of this bill, to parts of section 16, to the first paragraph of section 17, to section 18, to part of section 22, and to the provisions of sections 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, and 32.

While some of these provisions may be justified as to freight and passenger ships, plying on fixed and regular routes on which there are or may be competing lines, they are a most grievous burden upon and are an impediment to the ocean tramps. Their rates necessarily shift from port to port, and to get freight, instead of being tied up or steaming away in ballast, they will have to accept such rates and conditions as may be offered; in other words, they are at the mercy of the port where they happen to land. To put such restrictive regulations upon them as is proposed in this bill would make our ocean tramps the outcasts among all the world's tramp steamers. In other words, if the Senator from New Jersey will read and note the restrictions in the bill that are put upon our tramp vessels and then compare them with the conditions of tramp vessels in other countries, the Senator will readily see the difference.

Not only do the tramp ships carry the bulk of our foreign commerce, but in our coastwise trade the bulk of all heavy traffic and all low-grade freight is carried by tramp ships. The tonnage carried by them at least equals the tonnage carried by liners plying on regular routes. These tramps are to some extent the regulators of the rates of the liners; their cost of operation is less, and, as to bulky and heavy goods, they can give much better rates than can the regular liners. They ply from port to port, wherever they can get freight and touch many ports not made by the liners. Their traffic is highly competitive, and hence their rates are necessarily fluctuating.

To secure freight they must give such rates as the port affords or offers. In one season of the year the rates may be very low and in another season higher. Between certain ports the rates may be very low, between other ports relatively much higher. In a journey from the Gulf coast to New England such a tramp may make many ports, some close together, others far apart. On the return trip many other ports may be made. I do not see how it is possible for such a ship to comply with the provisions of section 19, which are as follows:

SEC. 19. That every common carrier by water in interstate commerce—

And that includes all our coastwise trade—

SEC. 19. That every common carrier by water in interstate commerce shall establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable rates, fares, charges, classifications, and tariffs, and just and reasonable regulations and practices relating thereto and to the issuance, form, and substance of tickets, receipts, and bills of lading, the manner and method of presenting, marking, packing, and delivering property for transportation, the carrying of personal, sample, and excess baggage, the facilities for transportation, and all other matters relating to or connected with the receiving, handling, transporting, storing, or delivering of property.

It is the next paragraph which works the greatest destruction—

Every such carrier shall file—

And that covers even tramp steamers—

Every such carrier shall file with the board and keep open to public inspection, in the form and manner and within the time prescribed by the board, the maximum rates, fares, and charges for or in connection with transportation between points on its own route; and if a through route has been established, the maximum rates, fares, and charges for or in connection with transportation between points on its own route and points on the route of any other carrier by water.

Now, listen to this:

No such carrier shall demand, charge, or collect a greater compensation for such transportation than the rates, fares, and charges filed in compliance with this section, except with the approval of the board and after 10 days' public notice in the form and manner prescribed by the board, stating the increase proposed to be made; but the board for good cause shown may waive such notice.

Whenever the board finds that any rate, fare, charge, classification, tariff, regulation, or practice, demanded, charged, collected, or observed by such carrier is unjust or unreasonable, it may determine, prescribe, and order enforced a just and reasonable maximum rate, fare, or charge, or a just and reasonable classification, tariff, regulation, or practice.

How can such stringent rules properly apply to tramp steamers from port to port? Compliance with this section would involve a separate rate sheet for each port, great or small, and between each two or more of such ports on our entire Pacific, Atlantic, and Gulf coast lines. As an illustration: Take a cargo tramp ship carrying lumber from a Gulf port to numerous ports on the Atlantic seaboard. It would be necessary to have a separate rate sheet for each port that it would be likely to make in the course of a year, and it could never be sure in advance as to what ports it would have to make. It may be suddenly called upon to carry lumber to a port for which it has no rate sheet or prescribed rate, and if it ships the lumber to such a port without a previously prescribed rate it would violate section 19.

Aside from the steamers of the tramp class, the report of the Commissioner of Navigation of March 31, 1916, shows that there were then in the coastwise trade a total of 8,237 sail ships and barges, with a total tonnage of 1,813,599 tons. All these vessels belong to the tramp class and do a tramp business in carrying coal, lumber, iron, ore, grain, and oil. Senators can at once see how embarrassing, annoying, and repressive it would be to make such vessels subject to the provisions of section 19.

Sir Norman Hill, secretary of the Liverpool Steamship Owners' Association for many years, in a report last year to his Government, stated:

Of the vessels that count in the ocean overseas trade the number belonging to the United Kingdom may be taken to have been at the outbreak of the war 3,600 steamers of over 1,000 tons net, and their tonnage at 10,000,000 tons net, divided as follows:

Liners—

That is, ships plying on regular lines:

Number of liners, 1,200; net tons, 4,200,000; gross tons, 6,960,000; dead-weight tons, 6,000,000.

General traders, or cargo boats or tramp vessels:

Number of general traders, 2,400; net tons, 5,760,000; gross tons, 9,600,000; dead-weight tons, 18,000,000.

Total number of liners and general traders, 3,600; total net tons, 9,960,000; total gross tons, 16,560,000; total dead-weight tons, 19,000,000.

In other words, the general traders or tramps under the British flag carry about two-thirds of the weight of cargo carried by British steamships in over-seas trade, the liners only one-third. These figures include British steamers which carry on the foreign trade of the United Kingdom with the rest of the world, and also British steamers which do not trade with the United Kingdom at all, but are engaged in carrying between foreign countries and colonies, to ports on the Continent of Europe, and so forth. Sir Norman Hill's figures include no sailing vessels, practically all of which are general traders or tramps. The Norwegian merchant marine is made up mainly of general traders or tramps.

To put tramp vessels, either in the foreign or coastwise trade, under the restrictive regulations of this bill would be to hamstring and to destroy the value and efficiency of all our ocean tramp shipping; and, in respect to our trade with South America and other foreign countries, it would, as I have already pointed out, be a great handicap and drawback. There may be some grounds of justification for placing our coastwise liners, plying on regular routes, under the restrictive restrictions of this bill, but there certainly is no valid ground or justification for treating our tramp shipping in that way; and, even in the case of liners on regular routes, I doubt the wisdom of it and fear the proposed restrictive regulations will do more harm than good.

Mr. President, in these remarks I have aimed, using a nautical phrase, to steer close to the wind. I have aimed to steer close to facts as they actually exist and close to the legal conditions that prevail to-day. I have pointed out—and I do not think it can be gainsaid—that under present conditions in our own shipyards, under the provisions of this bill, and under the conditions of legislation that prevail in foreign countries, it will be utterly impossible to secure any shipping within the next two years. No ships can be bought from the neutral countries, because they have prohibited their sale; none can be bought from belligerent countries under the provisions of the bill; and our shipyards will be fully occupied for the next two years, as I have heretofore shown. Then, where are the ships coming from?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. NELSON. I do.

Mr. WEEKS. I thought the Senator had finished, and I wanted to ask him a question before he took his seat. He has just been speaking of tramp steamers and their being put under the control of the proposed shipping board. I want to ask him if I am to understand that the tramp steamers are common carriers under the terms of this bill?

Mr. NELSON. I understand they are to be placed under the regulations prescribed by this bill.

Mr. WEEKS. "Common carriers" are carefully defined in the bill, and it seems to me that the definition does cover tramp steamers. I think it is an important consideration, however, because there is a vast difference between the business conducted by tramps and that conducted by the regular liners.

Mr. NELSON. Of course there is a vast difference between the business done by the regular liners and the tramps, but the regulations of the bill, as the Senator from Massachusetts well knows, are of a twofold nature: First, in respect to our coastwise shipping, which is called shipping in interstate commerce in this bill. The shipping board has practically the same right to fix and regulate rates in one form and another as has our Interstate Commerce Commission over the railroads; while in respect to the ships engaged in foreign commerce, there are no such comprehensive regulations; but in many respects they come under the provisions to which I have called attention in my remarks.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I agree, in the main, with what the Senator says with reference to the difficulty of applying this law to tramp steamers, if it was intended to apply to tramp steamers; but I call the Senator's attention to the definition of "common carrier" contained in the first paragraph of the bill in these words:

The term "common carrier by water in foreign commerce" means a common carrier, except ferryboats running on regular routes, engaged in the transportation by water of passengers or property between the United States or any of its Districts, Territories, or possessions and a foreign country.

One foreign country. That would seem to include only liners. I want also to call the Senator's attention to the language on page 2 of the bill, defining "common carrier by water in interstate commerce."

The term "common carrier by water in interstate commerce" means a common carrier engaged in the transportation by water of passengers or property on the high seas or the Great Lakes between one State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States and any other State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States, or between places in the same Territory, District, or possession.

This shows the distinction made.

Mr. NELSON. Of course, I noticed the distinction, because a common carrier engaged in the transportation by water of passengers or property on the high seas is entirely different from a common carrier engaged in like business on the Great Lakes. The commerce on the Great Lakes comes under the head of what we call in our phraseology the coastwise trade.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; but I wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact that different language is used in dealing with the shipping on the Great Lakes. The bill makes a common carrier out of any vessel which plies between one State and another State, whereas it makes a common carrier in the foreign trade only out of a vessel which plies between the United States and a country—not any other country—

Mr. NELSON. Of course, the Senator is right.

Mr. HUGHES. So, it seems to me that a vessel plying between the United States and any other country would not be a common carrier under this definition, but would be, as the Senator suggests, a tramp or trader. I hope that is the intention of the framers of the bill, as I think it should be the intention.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. HARDING. I want to ask the Senator, under the definition in this bill, would a vessel engaged in the ore trade, operating solely for its owners in carrying ore from Minnesota to Cleveland, Ohio, be a common carrier?

Mr. NELSON. I think it would if it operated on a regular route.

Mr. HARDING. Would a vessel which made a specific charter for a cargo from one shipper be a common carrier under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. NELSON. I think it would likely be so held.

Mr. HARDING. That is a very important question.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator knows that in reference to interstate commerce in connection with railroad traffic we have not held that those who own a small piece of road are immune from regulation.

Mr. HARDING. In order to bring out the point which is interesting me, suppose a vessel should charter a special cargo of cotton goods at New Orleans to be carried to New York, and the conditions were such that that vessel could offer an extraordinarily attractive rate to secure the cargo. Under the provisions of this bill could that vessel be made to hold to that rate except under permission of the shipping board?

Mr. NELSON. It would have to have a rate fixed, and adhere to it; and it could only be relieved from it by the permission of the board, as I construe the bill.

Mr. HARDING. Then, a tramp vessel plying from one American port to another can not pick a cargo to its advantage as it may choose?

Mr. NELSON. I think not.

Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, I have aimed to discuss some of the more important features of this bill. I have, I think, demonstrated that it will be utterly impossible to procure any additional shipping in any direction for the next two years. So that in that respect in going before the American people and holding this measure up as a piece of great constructive legislation and in telling them that the bill will provide more ships, when as a matter of fact it will provide no more ships within the next two years, our Democratic friends are at least not adhering strictly to the facts.

In reference to the shipping bill which was pending at the last session of Congress and which was defeated there were many good people in this country who entertained the suspicion that the purpose of the bill was to buy German interned ships. A provision has been inserted in this bill preventing the acquisition of such vessels; but whether at the other end of the Avenue that exclusion is approved we do not know. Mr. President, we hardly know where we stand on any important legislation in this Chamber until we know whether it has been ratified in one form or another, either in advance or subsequently, at the other end of the Avenue.

There are other features of this bill—and I grieve to note them—to which serious objection can be taken. Since I have been a Member of this body I have never been possessed of that partisanship that distinguishes between the North and the South. I have been always as anxious to help the people of the South in reference to river and harbor improvements and other matters as I have the people of the North. This bill originally not only included the Great Lakes, but also the rivers of this country, especially the Mississippi River. But a loud cry came from the people of the Southern and Gulf States, from New Orleans and other points, to omit inland waters from the provisions of the bill. "For God's sake," they said, "we are trying to build up shipping on the Mississippi River. Do not hamstring us in the bill." So the Committee on Commerce has dropped out of the bill the reference to the inland waters. I can see no more reason for exempting the Mississippi River from the regulative features of this bill than for exempting the Great Lakes. Why should we put the traffic of the Great Lakes in a regulative straight-jacket and then make navigation on the Mississippi River perfectly immune? It is such discrimination that, to my mind, gives this bill rather more of a partisan flavor than it ought to have. I live near the headwaters of the Mississippi River. None of my people have sought immunity for the upper end of the river, so far as I know. The demand came from New Orleans and the lower river. Their prayer was heeded, while the Great Lakes were given the cold shoulder.

There are some features of this bill which I may discuss by and by. I am simply aiming now to draw the attention of the Senate to some of the most radical and dangerous features of the bill, to the end that Senators may see into what a gulf they are about to leap if they adopt this measure. However, I suppose the inexorable mandate has come from above, the mandate which has carried so many peculiar schemes through Congress, and that this bill, right or wrong, must be passed because our Democratic friends want to go out on the stump and say, "See what a great volume of constructive legislation we have passed under this administration." If they go out on the stump and tell the truth about this bill, if it becomes a law, they ought to say, "Gentlemen, we have passed a ship-purchase and ship-operating bill, but it is not possible to get any additional shipping under the present conditions for the next two or three years." However, they will not tell the people that, but they will have given them another Democratic dose of paregoric.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to his colleague?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. While my colleague was pointing out the fact that the framers of the bill left the Mississippi out and included the Great Lakes, I want to remind him also that they have limited the most restrictive provisions, those that will interfere the most with the operation of navigation, to a class that includes the Great Lakes, for section 19 only includes those carriers that are defined on the top of page 2 as common carriers by water in interstate commerce, including in express terms "on the high seas or the Great Lakes." Not only have the Great Lakes been discriminated against in that way, but they have been further discriminated against by imposing the restrictions which, as the Senator has so plainly pointed out, will almost absolutely paralyze the navigation referred to in that part of the bill directly affecting the commerce of the Great Lakes.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator is undoubtedly correct. It would work a great hardship on the shipping of the Great Lakes, a great deal of which is carried on by tramp steamers.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to suggest that the Senator will scarcely classify the Great Lakes along with the rivers and inland waterways of the country. The Great Lakes would correspond more nearly to the Gulf. They are high seas in effect and commerce carried on there is foreign as well as domestic. It is not only coastwise, but it is foreign commerce. I can not see any sort of reason for placing the Great Lakes on the same footing as the rivers and inland waterways of the country so far as the regulative powers of the shipping board are concerned. On the contrary, they classify naturally with the coastwise and foreign shipping, because they are used not only for coastwise and domestic commerce, but for foreign commerce as well.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; but foreign commerce would not fall under the restrictive provisions of section 19, except the foreign commerce on the Great Lakes. That is the point I was getting at.

PROPOSED MISSISSIPPI VALLEY NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, there seems to be nothing more to be said on the shipping bill after the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and I desire to take just about 10 minutes on another bill which has been introduced in the Senate looking to the establishment of a national park in the Mississippi Valley.

On a bright day in the summer of 1805, near McGregor, Iowa, and almost across from where the Wisconsin River empties its volume of water into the majestic Mississippi, Gen. Pike, of the United States Army, stepped from his little boat, climbed the rugged hills, and planted the Stars and Stripes thereon. It was the first American flag ever raised over the Northwest territory, and ever since the spot has been known as Pikes Peak.

On his return Gen. Pike recommended to President Jefferson that a fort be built at or near the place. Across the river, at Prairie du Chien, in pursuance of this recommendation, was constructed Fort Crawford, and in the immediate vicinity of Pikes Peak. Possibly no fort is more famous in American history.

A century before Pike planted the flag on the bluffs of the Mississippi Father Marquette and Louis Joliet drifted down the Wisconsin River and discovered the upper Mississippi. Later Father Marquette described the wonderful scenery at this point to King Louis as "inexpressibly grand." Few places of our national territory are so pregnant with historic interest as is this stretch of the Mississippi River. Fort Crawford has been one of the inspirational points of our history.

For a time in 1812 the union jack floated over it, but it was the last union jack to float on American territory.

It was here Zachary Taylor, subsequently President of the United States, was commander for some years.

It was here the love story of Jefferson Davis and the daughter of Taylor was woven out of their lives. Taylor is said to have been opposed to the young lieutenant because he was an Army officer.

It was here Blackhawk, the great Indian chief, was brought captive.

Here often came Ulysses S. Grant, and here he served.

At Fort Crawford Abraham Lincoln, volunteer in the Blackhawk War, received his honorable discharge.

From this place, in 1856, marched, under Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston, the last garrison from the plains and on to the Golden West.

The bluffs and woods around McGregor have been scenes of many Indian conferences; many Indian treaties have been signed there. Indian graves and relics are found to this day. This was the home of the Indian, the hunter, the trapper, the trader, the soldier.

The great advance of progress has not obliterated all those mementos of early times and prehistoric days. On the hills are found prehistoric mounds of the earlier races—so interesting and so important from an archaeological standpoint that Prof. Phoebe, a member of the London Archaeological Society, once expressed the opinion that this region should be preserved from commercialism on account of these historic mounds, and expressed wonder that the American Government had taken no steps to preserve them; that this group of mounds were the most valuable to the archaeologists of any group of mounds in existence.

Maj. Byers once said:

I have seen the Rhine and the Po, the Danube and the Hudson, the Tiber and the Rhone, but on none of these have I seen such entrancing beauty as on the Mississippi between Dubuque and St. Paul. If anyone should ask you what is the most beautiful water scene in all America, answer, it is from a high bluff above the Mississippi at McGregor, Iowa. There is a point just near to the little city that is called Pikes Peak. I climbed up there the other morning with some friends, and after emerging from the wood of splendid oak trees we suddenly beheld a scene such as one rarely witnesses in any land beneath the sun.

The mighty Mississippi lay 400 feet below us, sweeping in all its majesty to the ocean. Looking upstream from our point, the river seemed like a chain of little bright islands and lakes extending as far as the eye could reach. The islands were covered with verdure and hemmed in by oceans of pond lilies. Winding among the islands or dividing itself off into different channels or curves swept the great river, calmly, majestically, just as it has been doing for ages.

Right and left from the lofty bluffs where we stood were other forest-covered bluffs almost as high and beautiful. Opposite us, and beyond the river 5 miles away, stands the Wisconsin wall of the river. At times the bluffs there, too, are high and picturesque. But here at McGregor the supreme grandeur is on the Iowa side. Just below the peak where we stood the beautiful Wisconsin River pours its waters into the Mississippi.

Those things in themselves, from a historical standpoint, should call for the preservation of this portion of our country from the ravages of commercialism. It should be preserved, also, because of its picturesque and rugged beauty. There is no national park in the great Mississippi Valley. Millions of people live within a radius of 250 miles of this proposed park. These people can not visit the Yellowstone. This is as near like the Yellowstone as can be found. It would become the great playground of the Mississippi Valley—a place where thousands would turn for a little rest and recreation from the harassing hurly-burly of our commercial existence. The traveler will view the pictured rocks, the bluffs rising in majesty 400 feet above the Mississippi as it winds peacefully on its course to the sea, little islands with green verdure encircling a lake within the river, dotted with pond lilies—a panorama of dazzling and wonderful beauty. There is no more beautiful spot in this country.

Mark Twain, in "Life on the Mississippi," once said, concerning this part of the river:

The water is a beautiful olive green. The majestic bluffs that overlook the river charm one with the grace and variety of their forms and the soft beauty of their adornments. And then you have the shining river, winding here and there and yonder; its sweep interrupted at intervals by clusters of wooded islands threaded by silver channels; and you have glimpses of distant villages asleep upon capes; and of stealthy rafts slipping along in the shade of the forest walls; and of white steamers vanishing around remote points. And it is all as tranquil and reposeful as dreamland, and has nothing of this worldly about it, nothing to hang a fret or worry upon.

Prof. Brown, curator of the Wisconsin Historical Museum, has taken great interest in the scenery along the Mississippi, and some years ago expressed himself:

In common with many other persons, I have for several years thought that steps should be taken to provide for the preservation to the public of the widely known and appreciated beauty spots, Pictured Rocks and Pikes Peak.

Prof. Trowbridge of the Geological Department of the State University of Iowa pronounced it the most picturesque spot on the river.

This has been called the Switzerland of the Mississippi Valley. It is the duty of the United States to preserve these beauty spots. National parks are national assets. Cities have discovered the wisdom of playgrounds as breathing spots for their people; as a Nation we have recognized the duty to preserve our lakes and forests and waterfalls and geysers and canyons. People are awakened to the value of these things. Our people spend vast sums of money in traveling in foreign countries. Our beauty places would attract just as much as those of foreign countries. These places make for happier lives, more poised existence, better homes, better men, better women, better citizenship.

I trust the people of the Mississippi Valley may awaken to the great possibilities in this proposed national park and lend their assistance to a successful conclusion of the project. All that is asked in the bill is an investigation by the Government of the proposition.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15455) to establish a United States board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water engaged in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States; and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa has suggested that perhaps there is nothing more to be said on the subject of the shipping bill. If that is so, and the other side is ready to vote on it, I shall not weary the Senate with any remarks on my part. I presume, however, that that observation was rather more facetious than otherwise, and that there will be further discussion of the measure by those who are not in favor of it. Perhaps, in view of that, I would be justified in taking up a little of the time of the Senate in giving some of the reasons which prompt at least some of those who think the pending legislation desirable and efficacious.

SHIPPING SITUATION IN 1914 AND NOW.

In order to get a proper starting point in this discussion, it seems to me it will be worth while, at the outset of the consideration of the pending bill, to take stock of shipping conditions as they existed prior to the commencement of the European war and as we find them to-day.

The tonnage under the American flag registered for the foreign trade, exclusive of the Great Lakes, on June 30, 1914, comprised 2,405 vessels of 1,076,152 gross tons.

The corresponding tonnage on March 31, 1916, comprised 2,981 vessels of 2,094,534 gross tons.

American tonnage engaged in the coastwise trade on June 30, 1914, was 24,538 vessels of 6,852,536 gross tons—this includes 3,406 vessels of 2,882,922 gross tons on the Great Lakes.

The coastwise tonnage on March 31, 1916, comprised 23,592 vessels of 6,346,825 gross tons. This includes the vessels on the Great Lakes—2,981 of 2,094,534 gross tons.

It will be clearer if stated in the following fashion:

Date.	Registered vessels.		Enrolled and licensed vessels.				Grand total.
			Great Lakes.		Other coastwise.

The monthly additions to the American merchant fleet during the current fiscal year from construction in American shipyards and from the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry under the ship-registry act of August 18, 1914, are shown as follows:

Month.	Built in United States.		Foreign built.		Total.

Our tonnage in foreign trade has just about doubled since the commencement of the war. Our tonnage on the Great Lakes shows a decline of about 130,000 tons, steam vessels on the Great Lakes having been brought through the Welland Canal to the seaboard to engage in foreign ocean trade, and this movement still progresses; and, finally, upward of 300,000 tons heretofore engaged in our coastwise trade on the seaboard have gone into the foreign trade.

Foreign-built ships admitted to American registry under the ship registry act of August 18, 1914, up to date number 184, of 622,035 gross tons. It should be noted, however, that from March 4, 1915, to March 31, 1916, 128 vessels formerly under the American flag, of 61,342 gross tons, have been sold to foreigners. I attach a list of them, which I ask leave to insert without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WHERE EMPLOYED.

Great Lakes: 13 vessels, 22,338 tons.
Atlantic coast: 10 vessels, 17,854 tons.
Pacific coast: 6 vessels, 14,484 tons.

Mr. FLETCHER. This list indicates that "private enterprise" is not particularly attracted to the flag. If a good opportunity offers to dispose of a vessel or there is any reason for operating under a foreign flag, the idea of adding to an American merchant marine under the American flag influences very little, if at all. One American concern operates a line of ships, all American owned and financed. Six of their ships operate under the British flag and three under the American flag, transferred since the outbreak of war. Two of their ships were sunk by German cruisers. All 11 were under British flag, but American owned before the war. (P. 116, Senate hearings.)

The tonnage required for our over-seas trade is six to ten million tons. (P. 37, Senate Hearings.) Six million gross tons would supply about 60 per cent of present requirements for handling our foreign commerce (p. 223, Senate hearings), is the view of the Commissioner of Navigation.

At the beginning of the European war we had 2,405 vessels of 1,076,152 gross tons registered for the foreign trade. Some 300,000 tons went from the coastwise into foreign trade. Six hundred and twenty-two thousand and thirty-five tons came into American registry.

So now we have 2,981 vessels, of 2,094,534 gross tons, under the American flag registered for foreign trade, being about one-third to one-fifth of what we require.

The over-seas trade of the world demanded in August, 1914, about 45,403,877 gross tons of merchant shipping. This was the world's steam tonnage, June 30, 1914. The United Kingdom had 8,587 steamers, totaling 18,892,089 gross tons—over 40 per cent. The United States had a little over 2 per cent—1,076,152 tons.

There were other British ships, I presume not steamers, bringing British gross tonnage to 21,045,049.

It is estimated that only about 12,000,000 tons are now available—about one-third of the world's demand.

If the Government supplied, under this bill, 500,000 tons of merchant shipping—though 700,000 tons is more correct according to Mr. Marvin, page 18, Senate Hearings—it would be from 5 to 8 per cent only of what we need. It is difficult to see how that, even if put into competition with privately owned ships, should discourage private enterprise.

Such men as Mr. Franklin, representing large shipping interests, concede that if section 5 of the bill laid the emphasis on naval auxiliaries and Army transports rather than on "commercial requirements," and provided they should be leased or chartered to private concerns, "it would take away from this bill the principal objection, according to my understanding of the steamship interest." (Pp. 105, 110, Senate hearings.) He says further, "A constructive and upbuilding board would be beneficial to the interests of this country." (P. 106.)

He also said, "In a general way, we have no objection" to the powers given the board (p. 91) with respect to the regulatory features.

I mention this particularly in response to the argument of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that these regulations would be unfair and prejudicial to the upbuilding of a merchant marine. I regard Mr. Franklin as one of the best-informed men in this or any other country on the subject of shipping and all problems connected with it. I believe, too, that while he is identified with the shipowners' side of the question he is public-spirited and sufficiently broad-minded to keep in view as well the public interest.

It is conceded our shipping facilities are wholly inadequate. It may be granted that our merchant marine in foreign commerce is being augmented. It is really astonishing how slowly that has been going on, in view of the enormous profits of the shipping business. A considerable portion of that increase is due to the building of tankers, barges, and ships for and by particular interests to serve their own purposes.

It must be remembered that nearly one-third of the product of our mines, fields, and factories is surplus and must find markets abroad. This surplus will increase. There has been an increase in our exports, exclusive of munitions, during the war in Europe. Our foreign trade has been growing under normal conditions and will continue to grow from the very necessities of the case. It becomes important to treat it fairly by removing insuperable obstacles. It would not be going too far to encourage it a little. Without facilities for our sea transportation it must fight a losing battle. The Government can help somewhat toward the establishment of a merchant marine for the United States, without deterring individual enterprise, but, rather, assisting in the development of fields and routes and by regulations and a grasp of conditions which will contribute to foster and aid individual effort. We can not afford to build walls about the United States—one with no gates opening inward and the other with no gates opening outward. If there must be walls they should have gates opening both ways.

The protective tariff affords one wall. The coastwise monopoly affords the other. We could not prosper at all without openings or gates or depressions in these walls.

One-third of our products must go to foreign markets.

We are obliged to have raw materials and manufactured products.

Ships must not go loaded and return in ballast. They must have cargoes both ways.

It is good Democratic principle to favor competition in our markets from abroad. We can find markets abroad for our surplus by increasing our sales abroad, and we will do that by increasing our purchasers abroad. We can not well do either if there are not adequate means of ocean transportation.

If the world's carrying power is insufficient, the volume of the world's over-sea trade must be reduced.

The same is true of any country in the world.

The United Kingdom has taken steps to restrict her imports now because of her lack of merchant ships. To-day 67 ships must do the work of 100 for the United Kingdom, and 21 to 24 of these are neutral foreign vessels.

THE WORLD SITUATION.

On June 30, 1914, Lloyd's Register gives the following as to merchant shipping in the countries named:

British, 11,328 ships, 21,045,049 gross tons; Belgian, 182 ships, 352,124 gross tons; French, 1,576 ships, 2,319,438 gross tons; Italian, 1,160 ships, 1,668,296 gross tons; Japanese, 1,103 ships, 1,708,386 gross tons; Russian, 1,254 ships, 1,053,818 gross tons; total, 16,603 ships, 28,147,111 gross tons.

To-day it is estimated that in German, Austrian, and Turkish ports merchant ships of the allies number 143, of 225,802 gross tons. There have been sunk or seriously disabled 330 merchant ships of the allies, of 1,065,869 gross tons.

Cruisers, mines, and explosions have sunk or disabled 179 such merchant ships, of 495,922 gross tons, making a total of casualties and out of business 652 merchant ships, of 1,787,593 gross tons. The Berlin statement brings the total loss for the war up to July 1, 1,303 "enemy merchantmen," of 2,574,205 tons. This does not include merchantmen confiscated in the harbors of the central powers, and it appears that 244 neutral merchantmen have been destroyed, so that it may be fairly assumed that 3,000,000 tons of merchant shipping has been destroyed by the central powers.

On June 30, 1914, the merchant shipping of Austria-Hungary and Germany was as follows:

Austria-Hungarian, 445 ships, 1,055,719 gross tons; German, 2,388 ships, 5,459,296 tons; total, 2,833 ships, 6,515,015 gross tons.

Now, of these ships in neutral ports there are 763 ships, of 2,877,244 gross tons, and in the ports of allies 627 ships, of 4,297,480 gross tons, tied up.

The shipping of neutral nations June 30, 1914, numbered 11,400 ships, of 14,427,426 gross tons.

Of this number, losses have been suffered to the number of 684 ships, perhaps approaching a million gross tons.

An enormous proportion of British tonnage has been requisitioned for war purposes.

"Some months ago it reached 50 per cent. I believe that the right honorable gentleman would be able to tell us that at the present time it is very nearly two-thirds of our total tonnage," said Mr. Peto in the "Debate on the Address," February 17, 1916, the particular subject being "Control of merchant shipping," page 254.

Assuming that two-thirds of 21,055,049 gross tons has been withdrawn from merchant marine service, that means 14,036,699 gross tons. Add to that, also out of service, the Austro-Hungarian and German tonnage, 6,515,015; add also the total tonnage destroyed, estimated, 2,250,000; also the losses of neutrals, estimated, 1,000,000; also merchant ships of allies in enemy ports, 225,802; and you have a total of 24,027,506 gross tons of merchant shipping taken from the world's supply, which approximates, if it does not exceed, one-half of the total world's tonnage at the beginning of the war. This does not include 137 British steamers frozen up in the White Sea, according to the debate referred to later (p. 285). Since that debate, however, it appears these ships have been released, as indicated by this clipping.

BRITISH SHIPS ARE FREED—TWO HUNDRED RELEASED FROM BALTIC PORTS BY NORTH SEA BATTLE.

LONDON, July 10.

As an immediate result of the great North Sea battle nearly 200 British merchantmen have been released from Baltic ports, according to the morning papers.

These ships have been lying idle in Petrograd and other Baltic harbors since the outbreak of the war. They have passed through the Cattegat without interference from German warships and have arrived safely in British ports.

To be sure, since then Japan has increased her tonnage and we have increased ours, but it is doubtful if such increases offset the depreciation and ordinary wastage in the total world supply. Certainly the gaps in British tonnage have not been filled to any extent, for says Mr. Peto, in the House of Commons (p. 255 of debate):

And since the war commenced, although a large number of ships were in course of construction at the time of the declaration of war, practically no progress whatever has been made, and nothing whatever has been done to replace the wastage of war by fresh merchant-ship construction.

He further said:

It is most undesirable to hold up to the population of this country the glowing example of capital earning ten times the amount in freight rates that it was earning before the war commenced (p. 259).

And Mr. Balfour, the First Lord of the Admiralty, said:

The rates are, as has been truly said, not only high but preposterously and dangerously high (p. 264).

It will be remembered that 50 per cent of the excess profits goes to the Government, and an income tax in addition, making about 67½ per cent of the excess profits.

Mr. Shirley Benn said:

Our mercantile marine, as we all know, has helped to make our country what it is. It has not only made us the great overseas carrying country of the world but it has built up our trade in ports all over the world, and has maintained it. Every ship that is requisitioned and taken away from the ordinary carrying trade of our country means a diminution of our trade, something which the Chancellor of the Exchequer must view with alarm (p. 261).

Mr. Houston said:

We depend on ships not only for our Empire but for our existence (p. 279).

One remedy proposed in this debate was "the employment of German ships." There was some talk of purchasing German ships (p. 288). I have little doubt but the allies would be glad to have us purchase German ships if they were offered. This debate gives every evidence of that. It was pointed out that an expeditionary force takes up 4 tons of shipping for every man sent out. The general complaint was that 70 per cent of the British mercantile marine had been requisitioned by the Admiralty (p. 287), and "we are now becoming dependent upon neutrals for our food supply" (p. 278). Sir Joseph Walton, however, claimed that "a shade over 30 per cent of the mercantile supply had been commandeered" (p. 293). Argentine, Spanish, American, and Italian steamers are being chartered by English shipping firms to carry on the work which their own steamers could do had they not been requisitioned (p. 286). There are some 2,500 such firms. Apparently shipowners were not without representation in the House of Commons. This debate is very interesting and illuminating. For instance, Mr. Hogge says (p. 303):

From the figures given by the Statist I find that the freights between the River Plata and the United Kingdom, which in 1914 was 13s. 6d., are now 113s. 6d., or an increase of 1,000 per cent. From the Atlantic ports the increase amounts to 796 per cent, and that, roughly taking the all-over figures, the increase is something like 800 per cent above what they were.

Mr. Hogge frankly said, further:

I say to the president of the board of trade that if he restricts the employment of British ships between foreign ports—of course I know how it may be excused—what is going to happen? You are not only going to lose invisible exports, but you are going to lose a great deal more, because if the British ships can not carry on that trade, who is going to carry it on? The neutral ships between New York and Buenos Aires will cut into the trade which has been built up by British industry, by British sagacity, and British shrewdness. It stands to reason that if that trade by neutrals is continued for a year or a couple of years, or as long as the war lasts, every British shipowner will have to fight for it after the war is over. The neutral will be in possession, and he will be able to fight with more muscle and determination than formerly, because he is now getting access to a source of capital which he never had before, but which will enable him not only to maintain the trade but to buy new ships and trade under better conditions and offering better terms (p. 305).

He reasons that—

America . . . will probably be one of our greatest financial competitors in the future (p. 307).

The president of the board of trade, Mr. Runciman, made reply, saying, "We are trying at this time to pour a quart into a pint cup," referring to the problem of management and control of merchant vessels (p. 308). He did not care to state the tonnage of merchant vessels under requisition by the Government, but "we may take it that it is a very considerable part of our mercantile marine," and he stressed that—

The task thrown upon us is not only that of feeding this country but of keeping Italy, France, and Russia supplied (p. 310).

Where a hundred vessels were required before the war they are now attempting to do that same trade with 67 vessels, and out of that 67 something like 21 to 24 are neutral foreign vessels (p. 309).

While the British ships (transfer restriction) act was not passed until March, 1915, "We had, as a matter of fact, been exercising these powers from the first week after the outbreak of the war," he said (p. 312).

It is made plain in this debate that one reason why our grain has fared as well as it has is because we are nearer Liverpool than the other great grain-producing countries, and the shortage of ships has up to this time helped us in respect to food products, because whereas it was 3,000 miles to us, it was 12,000 miles to Australia, and 6,000 miles to Argentina, and as one ship had to do the work of two or three in normal times, it was economy to send that ship here—but note what Mr. Runciman further said, speaking of the transport department (p. 315):

They certainly managed the requisitioning for food supplies so well that the only trade in the world where there has not been an abnormal rise in the rates of freight has been that very trade which they for the time being controlled. Now, in order that that work may be extended, we have asked them to do for the Argentine and River Plata trade what they have done for the North Atlantic trade. In the first place, they have diverted ships in connection with the North Atlantic trade, for it is the nearer trade; you can make better use of your tonnage and get a larger amount of goods into this country for a smaller expenditure of shipping. Now, when the North Atlantic trade for various reasons is well supplied, and there are some people in America who seem to think we can not go elsewhere, it is just as well that we should start requisitioning for the River Plata and the Argentine, so providing that Argentine, Australian, and Indian grain would come into competition with the grain of the northern States of America.

Is there no food for thought in this for our wheat-growing friends?

Mr. Runciman further said:

The control (by the Government) of shipping is now so wide and so adequate that there is no vessel which can go and trade anywhere without permission of one kind or another. The last gap in that control is filled up by the licensing committee having to license vessels, not only those which run between foreign ports, but also those which run between this country and allied countries (p. 217).

The merchant yards all over England and Scotland have been "used for naval purposes, while merchant vessels have been laid on one side," but 145 vessels are being hurried away and another 140 will be declared "war work," for, he says, "We have come to the conclusion that the increase of our mercantile marine is just as necessary as warships," and he concluded with an appeal to take no steps that "would cripple us in adding to the merchant navy, immediately the war is over, so as to enable us to compete with our competitors and to build up at once the auxiliary fleet on which now our empire mainly depends." (P. 325.)

It is unnecessary to cite other authority to strengthen the effort we are now making to acquire ships. I am tempted, however, to quote from another member taking part in that debate, Mr. Pringle, as follows:

Before the American Civil War, America had a considerable portion of the Atlantic trade. She lost it during the war and has never got it back. . . . They will get it back now. When people speak of capturing German trade and of the necessity of fighting Germany after this war they cast their eyes on the wrong part of the map. It is on the other side of the Atlantic that we have to look for dangerous competition. We may see there the financial center of the world; we may there also see our most serious rivals in shipping. The trade between the Plata and New York is now almost entirely in American hands. I have been told by a man who ought to know that a single firm, which has practically only got into the trade since the beginning of the war, has made £1,800,000 in that time. What is the result? They are adding to their fleet and buying ships as fast as they can. They are making great profits. The United States is not taking their excess profits, so that they are able to put them into new ships. It is new ships all the time. What will be the situation at the end of the war? They will not have a heavy income tax, but they will have all these resources; they will be able to carry all these goods for practically nothing when the British shipowner tries to get back his own trade and when the British shipowner will have to bear an income tax of 5s. to 7s. 6d. in the pound—(An honorable Member: "Plus the super-tax!") If he is lucky enough to earn supertax. Under these conditions will it be possible to regain that trade?

This indicates what our friends across the ocean realize is the situation on their part and what they assume we will have sense enough to do on this side.

The remedy decided upon by the Government in February, on the principle that high freights are due to the fact that the supply falls short of the demand, was to place restrictions upon imports. The first imports to be affected were paper, paper-making materials, tobacco, dried fruits, furniture woods, stones, and slates. Orders in council were issued prohibiting the importation into the United Kingdom of any article which came under the general head of "luxuries." Among the articles prohibited were motor cars for private use, musical instruments, cutlery of all kinds, hardware, cotton and woolen manufactures, chinaware, fancy goods, and soaps.

SHIPPING COMPANIES' PROFITS.

The Statist of April 29, 1916, gives the following figures:

Frederick Leyland & Co.: For the year ended December 31, 1915, the profits of this line, after deducting expenses, debenture interest, and excess profit duty, etc., were £1,441,690, on a total capitalization of £2,614,350. The fleet consists of 45 steamers, with an aggregate gross tonnage of 283,651 tons. It is pointed out that "the directors regret the loss of some steamers, but do not propose making any statement in regard thereto at the present time."

Elder Line: This fleet consisted of 23 steamers, with an aggregate gross registered tonnage of 72,119 tons. This well-known Liverpool company has an authorized capital of £1,000,000. For 1915 it made a trading profit of £74,947.

British & African Steam Navigation Co. (Ltd.): This company has a fleet of 38 steamers, with a gross registered tonnage of 113,416 tons. The authorized share capital is £1,000,000. For 1915 the company showed a profit of £104,022.

Imperial Direct Line: This company has six steamers with an aggregate gross registered tonnage of 34,024 tons. The authorized share capital is £500,000, of which £300,000 has been issued. In 1915 it made a profit of £63,381.

According to the British Trade Journal of May 1, 1916, the Moor Line records a profit of £374,000, of which £150,000 is added to the contingency fund, £100,000 to reserve, and £85,250 to pay a dividend of 25 per cent.

The Caion Line paid a dividend of 30 per cent and carried £11,800 "forward."

The Redcroft Line paid a dividend of 20 per cent, placed £35,000 to reserve, £55,000 is reserved to cover income tax and excess profit duty, all on a capital of £100,000.

Cases are cited in numbers like this—the four-masted schooner T. W. Dunn, normally worth £1,000, was bought recently for £2,500, and chartered for £5,000 to take to Bordeaux a cargo of lubricating oil.

Tramp steamers which in normal times were sold for £30,000 are now being bought at £80,000 to £100,000 each.

Whereas in 1914, the United Kingdom built 1,722,000 tons of shipping; in 1915, the total was only 649,000 tons.

The British Dominions overseas built only half the tonnage in 1915 they built in 1914.

The rest of the world built 1,694,000 tons in 1914 and only 989,000 tons in 1915.

Denmark and Norway are about the only countries that added to their tonnage output in 1915 over 1914.

Mr. Archibald Hurd has shown that between the outbreak of the war and January 22, 1915, no fewer than 2,193 ships, with a total tonnage of 3,774,319, have been detained, captured, or destroyed.

To these must be added the ships requisitioned by Governments for naval and military work.

It is shown that Australia had a surplus of 3,000,000 tons of wheat available for export, and up to the end of March only about 500,000 tons had been shipped or contracted for shipment, owing to the scarcity of ships.

"The remedies are obvious," says the British Trade Journal. "Enemy tonnage in the allied and in neutral countries should be employed and shipyards must be kept at work, night and day, and the Government must be asked whether some of the requisitioned ships can not be released from time to time to assist the world's trade."

Mr. Cuthbert Maughon, in the Quarterly Review (London), April, 1916, discusses at length "the shipping problem," indulging in such expressions as these: "But the British Nation is now wide-awake and realizes at last that an efficient mercantile marine is just as important in its way for this country as a magnificent navy" and "the whole of the mercantile marine has found a place in the nation's heart which it never had before."

NEED OF AMERICAN SHIPPING IN SOUTH AMERICAN TRADE.

With reference to the subject of our trade with South America, it is one of the most inviting fields, and the demand is that there shall be some provision made for affording transportation facilities in order that we may take advantage of the opportunities which have been created to a very large extent by conditions in Europe.

The Federal Trade Commission, which is engaged in an investigation of foreign trade conditions, recently sent an agent to several of the South American countries. He found, especially on the east coast, a number of instances where the lack of adequate shipping to carry American goods was working great hardship to the American manufacturer and numerous instances where European goods at the present time are able to enter the South American markets on much more favorable shipping rates and with assurance of prompt deliveries.

Investigation made in South America clearly shows that for a number of years before the war all except one of the steamship lines between New York and Brazil and River Plata ports have been in a combination known as the conference agreement. The principal feature of this agreement is the payment of a rebate of 10 per cent on the amount of freight paid by any shipper who confined his shipments solely to steamers in the conference agreement. Payment of the rebate is made at six months' intervals, the settlement always being deferred for six months after the period covered by the payment. It was stated by various informants in Brazil that the conference agreement ceased to be operative about the first of 1916 for trade between Brazil and the United States ports. It was in operation as late as March, 1916, for three of the lines between River Plata ports and the United States, the three lines being the Lamport & Holt, Prince, and Barber Lines. Before the war there were also some other lines in the agreement. The effect of the conference system of rebates on the shipper, together with the certainty of prompt and regular service which existed before the war, was to give the conference lines practically a monopoly of all transportation of goods between the United States and the east coast of South America. Notwithstanding the much lower rates offered by occasional tramp steamers, no shipper who had regular shipments to make could make use of them without losing his conference-line rebate privileges, and so being obliged to pay a higher freight on those lines than his competitors enjoyed.

The power which the "conference" lines are exercising to-day in the United States River Plata trade through their rebate system in exacting higher rates from shippers who must use their lines regularly is shown in the following incidents. A shipper of sheepskins to the United States was offered a rate of $25 per ton on an independent boat. The shipment actually went forward, however, at a rate of $40 per ton on a conference line boat, as the accumulated rebate that would be forfeited to the conference lines would be much in excess of the amount saved on this shipment. Another shipper, who had a low-grade chemical product to ship, and who was not a regular shipper, was able to get a rate of $35 per ton on an independent steamer instead of the $60 per ton asked for by the conference lines.

Not only has the trade between the United States and the east coast of South America been hampered by the practical monopoly exercised over it by the conference lines by forcing such trade to pay much higher rates than had there been competition, but there has been a further burden laid on it through the discrimination made in giving European goods to the same ports much cheaper rates over their lines. The following instance illustrates how, even before the war, the conference-line monopoly of the situation was used to the disadvantage of American trade. When Brazil granted by means of a preferential tariff lower duties on certain classes of imports from the United States, such as cement, an article on which the freight from Europe was much lower than from the United States at the time when the preferential duties went into effect, the conference lines raised their rates from the United States to Brazil an amount sufficient to absorb the advantage which Brazil sought to give American manufacturers. This action by the conference lines resulted in protecting the European cement manufacturers in their control of the Brazilian markets through their lower freight rates.

Of many examples encountered in Montevideo and Buenos Aires of the discriminatory freights in force at the present time against American trade the following may be cited: An importing firm in Buenos Aires placed duplicate orders for shipments of iron chains, one order going to the United States and the other to England. Both shipments went forward in December, 1915, over conference line steamers. The freight paid on the English shipment was at the rate of $13.25 per ton, that on the American shipment $31.25 per ton. Another firm, importing hosiery, had to pay freight at the rate of $23 per 100 cubic feet for a shipment made in September, 1915, from New York, while in November, 1915, notwithstanding that there was a general increase in ocean freight in the interval, a shipment of hosiery was made from Liverpool at the rate of $15 per hundred feet.

The effect of the high freight rates on the delivered prices of commodities, especially on those which are bulky in proportion to value, can readily be understood. Importation of those articles is restricted to the amount which is absolutely necessary. And when the freight on the article shipped amounts to from one to four times the price of the article at point of shipment, and the much lower rate from Europe is considered, the difficulty of securing American trade under the present conditions can be appreciated. And to make conditions worse, there is the difficulty in getting ships to carry American goods, even at the discriminatory rates.

Managers of firms engaged in importing goods both from Europe and the United States gave specific instances of the hampering of their trade in American goods through inability to get deliveries. They got prompt shipment from Europe on similar lines still obtainable from there. It was pointed out that various articles urgently needed for consumption can more readily be secured at much lower freight rates from Great Britain, France, Italy, and even Germany—through neutral countries—than from the United States. As the situation is understood by these men the control exercised over the British mercantile marine by the British authorities determines the shipping rates, regulates the chartering of ships, determines who shall be allowed shipping facilities, prescribes the extent of their shipments, and enforces the compliance of certain conditions regarding destination and the subsequent use which the consignee can make of the goods. It is widely believed by Americans who are intimately connected with importing houses which are doing a large business in American goods on the east coast that the measures taken by the interests which at present control the movement of the British mercantile marine go beyond the limits warranted by military necessity and are being used to hamper, in the interest of British foreign trade, much of the American trade that threatens to become thoroughly entrenched in the foreign markets.

For example, during February, 1916, a large coal consumer in Buenos Aires sought to place an order for coal with an important American colliery. The American firm named an attractive price, but was not able to charter a boat which would make delivery in time. Yet on the same day, in spite of the restrictions then in force on the exportations of coal by the British authorities, the Argentine firm was offered three cargoes of coal then being loaded in Wales. There was no scarcity of colliers obtainable to carry British coal. Great numbers of British freighters are coming out to South America in ballast or with part cargoes, the high rates on eastbound cargoes paying them large profits on this one-way traffic. Were some of these boats permitted to cross the Atlantic to the United States, they could bring down full cargoes at high rates, and the American shipping situation would be somewhat alleviated. Before the war the conference lines, when fighting a line of independent steamers, would send out a steamer half loaded from Liverpool to call at New Orleans for cargo taken at a cut-rate freight charge to Buenos Aires, so as to prevent an independent steamer from getting a full cargo from the United States to Buenos Aires. Instead of routing steamers from England via the United States to-day, the conference lines are constantly cutting down on their American service by withdrawing steamers from it for their trans-Atlantic lines.

It is perfectly well known that foreign nations have used their ship lines for the direct upbuilding of their foreign trade. German steamship lines have maintained service continuously for years to certain parts of the world in which the existing German trade did not pay for the maintenance of the service, but the presence of these transportation facilities, the assistance offered by the steamship lines, and the encouragement of the German Government have resulted in a rapid development of German trade into these markets. Thus the steamship lines were used as a medium through which the German foreign trade was directly increased. At Colon one of the finest concrete buildings is the Hamburg-American's new structure, just completed and furnished when the European war came. They were preparing to utilize the Panama Canal on an extended scale.

Foreign nations which have had large merchant fleets under their own flag have been enabled to take care of their foreign business during the stress of the war conditions. They have not only protected the foreign business of their citizens, but they have been enabled to take full advantage of the opportunities for new business. Thus American exporters have been informed by British lines running from Canadian ports that Canadian cargoes would be given preference in all demands for space, and that American shipments would only be taken after the requirements of Canadian shippers had been satisfied. Similarly the Japanese Government has required Japanese steamship interests to give preference to Japanese demands for cargo space, and has kept the freight charges to Japanese on a reasonable basis. By these entirely proper and sensible requirements Japanese firms have been saved much interruption of business and have been able to extend their trade over seas. In the meantime American houses have been unable to obtain cargo space across the Pacific, and thousands of tons of freight have been piled on the docks awaiting shipment. (See commerce reports for Sept. 30, 1915, pp. 1523-1528.)

The success of the British export trade in coal depends directly upon more favorable shipping rates to South America, the Mediterranean, and other markets. Coal is mined in the United States much cheaper than in either Great Britain or Germany. It can be put down on the docks at tidewater along our Atlantic coast much cheaper than it can be placed on the docks of the North Sea or the South Wales ports, but the lower freight rates from Great Britain to South America offset the advantage which American coal normally should enjoy. This difference could be remedied by steamship lines running from the United States to South America.

What has just been said of coal applies with equal force to cement. South America, particularly the east coast, imports large quantities of cement as well as coal. This is also a heavy commodity which must move on low freight rates. England, Germany, and Belgium before the war had the bulk of the South American trade, notwithstanding the fact that more favorable producing conditions in the United States permit American producers to manufacture cement at equal, if not at lower, costs than any important European producers. They enjoyed this trade primarily because of the lower shipping rates available from European ports.

In considering the possible traffic which might furnish cargoes north and south, it may therefore be understood that with proper shipping facilities, which would insure regular and prompt deliveries at freight rates equaling those from Europe, our coal and cement operators would furnish the bulk traffic southward, which would be necessary for the economical operation of service. This bulk traffic would assist in keeping the freight rates low on the higher-grade commodities, such as manufactured articles of all kinds, which are certain of a greatly increased sale in South America whenever those markets are rendered accessible. There is thus no reason to doubt that plenty of tonnage will be offered for shipment south. On the return voyage it is equally reasonable to anticipate an excellent business. The United States is constantly buying more and more of South American raw materials and food products. This Nation consumes more than half the world's rubber, and could take the entire production of the Amazon Valley. It needs great quantities of South American hides and wool. It takes heavy tonnages of Chilean nitrates. American capital is developing copper and tin mines in Chile, Peru, and Bolivia. The ore or mineral from these mines will be shipped to the United States for refining. Moreover, important American interests have secured large holdings of iron ore in South America on both the east and west coasts. In some cases these holdings are being developed. This ore is to be shipped to blast furnaces and rolling mills along our Atlantic coast. Thus rubber, hides, wool, coffee, nitrate, tin, copper, and iron ore may be relied upon to furnish an increasing volume of return tonnage.

TRADE WITH SOUTH AMERICA.

The meeting of the International High Commission in Buenos Aires April 3-15, last, was successful and important in every respect.

It brought the representatives of the best thought and highest aims of Pan America into close touch, advancing the social and business relations while moving toward the solution of economic and governmental problems.

It gave opportunity for personal observation of conditions and first-hand study of possibilities.

Just a glance at a few general facts suffices to show that, so far as commerce is concerned, there is existing a very considerable volume between the countries of South America and the United States; there is in waiting a much larger volume, and the future holds in store, ready for development, a trade no one dare estimate in tonnage or in dollars and cents.

Take, for illustration, Brazil, with a population of 24,000,000, and a territory larger than the whole of Continental United States; with a climate varying from tropic to temperate; yielding products, including rubber, coffee, cotton, tropical fruits, in the northern and central portion, and grain, hay, and live stock in the southern; minerals in her mountains, from finest stones to iron ore, in unexplored quantities.

Her exports in 1914 were valued at $221,469,480 and her imports at $165,556,950.

Take Argentina, with a climate from semitropical in the north to frigid in the south, and a soil capable of supplying every need of man and beast. The luscious grapes of Mendoza, at the foot of the Andes, contrast with the products of Patagonia. The wheat, corn, hay, and live stock of the vast pampas lands, level, fertile, and readily cultivated, constitute a permanent source of great and expanding wealth.

Her exports for 1914 were valued at $468,999,410 and her imports at $408,711,966.

The principal cities of these two immense Republics are Rio de Janeiro, with a population of 1,500,000 and Buenos Aires, with a population of 1,700,000. Rio is beautiful and picturesque, overlooking her magnificent land-locked harbor and bordering on the Atlantic.

"B. A.," commonly called for brevity, is beautiful and more Parisianized, extending along the broad Plata River, which flows on eastward 150 miles to Montevideo, where it is 119 miles wide, and thence some 15 miles farther to mingle with the Atlantic Ocean.

We are the largest purchasers of Brazil's coffee and rubber.

We are the largest purchasers of Argentina's hides and wool. I need not mention other products.

They need our coal and cement in enormous quantities. I am speaking of bulk traffic mainly.

They need our manufactured products, like cotton goods, machinery, wire, and numerous other commodities.

We have never had our share of this trade. We have never been in position to cultivate and develop it heretofore. Before the unprecedented catastrophe in Europe the traffic moved eastward across the Atlantic. There were controlling reasons for that. European capital had invested heavily in these countries. There were many European settlers of the best type, with capital and energy, actively engaged in various enterprises and in promoting that connection. Means of communication with Europe were quicker, more certain and efficient than with the United States. The distance from Buenos Aires to Falmouth, England, is about 5,700 knots. It is about the same from Buenos Aires to New York. Ships made regular sailings, covering the former distance in 14 days, while, with some irregularity, it required 24 days to cover the latter.

Better ships, better facilities, operated to Europe, with a saving of 10 days' time each voyage; and is it any wonder that trade moved in that direction?

Again, European branch banks were doing business all over these countries, while, until the Federal reserve act was passed, we were unable to establish a branch banking institution whereby financial transactions could be expeditiously handled there.

Now, what is the situation? Old commercial ties have been severed. New connections must be made. Argentina's wheat is rotting in the fields because there are no ships to carry it. Going from Buenos Aires to Mendoza we passed through that rich pampas country, and I observed immense stacks of sacked wheat in the fields, and inquired of the president of the railroad company why it was not being shipped. He said:

The railroad can not move it, because we have 700,000 tons now loading down our warehouses and sidings at our terminals, and we have no place to put it.

That wheat was wanted in Europe at higher prices than it had known for years, but there were lacking means of getting it to market. I found people dredging the river for the coal which had fallen overboard while the ships were unloaded at Buenos Aires in past years. It was worth $28 per ton. I made some inquiry about freight rates, and was told that in normal times the freight on coal from New York was 16 to 20 shillings per ton—it was now 102 shillings per ton. On belting and leather the freight from New York to Buenos Aires had been $7 per ton, but the last invoice showed $40 per ton, and notice had been given of a further increase of 50 per cent over that.

General merchandise which had paid 18 cents per cubic foot now had to pay 67½ cents, and notice had been given that in 10 days the rates would be $1.30. Drugs had to pay $1.30 per cubic foot, plus 35 per cent of value. A contract for cast-iron pipe, sufficient to lay 400 miles, had just been let to competitive bids. American manufacturers were the lowest bidders, f. o. b., but Liverpool and London people got the contract because they were able to fix the freight rate, and at a much lower figure than the American concern could arrange.

No argument is required, in the face of these facts, to convince anyone that the real need to enable us to hold the trade we have and extend it is control of the means of transportation.

The commerce is there. Our financial institutions have taken hold. The disposition of the people is to establish relations with us. There are 6,000 miles of high seas between us. The moving bridge is all that is required. How will that call be answered?

There are some details which might be borne in mind.

For instance, April here is the beginning of fall in Buenos Aires. Even though many of the products we grow are grown there, inasmuch as theirs are ready for market after our season is over, or vice versa, we are in position to trade in the same products.

The joint commission accomplished much toward bringing about uniformity of laws which will assist commerce. The customs laws, for instance, will doubtless undergo modifications to the advantage of all the countries.

For example, Brazil imposes a duty on automobiles of $300 per machine, no matter what its value.

We observed in the streets of Rio many fine French and Italian automobiles, but seldom saw a low-priced American make.

In Uruguay, that ambitious and prosperous little—as compared to Brazil and Argentina—Republic, full of patriotism, intelligence, and progress, with Montevideo, its principal city, having a population of about 500,000, and one of the prettiest and most enterprising cities of the world, the duty on automobiles is 14 per cent of the value. There we saw many American machines, and Mr. Shaw, the agent, can tell you the Ford is having a great run.

American capital is developing copper and tin mines in Chile, Peru, and Bolivia. The ore or mineral from these mines will be shipped to the United States for refining. In fact, American interests have secured large holdings of iron ore on both the east and west coasts and they are being developed. There are the nitrates of Chile, also. We want the raw products of every Latin-American country—they want our manufactured goods. There would be no difficulty in finding cargoes in increasing volume both ways—to and from both coasts. Shipping facilities insuring regular and quick service at reasonable rates, which would be profitable, would shift the important routes of trade from east and west to north and south.

As an illustration of present tendencies and opportunities, let me instance the alterations occasioned by the European war in the usual routes of Argentine foreign trade since 1913.

I have here a list of articles which indicate the principal goods and products imported into Argentina from the United States and a comparison between the years 1913 and 1915, which I should like to insert in the Record without reading, if there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SOME OF THE PRINCIPAL GOODS AND PRODUCTS IMPORTED INTO ARGENTINA FROM THE UNITED STATES, AND A COMPARISON OF PROPORTIONS BETWEEN THE YEARS 1913 AND 1915.

Coal: Of the total imports in 1913 the United States furnished 1.3 per cent and in 1915 23.5 per cent.

Naphtha (impure): The United States furnished in 1913 85.6 per cent and in 1915 41 per cent.

This decrease is due to the fact that in 1913 Mexico furnished 11.1 per cent and in 1915 58.8 per cent.

Hydraulic clay: The United States furnished in 1913 1.5 per cent and in 1915 9.1 per cent.

Galvanized iron, in 1913 4.7 per cent and in 1915 26.5 per cent.

Pig and sheet iron, in 1913 7.1 per cent and in 1915 78.5 per cent.

Steel rails, in 1913 26.1 per cent and in 1915 61.7 per cent.

Machinery (various kinds): The United States furnished in 1913 13.5 per cent and in 1915 31.9 per cent.

Automobiles, in 1913 19.3 per cent and in 1915 73.1 per cent.

Railway material, in 1913 5.3 per cent and in 1915 8 per cent.

Most of the railway material, including railway wagons and locomotives, have been obtained from the United Kingdom.

Wire and cable for electric purposes: The United States furnished in 1913 2.5 per cent and in 1915 14.3 per cent.

Wrought iron, in 1913 5.3 per cent and in 1915 10 per cent.

Iron girders, in 1913 1.5 per cent and in 1915 41.3 per cent.

Cleaned rice, in 1913 practically nothing and in 1915 11.1 per cent.

Spruce, in 1913 50.6 per cent and in 1915 31.3 per cent.

Canada having gone from 30 per cent in 1913 to 62 per cent in 1915, shipping facilities no doubt favored Canada.

Furniture: The United States supplied in 1913 25.1 per cent and in 1915 41.8 per cent.

Spare parts for machinery, in 1913 29.1 per cent and in 1915 35.3 per cent.

Spare parts for carriages and automobiles, in 1913 4.4 per cent and in 1915 13.8 per cent.

Lubricating oils, in 1913 56.8 per cent and in 1915 80.6 per cent.

Galvanized wire, in 1913 23.3 per cent and in 1915 93.7 per cent.

Petroleum, in 1913 99.9 per cent and in 1915 same.

Galvanized iron pipes, in 1913 12 per cent and in 1915 80.9 per cent.

Patent medicines, in 1913 11.4 per cent and in 1915 16.6 per cent.

Cotton socks, in 1913 0.2 per cent and in 1915 38.4 per cent.

Reapers, in 1913 34.7 per cent and in 1915 63.1 per cent.

Sheet glass, in 1913 0.9 per cent and in 1915 27.4 per cent.

News print paper, in 1913 35.9 per cent and in 1915 57 per cent.

Watches, in 1913 practically nothing and in 1915 5.6 per cent.

Spun cotton: Unbleached, in 1913 4.4 per cent and in 1915 59.3 per cent.

Sisal twine, in 1913 92.2 per cent and in 1915 99 per cent.

Iron pipes other than galvanized: United States furnished only 7.6 per cent, but this is largely due to the more favorable freight rates and facilities of the United Kingdom.

Household utensils, in 1913 4.1 per cent and in 1915 14.2 per cent.

Thrashing machines, in 1913 63.1 per cent and in 1915 60.1 per cent.

This falling off is due to the increase from Canada, which has gone from practically nothing in 1913 to 37.6 per cent in 1915.

Iron and steel manufactures, in 1913 14.1 per cent and in 1915 14.5 per cent. The United Kingdom supplying most of this material undoubtedly because of better shipping facilities and more favorable rates.

Steel fishplates, in 1913 20 per cent and in 1915 70.4 per cent.

Cotton goods, in 1913 practically nothing and in 1915 5.8 per cent.

Bolts and nuts, in 1913 24.3 per cent and in 1915 43.5 per cent.

Plows, in 1913 91.8 per cent and in 1915 97 per cent.

Pianos, in 1913 4.8 per cent and in 1915 31.3 per cent.

Paper for printed matter, in 1913 0.8 per cent and in 1915 26.2 per cent.

Malt, in 1913 practically nothing and in 1915 32.8 per cent.

Sewing machines, in 1913 59.2 per cent and in 1915 89.5 per cent.

Tin plate, in 1913 5 per cent and in 1915 70.5 per cent.

Cotton oil, in 1913 99 per cent and in 1915 99.2 per cent.

Dynamoes and electric motors, in 1913 practically nothing and in 1915 11.6 per cent.

Copper manufactures, in 1913 11.4 per cent and in 1915 19.5 per cent.

Unbleached cotton goods, in 1913 2.7 per cent and in 1915 4.3 per cent.

Tramway material, in 1913 nothing and in 1915 5.7 per cent.

Bollers, in 1913 1.4 per cent and in 1915 9.7 per cent.

Colored cotton yarn, in 1913 0.1 per cent and in 1915 30 per cent.

Glassware, in 1913 negligible and in 1915 5.8 per cent.

Colored cotton goods, in 1913 negligible and in 1915 6.2 per cent.

Electrical material, in 1913 negligible and in 1915 4.1 per cent.

Boots and shoes, in 1913 43.7 per cent and in 1915 61.4 per cent.

Steel ingots and sheets, in 1913 2.9 per cent and in 1915 47.3 per cent.

Staves and empty casks, in 1913 88.9 per cent and in 1915 91.7 per cent.

Iron and steel wire other than galvanized, in 1913 40.2 per cent and in 1915 93.7 per cent.

Iron columns, in 1913 6.3 per cent and in 1915 52.1 per cent.

Painters' colors, in 1913 17.3 per cent and in 1915 26.1 per cent.

Sacks for packing meat, in 1913 negligible and in 1915 32.9 per cent.

Motors, various kinds, in 1913 58 per cent and in 1915 70.2 per cent.

Of the exports from Argentina, the United States took of the total as follows:

Maize, in 1913 1.9 per cent and in 1915 2.1 per cent.

Linseed, in 1913 10.2 per cent and in 1915 25.7 per cent.

Wool, in 1913 7.4 per cent and in 1915 44.1 per cent.

Frozen beef, in 1913 negligible and in 1915 11 per cent.

Salted ox and cow hides, in 1913 16.6 per cent and in 1915 71.5 per cent.

Dry ox and cow hides, in 1913 50.7 per cent and in 1915 72.7 per cent.

Tallow, in 1913 negligible and in 1915 1.7 per cent.

Sheepskins, in 1913 0.7 per cent and in 1915 11.7 per cent.

The United States is the largest purchaser of quebracho logs, but the exportation has fallen off to some extent, no doubt by reason of the excessive freight rates. The same is true of extract of quebracho, except that the United Kingdom has greatly increased its purchase of this material. It may be that shipments are made to the United Kingdom which find their way to the United States by that route.

Frozen mutton, in 1913 negligible and in 1915 15.9 per cent.

Horsehair, in 1913 25 per cent and in 1915 44.6 per cent.

Goatskins, in 1913 90 per cent and in 1915 98 per cent.

Bones, in 1913 54.6 per cent and in 1915 77.5 per cent.

Sundry frozen meats, in 1913 0.9 per cent and in 1915 23.6 per cent.

Dry horsehides, in 1913 5 per cent and in 1915 94.7 per cent.

Nutria skins, in 1913 negligible and in 1915 93.8 per cent.

The United States took most of the tanned sheepskins in 1913, and in 1915 98.7 per cent.

Caseln, in 1913 18.4 per cent and in 1915 71.5 per cent.

Mr. FLETCHER. This list shows a very marked increase in the quantity of imports from the United States to Argentina and in the quantity of exports from Argentina to the United States since 1913.

I have only mentioned some of the principal articles.

I have also resolutions from a section of the Joint High Commission in respect to the necessity of shipping facilities in the promotion of our trade with Latin American countries. I will ask to have that inserted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The United States section of the International High Commission, after the conference last April in Buenos Aires, unanimously joined in the following report regarding the shipping situation:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 8, 1916.

So important did the members of the United States Section of the International High Commission find the shipping question in South American countries that they deem it their duty especially to report the statements brought to their attention by residents of the countries visited as well as by members of the commission from the Republics of Central and South America attending the Buenos Aires conference.

Without exception, in every country we found the shipping question uppermost in the minds of Government officials, bankers, and business men. Practically every business man with whom the members of the commission discussed conditions emphasized the absolute need of greatly increased ocean tonnage, while the members of the American colonies in the various cities sought every opportunity to impress upon the members of the commission the importance of action at the earliest moment to improve conditions.

It was pointed out repeatedly that under the normal circumstances preceding the war the operation of many lines to European countries for both passengers and freight, making the trips in less time than steamers plying to the United States, gave Europe a great advantage in the sale of merchandise, not only because of the larger tonnage available and quicker service but because of the lower freight rates enjoyed. Representatives of the American business houses declared that it would be very difficult to extend American trade with such a handicap.

As a result of the war, the cost of ocean tonnage to South American ports has increased enormously, and instead of an improvement in the conditions the fear seems to be well grounded that they will become worse. As an illustration of present rates, it may be stated that before the war the rate on coal from the United States to Buenos Aires was 16s. to 20s. per ton; for a considerable time recently it has been 102s. 6d., and on occasions the rate has been as high as 120s. As a result coal has been selling in Buenos Aires at $28 to $30 a ton, nearly $25 of this price being represented in freight payments. Before the war it sold in cargo lots at $7.75 to $8.

Rates on hardware, drugs, paper, and general merchandise have increased in like proportion, and notices of general advances approximating 50 per cent additional were given to Buenos Aires houses about the middle of April. Even at these prices immediate acceptance of cargo space was necessary. We are advised bottoms are available in very much larger proportion from Great Britain than from other countries, and British merchants are enjoying rates 50 to 75 per cent less than American manufacturers. The situation as to rates does not obtain in the Argentine alone but applies in all the countries. A number of notable cases were brought to the attention of members of the commission where important contracts have recently gone to Europe, which would have been given to the United States, but for the wide difference of freight rates which made it impossible for our manufacturers to compete.

It was pointed out by the representatives of American shippers in these countries that very much higher rates to the United States, as against Europe, seriously militate against our manufacturers in the purchase of raw materials, which become available to European manufacturers at lower cost because of the cheaper transportation. This, of course, adds to the difficulty our manufacturers encounter in marketing manufactured products in competition with Europe.

American houses in Brazil and the Argentine informed the commission that they had been notified in the middle of April that a number of ships now in service from New York to South American ports would be taken off of this direct service and would soon make the trip from New York via Europe, thus still further restricting a service already so seriously impaired as to constitute a grave menace to our South American commerce.

The representatives of all the Governments participating in the Buenos Aires conference took every opportunity to urge that the shipping conditions could only be improved on the initiative of the United States. They made clear their inability to finance new steamship enterprises, but at the same time promised that cooperation would be given in every way that their Governments could aid. It was also urged upon us that, while the present situation constituted a serious emergency calling for the quickest possible relief, the development of the commerce of the United States with South American countries in times of peace necessitated very much greater tonnage than had ever been available, while fast passenger lines were also essential if increased trade and communication between the countries were to be developed.

The United States commission does not as a commission assume to say what remedies should be applied by our Government, but they are convinced that there is no more vital question affecting our commerce with the Latin American countries than that of providing greatly increased shipping facilities.

Mr. FLETCHER. I also have a copy of a letter from the American commercial attaché, Dr. Albert Hale, with reference to a business transaction in Buenos Aires, which illustrates the difficulties with which our manufacturers must now contend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be inserted in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

If specification is needed, as one example, I attach a copy of report from American Commercial Attaché Albert Hale, stationed at Buenos Aires, made while we were there, to wit:

APRIL 8, 1916.

CHIEF BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE,
Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Shortly after my arrival at this post my attention was called to the extensive purchases made for several years past and to be made for many years in the future by the Obras Sanitarias de la Nación.

This organization is a part of the national Government and has charge of all the sanitary works, not only in Buenos Aires, but throughout the entire country. The purchases made by it in the way of iron pipe, material for construction work, and machinery of practically all kinds are enormous and its credit is of the best.

So important did I consider the Obras Sanitarias and the opportunities offered by it that I wrote a report on its activities, which appeared in Commerce Reports No. 87, April 14, 1915. Although the organization was known to American representatives here, I persistently called the attention of manufacturers' agents in Buenos Aires to these opportunities and interested traveling men who visited Buenos Aires.

Public bids are at regular intervals received for supplies to this organization. European manufacturers have constantly taken advantage of them, with the result that millions of dollars' worth of supplies have been placed in Argentina.

Finally, and largely at my instigation, advertisements for supplies to the Obras Sanitarias were seriously considered by American manufacturers. One of them quite recently put in a bid for supplies which amounted in round numbers to $1,500,000 United States gold. This bid presented prices f. o. b. New York, and also c. i. f. Buenos Aires. The f. o. b. New York bid was lower than a similar bid of European manufacturers, but the c. i. f. Buenos Aires bid was somewhat higher. The engineers of the Obras Sanitarias here were inclined to accept the f. o. b. New York bid, but insisted on definite statements as to when delivery could be made in Buenos Aires.

Here was met an insurmountable obstacle. Cargo space could not be obtained. The manufacturers in the United States even tried to purchase vessels for the tonnage involved, but could not do so. Consequently there seemed no possible way of making the delivery in contract time, and the bids were therefore not accepted, the contracts finally going to English manufacturers.

This statement is made as a most unfortunate example of the difficulties impeding development of our commerce with Argentina. Until this handicap is overcome our trade will be only spasmodic. When regular vessels under the American flag are put into service the hoped-for development will take place, and such splendid opportunities as the one above mentioned will not be lost to us.

Detailed data can be furnished later, but I feel warranted in referring to Mr. R. A. Riesgo, of the United States Cast Iron Pipe & Foundry Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., to Mr. J. R. McWane, president of the American Cast Iron Pipe Co., of Birmingham, Ala., and to Mr. Alfred J. Eichler, representative of the Walworth Manufacturing Co. in Buenos Aires.

Yours, very truly,

(Signed) ALBERT HALE,
American Commercial Attaché.

P. S.—This report is written for two purposes:

1. To call attention to the fact that f. o. b. prices on this bid were lower in New York than f. o. b. prices of the same character in Europe, and that the bid was lost not through any higher cost of manufacture, but through the fact that the lack of a merchant marine under our control made freight rates so high that delivery in Buenos Aires at a price to meet competition was impossible.

2. To emphasize the opportunity for future contract of this nature and that they will in many cases be equally unsuccessful unless we develop a merchant marine which will be at the service of American manufacturers competing for foreign trade.

A. H.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, some question was raised by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] regarding the regulatory features of the bill. Mr. Franklin, of the International Mercantile Marine, whom, as I have stated, I regard as one of the best informed men on the general subject of shipping, has favored the creation of this board and the regulatory provisions, generally, of the bill. I think they are in line also with the views and wishes of the National Foreign Trade Council; they are certainly in line, as in fact the whole bill is, with the revised and final views of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, and especially as represented by Mr. Fahey, the former president of that organization. Being a very strong and influential body of business men, a word from it would seem to be of weight in connection with a measure which bears so directly upon the commerce of the country.

In the hearings before the Senate committee appears a communication from Mr. Fahey indorsing this bill. The letter appears on page 178 of the Senate committee hearings, from Mr. Fahey to Hon. JOSHUA W. ALEXANDER, the chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House, and is as follows:

BOSTON, June 2, 1916.

Hon. JOSHUA W. ALEXANDER,
Chairman Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. ALEXANDER: Owing to the number of things which accumulated during my absence to South America, which required immediate attention on my return home, I have just had an opportunity to get a look at the shipping bill, in its present form, and I want to congratulate you on the progress made and the present status of the measure. In the main, I think it is in excellent shape, and I hope it is going to go through the Senate promptly.

As you know, I have never been enthusiastic over the question of Government ownership and operation if there was any other way out. My feeling about it has been exactly the same as your own, but I want to say that as a result of what I saw and heard in South America, I am convinced that it will be long years before private interests will ever undertake the establishment, especially of the fast lines, which are needed in South American countries. These lines are vital to us if we are going to hold and develop our business, and we should have them at the earliest possible moment. I therefore hope that the bill is going to go through the Senate without delay. What do you consider the prospect is there?

By the way, I would like very much to have a complete set of the hearings before your committee on the bill. Can you have them sent to me?

With much appreciation of your personal work in advancing the cause of our merchant marine, and with best wishes, I am,
Sincerely, yours,

JOHN H. FAHEY.

There is no discrimination in the bill with regard to waterways found in one portion of the country and not found in other portions of the country. As the bill came from the House it provided that this board should have to do with rules and regulations, and certain control and direction in reference to carriers on the inland waterways of the United States as well as on the high seas and on the Great Lakes engaged in the foreign and coastwise trade. It was represented before the Senate committee that that would be a useless interference, for the reason that there is not a great amount of commerce conducted on the inland waterways, the rivers comparatively, and the argument was that we had better first build up that commerce before undertaking to regulate it to any great extent.

There did not appear either before the Senate committee or in the hearings before the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of the House that there was any particular need of regulating these carriers on the rivers of the country, and it was thought wise by the committee that we should for the present exclude or drop out of the bill this reference to inland waterways and confine the regulatory features to commerce on the high seas and on the Great Lakes. The Great Lakes might be likened to the high seas, because, in the first place, the commerce is not only coastwise but is foreign as well, and they are immense bodies of water. There is an enormous amount of commerce carried there and a tremendous transportation business conducted there; and although I do not know that any complaint at present is made regarding the methods of conducting that business there may come a time when regulation would be in the public interest and desirable.

For that reason that was left in the bill. The regulation, therefore, by this board is confined to the carriers on the high seas and on the Great Lakes. Other countries have regulated their carriers in the respects which are mentioned in the bill. They have even gone so far as to regulate the freight rates.

GOVERNMENT REGULATION OF FREIGHT RATES.

With reference to the subject of Government regulation of ocean freight and Government ownership of steamship lines, in addition to what has been said, it is illuminating to quote from the periodical, Shipping Illustrated, of July 15, 1916:

AUSTRALIA.

The Commonwealth Government has assumed power to control the movements of Australian shipping, and has also secured authority to regulate freight charges between Australian ports.

NORWAY.

The following are the rates of taxation imposed on Norwegian shipping under a new law: The proceeds of the tax, the imposition of which is due to high freight charged on the transport of grain and foodstuffs, will be used for the acquisition and operation of mercantile tonnage to be worked by the State. The tax is based on freights, as follows (kr. meaning krone—26.8 cents):

Freights of 27 kr. and over, 1.50 kr. per Br. R. T. (meaning net ton).
 Freights of 24 to 27 kr., 1.25 kr. per Br. R. T.
 Freights of 20 to 24 kr., 1 kr. per Br. R. T.
 Freights of 16 to 20 kr., 0.75 kr. per Br. R. T.
 Freights of 12 to 16 kr., 0.50 kr. per Br. R. T.
 Freights of 8 to 12 kr., 0.25 kr. per Br. R. T.
 Under 8 kr. are free of tax.

Vessels engaged entirely in trade between foreign ports are exempt, both because they have not been parties to the hoisting of rates in the home trade and in order not to place them in an unfavorable position as compared with foreign competitors. Vessels engaged in regular trade between Norway and foreign countries, but of which the whole cargo space is not occupied, will pay:

On 27 kr., 1 kr. per Br. R. T.
 On 24 to 27 kr., 0.75 kr. per Br. R. T.
 On 18 to 24 kr., 0.50 kr. per Br. R. T.
 On 10 to 18 kr., 0.25 kr. per Br. R. T.

Vessels completed and put into service in January and February, 1916, or later, receive a reduction of 50 per cent of the tax; those in November and December, 1915, 40 per cent; and those in September and October, 1915, 20 per cent.

It is apparent that the tax on Norwegian shipping would amount practically to State regulation of ocean freight rates, but the most interesting feature of the tax is that the proceeds are to be used for the acquisition and operation of ships by the Government. Such a movement is worthy of especial note in view of the present extensive development of the Norwegian merchant marine.

JAPAN.

The ocean lines subsidy law of January 1, 1910, gives the minister of communications a large measure of control over the lines receiving subsidies, which include all of the large and a number of the small steamship companies of Japan. The most notable instance, perhaps, of Government regulation of ocean freight rates is furnished by Japan.

AUSTRIA.

A large degree of control is exercised by the minister of commerce of the Kingdom of Austria over the Austrian steamship lines receiving State aid. This control extends to method of operation as well as to freight tariffs. This State aid takes the form, generally, of mail subvention contracts. The largest line flying the Austrian flag is the Austrian Lloyd, and the company has been intimately related to the Government ever since its establishment—about 1845.

HUNGARY.

The Royal Hungarian Ocean Navigation Co., Adria, is the principal steamship line under the flag of Hungary. The mail subvention contract with the Government provides that the minister of commerce of Hungary shall name the president and vice president of the board of directors of the company, and grants additional governmental control.

CANADA.

Canada has contracts for the carriage of mails with practically every steamship line calling at Canadian ports, and through such contracts Canada exercises a marked degree of control over the affairs of steamship lines. See document, Government Aid to Merchant Shipping, pages 65 to 69.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The British Government has not attempted to regulate freight rates. The tax on excess profits has been increased to 70 per cent, according to latest information. This may be regarded in the nature of regulation. It is also true that existing mail subvention contracts with the Cunard Steamship Co. provide, among other things, that the company shall not give preferential rates to foreigners, and that it shall not unduly increase rates in general.

FRANCE.

All steamship lines receiving financial aid from the State in the form of mail subvention contracts give the Government, under such contracts, a large measure of control over their affairs. For example, these contracts, among other things, provide the manner in which accounts of the company shall be kept, the amounts to be set aside for depreciation and reserves.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator inform us whether any other great maritime power grants to any one of its governmental agencies the power, either directly or indirectly, to fix rates for foreign commerce?

Mr. FLETCHER. I was just citing these instances, which practically amount to that; but I am not doing so because I mean to claim that under this bill this board would have any such power nor because I mean to advocate vesting this board with any such power. I am, however, referring to this as indicating that other countries have gone further than we propose to go in this bill. Japan, for instance, absolutely fixes its freight rates.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator from Florida state that the Government of Japan may fix the freight rates for goods carried in Japanese bottoms from Yokohama to San Francisco?

Mr. FLETCHER. In answer to the Senator's question, I will say I hold in my hand a statement which appears in the Commerce Reports of May 9, 1916, at page 524, to this effect:

JAPAN.

A statement from the director of the Shipping Affairs Bureau in the Ministry of Communications credits Japan with 272 tramp steamers, displacing more than 1,000 tons, their combined tonnage amounting to 715,012 tons. Of the number 112, with a total of 249,258 tons, are run by the owners themselves, while 160, with a total of 465,754 tons, are chartered.

Of the whole number 188 ships, with a total tonnage of 423,031, are run in the coastwise trade, while 84 bigger ships carry on the ocean trade, these being distributed as follows: European routes, 14, tonnage 57,515; North American routes, 34, tonnage 129,835; Australian routes, 4, tonnage 11,790; Indian routes, 17, tonnage 56,560; South Seas, 12, tonnage 36,281.

INCREASED FREIGHT RATES AUTHORIZED.

The Nippon Yusen, Osaka Shosen, and the Toyo Kisen, Kaisha applied to the department of communications for permission to raise outward freights on the Antwerp line of the European service, and outward and homeward freights on the Puget Sound and San Francisco lines of the American service, which are run under Government protection. The Japan Chronicle says that the Government granted the applications April 10, with some modifications in the original scales of increase applied for. Freights for North American ports have been raised by about 20 per cent. The principal goods involved are rice, tea, matting, raw silk, silk textiles, cotton manufactures, soy, bamboo ware, porcelain and pottery, straw braid, foodstuffs, grain, peanuts, and camphor.

Homeward freights have been raised by about 25 per cent, with a few exceptions. The principal goods affected are raw cotton, machinery, iron and steel plate, iron wire, salt fish, pulp, wheat, flour, tin plate, malt, mails, resin, condensed milk, and glass. All these advances are to come into operation immediately.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it not true that the Japanese steamship lines, which apparently, according to that communication, are subject to a certain extent to rate regulation, are also completely protected from injurious competition with the ships of other nations by reason of the subsidy which the Japanese Government gives them? Is it not also true that they are reserved for naval auxiliary purposes in the event of emergency?

The point I wish to bring out, if the Senator will pardon me, is that the underlying theory of this bill—whether the result is to be obtained by direction or indirection—is that American vessels engaged in foreign commerce may have their rates regulated by the shipping board; but at the same time that their rates are regulated, and probably reduced at the demand of shippers, the Government does nothing to protect them from foreign competition; they are the recipients of no subsidy, whereas the Japanese ships, to which the Senator has referred, are protected from the effect of destructive competition from the ships of other nations.

Mr. FLETCHER. I disagree with the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The ships of the two nations—Japan and the United States—are not in the same category at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I disagree with the Senator from New York in his claim that under this bill the shipping board would have the right to fix the rates. It seems to me that the provisions of the bill are just as mild with respect to the jurisdiction and the power of this board concerning foreign shipping as could possibly be devised. All the board has the power to do, practically, is to see that those things which we all condemn, namely, rebates, unjust discriminations, the use of fighting ships, and those things which Congress has condemned heretofore, and which I think the public generally condemn, will not be permitted. That is about as far as the board may go under this bill. I think, if the Senator will examine the language of the bill, he will find under section 15 the things that are not permitted to be done, which is about the extent of the power which this board can exercise with respect to foreign ships.

It will be borne in mind, too, that the ships acquired under this bill will serve as naval auxiliaries when required.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Florida undoubtedly states the language and describes the mildness of it with absolute correctness. However, is it not a fact that in the event of any complaint being made by a shipper to the shipping board the board may then fix a rate, and that eventually, by a series of complaints upon all classes of goods and from all groups of shippers, American or otherwise, the board will fix rates?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not quite agree with the Senator in that regard. Only in case of complaint respecting carriers engaged in foreign commerce as to the matters which are mentioned in section 15. Then the board can inquire into that, and if they find that those practices are being indulged in they can have them stopped. That is the extent of their power. The original proposal in the House bill was very much stronger than it was finally left with respect to the powers of the shipping board and its jurisdiction regarding regulations of foreign carriers, but those original provisions were modified, and, I believe, as the bill now stands, it is precisely as the Chamber of Commerce of New York and other commercial bodies desire it and as the shipping interests desire it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Do I understand, Mr. President, that the Chamber of Commerce of New York is supporting this bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not understand that they are supporting the whole bill. They are opposed to the general proposition of Government ownership and Government operation, but outside of that they favor a board, and they favor the board having fully as much power and jurisdiction as this bill gives this board, I think.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, that means that if we must have this legislation they think we ought to have a shipping board? That is about as far as they go.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think so.

Mr. GALLINGER. They do not approve of the legislation?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think Mr. Franklin, who testified before the Senate committee, favors a board and he favors giving it this power and this jurisdiction. He objects only to that feature which emphasizes the Government operation of the ships in mercantile business. He even favors the provision of the bill so far as naval auxiliaries are concerned; and if we will reverse the proposal in section 3 and build the ships as auxiliaries of the Navy, primarily, and secondarily to be used as carriers, he would not object to the bill as it is. I think that is about his position.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will remember, I feel sure, that in every bill which has been introduced in the Senate during the last 10 years designed to upbuild the American merchant marine, the naval auxiliary provision has been included. This bill has not anything new on that point.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I think the Senator is correct about that.

Mr. GALLINGER. And yet, as a rule, our Democratic friends voted against all those bills.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, there have been grounds for that opposition in the minds of those who oppose the idea of any subsidy being granted; and at the present high rates of freight I do not think anyone can have the hardihood to claim that we ought to subsidize ships.

In reference to the situation in France, Mr. President, I offer a quotation, being a sort of digest from the Revue Politique, under date of the 10th of May, which I ask to have inserted in the Record without reading. It shows very clearly, I think, what the situation there is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

BAZIN, LÉON.

The rise of freight rates and the crisis of the maritime industries [in France].

DIGEST.

The rise of freight rates in its ascending course has attained so high a mark as to be a cause of anxiety to all. Innumerable remedies have been suggested but found impractical, as they sought to suppress the effect without removing the cause.

What is the underlying cause of the present crisis? Some have laid the blame at the door of shipowners, who are accused of making enormous profits. But let us look at the facts.

The French merchant marine holds about fifth rank in the world's merchant fleets. It had before the war a net tonnage of about 2,500,000 tons, that of the British shipping being 21,000,000 tons and that of neutral countries about 12,000,000 tons. Requisitions for military purposes and losses have reduced the French tonnage to about 1,000,000 tons and the British tonnage to about 14,000,000 tons, while the tonnage of neutral countries has remained very nearly what it was. The great loss in tonnage suffered by France makes it difficult for French shipowners to exercise any great influence. British shipowners, while representing vastly more important interests, are themselves obliged to reckon with neutral countries, which have a tonnage almost equal to that of the British merchant fleet.

There is no instance on record of French shipowners having unduly increased freight rates. On the lines not directly affected by the war the rise has been extremely moderate. Thus, on the lines running to Algeria the rates were: In 1914, from 6 to 64 francs on exports and from 8 to 60 francs on imports; in 1916, from 8 to 83 francs on exports and from 10 to 78 francs on imports, an increase of only 30 per cent. On the Moroccan lines during the same periods the increase was 50 per cent on exports and 60 per cent on imports.

In reality the profits realized grew out of the demand for bottoms on the part of shippers. Shipowners can not refuse the highest price that shippers beg them to accept, shippers being so urged by consumers who need coal, steel, hides, wool, etc., immediately. The price offered by shippers is that which their clients are able to pay them. It is, therefore, unfair to lay the blame on the shipowners or on the shippers.

The only, or at least the main, cause, of the present crisis lies in a complete rupture of equilibrium between demand, which is increasing all the time and becoming more and more pressing, and supply, which is correspondingly decreasing, and this results from numerous factors, namely, the requisitioning of a large part of the commercial fleet for the needs of the Army, the destruction of a large number of ships by submarines and mines, the congestion of shipping in ports, increasing every day owing to unloading difficulties due to the scarcity of labor, the inadequacy of land transportation, the tying up of ships requiring the payment of demurrage charges and resulting in greatly increased transportation rates. Other accessory causes are increased working expenses, the rise in the price of coal, insurance on war risks, increased wages of crews, the enormous demand for raw material, especially iron and steel, the occupation of our mines and factories by the enemy having reduced the production by 50 per cent, and even 80 per cent in some cases.

Under these circumstances the rise in prices is but natural. Ships are like any other thing; the only limit to such rise is the cessation of the demand or abandoning the market, and both are out of question. Can, then, a tax be assessed on freights? If so, on what freights? Such tax would be ineffective in France by reason of our reduced tonnage and in the face of present requirements. Even Great Britain hesitates to take this step for fear that neutral shipping, which constitutes a third of the total shipping entering British ports, might seek elsewhere more remunerative returns.

British shipowners have vehemently protested against two recent orders in council—one forbidding British ships over 500 net tons to carry goods between two foreign ports without a license delivered by the license commission; the other increasing the power to requisition merchant ships in case of urgent necessity for the transport of foodstuffs or of any other merchantable article.

The commandeering of our fleet has often been suggested. But in normal times the French flag represents only 25 per cent of the tonnage entering our ports. Over one-half of this percentage is now requisitioned for the need of the army. The only result of such commandeering would be to weaken our merchant fleet already so reduced, while our competitors, free to fix their own prices, would thrive on our very commerce and make us for a long time after the war feel the weight of their superiority.

Among the remedies suggested are the following: Purchase of a fleet in England, loans to shipowners for the purchase of foreign ships, creation of an office for the regulation of freight prices. The two first suggestions are impractical, owing to the lack of ships for sale. Besides, to purchase ships abroad would merely constitute a transfer, not an increase in tonnage. The addition by purchase of new ships to our fleet, while beneficial to French shipping in general, would in no wise affect freight rates, for the freight problem is international, not national. The third suggestion is not, either, capable of realization, owing to the existence of other fleets and the impossibility of gaining any control over them.

An agreement recently concluded between France and Great Britain deserves mention. It provides that British shipowners shall agree to give up 30 per cent of the profits derived from coal transportation. It is hoped that neutrals shall in their own interest enter this compact.

For the purpose of insuring the best utilization of ships for the needs of the country, the French Government has issued, on April 4, 1916, a decree practically prohibiting (1) voyages between two foreign ports; (2) voyages from France not useful for the furnishing of supplies to the country. Special authorizations, however, may be granted.

These measures are but palliatives at best. The building of new ships is the only remedy to the situation. These ships should be as much as possible of the same type, in order to make up for the shortage in skilled labor and to build as many units as possible in the shortest time.

Recent debates in the Chamber of Deputies show that the Government is alive to the situation and will soon take a decision in that direction. (Digested and translated from Revue Politique et Parlementaire, 10 mai, 1916, p. 257-264.)

Mr. FLETCHER. Now, I come to another subject, namely, the blacklisting of commercial agencies.

The recent order to British merchants in reference to the use of British ships, excluding trade with those listed as enemy sympathizers, presents a situation which ought to impress upon our merchants the need of legislation of this kind. The black list furnishes the strongest kind of argument in favor of American ships.

In point is a short editorial from the Washington Times of July 23, to wit:

THE BLACK LIST AS A LESSON.

Whatever may be thought about the right of Great Britain and her allies to blacklist certain American firms and individuals by prohibiting Britishers from doing business with them, it is pretty clear that Britain can enforce that sort of a rule if she likes.

She can enforce it, because she controls ocean shipping. It isn't the power of Britannia's Navy that rules the wave; not in such cases as this. It is the power of Britain's merchant fleet. American goods couldn't possibly be distributed to the markets of the world if they were cut off from the use of ships sailing under the Union Jack.

That is a fact that this country needs recognize. Perhaps this black-listing proposal will serve sharply to remind our people of their national weakness in this regard. If it does, it will serve one useful purpose.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has merit as tending toward the protection of American shippers in these circumstances; but, of course, the permanent remedy is to have the carriers.

THE PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S COURSE.

It had been stated and published repeatedly that American ships were driven off the Pacific; that the seamen's law was ruinous to American shipping; that our navigation laws would have to be changed before we could expect ships to take and continue American registry. As a horrible example, we are warned, "Look what happened to the Pacific Mail!"

Let us see what happened. It appears the Pacific Mail did sell the following steamers: The Siberia, 11,284 gross tons; the Korea, 11,276 gross tons; the Manchuria, 11,638 gross tons; and the Mongolia, 11,638 gross tons. These steamers were formerly engaged in trade between San Francisco and Asia. They were not sold to foreign buyers. They did not change their flag. They were simply transferred to the Atlantic coast, and are now engaged in trade between New York and European ports where freight rates are higher and their earnings could be increased. They operate under the same laws as they did when owned by the Pacific Mail. Recently the Pacific Mail, seeing its mistake, evidently, has purchased three liners from the Royal Dutch West India Mail Co. at $1,100,000 each, and announces that it will resume its trans-Pacific service, which it suddenly and without any regard whatever to the interests of its patrons abandoned. It alleges that it has decided to reverse its policy because "the gigantic leaps in freight rates have rendered it possible to operate at a profit in spite of the injurious effects of the seamen's law."

This is as false as the reason they gave when they quit their trans-Pacific service, namely, that the seamen's law made it impossible for them to operate profitably.

The falsity of this excuse or claim is proved not only by the resumption of their trans-Pacific sailings but by the fact that the poorest and least profitable ship in the former fleet of the Pacific Mail, the steamship China, was taken over by a small American company, which, notwithstanding the greatly increased cost of operating only one ship, has continued the China in the trans-Pacific service, under the American flag, with great profit. It was reported that the new owners paid for the China with the profits from the first two voyages in the same service which the Pacific Mail had abandoned.

All the circumstances tend to show, and those in position to know assert, that the Pacific Mail discontinued their trans-Pacific service at a time when they were able to sell their steamers for what they supposed were fancy figures, for no other reason than that it enabled the interests that controlled them to make very effective political capital of it; and they are now resuming the service not because of high freight rates—trans-Pacific freight rates are now actually lower than they were when the Pacific Mail discontinued their sailings—but because of the Government shipping bill, which is about to pass Congress, and their fear that as a result of this bill a line of Government ships would enter the trade they had abandoned.

The Ecuador and her two sister ships, which the Pacific Mail are now putting into the Orient trade, and for which they paid $1,100,000 each, are much inferior in every respect to the vessels they formerly operated in this trade and which they foolishly sold for an average price of only $1,050,000 each.

The new boats have less than one-third the capacity of their former steamers Mongolia and Manchuria, and they have less than one-half the capacity of their former steamers Korea and Siberia, and they are rated at only 13 knots speed while the former boats are rated at 18 knots.

It will be surprising if the new boats can be profitably operated in this trade, because they are believed to be much too small and slow for trans-Pacific passenger steamers; also, the Pacific Mail paid too high a price for them, about $200 a dead-weight ton, and will consequently have to meet high charges for interest, insurance, and depreciation. They sold their former boats for less than $100 a ton, which was regarded as exaggerated value.

The beneficial workings of the shipping bill, even before it has become law, are thus shown by the action of the Pacific Mail in hastening to cover the trade which they had abandoned, though they have to use vessels utterly unsuited for this trade.

OUR LAWS.

Mr. President, I have before me an address delivered by a business man at the annual dinner of American Newspaper Publishers' Association in New York, April 27, 1916, sent to me with the compliments of the speaker, in which he says:

It is the critics of finance and business * * * who have passed laws which have driven our ships off the seas in the world's trade.

There is no error more thoroughly established by overwhelming proof than this oft-repeated denunciation of our laws as applied to ships.

But business men and newspapers keep on repeating it, evidently satisfied with their success in getting the public to take the poison.

May I suggest that just this sort of thing is precisely why there is occasion for the further complaint, if any exists, that "nor does it [Congress] seem inclined to pay serious heed to the views of business," and so forth. If "business" will not be truthful, should it expect to be heeded? Again, this same "business" man says:

Just as Congress, by a series of laws, has imposed burdens and costs upon ships operating under the American flag, which made it impossible for capital to invest in American ships for use in the world's trade and earn a fair return in normal times—

And so forth.

This is not true. It is simply an impression which has been created for a purpose—very much like the cry of "pork barrel" in connection with river and harbor improvements. It is a manufactured impression, ripening into a belief in many minds, with no substantial foundation in fact or real basis in reason.

Mr. Chamberlain, the Commissioner of Navigation, has so fully covered the whole subject of our navigation laws in his testimony before the House committee (Hearings on H. R. 10500, p. 179 et seq.) that I need only refer to his complete refutation of the assertion made over and over again by "business men."

Mr. Chamberlain shows that of the laws criticized by Wells in 1881 only two remain on the statute books, to wit: The one which reserves to American vessels our coasting trade, and the other requiring the officers of American ships to be citizens of the United States.

Only one maritime nation, Great Britain, opens her coastwise trade to foreign ships, and this is confined to the United Kingdom—England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales. It does not extend to the Provinces nor the self-governing Dominions of the British Empire. All other countries reserve their coastwise trade to the ships of their own registry. As to the nationality of officers, I do not know of any country having a rule different from ours, and Congress has given the power to the President to suspend that requirement by the act of 1914 for a period of years. Neither of these laws could have "made it impossible for capital to invest in American ships."

But similar criticisms have been urged and published until many people were convinced they were justified, and Mr. Chamberlain sets them out and answers them in detail. (P. 189 et seq. of said hearings.)

He shows conclusively that the only feature of our navigation laws designed to protect American shipbuilding which remains on our statute books is section 4347 Revised Statutes, to the effect that foreign-built vessels can not engage in the coasting trade of the United States.

I have never heard of very serious objection to that law. In any case, whether it is the subject of criticism or not, it does not, of course, affect the American merchant marine in the foreign trade.

Mr. Chamberlain observes:

The campaign for the revision of the navigation laws, begun in 1880, you will see has been carried to a successful conclusion, of which some of the very recent volunteers to the cause do not seem to be aware.

It may be noted that the Democratic platform of 1880 favored "free ships and a living chance for American commerce on the seas and on the land." The Democratic administration of 1914 fulfilled that pledge. The ship registry act of August, 1914, removed the last refuge of the subsidists.

But foreign shipping interests and some benighted "business men," and some who have long hoped for subsidies, continue to hammer on the same old anvil and keep up the same noisy clamor to convince our people that by reason of our antiquated laws or the fool performances of Congress our flag is obliged to remain off the seas, and we must necessarily depend wholly on foreign ships to take care of our commerce.

These people seem utterly unable to see the inconsistency between one position they take, that by reason of our antiquated laws, they say, or the performances of Congress, our flag is obliged to remain off the seas, and we must necessarily depend wholly on foreign ships to take our foreign commerce, and the next position they take, to wit, that the Government should not build or acquire merchant ships for foreign trade because that would be interfering with private enterprise. In one breath they say our absurd laws have driven our flag off the oceans and in the next breath they say private enterprise stands ready to proceed at once to place it there if only the ship-purchase bill is not passed.

One moment they admit capital has refused for 50 years to build up our mercantile marine and in the next moment they say capital is ready and anxious to go into the business of building or acquiring ships under the American flag for foreign trade.

We find opponents of this measure taking equally conflicting positions, to the effect that under this bill the tonnage provided would be a mere bagatelle, influencing the situation not at all, and then they say no "business man" will go into the "business" of shipping because he would have to compete with the Government.

They argue that this bill would only provide 500,000 tons, and that subject to demands and equipment as naval auxiliaries—the Senator from Minnesota said 300,000, Mr. Marvin says 700,000—whereas from six to ten million tons are required to handle our foreign trade; and yet private enterprise will be deterred from supplying any portion of this six to ten million tons, however profitable the investment and attractive though the enterprise is, because, forsooth, the Government will own less than 10 per cent of what is imperatively needed. Mr. Chamberlain says to provide 60 per cent of the gross tonnage required for our foreign trade we must have 6,000,000 tons. (Senate hearings, p. 223.)

They argue that though our navigation laws impose unbearable burdens on American ships, there are those of our citizens eager to invest their money in them; although the Government's venture would not supply any appreciable relief from present conditions, private enterprise would be driven from the field.

Even in normal times, no undertaking yielded greater dividends than shipping, and although now profits have increased 5 to 10 times over what they were, it is still contended subsidies should be granted. Although terminals and warehouses at our ports are groaning under the weight of freight moving to foreign markets there are no ships to convey them, and when the foreign ship does consent to call for it in the interest of its country, always, the freight charges are out of all reason and are reflected in the price the producer receives, especially when he has to compete with other countries in the foreign market.

MANUFACTURERS AND PRODUCERS.

I can not understand why the manufacturers and producers, generally, of the United States, do not rise up and demand this legislation. I am amazed at the patience they have manifested. Every manufacturer interested in foreign trade must know he can not hope to extend or even maintain his trade unless he can have the means of delivering his goods. Every producer must know he will be unable to sell outside the United States, his market will be cut off if ships are not available to carry the commodities.

The situation is that one ship is to-day called on to do what it requires three to do.

Not only, too, is there discrimination in rates on freight in favor of the foreign shipper by the foreign ships and against the United States, but it extends to the point of depriving our manufacturers and exporters of the business which, if there was equality of rates, or even an approach to that, the American house would get the business. Instances have been given where, for example, there was a demand for 400 miles of iron piping. Bids were called for. The United States manufacturers were the lowest bidders, but the English people got the business because they could furnish the ships, and the manufacturers here could not do so.

Take this situation: Chilean nitrate is worth $34 a ton at the wharf. It pays an export tax of $11 per ton. The miner therefore gets $23 per ton and pays the freight to the port. From there to the United States the importer must now pay $34 per ton for its transportation. It costs the United States Government $68 per ton delivered at our arsenal. This Government could right now save $2,000,000 if we had the ships to bring what we need of that material for Government use alone.

There is plenty of business for private ships, and therefore they would not be deprived of cargoes if the Government undertook to transport this nitrate.

CROWDED YARDS.

The argument is made, and the Senator from Minnesota repeats it, that our yards are full, are crowded, and that ships can not be built within two years in sufficient quantity or of a kind that would be of any material use. This same argument was advanced last year. Since then orders for a considerable amount of new tonnage have been booked every month in our yards. I have here a clipping from the New York Journal of Commerce of a recent issue, giving a summary of new contracts placed during the five months in 1916, beginning with February. It shows that 206 vessels, aggregating 459,443 tons, were contracted for during this period. The same paper gives a detailed list of the vessels contracted for in June. They show the number of new contracts in June to be 34 vessels. The list also shows the number of vessels completed during June to be 10 vessels, of about 40,000 gross tons. Vessels completed during the last five months comprise 40; gross tons, 161,418.

It is absurd to claim that shipyards are full to the point where no more orders for new ships can be booked. Here is an advertisement by the Standard Shipbuilding Corporation stating that they are prepared to make deliveries to the extent of a ship a month, beginning with March, 1917, and the ships are of 7,300 tons dead weight. It will be seen by an examination of the list of vessels contracted for in June, with only three exceptions, all of them are to be launched within a year. It should be noted also that of the 385 merchant vessels, totaling 1,225,784 tons, now under construction or ordered, 327 vessels, totaling 927,893 tons, are to be launched on or before June 30, 1917. I venture to say there is not a shipyard in the country but what would be glad to take additional orders for new ships.

Large cargo vessels can be launched within three months after the keel is laid. The Union Iron Works have been doing this right along, and unquestionably other yards are doing the same, or can do so if necessary. Shipyards generally can easily increase their facilities by building additional slipways, and they would quickly do so if they saw business enough to warrant it. There are many new shipyards being built. Within less than a month two have been incorporated, namely, the Delaware Shipbuilding & Engineering Corporation, on the Delaware River, with a capital of $1,000,000, and another on Puget Sound, with a capital of $500,000. Plans for the erection of a shipbuilding and dry-dock company in Savannah, Ga., with a capital of more than $1,000,000 are reported under way. Recently a similar plant was erected at Brunswick, Ga. Duncan, Young & Co., of New York, contemplate a $1,000,000 shipbuilding plant at Beaumont, Tex., according to the Marine News of July. Statement is made that the American Shipbuilding Co. announced July 19 the recent booking of four more full canal-size ships for salt-water service, delivery to be made first half of 1917.

The shipping board will be able also to use the facilities of the United States Navy Yard. These facilities can be increased by building additional slipways.

CAN PURCHASE.

The assertion is made by way of argument against this bill that no ships can be purchased by the shipping board, except possibly at practically prohibitory prices. It is true that the present bill very considerably limits the field for acquiring by purchase such ships as will be needed. At the same time I have here the advertisement of the Marine Trading Co., dated Broad Street, New York, appearing in the Marine News of July last, giving a list of American and neutral steamers offered for sale; in all, 43. The private interests that are said to be going into the shipping business as fast as they can get the ships, it would seem would have an opportunity to purchase ships from this concern and also from the Standard Shipbuilding Corporation, which offers 7,300-ton dead-weight ships for sale at the rate of one each month beginning next March.

Most of the construction work is for the Navy and particular business.

It is true now, as it was last fall, that most of the vessels that are being built are for the special and exclusive use of certain large corporations, such as the oil companies, the steel companies, and others. Many of them are for the coastwise trade; some of them are for foreign owners; a large number are for lake, river, and harbor use. The general over-seas trade is yet to be provided for. Within a year after the passage of this act I am satisfied the shipping board can have at least 50 vessels in the service. In the Commerce Reports of August 1, 1916, pages 404 to 407, inclusive, facts are given with regard to the shipping facilities of the United States for 1916, with some very interesting statements covering over-seas shipping, shipping bound for Europe, clearances for South America and Africa, trans-Pacific voyages, shipping to near-by foreign ports, which I shall ask to include as a part of my remarks. I shall ask also to include list of shipyards given by the Journal of Commerce, showing the merchant construction of July 1, 1916, showing also that 327 vessels, with 927,893 gross tons, now being built are to be launched on or about June 30, 1917.

The yards can increase their capacity. They are open to new contracts. A comparatively small percentage of present construction is for over-seas trade. New yards can be and are being built.

In support of these statements reference may be had to the hearings before the Commerce Committee, pages 278, 282, and 284.

I ask permission to insert here as part of my remarks an extract from the Commerce Reports, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From Commerce Reports No. 179, Aug. 1, 1916, p. 404.]

SHIPPING FACILITIES OF THE UNITED STATES FOR 1916.

The merchant shipping, American and foreign, cleared from seaports of the United States, 25,475,103 net tons for Europe, South America, Asia, Africa, Australia, and Oceania during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, was the largest in the history of the United States notwithstanding the European war, the capture of the port of Antwerp, and the closing of the Black Sea, the blockade of the ports of the central powers, the withdrawal of German and Austrian merchant ships from trade, and the dangers of submarines and mines cast adrift in the routes of ocean commerce.

Up to the year just closed the greatest volume of clearances from the United States for the over-seas continents named was 24,872,403 net tons during the year ended June 30, 1914, just before the outbreak of the European war. Much of the net tonnage in that year was space for passengers (tourist and immigrants) on ocean steamers, while during the fiscal year just closed such fast steamers to a great extent have been withdrawn from trade to serve as allied transports and hospital ships or held in port to avoid capture, and their place has been supplied by cargo steamers. (A net ton is 100 cubic feet of ship's closed-in space available for cargo or passengers.)

OVER-SEAS SHIPPING.

American shipping cleared for the over-seas continents during the year just closed was more than threefold that in 1914 so cleared—2,448,305 net tons, compared with 745,242 net tons for the fiscal year 1914. The American net tonnage cleared from the United States for these continents in the years ended June 30, 1914 and 1916, the foreign net tonnage so cleared, and the combined American and foreign tonnage were as follows, American tonnage more than doubling in each case and foreign tonnage showing a decrease, except to Asia:

SHIPPING BOUND FOR EUROPE.

During the past fiscal year our shipping facilities (net tonnage) for the export trade to Europe have been the greatest in our history. Although the net tonnage in 1914 was a trifle larger—half of 1 per cent—much of that net tonnage in 1914 was for the passenger trade, as stated, which in 1916 was relatively small, and cargo space in 1916 was supplied to help to meet the great volume of our exports. During 1914 the American Line mail steamers to Southampton and the Red Star Line passenger ships to Antwerp were virtually the only American ships in trade with Europe; in 1916 American ships traded with the maritime nations of Europe, except Belgium and the blockaded central powers. The total tonnage clearances to France and Italy almost doubled, the clearances to Norway, Denmark, and Sweden more than doubled, and to Greece increased over threefold. The following summarizes the net tonnage clearances to European countries:

CLEARANCES FOR SOUTH AMERICA AND AFRICA.

American shipping in trade with South America has developed more rapidly in the past fiscal year than in any other direction. The American tonnage cleared was almost five times greater than in 1914, and in trade with Argentina particularly the increase is notable. The withdrawal of foreign ships has been made good by increased American tonnage. The increase in total clearances is partly due, of course, to improved financial conditions in those countries, except Peru, and to the removal of the risk of destruction which checked trade with South America for some months after the outbreak of the war. The clearances for South America follow:

Destination.	American.		Foreign.		Total.

The clearances from the United States for Africa on both oceans and on the Mediterranean increased from 406,457 net tons in 1914 to 464,093 net tons in 1916. In 1914 the American shipping thus cleared was insignificant, only 4,263 net tons, while in the past year it mounted to 79,412 net tons, of which over half, in spite of submarine warfare in the Mediterranean, was cleared for Egypt and Algiers.

The foreign net tonnage clearances decreased from 402,194 in 1914 to 384,681 in 1916.

TRANS-PACIFIC VOYAGES.

The total tonnage clearances from the United States of ships on trans-Pacific voyages to ports in Asia, Australia, the Philippines, and foreign islands of the Pacific increased from 1,990,105 net tons in the fiscal year of 1914 to 2,374,272 net tons in 1916, and of these amounts American net tonnage increased from 100,833 net tons in 1914 to 288,588 net tons in 1916. The table below shows that the gains have not been uniform, but there have been marked increases and decreases in shipping facilities between the United States and the countries and colonies comprised within the limits named. Clearances to "other Asia" show the greatest increase, from 89,176 net tons in 1914 to 618,610 net tons in 1916. During the past year "other Asia" has meant mainly Vladivostok, and the tonnage increase shows shipping facilities provided for the export of locomotives, cars, rails, motor trucks, and steel products generally to Russia through Siberia, Russian Black Sea ports being closed and Baltic ports, especially Riga, partly closed during the year. The effect of the withdrawal of the Pacific Mail ships to Hongkong is to be noted and clearances to the Philippines also show a marked decrease. The Philippine figures do not include Government transports.

SHIPPING TO NEAR-BY FOREIGN PORTS.

The gain of 602,700 net tons in export clearances of shipping from the United States across the seas and into waters, to a greater or less extent, the zones of naval and submarine operations and of war risk has been offset, however, by decreased clearances to foreign seaports on or near the coasts of North America. In 1914 these amounted to 14,750,083 net tons; in 1916 to 13,420,158 net tons. The principal decreases have been in clearances to the British West Indies, preoccupied with war, 738,649 net tons, and to Mexico, Haiti, and the Dominican Republic, disturbed by internal dissensions, 688,717 net tons.

In North American waters the foreign clearances of American ships show a large gain, but proportionately not so great as in over-seas trade, from 4,395,082 net tons in 1914 to 7,296,777 net tons in 1916. While the figures are larger, they represent a much smaller number of ships, and these of less tonnage than the figures for over-seas trade, because the voyages in American waters are relatively short and the same ship clears often during the year. To Cuba, Panama, and Central America the American tonnage more than doubled this year.

Out of 38,895,261 net tons of shipping cleared on ocean voyages to foreign ports during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, 9,745,082 net tons were American, or 25 per cent; in the fiscal year 1914, out of 39,622,486 net tons only 5,141,324, or 13 per cent, were American.

Note.—Including frequent but short fresh-water foreign trips to Canada across the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence, American tonnage in 1916 was 34 per cent of the total. Detailed figures will be printed in the Monthly Summary of Foreign Commerce of the United States, June, 1916, to be issued by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce about the middle of August.

Mr. FLETCHER. According to figures compiled by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, the foreign trade of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, amounted to $6,525,000,000. Of this, exports amounted to $3,870,000,000; increase of exports over preceding year, $1,576,411,000; increase in imports, $541,025,000.

Our shipping bound for Europe, expressed in net tonnage clearances to European countries, was, in 1916, 19,926,665 tons, as against 20,046,191 tons in 1914; but it should be remembered that much of the 1914 tonnage was for the passenger traffic, which in 1916 was relatively small.

Clearances from our ports for South America were, in 1916, 2,710,073 net tonnage, as against 2,429,650 in 1914.

The tonnage clearances from the United States to ports in Asia, Australia, the Philippines, and foreign islands of the Pacific increased from 1,996,105 net tons in 1914 to 2,374,272 net tons in 1916.

There has been a decrease in clearances to foreign seaports on or near the coasts of North America from 14,750,083 in 1914 to 13,420,158 in 1916.

These decreases were due to conditions in Mexico, Haiti, Dominican Republic, and West Indies.

Foreign clearances of American ships show a gain in North American waters. To Cuba, Panama, and Central America American tonnage more than doubled in the year.

Out of 38,895,261 net tons of shipping cleared on ocean voyages to foreign ports during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, 9,745,082 net tons were American, or 25 per cent; in the fiscal year 1914, out of 39,622,486 net tons, only 5,141,324, or 13 per cent, were American. (Commerce Reports, p. 407, Aug. 1, 1916.)

So it appears our foreign trade has been increasing, notwithstanding it is interfered with in some quarters by war conditions. The need for carriers is great now, since at least one-third of the world's shipping is out of commission—perhaps one-third of that a total loss, and, of course, can not reappear when the war ends.

After the war the demand for shipping will be greater than ever. The supply will be shorter yet. This condition constitutes a world-wide problem. It will be the height of folly for the United States to delay action looking to its solution, at least so far as it affects us. We can not hold the trade we now have unless we increase our shipping facilities. We can immensely extend and increase that trade if we pursue the right course. We can take our proper place on the seas if we will. If that is done, commercial leadership will be assured for all time. The opportunities are here; shall we take advantage of them?

The question narrows down to that.

The proposal by this bill is to take care of our needs for naval auxiliaries. I will not dwell on that. No one denies the existence of that need.

Further, the proposal is very similar to that involved in the establishment of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau. The effect there was to afford insurance when it could not be obtained elsewhere and to reduce the abnormally high rates to a reasonable and equitable basis.

That bureau has been in operation two years and has made a profit of more than $2,000,000 and at the same time supplied an agency that was needed and served a great public purpose.

We may hope for similar results if this bill becomes a law.

The claim that ships can not be built within two years is answered by the testimony found in the Senate hearings, pages 278, 279, and so forth. As to the existing yards, a list of them was furnished in the House hearings, at page 41.

ADMISSION TO LICENSE AND ENROLLMENT.

These vessels will be built or acquired by American money—indeed, by Government money. It can not be satisfactory to the people of the country, whose money is used for the building or purchasing of these vessels flying the flag of the United States, to have them denied the right to engage in our coastwise trade. They are ships supplied by the Government and they should be privileged to sail anywhere water will take them, to serve the commerce of this country, whether foreign or domestic. There can be no sound reason urged to deny them access to the coastwise trade of the United States, no matter if it be conceded that at present that business is adequately cared for and served.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will; certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I understand, this legislation is primarily designed, if not entirely so, to build up our foreign trade, to provide ships for over-seas commerce. The coastwise trade is fully supplied with ships. Four hundred thousand tons of shipping from the coastwise trade has been put into the foreign trade during the last two years. Now, why the necessity of putting these ships—some of which will be built abroad or purchased abroad—into the coastwise trade? There is no need of it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that I do not myself at present see any necessity for that, but I can see a situation which would make it very desirable.

Suppose we had one of these ships, for instance, engaged in trade between New York and Liverpool. Suppose upon that ship bringing a cargo to the United States she should find that she would have to get a return cargo in New Orleans or in Galveston. Now, would the Senator have that ship go all the way from New York to New Orleans or Galveston in ballast? Would he not permit her to take passengers or to take freight between New York and Galveston, to which port she is going in order to get her cargo to return to Europe? She could not do that unless she were allowed to be licensed and enrolled in our coastwise trade.

Mr. GALLINGER. My position is that, inasmuch as we have an abundance of American ships—indeed, a surplus of American ships—in the coastwise trade to-day, I would not have one of them displaced by a ship of this kind, which might have been built abroad or purchased abroad. If you put such a ship into the coastwise trade, you must of necessity deprive some American ship of that trade. It goes without the saying.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am in favor of the principle that only ships flying the American flag shall engage in our coastwise trade; but all of these ships will fly the American flag. All of them will not only have American registry and sail under the American flag, but they will be acquired by American money, the money of all the people of this country. Now, why should they not be allowed in that trade?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Florida remembers the contest we had two years ago, when it was proposed that we should admit foreign ships to the coastwise trade, but the Senate did not agree to it, the vote being 20 for it and 40 against it. Now, is not this putting the nose of the camel under the tent, and does it not mean that another effort will be made in the near future to open our coastwise trade to all foreign ships, just as the attempt was made two years ago?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think so, Mr. President. My judgment about the matter is that these ships, however, which are American ships, owned by Americans and flying our flag, even though primarily engaged in foreign trade, ought to be permitted, when they go from one port of this country to another port in connection with that foreign business, to carry passengers or freight between our ports. That is my view about it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that if some of us could have the assurance—which we can not have, I take it—that those who are trying to open the coastwise trade to foreign ships would be content with letting only these ships go into the coastwise trade, it would not be very serious; but inasmuch as the effort has been made heretofore to open our coastwise trade to all foreign ships, and this is a beginning in that direction, I have very grave fears as to what the result will be if the Democratic Party continues in power, which I do not believe it will, fortunately. I will say to the Senator that if that feature of this bill could be eliminated it would have a much easier passage through the Senate than it will have with that feature in it.

Mr. FLETCHER subsequently said: I ask permission to include as a part of my remarks without reading the advertisement that I referred to of American and neutral steamers offered for sale by the Marine Trading Co., and of the Standard Shipbuilding Corporation offering for sale standard cargo steamships and the details of new contracts in June and vessels completed during June.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). The bill is as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Johnson, S. Dak.	Reed	Taggart
Brady	Kenyon	Robinson	Thomas
Bryan	Kern	Shafroth	Thompson
Chilton	La Follette	Sheppard	Tillman
Culberson	Lane	Simmons	Underwood
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.	Vardaman
Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Warren
Hardwick	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.	Weeks
Hollis	Overman	Smoot	Williams
Hughes	Penrose	Sterling
Husting	Ransdell	Swanson

Mr. LANE. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CLAPP, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. PHELAN, Mr. PITTMAN, and Mr. STONE answered to their names when called.

Mr. BRANDEGEE and Mr. LEWIS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I ask to have the names of those Senators who are present read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not know of any rule for that.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask to have read the names of those Senators who are recorded as present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, it can be done. The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the names.

The Secretary proceeded to read the names of the Senators recorded as "present," and was interrupted by Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I may be a little too late, but I wish when the Secretary reads the name of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to pause a moment and emphasize it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I make the point of order that nothing is in order during the recapitulation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is just as much in order as the previous remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will observe that the Chair said it could be done, without objection. There was no objection, and therefore it is being done.

The Secretary resumed and concluded reading the list of Senators present.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege. For some time there has been dissatisfaction on this side of the Chamber with the way the names have been taken down in counting a quorum. To put it mildly, it seems to me at least that the greatest carelessness has prevailed. It is the duty of the majority to maintain a quorum here, but almost every day the quorum has been maintained largely by the help of the minority. This morning the Senate was held up for one-half an hour or three-quarters of an hour, the majority not being in their seats. It is this kind of laxity in the conduct of the legislative business that has delayed the appropriation bills far past the beginning of the fiscal year and kept us here far into the summer.

I want particularly, Mr. President, to call attention to the name of the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. He is recorded as having answered to the roll call. I did not hear that Senator answer, and I certainly did not see him in the Chamber. I ask that that name at least be stricken from the roll of those who answered to the roll call as being present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no power to do that.

Mr. PENROSE. Can not the roll be corrected?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator from Texas was here and responded to his name.

Mr. PENROSE. Did the Senator from Virginia see him?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I saw him in the Chamber.

Mr. PENROSE. Did the Senator hear him answer?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will state that he was here, and he has been here much oftener than the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. That may be. It would not be hard to beat my record on that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

Mr. PENROSE. I will yield in just a moment. I want to impress the importance and necessity of having the roll call more carefully conducted and to see that Senators are bodily present in the Chamber and not in the corridor or in their committee rooms.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to state that my colleague, the senior Senator from Texas, has been detained from the Chamber on account of official business in his committee room. He entered the Chamber and answered to his name on the roll call and immediately returned to his committee room. My colleague's attendance record will compare favorably with that of any other Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to say that there is not any Member of this body who does not recognize the perfect propriety of making a mentor and monitor out of the Senator from Pennsylvania when it comes to the subject of the duty of Senators to attend in their places here. It is the first time, perhaps, in the history of the Senate—though there may have been other occasions of like character, I do not know assuredly, but the first time that I remember—when a Senator insisted upon having the names of those who were present read. The Senator from Pennsylvania insisted upon it. I do not know whether it was because he is so seldom present that he thought the fact of his presence ought to be noted, celebrated, or that he thought that whenever he is here the names of those who are present, his chiefly among them, ought to be read.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] had asked that the names of those present be read whenever he was here, or the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] had asked that they be read whenever he happened to be here, or I had had asked to have them read when I was here, or the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] had had them read whenever he was here, it would take up nearly all the time of the Senate. But I agree that there is nothing more proper, nothing more replete with the lesson of the duty of attendance, than having the names of those who are present read answer to their names read, whenever and wherever the Senator from Pennsylvania happens to be one of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. I dislike exceedingly to interrupt the Senator, but no announcement has been made as to whether there is a quorum present or not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary informs the Chair that the former occupant of the chair announced that a quorum was present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not hear it.

Mr. CHILTON. I announced it when in the chair.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know whether I am in order or not, but I am just as much in order as the Senator from Pennsylvania was when I took the floor and he sat down.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is talking on the shipping bill, and while he speaks within the rule he is in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If it is the shipping bill, then ships have to have a free sea to sail upon, of course, and we can talk about almost anything; but I was merely calling attention to the fact that if anybody at all were appointed to see to it that we were always here and that we attended the sessions, it ought to be par excellence the Senator from Pennsylvania.

As I grow older I am beginning to think sometimes that I fail in my memory, that my power of recollection seems to grow less, but I have regained confidence. The other day when the Senator from Pennsylvania came into this body, notwithstanding the long lapse of time, I recognized him at once, and a great many Senators complimented me upon knowing who he was without having to take any time either to study his features or ask any questions concerning him. After so long a time I regarded it as a test of my powers of observation and memory.

If it is in order, I should like to move that hereafter whenever the Senator from Pennsylvania is present the Secretary shall ipso facto read the names of those who are present and answer to their names.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry for information. Does the particular clause now under discussion relate to steamships or to ships that need a breeze to drive them over the sea—wind, in other words?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is a parliamentary question which the Chair submits to the decision of the Senate.

RAILWAY SECURITIES.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, it is my intention to discuss within two or three days some phases of the shipping bill which is now before the Senate, but this afternoon I am going to discuss briefly another subject.

Some days ago when the Army appropriation bill was up for consideration the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] discussed the question of railway capitalization, and during the discussion some question was raised about the statements made by the Senator. I announced that later on when I had obtained definite and accurate information I would address the Senate upon that subject. I now intend to refer in detail to that subject. In order that there may be clearly before the Senate the subject which I want to discuss I wish to read from the RECORD what the Senator from Wisconsin actually said:

The railroads of this country have been built, and can be rebuilt today, even with the advance in the cost of material, upon which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has dwelt at such length, for the bonded indebtedness of the railroads of the United States. It is the history of all railroad building, sir, that the people have furnished the capital that built the railroads. The Senator from Massachusetts shakes his head in dissent. I give this as the uniform method of railroad construction. If there be exceptions to it, my study—and it has been reasonably diligent, beginning back thirty-odd years ago—has missed it.

Railroads are built in this way: A company is organized and secures a right of way. The right of way is gotten with the payment of but little money. Communities, counties, States are stimulated to believe that the building of the railroad will be a tremendous advantage to them. Their cooperation is secured in the bonding of the towns, in the bonding of the cities, in the bonding of the counties. In many cases farmers have given farm mortgages to promote the building of railroads in this country. The right of way is secured—secured by gifts, by donations. On top of it the bonds of the communities are offered.

Then, Mr. President, a construction company is organized. The construction company takes over the company that secured the right of way, and takes over all it has. Then the construction company proceeds to carry out the construction of the road in a very rough and elemental way. Then it presents to the financiers the proposition of bonding the entire enterprise. It is the history of railroad building in the United States that the amount of bonds which have been issued upon each of these enterprises has been sufficient to cover all the expenses of securing the right of way, all the expenses of organization, all the expenses of agents to work upon public sentiment; every dollar of expense is included in the amount for which the property is finally bonded.

The bonds are issued, the railroad is built; and stocks are then issued, which represent no dollar of money, which go into the hands of the promoters of the enterprise as a clear gift.

It is that proposition, Mr. President, which I intend to controvert so far as I can, not because I have any direct or personal interest in it but because I think it is of vital importance to the people of this country to know whether or not a statement made on the floor of the Senate by a leading Senator, which charges that no money whatever has gone into railroad stock, is correct.

We depend for our railroad construction and our railroad development, as the Senator from Wisconsin has said, on the money of the people which goes into the enterprise. If it is true that no money whatever has gone into railroads against which stocks have been issued, as is charged, then it is a vital matter from the standpoint of the people of the country; it is especially a vital matter to them in making their investments. Furthermore, it is of importance in the future, because we must develop our railroad properties to meet the increasing demands which are constantly coming up. The late James J. Hill said not long ago that within a short time—I think within three or four years—that something like $4,000,000,000 would have to be spent on railroad improvements and railroad development in order to bring the railroads up to the conditions required by the shipping and traveling public. We have plenty of examples before us, which have occurred within the past year, of the incapacity of the railroads to handle the business that has developed as a result of the European war.

My observation is that our people are not greatly agitated about the rates which they pay for passenger or freight transportation, but that they do demand that there shall be good service given. The truth is that our freight rates in the United States are materially less than are the freight rates of any country in the world, and that the passenger rates, with the exception of third and fourth class rates in European countries, are as low as are the rates in other parts of the world. It is not a question of complaining of the rates, but it is a question of getting the service which the people demand. In order to get that service, additional money must go into the railroads; in order to get that money, somebody must sell the securities which the people must buy to obtain it, unless we are going to take over the railroads as a governmental function, which, I am fearful, might be the result if the Democratic Party remained long enough in power. If that is true, and if we must go to those sources for the money with which to develop our railroads, and if it is true that the stocks of the railroads now issued are not represented by property investments, but are purely profit to somebody, then it is going to produce a hesitation on the part of the investing public to put their money into railroad securities. That hesitation does exist to-day.

I am not going to discuss railroad rates, whether they are too high or whether they should be increased, as has been recently proposed; but I am going to say, Mr. President, with an assurance of the correctness of my statement, that there is great hesitation about putting capital into railroad securities at this time. That is definitely shown by the prices at which railroad securities are selling. Certainly the railroads of the country have never had more prosperous times in volume of business than they have had during the last year. It would be impossible for them to profit any more than they have during the past year, unless rates are increased, because, generally speaking, and especially in the case of the eastern railroads, they have been doing all the business they could possibly handle, and very frequently there have been blockades due to their incapacity to handle the business. Even under those circumstances, however, railroad securities are a lagging feature in the market; they do not bring the prices on the returns paid which railroad securities brought 10 years or even 5 years ago.

There must be a reason for this, and the reason undoubtedly is that there is a feeling that the investor can not obtain a fair return on his investment if he puts it into railroad securities with an absolute certainty of the integrity of the investment. I feel that way myself. Railroads have been so restricted that the difference between gross and net is constantly diminishing.

Now, to show, Mr. President, the prices at which railroad securities are selling at the present time, I want to quote the prices of some of the bonds and stocks of the very best railroads in the United States. It is true in the case of the bonds which I shall quote that their price depends somewhat on the length of time they have to run. Of course, if a bond matures within a short time, it is going to sell at very nearly par, while it might sell at materially less than par if it had a long period to run. I am taking the very best railroad bonds, first mortgage or general mortgage bonds in each case. It will be seen what a satisfactory return can be obtained from investments in these securities if there is the confidence which should go with investments of that kind:

Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe general mortgage fours, selling at 92½;

Chesapeake & Ohio general mortgage four-and-a-halves at 89½;

Chicago, Burlington & Quincy general mortgage fours at 93;

Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul general mortgage fours at 90;

Chicago & North Western general mortgage fours at 94;

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific general mortgage fours at 84;

Erle general mortgage fours at 74;

Illinois Central general mortgage fours at 89;

Lake Shore general mortgage fours at 94;

New York Central general mortgage three-and-a-halves at 82;

New York Central debenture four-and-a-halves at 92;

Pennsylvania Railroad general mortgage fours at 99;

Pennsylvania 4½ per cent general mortgage bonds at 101½;

Southern Pacific general mortgage fours at 89; and Union Pacific general mortgage fours at 96½.

It will be seen, assuming that those bonds mature within a reasonable time, that every bond on that list is selling on substantially a 4½ per cent basis, and, as I have said, they are the very best railroad bonds which are issued in the United States.

I noted in looking at the paper this morning that there were being offered to the public by a New York banking house bonds of the Minnesota Transfer Co., which company owns or controls the lines of transfer railroad in St. Paul and Minneapolis which connect the great systems running into those places, bonds maturing in 1946, bearing 5 per cent interest, a first mortgage on the property, at 102. Of course there could not be a much better bond issued than that, and it shows that substantially the best railroads are paying 5 per cent for the money which they are borrowing under present conditions.

Now, let us take the prices of stock as a further substantiation of the statement I have made. The average price of 50 stocks selling on the New York Stock Exchange yesterday was 85.14. The same stocks a year ago were selling at 77.17. Everybody knows what a marked increase there has been in the selling price of securities during the past year. Some of them have doubled in price. The stock of almost every industrial concern in the country which is listed on the stock exchanges has increased from 25 to 50 per cent in price, and yet railroad securities, including the standard railroad stocks of the country, have only increased in price about 7 per cent.

The returns which investors may get from railroad stocks are indicated from the following prices, which I will read:

Atchison common stock, selling at 102, pays 6 per cent, and has done so since 1907.

Northern Pacific stock, selling at 110, pays 7 per cent, and has done so since 1903; and it paid an extra dividend in 1908 of 11.26 per cent.

The stock of the Chicago & North Western, one of the very best-managed railroads in the United States, selling at 126, pays 7 per cent, and has done so since 1902.

The stock of the St. Paul Railroad, selling at 94, pays 5 per cent at this time, but paid as high as 7 per cent between 1902 and 1911.

Union Pacific stock, selling at 140, now pays 8 per cent, but paid 10 per cent from 1907 to 1914.

Pennsylvania stock, selling at 116, is on a 6 per cent basis.

New York Central stock, selling at 104, is paying now 5 per cent.

Louisville & Nashville stock, selling at 126, has paid from 6 to 7 per cent, except for the last year or two, during the period to which I have referred in the other cases.

In other words, these standard railroad stocks are returning to the investor from 5½ to 6 per cent.

Money has been relatively cheap in the United States during the past year. Notwithstanding the great business which has been developed, there has been an ample supply of money, and I maintain that there is not a business or manufacturing concern in the United States which has not been able to buy its money cheaper than have the standard railroads.

I want to see the public well served by the transportation lines. They are the arteries of our industrial life, and if they do not serve the public efficiently, if they have not the means to serve the public efficiently, then we are going to have stagnation in other directions. The very fact that we have developed a great industrial business in the United States during the past two years has been of material moment in connection with the transportation problem, because if the transportation lines could not serve the industrial elements satisfactorily we would have been unable to have developed our industrial production as we have; but there has been great dissatisfaction with the way the railroads have been able to serve the public, and I wish to present the reason given by one of these railroads for this condition.

The Lehigh Valley Railroad has been one of those most severely criticized because it has been unable to handle its business at its New York terminals. I wrote the president of that road some time ago, asking him the reason for this condition, and I read for the RECORD his reply to my letter:

LEHIGH VALLEY RAILROAD CO.,
143 Liberty Street, New York, January 21, 1916.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of your letter of January 11, in which you ask my opinion "as to the reasons for the present congestion in the port of New York, its effect upon the general railway situation, and its relation to the present shipping conditions."

Your inquiry involves a subject of vital interest to the railroads of this country, and I have come to the conclusion that it is receiving the serious consideration of the authorities at Washington.

A short time ago I received a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury asking for information on the same subject. Under date of January 7, I wrote to the Secretary, giving in detail, so far as it affected the Lehigh Valley Railroad, the embargo problem in the port of New York. In summarizing this problem my letter to the Secretary said:

"In reply to that portion of your letter which states that the chief purpose of this inquiry is to find out how the commerce of the country is being affected injuriously or otherwise by the congestion and embargo in question and how far the lack of adequate ocean transportation facilities is responsible for this condition, I would refer you to a compilation contained in the Journal of Commerce on Wednesday, January 5, 1916. This compilation shows that during the year 1915 there was a net increase of 1,125 vessels arriving in New York from foreign ports, as compared with the year 1914. In other words, we have considerably more steamers coming to this port to-day than ever before.

"It is true that despite this increase in the number of vessels the tonnage of the vessels entering the port in 1915 was 932,058 less than in 1914, but in studying tonnage figures it must be remembered that the two great German steamship companies have ceased operations from this port, and many of the large vessels of other lines have been requisitioned by their respective Governments. It also should be remembered that the largest of the vessels, now out of service, which swelled the tonnage figures for 1914, were primarily passenger boats. The great increase in vessels devoted exclusively to freight more than offsets, therefore, the apparent losses shown in tonnage figures.

"It would appear, therefore, that while we have had an increase in the number of vessels coming to the port of New York, the chief cause of the congestion is to be found in the fact that the railroads were unprepared to handle the avalanche of freight created in the United States because of abnormal conditions abroad. The cause for this unpreparedness of the railroads to meet abnormal conditions is to be found in the remarkable decrease in new construction work and purchases of equipment in the five calendar years ending with 1914 as compared with the five years ending with 1906, as follows:

	1902-1906	1910-1914	Decrease.
			Per cent.
New mileage built.....	25,521	14,787	42
Freight cars ordered.....	1,092,375	736,075	32
Locomotives ordered.....	22,393	15,894	29

"You are familiar with the money market and therefore are aware that railroad financing has become exceedingly difficult, not only because of the higher rates of interest demanded for new bond issues, but also because the investing public became exceedingly timid in regard to railroad securities. This timidity was caused by the multiplicity of burdens placed upon the railroads by the Federal and State regulatory authorities, by increased wages, increased taxes, and increased cost of supplies. Because of these adverse conditions financing for extensions became so difficult that new construction and equipment orders fell off, as indicated above.

"I regard it as profoundly important to direct attention to the fact that, while the industries of the United States were able to take care of the abnormally large amount of business offered them as a result of the war, the railroads have not been able to dispatch the freight as rapidly as in normal times. To my mind the demonstrated strength of our industries shows clearly that the railroads must be able to keep pace with industrial progress in this country. I am hopeful that the congressional investigation suggested by President Wilson will show the disparity between industrial and railroad development and that as a result of such an investigation our Government will devote itself to constructive railroad legislation. If the railroads and our industries are able to march side by side in our national development I do not think we need fear a recurrence of existing conditions."

A short time previous to my receipt of the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury I was asked by the Federal Trade Commission to answer a number of questions regarding the development of our export trade. To my mind the present condition in the port of New York bears a very close relation to the industrial development in which the Federal Trade Commission is so keenly interested.

It must be obvious to you that the railroads of this country are interested in industrial expansion. I assume that it is the desire of the Federal Trade Commission to encourage such expansion. But there is a practical side to such expansion which can not be overlooked. It is true that our present volume of foreign trade is abnormal, and it is also true that this country is on the eve of a commercial development which, if properly developed, can not fail to be generally beneficial.

It seems strange to me, however, that one branch of the Federal Government should devote itself to the broad policy of development of our foreign trade without some thought being devoted to the transportation facilities which would make that foreign trade possible. Development of home industries means increased production; increased production means an increased volume of freight; and increased freight traffic must result in a comprehensive development of our railroads.

Is it not fair to ask that if the Federal Government is to encourage industrial development that it also give serious consideration to the sort of constructive regulation of and legislation for the railroads that will enable them to handle the heavy increase in business which our industries have shown themselves capable of producing?

I am keenly interested in this entire problem and if this letter has served to throw some light on a problem which seems to be somewhat puzzling, you are at liberty to make such use of it as you see fit.

Sincerely, yours,

E. B. THOMAS.

HON. JOHN W. WEEKS,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

That adds cumulative evidence to the statement I have made that it is impossible—and I can bring any amount of the same kind of evidence—for the railroads to finance themselves in order to meet the industrial business conditions which have developed. If such statements are to go broadcast throughout the country as the one which I have quoted from the Senator from Wisconsin, that there has been no capital invested in railroads represented by stocks, then it is going to make investors more timid. It is true that in the earlier days—in the seventies, possibly the early eighties—there were railroads constructed in the unbroken West in the manner which has been described by the Senator from Wisconsin. It was absolutely impossible to get capital to go into the West at that time on other conditions. It was necessary to offer a premium and a possible speculative return on such an investment. Therefore the bonds that were issued did pay higher rates of interest—6 and sometimes 7 per cent—and very often stock was sold at a less price than par, and frequently, I have no doubt, was given with the bonds in order to induce capital to go into an untried field where the population had not developed and where business conditions really did not warrant at the time the building of a railroad.

If any of us had been investors at that time, I think our own conclusions would have been that we wanted to have some possibility of a profit from the stocks if we were going to put our money into such enterprises. But that any such condition has existed within the last 30 years I emphatically deny. The manner of issuing securities by the great railroad companies has entirely changed. In most States there are public-service commissions or railroad commissions which superintend the issuing of securities; and I am going to demonstrate by instancing a few railroads that the statement which I have quoted from the Senator from Wisconsin has absolutely no foundation whatever.

I am going to take first what is considered by many the most important railway system in the United States—the Pennsylvania system—and I will read a letter which I have received from the president of that road:

I will be very glad indeed to furnish you the information just as requested in your favor of the 7th if you particularly desire it in that way, but it has seemed to me, after reading the speech to which you refer, that it would answer your purpose better if I were to summarize the data, to meet the principal point in question, from the records of the Interstate Commerce Commission, being returns made to them under oath "in re investigations of rates, practices, rules, and regulations governing the transportation of anthracite coal, I. C. C. Docket 4914," and I will accordingly show it in this way:

Capital stock (from the date of incorporation, 1846, to Dec. 31, 1912):
Par value issued.....$453,910,807

Mind you, this goes back to 1846—

Cash value of proceeds.....$499,501,251

Less—

Commissions.....$2,252,842

Stock issued as dividends.....19,430,000

21,862,842

477,818,409

Net cash proceeds in excess of par value.....23,907,602

(Par value of stock, $50; average sale price, $52.63.)

That does not look very much as if any stock had been given away to investors with bonds or in any other way. The treasury of that company has benefited to the extent of more than $23,000,000 by the sales of its capital stock in addition to its par value during this period of 70 years.

Funded debt (from date of incorporation, 1846, to Dec. 31, 1912):

Par value issued	$491,795,975
Cash realized	478,557,000

Net cash proceeds less than par value	13,238,975
Cash proceeds of capital stock and funded debt in excess of par value from date of incorporation to Dec. 31, 1912	10,668,627

In connection with the difference between the cash proceeds and the par value of bonds, as you doubtless know, the amount realized from the sale of bonds is largely regulated by the rate of interest which the security bears. The average interest rate on the funded debt of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. as of December 31, 1915, was 4.40 per cent.

So that for all this capital which has been used in the development of the great Pennsylvania system the company has received in cash $10,668,627 more than the par value of all the stocks and bonds issued. It must be remembered, too, that many of the bonds which have been issued in recent years have borne a very low rate of interest, and therefore, for that reason, they have frequently been sold at less than their face or par value. It does not make a great difference to a railroad whether it sells a 4½ per cent interest-bearing bond at a material premium over par, or whether it sells a 4 per cent bond at a discount from par, thereby reducing its annual rate of interest by one-half of 1 per cent; and in the case of the Pennsylvania road, as in some of the others to which I will refer, the bonds have been sold at less than par for the reason that they have carried a very low rate of interest.

I will not rest my case, however, on the showing made by the Pennsylvania Railroad, but I will take another of the great railroad systems of the country—the New York Central.

In the case of the New York Central road and its allied lines, the following figures have been taken from the books of the company, and are embodied in a letter to me from the president of the company:

The bonded debt of the New York Central, exclusive of equipment trust certificates, amounts to $631,981,000; its outstanding capital stock is $249,590,460; total bonds and stock, $881,571,460.

During the 26 years from July 1, 1890, to July 1, 1916, the New York Central issued a total of $160,162,160 of stock and a total of $603,892,000 of bonds, which are now outstanding. Of that amount of bonds, approximately $131,000,000 were issued for the refunding of bonds, bearing a higher rate of interest, outstanding on July 1, 1890, and the balance—approximately $473,000,000—was issued and sold for corporate purposes other than refunding. The bonds issued for refunding were issued at par or better, and the remainder was sold at an average of 96.72 per cent of par. The discount on the sale of bonds amounted to $15,509,268.75, or 3.28 per cent on the par of the bonds issued for other than refunding purposes.

The table which I shall offer and ask to have printed will indicate that the average rate of interest on these bonds is just about 4 per cent.

The commissions paid on the sale of bonds amounted to $5,311,020, or 0.879 per cent on the par of bonds issued. The interest paid on the $603,892,000 of bonds averages 4.211 per cent on their par value, or including the amortization of discounts and commissions, an average of 4.313 per cent of par.

All of the stock was sold at par or better.

You will observe that since July 1, 1890, new money for capital purposes other than refunding has been provided by the sale for cash of stock and bonds of the par value of $663,000,000, in even figures. In addition, and between January 1, 1900, and June 1, 1916, over $133,000,000 out of income has been either reinvested in the property or carried to surplus.

The price at which bonds can be sold depends, among other things, on the rate of interest which they bear. Certain of the bond issues of the New York Central, because of their low interest rate, have been sold at a discount. Other things being equal, the greater the interest rate the more a bond will sell for. From the company's standpoint, the financial result may be the same when it sells at less than par a bond having a low interest rate and when it sells at par or better a bond carrying heavier interest. In fact, when a company sells a bond at a discount the result is frequently more favorable to it, because, amortizing the discount over the life of the bond and adding it to the interest, the company gets its money at less cost than it would have gotten it for had it sold at a higher price a bond bearing larger interest.

The proportions which the securities so issued bear to total capitalization appear from an inspection of the accompanying balance sheets.

They amount to about three-quarters of the total issues of securities of the New York Central Railroad.

I send you a copy of a circular letter dated February 23, 1915, to the stockholders, containing information as to the financial condition of the company, and also a copy of a pamphlet giving a history of the New York Central, both of which I think you will find of interest.

I shall ask, after quoting two or three paragraphs from this circular, Mr. President, to put it into the Record. It indicates some of the methods of spending the money which has been raised by this railroad company during recent years, and the reasons why the capital stock and the bonded indebtedness have increased to such a degree. For example:

The more important improvements made on the lines now comprising the New York Central Railroad since January 1, 1910, include:

Further construction at the Grand Central Terminal, at a cost of $30,000,000 (including commercial buildings), in order to meet the requirements of an increasing passenger business, and to develop the valuable real estate within the terminal area. The annual rentals received from the Grand Central Terminal amount to more than $2,000,000, which should increase as further improvements are completed and become productive.

Acquisition of important links in the company's main line previously held on lease, $14,185,000.

Four tracking between New York and Albany, including improved signaling and new stations, $15,931,000.

New passenger stations at Rochester and at Utica, including new engine terminals, new yards, and appurtenances, $6,886,000.

Elimination of grade crossings and enlargement of Gardenville yard, $3,276,000.

Electrification work between New York, Croton, and White Plains, $3,783,000.

Enlargement and improvement of facilities west of Buffalo, $14,000,000.

That statement was issued by the New York Central Railroad to explain the reasons for the issue of bonds which this circular advertises, which were sold at about par; and it indicates the tremendous amount of money which must be spent by railroad companies in order to keep their systems up to the needs of the public.

I ask permission to put this circular in the Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE NEW YORK CENTRAL RAILROAD CO.,
GRAND CENTRAL TERMINAL,
New York, February 23, 1915.

To the stockholders of the New York Central Railroad Co.:

The board of directors has authorized an issue of $100,000,000 of 20-year 6 per cent convertible debenture bonds, which (subject to approval by stockholders and the public authorities having jurisdiction) are hereby offered for subscription by the stockholders at par, to the extent of 40 per cent of their several holdings of record of the capital stock of the company at 3 o'clock p. m. on March 19, 1915.

Information as to the bonds and directions for the guidance of stockholders will be found on the page which follows this letter.

The entire issue has been underwritten, the underwriters agreeing to take so many of the bonds as are not subscribed for by the stockholders.

These bonds will be the direct obligation of the New York Central Railroad Co., formed by the consolidation of the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co. and the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Co. and certain of their subsidiaries. As now constituted the railroad of the consolidated company comprises 6,050 miles of main line and 14,670 miles of track.

The proceeds of the sale of the bonds will be used to fund an equal amount of the company's now unfunded debt, which has been incurred for the betterment and extension of its railroads and in the acquisition of property.

The convertible bonds will carry an interest charge substantially the same as that heretofore paid on the notes to be funded.

The more important improvements made on the lines now comprising the New York Central Railroad since January 1, 1910, include:

Further construction at the Grand Central Terminal, at a cost of $30,000,000 (including commercial buildings), in order to meet the requirements of an increasing passenger business, and to develop the valuable real estate within the terminal area. The annual rentals received from the Grand Central Terminal amount to more than $2,000,000, which should increase as further improvements are completed and become productive.

Acquisition of important links in the company's main line previously held on lease, $14,185,000.

Four-tracking between New York and Albany, including improved signaling and new stations, $15,931,000.

New passenger stations at Rochester and at Utica, including new engine terminals, new yards, and appurtenances, $6,886,000.

Elimination of grade crossings and enlargement of Gardenville yard, $3,276,000.

Electrification work between New York, Croton, and White Plains, $3,783,000.

Enlargement and improvement of facilities west of Buffalo, $14,000,000.

Since January 1, 1900, the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co., the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Co., and their subsidiaries, now consolidated into the New York Central Railroad Co., increased their resources by $658,000,000, of which over $122,000,000 came from the sale of capital stock and over $114,000,000 from earnings. The remainder came from the sale of bonds, equipment trust certificates, and notes.

During the same period more than $400,000,000 has been spent for additions, betterments, new construction, and new equipment. The following tables give the approximate figures:

Increase in resources since Jan. 1, 1900.

From—
Capital stock	$122,729,000
Funded debt	234,621,000
Equipment trust certificates	53,782,000
Notes	132,743,000
Income (reinvested in the property or carried to surplus)	114,242,000
Total	658,117,000

Disposition of the increase in resources.

For—
Additions, betterments, and new construction	$246,745,000
New equipment	155,637,000
Stocks and securities acquired	161,377,000
Advances to affiliated companies	72,879,000
Material, supplies, and working fund	21,479,000
Total	658,117,000

The expenditures above mentioned have been made in order that the companies might keep pace with the growth of their business and provide the facilities needed to enable them to perform their public service. The benefits which have come from them are shown by the increases in the gross of operating revenues (including auxiliary operations), which are set forth in the following table:

	Total, including auxiliary operations.
1900	$87,050,000
1901	99,006,000
1902	102,394,000
1903	114,983,000
1904	114,041,000
1905	125,000,000
1906	137,257,000
1907	146,604,000
1908	131,971,000
1909	146,770,000
1910	158,753,000
1911	162,263,000
1912	175,578,000
1913	186,905,000
1914	168,153,000

During the six years 1909 to 1914, inclusive, the net corporate income of the companies now consolidated, after the deduction of charges prior to the interest on the convertible bonds now to be issued, has averaged $21,792,000, while the interest charge on the new bonds will call for $6,000,000.

When the convertible bonds shall be outstanding the average of the interest which the company will pay on the total of its bonded debt will be 4.17 per cent, and the average interest upon its equipment trust certificates will be 4.61 per cent.

In every year since its incorporation in 1869 the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co. paid dividends at the rate of not less than 4 per cent per annum.

The consolidation of the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad and the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Cos. has brought into the treasury of the New York Central Railroad Co. securities of a book value of approximately $218,000,000, part of which, representing the entire issues of controlled properties, are not currently quoted. The book value of the stocks which are currently quoted is about $100,000,000, compared with a present market value of over $125,000,000. These holdings include stocks of Reading Co., Pittsburgh & Lake Erie, Mahoning Coal Railroad, Nickel Plate, Big Four, etc.

About 78 per cent of the company's investments in securities is in affiliated steam roads. The interests of the company in street railway or other local utilities are its holdings in the Mohawk Valley Co. and the New York State Railways, which during the last five years have paid the company an average of 6.75 per cent on its investment.

During 1915 the increases in freight rates recently granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission will become effective, and on the basis of 1914 business will result in adding about $3,500,000 to the company's income. Further increases in passenger rates which are now pending, and which it is hoped will shortly become effective, will still further add to income.

Of the $658,000,000 which has been added to the resources of the company since January 1, 1900, $237,000,000 has been derived from income and from the sale of capital stock and $421,000,000 from the sale of bonds, equipment trust certificates, and notes. So soon as the convertible bonds are sold and the proceeds applied to the payment of notes which are now outstanding all of the $421,000,000 of indebtedness above mentioned will have been funded with the exception of about $32,000,000, which is offset by indebtedness of other companies.

The New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co. executed its refunding and improvement mortgage, dated October 1, 1913, which, now that consolidation has been effected, is to be extended to include also the railroads formerly of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Co. and of the other railroad companies included in the consolidation. Of the refunding and improvement mortgage bonds, $40,000,000 have already been sold. It is expected that eventually bonds issued under this mortgage will provide for the capital requirements of the consolidated company so far as they are to be met from the sale of bonds. Owing to the unusual financial conditions now prevailing the board of directors has decided that it is best to fund the now maturing note indebtedness of the company by an issue of debenture bonds, convertible into stock, and to offer such bonds to the stockholders so that those who subscribe may share in the advantages which it is expected will come with the return of more prosperous years.

At the request of the company, and under the terms of the fiscal agency arrangement of February, 1911, Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co. have formed a syndicate (of which they are members) to underwrite the issue at par. As fiscal agents they are to receive for their services their stipulated commission of 1½ per cent. The syndicate is to receive for its underwriting a commission of 2½ per cent. The company is to have the benefit of all commissions on directors' subscriptions. To the extent that profits shall be realized by the syndicate in excess of its commissions, the same shall be divided equally between it and the company. No commissions are to be payable except in respect and to the extent of such bonds as shall be actually issued.

A special meeting of the stockholders will be held on April 20, 1915, at the office of the company in Albany, N. Y., to authorize the issue of the convertible bonds and an increase of $100,000,000 in the amount of the capital stock of the company to be used for the conversion of the bonds so far as required, and to authorize the leasing of the railroads of the Ottawa & New York Railway Co. and of the St. Lawrence & Adirondack Railway Co., of which companies the New York Central owns all of the capital stock.

Inclosed herewith is a proxy for the stockholders' meeting, which please sign and return to the secretary at your early convenience.
A. H. SMITH, President.
D. W. PARDEE, Secretary.

INFORMATION AS TO THE BONDS AND DIRECTIONS AS TO SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The convertible debenture bonds referred to in the foregoing letter will be $100,000,000 in amount; will be dated May 1, 1915; will mature May 1, 1935; will bear 6 per cent interest from May 1, 1915; and will be convertible, at the option of the holders, after May 1, 1917, and prior to May 1, 1925, into the common stock of the New York Central Railroad Co., or of any successor company, as such stock shall be constituted at the date of conversion, on the basis of $105 per share for the stock, the $5 being payable either in the bonds or in money.

The company reserves the right to retire all or any part, not less than $5,000,000, of the bonds on any interest day or days on or after May 1, 1918, at 110 per cent of par and interest on 90 days' notice, but if so called for redemption the bonds may be converted into stock up to 30 days prior to the date of redemption. Coupon bonds will be in denominations of $100, $500, and $1,000, and may be registered as to principal. Registered bonds will be in denominations of $1,000 and such multiples thereof as the board of directors may determine; $100 bonds and $500 bonds, in aggregates of $1,000, may be exchanged for a $1,000 bond. Coupon bonds for $1,000 and registered bonds will be interchangeable.

Stockholders of the New York Central Railroad Co. have the right to subscribe on or before April 20, 1915, for bonds at par to the extent of 40 per cent of the par value of their several holdings of record of the capital stock of the company at 3 o'clock p. m. on March 19, 1915.

Subscriptions will be payable in three installments, as follows: On May 1, 1915, 50 per cent; on September 1, 1915, 25 per cent; and on October 1, 1915, 25 per cent. To installments paid on September 1 and to installments paid on October 1 will be added interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from May 1, 1915, to installment payment dates. Subscribers have the right to anticipate the payment of installments by making payment thereof on any of the installment dates.

Warrants will be mailed to stockholders as soon as possible after March 19, 1915, and will specify the amount of bonds for which they are severally entitled to subscribe.

The privilege of subscription will be accorded only to the holders of subscription warrants for $100 or a multiple thereof, and to their assigns, under assignments executed in the prescribed form on the back of the warrants.

Stockholders who desire to subscribe for only a portion of the bonds to which they are entitled and to sell their subscription rights for the balance may exchange their original subscription warrants at the office of the company in New York for subscription warrants, in denominations of not less than $100 each, of an equal aggregate amount. Such exchange must be made on or before April 16, 1915.

For each fraction of a bond less than $100 a fractional warrant will be issued, which may be surrendered on or before April 16, 1915, at the office of the company in New York, together with other fractional warrants aggregating in amount at least $100; and a subscription warrant or warrants in the denomination of $100 or a multiple thereof, together with a new fractional warrant, if required, of an aggregate amount equal to the aggregate amount of the surrendered fractional warrants, will then be issued in exchange therefor. After April 16, 1915, no new fractional warrants will be issued, and all fractional warrants outstanding will be void and of no effect.

Fractional warrants may be bought or sold in the market, but will not be bought or sold by the company.

The subscription warrants must be presented and surrendered with the subscription made in respect thereof on the form to be provided on the back of said subscription warrants. If the subscription warrants are not so presented and the required payment made, such subscription warrants will become wholly void and of no value, and the privilege of subscription will cease.

Upon payment of the first installment a negotiable receipt will be issued therefor, which must be presented when further installments are paid, so that such payments may be entered thereon. All receipts must be surrendered to the company before bonds are issued.

Upon the making of final payment, engraved bonds, or receipts exchangeable for engraved bonds as soon as the latter are ready for delivery, will be issued.

Failure to pay any of the installments when and as payable will operate as a forfeiture of all rights in respect of the subscription.

Warrants will be issued and subscriptions will be received subject to the approval of the issue by the stockholders and by the governmental bodies having jurisdiction in the matter.

Mr. WEEKS. I will now take a railroad system in another section of the country, because it may be charged that the method of financing in the East is different from that in the West. In that connection I will read a letter from Mr. E. P. Ripley, the president of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway. Incidentally I want to say here, lest I forget it, that in many cases in the building of western railroads 40 or 50 years ago, where stocks were given with the bonds issued without any additional cost to the owner of the bonds, there have been reorganizations of the roads, and such stocks have been wiped out of existence. Furthermore, and incidentally, 45,000 of the 250,000 miles of railroads in the United States are at this time in the hands of receivers. If one will take the time to go over the railroad conditions which have existed during the last 30 years, it will be found that very much more than a majority of the mileage of the railroads of the United States has been at some time in the hands of receivers, and in many cases the stocks which were subscribed for originally have been wiped out.

Mr. Ripley says:

ATCHISON, TOPEKA & SANTA FE RAILWAY SYSTEM,
Chicago, July 14, 1916.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WEEKS: In compliance with your letter of July 7 I am attaching a statement showing sales to date of securities by the Atchison Co. since January 1, 1896, the date the reorganization of the company became effective, together with the proceeds of these sales. The Atchison Co. has not since their acquisition sold any securities of subsidiary companies. Furthermore, it has sold no common stock except that $112,357,000 convertible bonds have been exchanged to June 30, 1916, for an equal amount par value of common stock.

The preferred stock shown in the statement was sold to the public through the medium of bankers.

The securities covered by the statement represent 42.62 per cent of the capital liabilities of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. as of June 30, 1916, including assumed obligations of subsidiary companies outstanding in the hands of the public.

Yours, truly,

E. P. RIPLEY.

In other words, it will be found there has been a discount of about 5 per cent on the par value of the bonds of the Atchison road that have been issued since its reorganization in 1895, and the only capital stock issued was sold at substantially par.

I take another railroad. In this instance I am going to take a New England railroad, the Boston & Maine. I think there never has been any contention as to any part of this system that any money that has gone into the system has been badly spent on any charge against its directors, as has been the case with the New Haven road.

The Boston & Maine Railroad issue of common stock between 1890 and 1916 aggregated $222,438,654, at an average price of $126.92 a share. In other words, the amount realized by the railroad amounted to a premium of very nearly 27 per cent on its par value.

The stock issued by the branch lines of the Boston & Maine Railroad during that time amounted to 102,615 shares. The average price at which these stocks were sold, the return made to the treasury, was $207.82 a share. In other words, the treasury received more than twice as much in the case of its branch lines as the par value of the stock issued.

The summary of the Boston & Maine system shows a capital stock of 307,000 shares, which has netted the treasury of the company $46,757,182, or, practically speaking, 50 per cent more than the par value of the securities.

One of the principal branches of the Boston & Maine system is the Boston & Lowell Railroad, which owns the terminals of the system in Boston. There have been issued by the Boston & Lowell Railroad during the period to which I am referring, the last 26 years, 21,500 shares of stock, at an average price of $204.74. In other words, the Boston & Lowell treasury has received more than $2 for every $1 of stock issued, and that is largely true in the other instances of the branch lines which I have here, and which I will not read, asking permission to put them in the Record in connection with my remarks.

The Boston & Maine Railroad has sold bonds since 1896 to an aggregate volume of $43,338,000. The bonds average to bear about 4 per cent interest. They range from 3 per cent to 4½ per cent. The return to the treasury for these bonds aggregated $43,523,543, or almost exactly the par of the bonds—slightly more rather than less.

The Boston & Lowell Corporation, the branch of the Boston & Maine to which I have referred, issued bonds in that period aggregating $4,278,000, which brought to the treasury $4,331,000.

As I have stated, all these securities were issued under the direction and the approval of the Massachusetts Public Service Commission.

I will ask to put in the Record all the figures relating to this system, some of which I have quoted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. WEEKS. I now take a railroad system in still another section of the country, the Louisville &amp; Nashville system. In a letter to me under date of July 17, the first vice president, Mr. Mapother, writes as follows:

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD CO.,
Louisville, Ky., July 17, 1916.Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your favor of the 7th instant, addressed to the president, making inquiry as to the sales of stocks and bonds by the Louisville &amp; Nashville Railroad Co. during the last 25 years, I submit the following:

1. Price at which stock was sold:

Stock issue, par value	$24,012,300.00
Net amount realized	22,996,776.77
Average price per share of $100	95.77

2. To whom sold—stockholders or the public: Of the total par value issue, $11,975,172 was issued to stockholders at par and the remainder sold to the public.

3. Price at which bonds were sold:

The total amount of bonds sold during the 25 years, par value, amounted to $177,663,500; net amount realized, $169,337,657.38.

Included in the above par value are bonds aggregating $42,000,000, which are no longer outstanding in the hands of the public, having matured, from which there was realized when originally sold, $39,190,000.

Deducting these two amounts from the total sale and net amount realized, we have as the amount of par value of bonds sold during the last 25 years, which are outstanding in the hands of the public, $135,663,500, and the net amount realized on these bonds amounted to $130,147,657.38.

The average amount realized per bond of $1,000 was $959.34.

4. Proportion which above sale of securities bears to the total capital:

Total issue of capital stock	$72,000,000.00
Proportion of sale during last 25 years to the total	33.35
As of May 31, 1916, the total bonded debt outstanding in the hands of the public was	$172,932,000.00

Yours, truly,

W. L. MAPOTHER,
First Vice President.

In other words, the treasury of the Louisville &amp; Nashville Railroad operating in the southern section of the country received practically 97 per cent of the par value of every bond and every share of stock which it has outstanding.

Now, I take another road, the Union Pacific, which has become one of the great railroad systems of the country. I have here a statement of the bonded indebtedness and the stock issued since the reorganization of that system in 1897. I will ask to put this in the RECORD without reading, because the figures there bear out the general statement which I have made in connection with the other roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNION PACIFIC SYSTEM,
New York, July 21, 1916.Hon. J. W. WEEKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 7th instant, addressed to Mr. A. L. Mohler, as president of the Union Pacific Railroad Co., requesting information as to sales of securities by that company, has been referred to me.

In compliance with your request I have had compiled and inclose herewith a statement giving the desired information in so far as we are able to furnish it. The Union Pacific System was reorganized in 1896 and 1897, and the existing companies, which acquired the railroad properties as a result of the reorganization, have none of the information which you request for the period prior to the reorganization.

You refer to a speech by Senator LA FOLLETTE printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Thursday, July 6. This citation is apparently erroneous, and we have not been able to find the speech to which you refer. I should be greatly obliged if you would have a corrected citation sent me.

In 1914 I had some correspondence with Senator THOMAS, of Colorado, the principal part of which was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, of April 13, 1914, page 7149, and April 22, 1914, page 7600, concerning a criticism of certain Union Pacific financing which he had made on the floor of the Senate.

Yours, very truly,

R. S. LOVETT.

NOTE.—The above represents securities held by the public and does not include stock and bonds of the respective Union Pacific system companies held in the Treasury or owned within the system.

JULY 20, 1916.

Mr. WEEKS. Also, I have a statement of the Southern Pacific System, which operates in the same section of country covered by the Union Pacific System.

The issue of stock in the Southern Pacific system since December 31, 1890, amounts to $156,599,000. Of this amount $81,636,415.64 was issued in exchange for stock of companies forming part of the system. This leaves $74,963,100 to be accounted for. Seventy-four million four hundred and fifty-one thousand eight hundred dollars was issued in exchange for an equal amount of preferred stock, which has been issued for cash at par. Five hundred and eleven thousand three hundred dollars was issued in exchange for convertible bonds, which had previously been issued for cash at par. Of this last amount $509,300 was issued at a premium of 130.

I annex a statement giving the detail of the bond issue and the total issue aggregating $249,000,000. There are now outstanding $204,000,000, the remainder having been retired or converted into stock. I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD the statement relating to this matter which I have been discussing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SOUTHERN PACIFIC CO.,
July 27, 1916.

HON. JOHN W. WEEKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Mr. William Sproule, president of the Southern Pacific Co., as well as of the Southern Pacific Railroad Co., has referred to me your letter of July 7, in which you ask to be furnished with certain information as to the sales of stocks and bonds by the "Southern Pacific Railroad Co." and its leased lines during the last 25 years.

The Southern Pacific Railroad Co. owns one of the several lines composing the Southern Pacific system, which is operated under lease by the Southern Pacific Co. On account of the almost total destruction of its corporate records by the San Francisco fire of 1906, it is impossible at the present time to furnish you with the desired information. I say "at the present time," for agents of the valuation department of the Interstate Commerce Commission, with the cooperation of our own officers, have been engaged for some time in the endeavor to work out from what remains of the corporate records information similar to that which you have asked for. It is believed that this work will be completed and a report made in about six weeks or two months.

The parent company of the Southern Pacific System is the Southern Pacific Co., a Kentucky corporation, whose executive officers are in New York. Your letter was referred to me, as chairman of the executive committee of the Southern Pacific Co., doubtless because Mr. Sproule thought that you had in mind the Southern Pacific Co. By the Equitable Building fire of 1912 this company also incurred the loss of nearly all its corporate records.

From the printed annual reports of the Southern Pacific Co. and from its reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission it appears that its outstanding capital stock was issued either in exchange for the stock of the companies which compose its system or for the equivalent of cash at par.

The issue of its stock since December 31, 1890, amounts to $156,599,515.64. Of this amount, $81,636,415.64 was issued in exchange for stock of companies forming part of its system. This leaves $74,963,100 to be accounted for; $74,451,800 was issued in exchange for an equal amount of preferred stock, which had been issued for cash at par; $511,300 was issued in exchange for convertible bonds, which had previously been issued for cash at par. Of this last amount, $509,300 was issued at a premium of 130.

All the bonds of the Southern Pacific Co. have been issued in the last 25 years; $16,818,500 were issued in 1900 in connection with the acquisition of the Central Pacific Railway Co.; the remainder were issued at the highest prices obtainable, varying from a minimum of 87.50 for an issue of 4 per cent bonds during fiscal year ended June 30, 1912, to a maximum of 96.75 for 4½ per cent bonds during fiscal year ended June 30, 1913. The $136,346,500 of convertible bonds were issued for cash at par. I annex a statement giving the details of the bond issues. Of the total issues, aggregating $249,345,000, there are now outstanding $204,835,110. The remainder have been retired or converted into stock.

Yours, truly,

J. KRUTTSCHNITT.

Mr. WEEKS. I have statements from other prominent railroads of the country that practically substantiate the figures which I have given in the roads I have cited.

In a word, I want to say, Mr. President, that I do not find that any railroad company in this country has issued securities during the last 25 years materially below par, and that the average of all the railroad securities issued, both stocks and bonds, during that period is substantially 95 per cent of their par value. I doubt, unless in the very remotest sections of the United States, in the case of some small railroad, if there has been a single mile of road built during the last 25 years where a bond issue has been made and the stock has been given to the purchaser of the bonds as a gratuity. It certainly has not been done in the case of any of the great railroad systems of the country, which have constructed practically all of the mileage which has been constructed in the United States during that time. I do not know a single instance of an old railroad where that has been done. I think in one or two cases in the Southwest I have heard of cases where railroads have been undertaken by a sale of bonds, and the stock sold at a material discount from par. In one instance—I do not recall the name of the road; I guess it was the Kansas City & Southern or the Kansas City & Gulf—the road was in the hands of a receiver before it was completed. The same individuals attempted to construct a road in a southwestern direction from Kansas City—with this the present Presiding Officer (Mr. ASHURST in the chair) may be familiar—but I think the result was exactly the same as in the previous case—that the road went into the hands of a receiver before the construction was completed.

So finally in my investigations, which have been fairly thorough, I do not find any instance which will corroborate the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin—that railway stocks are given to the purchasers of bonds, and do not bring any return to the treasury of the road.

I make this statement and submit these figures not because I care personally anything about defending the railway situation in the United States in any other manner than to promote the public interest by furnishing the public with sufficient confidence in railway securities so that they may safely invest in them and thereby enable railroads to make developments which will enable them to perform the service which the public has a right to demand. If what I have submitted has any influence in bringing about that condition, I am quite content. I certainly have had no other purpose in taking this matter up for discussion at this time.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15522) to establish a national park service, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FERRIS, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8234) to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LEWIS, Mr. MAHER, and Mr. SMITH of Michigan managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 12717. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13224. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914;

H. R. 15957. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 16699. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Men's Club of the St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, of Los Angeles, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of California, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to limit the freedom of the press, which were ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. THOMAS:

A bill (S. 6808) granting a pension to Mrs. W. H. Holmes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 6809) granting an increase of pension to William F. Wilson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 6810) for the relief of John H. Rheinlander; to the Committee on Claims.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—TABITHA RASK.

On motion of Mr. PITTMAN, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of the bill S. 4156, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, granting a pension to Tabitha Rask, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15522) to establish a national park service, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MYERS, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 15455) to establish a United States shipping board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries, to regulate carriers by water engaged in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I presume it would now be in order to have the Secretary read the bill and take up the amendments of the committee in their order.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator not to make that request at this time. I will say that there are no other Senators ready to go on to-night, but they will be prepared in the morning, and I hope the Senate will now adjourn.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think, Mr. President, I will not ask unanimous consent to have the bill read and consider the committee amendments first. We have had a very hard day of it anyway, and I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., Wednesday, August 9, 1916) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, August 10, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 9, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, we approach Thee in faith and confidence that we may be guided by the light of Thy spirit through all the duties of this day; impress upon us, we beseech Thee, the certainty of the great and universal law: "Whosoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. And let us not be weary in well-doing, for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." Hear us and thus bless us in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to bill (H. R. 8234) to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments and had appointed Mr. NEWLANDS, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. CLAPP as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 193. Joint resolution authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster at Newark, N. J., with a special canceling die for the Newark Two hundred and fiftieth Anniversary Celebration.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5976) to amend an act approved May 29, 1908, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the Baltimore & Washington Transit Co. of Maryland to enter the District of Columbia," approved June 8, 1896.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 1351. An act providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and water holes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States, for rendering the same more readily accessible, and for the establishment of and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same; and

S. 5466. An act to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry and desert-land entry, and to amend an act entitled "An act to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry," approved October 1, 1890.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a letter recently written by the President to the president of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association. Mr. Speaker, I will say, this was the letter from which I read an extract a day or two ago, the authenticity of which was doubted by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]. I therefore ask to put the letter in the RECORD, the reply thereto by the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, and the letter addressed to me, inclosing same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the letters referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letters referred to are as follows:

ILLINOIS MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION,
Chicago, August 7, 1916.

Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Hastings requests me to acknowledge receipt of your telegram of August 5. I inclose herewith a copy of the letter of President Wilson and also a copy of Mr. Hastings's reply.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN M. GLENN, Secretary.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, July 28, 1916.

Mr. SAMUEL M. HASTINGS,
President Illinois Manufacturers' Association, Chicago, Ill.

MY DEAR MR. HASTINGS: It was with real interest and appreciation that I received your suggestion for the appointment of a commission to visit the belligerent nations for the purpose of studying the means whereby closer economic relations might be brought about between the United States and Europe. The general idea underlying your suggestion had for a long time been much in my thoughts. Whether this is the opportune moment to act upon it, however, is open to serious question.

Let me say that when the circumstances justify it I shall take advantage of that provision of the Rainey bill under which the President is authorized to direct an examination or investigation by the tariff commission of trade relations between the United States and foreign countries, including the conditions, causes, and effects of the competition of foreign industries with those of the United States.

After all, what we are interested in is to ascertain all the facts surrounding our economic life and to disconnect a fundamental thing like the fiscal policy of the Government with regard to duties on imports from party politics. We shall strive to do this through the instrumentality of a permanent, nonpartisan commission composed of able and experienced men, so that when the facts are once obtained the handling of our tariff question may no longer be made the football of politics. It ought to be possible by such means to make the question of duties merely a question of progress and development, a question of adapting means to ends, of facilitating and helping business and employing to the utmost the resources of the country in a vast development of our business and enterprise.

Through the Federal Trade Commission, which substitutes the milder processes of helpful counsel for the harsh process of the law, we already have for the first time a compilation of the trust laws of the world, together with a complete analysis of the manner in which foreign Governments encourage their business enterprises and associations. A committee of the House of Representatives now has under discussion a bill to permit cooperation among American manufacturers and business men exclusively for export trade, so that American enterprise may be able to meet more successfully the organized competition with which they are face to face in international markets. In addition to the information gathered and systematized by the Federal Trade Commission bearing upon foreign and domestic commerce, our consular representatives and commercial attaches abroad have kept us well supplied with information relative to the changing business conditions and the new financial processes which are proceeding with unusual rapidity; but it will be the privilege and function of the tariff commission to obtain and collate in an even more systematic way the information which is desired as a basis for our future action.

We have not been accustomed to the large world of international business, but it is evident that we must get acquainted with it immediately. American enterprise is already establishing new industries. Some of these, like the dyestuffs industry, for example, are old and well established in Europe, and have been for generations. The study of such industries, their wages, and their general organization, with reference to economy and efficiency of operation, can not fail to be helpful to the business men of the United States and to the people in general.

May I not add an expression of my sincere appreciation of the evidence you and your colleagues have given of a willingness to cooperate in all such enterprises?

Sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

ILLINOIS MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION,
Chicago, July 31, 1916.

To the PRESIDENT:

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 26, and in reply wish to express to you my appreciation as well as the appreciation of my colleagues for the very cordial reception you have given our suggestions.

The very important services which we propose no doubt could be done by the tariff commission as you indicate, but we feel that it would be much better to have a special commission, the idea of which should be to carry our feelings of friendship and good will to other nations. The members of the tariff commission would be received as commercial emissaries, while it was our thought that the commercial feature should be secondary.

We feel our country should cultivate a friendly spirit with other nations, and the commission we suggest should precede any commercial effort made on the part of business houses of our country.

We were impressed with your Detroit speech and gathered our suggestions largely from this source. There is no desire to interfere with the diplomatic officials or encroach upon the duties of any other department. If a commission made up of representative industrial and financial men could sit down with similar representatives from other Governments and talk matters over, our people feel confident that great good would result, as it would help to eliminate misunderstandings and place us on a more friendly footing. The message our commission would carry to the foreign Governments and trade associations could not help but bear fruit beneficial to ourselves and the countries visited.

Very truly, yours,

SAMUEL M. HASTINGS, President.

PREVENTION OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE IN PRODUCTS OF CHILD LABOR.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8234, just reported from the Senate, to disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the request for a conference on the differences between the two Houses, and ask that the conferees be appointed for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8234) to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. To disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints the following conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LEWIS, Mr. MAHER, and Mr. SMITH of Michigan.

SCHOONER CLARA DAVIS.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to insert in the RECORD two telegrams, the one I sent to Capt. Davis, of Somerset, Mass., and his reply thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing two telegrams, one that he sent to Capt. Davis and Capt. Davis's reply, pertaining to the debate of yesterday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The telegrams are as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 8, 1916.

Capt. CORNELIUS A. DAVIS,
Somerset, Mass.:

Saw a statement that the Clara Davis is now on the British black list. Is that correct, or has the black list been suspended? Answer.
WM. S. GREENE.

FALL RIVER, MASS., August 8, 1916.

Hon. WILLIAM GREENE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Have promise that black list will be removed in a few days.

C. A. DAVIS.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill H. R. 1660, providing for the classification of salaries of veterinary inspectors and lay inspectors (grades 1 and 2) employed by the Bureau of Animal Industry in the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 16460), and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia calls up the conference report on the Army appropriation bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask whether there will be a full explanation given of this matter?

Mr. HAY. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Well, the statement does not tell very much; will there be a full explanation given?

Mr. HAY. I will be glad to answer any questions.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I know, but people do not understand very much about it unless a full explanation is given. The report is very long.

Mr. HAY. I will be very glad to explain to the gentleman anything I can explain.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman explain the conference report in addition to having the statement read?

Mr. HAY. I will do so after the statement has been read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the statement.

The statement was read:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1091).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16460) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 42, 43, 52, 54, 57, 58, 60, 72, 75, 77, 88, 96, 101, 104, 130, 131, 135, and 140.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 8, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 27, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 38, 39, 40, 44, 45, 47, 49, 53, 55, 62, 63, 65, 68, 78, 79, 81, 82, 83, 85, 86, 87, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 97, 98, 103, 105, 107, 110, 111, 114, 117, 118, 126, 127, 128, 129, and 136, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Contingencies of the Army: For all contingent expenses of the Army not otherwise provided for and embracing all branches of the military service, including the office of the Chief of Staff; for all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, including the employment of translators and exclusive of all other personal services in the War Department, or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., or in the Army at large, but impossible to be anticipated or classified; to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of War, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, including the payment of a per diem allowance not to exceed $4, in lieu of subsistence, to employees of the War Department traveling on official business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated posts, $50,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 7 of the bill, line 10, after the word "section," insert the following: "Provided further, That of the sum last above mentioned $900,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, will be available for paying and otherwise providing for such officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps of the Aviation Section of the Signal Corps and such enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Aviation Section of the Signal Corps as may be called into active service"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and in lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept for the United States from any citizen of the United States a donation of a tract or tracts of land suitable and desirable in his judgment for the purposes of an aviation field and remount station, the terms of the donation also to authorize the use of the property donated for any other service of the United States which may hereafter appear desirable."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of War is directed to investigate the suitability of the various military reservations for aviation purposes, and should any of the reservations be found not suitable and not available for aviation he is authorized, in his discretion, to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, for the United States of America, such land as may be necessary for aviation purposes, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for said purpose."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$10,000,000: Provided, That in applying section 25 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916, the President shall assign to officers of the Army such constructive dates of original commission, from which lengths of commissioned service shall be computed, as will preserve their rights to promotion in accordance with their relative order on the lineal lists of their arms and continue in effect losses of files occasioned by sentences of courts-martial or failures to pass required examinations for promotion, said constructive dates of original commission to be subject to change whenever a change thereof may be necessary in order to carry into effect losses of files hereafter incurred by any officer through a sentence of court-martial or a failure to pass a required examination for promotion: Provided further, That in determining the arm from which a detail is to be made to a vacancy in the detached officers' list, as provided in the third proviso of section 25 of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, the officer of any grade who is the senior in that grade according to the constructive dates of original commission provided for in the preceding proviso shall be considered the senior in length of commissioned service of all officers of that grade: Provided further, That in determining the rights of officers in the last proviso of section 24 of said national defense act, officers retired before the separation of the Field Artillery from the Coast Artillery shall be regarded as having belonged to the Field Artillery: Provided further, That when by reason of increase in the arm, corps, or branch of the service in which an officer is commissioned his loss of files in lineal rank due to suspension from promotion on account of failure to pass the required examination therefor exceeds the loss he would have sustained if no such increase had occurred, he shall, if promoted upon reexamination, be advanced to the position he would have occupied in the grade to which promoted had no increase occurred: And provided further, That the general officers of the line who were appointed as such pursuant to the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. L., p. 1191), shall take rank in their present grades over all officers hereafter appointed to like grades"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That nothing in this act or previous acts of Congress shall be construed to prohibit the paying of men enlisted by State authorities of any State for militia organization for the purpose of bringing said organization up to the minimum necessary to permit of the muster in of said organization, from the date of such enlistments to the date of muster in or from date of enlistment to date of rejection, after physical examination"; and the Senate agree to the same.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 134: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 134, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"To establish and maintain indoor and outdoor rifle ranges for the use of all able-bodied males capable of bearing arms, under reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the national board for promotion of rifle practice and approved by the Secretary of War; to provide standard military arms and ammunition, indoor gallery rifles and ammunition; for the employment of labor in connection with the establishment of outdoor and indoor rifle ranges, including labor in operating targets; for the employment of instructors; for clerical services; for prizes, trophies, badges, and other insignia; for the transportation of employees, instructors, and civilians to engage in practice; for the purchase of materials, supplies, and services, and for expenses incidental to instruction of citizens of the United States in marksmanship, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and to remain available until expended, $300,000: Provided, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to appoint, as director of civilian marksmanship, under the direction of the Secretary of War, an officer of the Army or of the Marine Corps."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 137: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the sum of $2,000,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the support of, at a cost of not more than $50 per month, or so much of said amount as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, and not more than such enlisted man has been contributing monthly to the support of his family at the time of his being called or drafted into the service of the United States or during his enlistment period in the Regular Army at the time of such call or draft of the Organized Militia or National Guard, the family of each enlisted man of the Organized Militia or National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States until his discharge from such service, and the family of each enlisted man of the Regular Army until his discharge from active service therein or until the discharge of the Organized Militia or National Guard from such service if such enlisted man is at that time in active service in the Regular Army, which family during the term of service of such enlisted man has no other income, except the pay of such enlisted man, adequate for the support of said family: Provided, That the action of the Secretary of War in all cases provided for in this paragraph shall be final, and no right to prosecute a suit in the Court of Claims or in any other court of the United States against the Government of the United States shall accrue to such enlisted man, or to any member of the family of any such enlisted man, by virtue of the passage of this act: And provided further, That this paragraph shall not apply to any such enlisted man who shall marry after the 15th day of July, 1916; and the word 'family' shall include only wife, children, and dependent mothers."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 138: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 138, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 2. That a Council of National Defense is hereby established, for the coordination of industries and resources for the national security and welfare, to consist of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor."

"That the Council of National Defense shall nominate to the President, and the President shall appoint, an advisory commission, consisting of not more than seven persons, each of whom shall have special knowledge of some industry, public utility, or the development of some natural resource, or be otherwise specially qualified, in the opinion of the council, for the performance of the duties hereinafter provided. The members of the advisory commission shall serve without compensation, but shall be allowed actual expenses of travel and subsistence when attending meetings of the commission or engaged in investigations pertaining to its activities. The advisory commission shall hold such meetings as shall be called by the council or be provided by the rules and regulations adopted by the council for the conduct of its work."

"That it shall be the duty of the Council of National Defense to supervise and direct investigations and make recommendations to the President and the heads of executive departments as to the location of railroads with reference to the frontier of the United States so as to render possible expeditious concentration of troops and supplies to points of defense; the coordination of military, industrial, and commercial purposes in the location of extensive highways and branch lines of railroad; the utilization of waterways; the mobilization of military and naval resources for defense; the increase of domestic production of articles and materials essential to the support of armies and of the people during the interruption of foreign commerce; the development of seagoing transportation; data as to amounts, location, method and means of production, and availability of military supplies; the giving of information to producers and manufacturers as to the class of supplies needed by the military and other services of the Government, the requirements relating thereto, and the creation of relations which will render possible in time of need the immediate concentration and utilization of the resources of the Nation."

"That the Council of National Defense shall adopt rules and regulations for the conduct of its work, which rules and regulations shall be subject to the approval of the President, and shall provide for the work of the advisory commission to the end that the special knowledge of such commission may be developed by suitable investigation, research, and inquiry and make available in conference and report for the use of the council; and the council may organize subordinate bodies for its assistance in special investigations, either by the employment of experts or by the creation of committees of specially qualified persons to serve without compensation, but to direct the investigations of experts so employed."

"That the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available for experimental work and investigations undertaken by the council, by the advisory commission, or subordinate bodies, for the employment of a director, expert and clerical expenses and supplies, and for the necessary expenses of members of the advisory commission or subordinate bodies going to and attending meetings of the commission or subordinate bodies. Reports shall be submitted by all subordinate bodies and by the advisory commission to the council, and from time to time the council shall report to the President or to the heads of executive departments upon special inquiries or subjects appropriate thereto, and an annual report to the Congress shall be submitted through the President, including as full a statement of the activities of the council and the agencies subordinate to it as is consistent with the public interest, including an itemized account of the expenditures made by the council or authorized by it, in as full detail as the public interest will permit: Provided, however, That when deemed proper the President may authorize, in amounts stipulated by him, unvouchered expenditures and report the gross sums so authorized not itemized."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 139: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 139, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 3. That section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 1342. The articles included in this section shall be known as the Articles of War and shall at all times and in all places govern the armies of the United States."

"I. PRELIMINARY PROVISIONS."

"ARTICLE 1. Definitions: The following words when used in these articles shall be construed in the sense indicated in this article, unless the context shows that a different sense is intended, namely:

"(a) The word 'officer' shall be construed to refer to a commissioned officer;

"(b) The word 'soldier' shall be construed as including a noncommissioned officer, a private, or any other enlisted man;

"(c) The word 'company' shall be understood as including a troop or battery; and

"(d) The word 'battalion' shall be understood as including a squadron."

"ART. 2. Persons subject to military law: The following persons are subject to these articles and shall be understood as included in the term 'any person subject to military law,' or 'persons subject to military law,' whenever used in these articles: Provided, That nothing contained in this act, except as specifically provided in article 2, subparagraph (c), shall be construed to apply to any person under the United States naval jurisdiction, unless otherwise specifically provided by law."

"(a) All officers and soldiers in the active military service of the United States, or in the Regular Army Reserve, including volunteers from the date of their muster or acceptance into said service; and all other persons lawfully called, drafted or ordered into, or to duty or for training in, said service, from the date of notice of such call, draft or order;

"(b) Cadets;

"(c) Officers and soldiers of the Marine Corps when detached for service with the armies of the United States by order of the President: Provided, That an officer or soldier of the Marine Corps when so detached may be tried by military court-martial for an offense committed against the laws for the government of the naval service prior to his detachment, and for an offense committed against these articles he may be tried by a naval court-martial after such detachment ceases;

"(d) All retainers to the camp and all persons accompanying or serving with the armies of the United States without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, and in time of war all such retainers and persons accompanying or serving with the armies of the United States in the field, both within and without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, though not otherwise subject to these articles;

"(e) All persons under sentence adjudged by courts-martial;

"(f) All persons admitted into the Regular Army Soldiers' Home at Washington, D. C.

"II. COURTS-MARTIAL.

"ART. 3. Courts-martial classified: Courts-martial shall be of three kinds, namely:

"First, general courts-martial;

"Second, special courts-martial; and

"Third, summary courts-martial.

"A. COMPOSITION.

"ART. 4. Who may serve on courts-martial: All officers in the military service of the United States, and officers of the Marine Corps when detached for service with the Army by order of the President, shall be competent to serve on courts-martial for the trial of any persons who may lawfully be brought before such courts for trial.

"ART. 5. General courts-martial: General courts-martial may consist of any number of officers from 5 to 13, inclusive; but they shall not consist of less than 13, when that number can be convened without manifest injury to the service.

"ART. 6. Special courts-martial: Special courts-martial may consist of any number of officers from three to five, inclusive.

"ART. 7. Summary courts-martial: A summary court-martial shall consist of one officer.

"B. BY WHOM APPOINTED.

"ART. 8. General courts-martial: The President of the United States, the commanding officer of a territorial division or department, the Superintendent of the Military Academy, the commanding officer of an army, an army corps, a division, or a separate brigade, and, when empowered by the President, the commanding officer of any district or of any force or body of troops may appoint general courts-martial; but when any such commander is the accuser or the prosecutor of the person or persons to be tried, the court shall be appointed by superior competent authority, and no officer shall be eligible to sit as a member of such court when he is the accuser or a witness for the prosecution.

"ART. 9. Special courts-martial: The commanding officer of a district, garrison, fort, camp, or other place where troops are on duty, and the commanding officer of a brigade, regiment, detached battalion, or other detached command may appoint special courts-martial; but when any such commanding officer is the accuser or the prosecutor of the person or persons to be tried, the court shall be appointed by superior authority, and may in any case be appointed by superior authority when by the latter deemed desirable; and no officer shall be eligible to sit as a member of such court when he is the accuser or a witness for the prosecution.

"ART. 10. Summary courts-martial: The commanding officer of a garrison, fort, camp, or other place where troops are on duty, and the commanding officer of a regiment, detached battalion, detached company, or other detachment may appoint summary courts-martial; but such summary courts-martial may in any case be appointed by superior authority when by the latter deemed desirable: Provided, That when but one officer is present with a command he shall be the summary court-martial of that command and shall hear and determine cases brought before him.

"ART. 11. Appointment of judge advocates: For each general or special court-martial the authority appointing the court shall appoint a judge advocate, and for each general court-martial one or more assistant judge advocates when necessary.

"C. JURISDICTION.

"ART. 12. General courts-martial: General courts-martial shall have power to try any person subject to military law for any crime or offense made punishable by these articles and any other person who by the law of war is subject to trial by military tribunals: Provided, That no officer shall be brought to trial before a general court-martial appointed by the Superintendent of the Military Academy.

"ART. 13. Special courts-martial: Special courts-martial shall have power to try any person subject to military law, except an officer, for any crime or offense not capital made punishable by these articles: Provided, That the President may, by regulations, which he may modify from time to time, except from the jurisdiction of special courts-martial any class or classes of persons subject to military law.

"Special courts-martial shall not have power to adjudge dishonorable discharge, nor confinement in excess of six months, nor to adjudge forfeiture of more than six months' pay.

"ART. 14. Summary courts-martial: Summary courts-martial shall have power to try any person subject to military law, except an officer, a cadet, or a soldier holding the privileges of a certificate of eligibility to promotion, for any crime or offense not capital made punishable by these articles: Provided, That noncommissioned officers shall not, if they object thereto, be brought to trial before a summary court-martial without the authority of the officer competent to bring them to trial before a general court-martial: Provided further, That the President may, by regulations, which he may modify from time to time, except from the jurisdiction of summary courts-martial any class or classes of persons subject to military law.

"Summary courts-martial shall not have power to adjudge confinement in excess of three months, nor to adjudge the forfeiture of more than three months' pay: Provided, That when the summary court officer is also the commanding officer no sentence of such summary court-martial adjudging confinement at hard labor or forfeiture of pay, or both, for a period in excess of one month shall be carried into execution until the same shall have been approved by superior authority.

"ART. 15. Not exclusive: The provisions of these articles conferring jurisdiction upon courts-martial shall not be construed as depriving military commissions, provost courts, or other military tribunals of concurrent jurisdiction in respect of offenders or offenses that by the law of war may be lawfully triable by such military commissions, provost courts, or other military tribunals.

"ART. 16. Officers; how triable: Officers shall be triable only by general courts-martial, and in no case shall an officer, when it can be avoided, be tried by officers inferior to him in rank.

"D. PROCEDURE.

"ART. 17. Judge advocate to prosecute: The judge advocate of a general or special court-martial shall prosecute in the name of the United States, and shall, under the direction of the court, prepare the record of its proceedings. The accused shall have the right to be represented before the court by counsel of his own selection for his defense, if such counsel be reasonably available, but should he, for any reason, be unrepresented by counsel, the judge advocate shall from time to time throughout the proceedings advise the accused of his legal rights.

"ART. 18. Challenges: Members of a general or special court-martial may be challenged by the accused, but only for cause stated to the court. The court shall determine the relevancy and validity thereof, and shall not receive a challenge to more than one member at a time.

"ART. 19. Oaths: The judge advocate of a general or special court-martial shall administer to the members of the court, before they proceed upon any trial, the following oath or affirmation: 'You, A. B., do swear (or affirm) that you will well and truly try and determine, according to the evidence, the matter now before you, between the United States of America and the person to be tried, and that you will duly administer justice, without partiality, favor, or affection, according to the provisions of the rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States, and if any doubt should arise, not explained by said articles, then according to your conscience, the best of your understanding, and the custom of war in like cases; and you do further swear (or affirm) that you will not divulge the findings or sentence of the court until they shall be published by the proper authority, except to the judge advocate; neither will you disclose or discover the vote or opinion of any particular member of the court-martial, unless required to give evidence thereof as a witness by a court of justice in due course of law. So help you God.'

"When the oath or affirmation has been administered to the members of a general or special court-martial, the president of the court shall administer to the judge advocate an oath or affirmation in the following form: 'You, A. B., do swear (or affirm) that you will not divulge the findings or sentence of the court to any but the proper authority until they shall be duly disclosed by the same. So help you God.'

"All persons who give evidence before a court-martial shall be examined on oath or affirmation in the following form: 'You swear (or affirm) that the evidence you shall give in the case now in hearing shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. So help you God.'

"Every reporter of the proceedings of a court-martial shall, before entering upon his duties, make oath or affirmation in the following form: 'You swear (or affirm) that you will faithfully perform the duties of reporter to this court. So help you God.'

"Every interpreter in the trial of any case before a court-martial shall, before entering upon his duties, make oath or affirmation in the following form: 'You swear (or affirm) that you will truly interpret in the case now in hearing. So help you God.'

"In case of affirmation the closing sentence of adjuration will be omitted.

"ART. 20. Continuances: A court-martial may, for reasonable cause, grant a continuance to either party for such time and as often as may appear to be just.

"ART. 21. Refusal to plead: When the accused, arraigned before a court-martial, from obstinacy and deliberate design stands mute or answers foreign to the purpose, the court may proceed to trial and judgment as if he had pleaded not guilty.

"ART. 22. Process to obtain witnesses: Every judge advocate of a general or special court-martial and every summary court-martial shall have power to issue the like process to compel witnesses to appear and testify which courts of the United States, having criminal jurisdiction, may lawfully issue; but such process shall run to any part of the United States, its Territories, and possessions.

"ART. 23. Refusal to appear or testify: Every person not subject to military law who, being duly subpoenaed to appear as a witness before any military court, commission, court of inquiry, or board, or before any officer, military or civil, designated to take a deposition to be read in evidence before such court, commission, court of inquiry, or board, willfully neglects or refuses to appear, or refuses to qualify as a witness, or to testify, or produce documentary evidence which such person may have been legally subpoenaed to produce, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, for which such person shall be punished on information in the district court of the United States or in a court of original criminal jurisdiction in any of the Territorial possessions of the United States, jurisdiction being hereby conferred upon such courts for such purpose; and it shall be the duty of the United States district attorney or the officer prosecuting for the Government in any such court of original criminal jurisdiction, on the certification of the facts to him by the military court, commission, court of inquiry, or board, to file an information against and prosecute the person so offending, and the punishment of such person, on conviction, shall be a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not to exceed six months, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That the fees of such witness and his mileage, at the rates allowed to witnesses attending the courts of the United States, shall be duly paid or tendered said witness, such amounts to be paid out of the appropriation for the compensation of witnesses.

"ART. 24. Compulsory self-incrimination prohibited: No witness before a military court, commission, court of inquiry, or board, or before any officer, military or civil, designated to take a deposition to be read in evidence before a military court, commission, court of inquiry, or board, shall be compelled to incriminate himself or to answer any questions which may tend to incriminate or degrade him.

"ART. 25. Depositions—when admissible: A duly authenticated deposition taken upon reasonable notice to the opposite party may be read in evidence before any military court or commission in any case not capital, or in any proceeding before a court of inquiry or a military board, if such deposition be taken when the witness resides, is found, or is about to go beyond the State, Territory, or District in which the court, commission, or board is ordered to sit, or beyond the distance of 100 miles from the place of trial or hearing, or when it appears to the satisfaction of the court, commission, board, or appointing authority that the witness, by reason of age, sickness, bodily infirmity, imprisonment, or other reasonable cause, is unable to appear and testify in person at the place of trial or hearing: Provided, That testimony by deposition may be adduced for the defense in capital cases.

"ART. 26. Depositions—before whom taken: Depositions to be read in evidence before military courts, commissions, courts of inquiry, or military boards, or for other use in military administration, may be taken before and authenticated by any officer, military or civil, authorized by the laws of the United States or by the laws of the place where the deposition is taken to administer oaths.

"ART. 27. Courts of inquiry—records of, when admissible: The record of the proceedings of a court of inquiry may be read in evidence before any court-martial or military commission in any case not capital nor extending to the dismissal of an officer, and may also be read in evidence in any proceeding before a court of inquiry or a military board: Provided, That such evidence may be adduced by the defense in capital cases or cases extending to the dismissal of an officer.

"ART. 28. Resignation without acceptance does not release officer: Any officer who, having tendered his resignation and prior to due notice of the acceptance of the same, quits his post or proper duties without leave and with intent to absent himself permanently therefrom shall be deemed a deserter.

"ART. 29. Enlistment without discharge: Any soldier who, without having first received a regular discharge, again enlists in the Army, or in the militia when in the service of the United States, or in the Navy or Marine Corps of the United States, or in any foreign army, shall be deemed to have deserted the service of the United States; and, where the enlistment is in one of the forces of the United States mentioned above, to have fraudulently enlisted therein.

"ART. 30. Closed sessions: Whenever a general or special court-martial shall sit in closed session, the judge advocate and the assistant judge advocate if any, shall withdraw; and when their legal advice or their assistance in referring to the recorded evidence is required, it shall be obtained in open court, and in the presence of the accused and of his counsel if there be any.

"ART. 31. Order of voting: Members of a general or special court-martial, in giving their votes, shall begin with the junior in rank.

"ART. 32. Contempts: A court-martial may punish at discretion, subject to the limitations contained in Article XIV, any person who uses any menacing words, signs, or gestures in its presence, or who disturbs its proceedings by any riot or disorder.

"ART. 33. Records—General courts-martial: Each general court-martial shall keep a separate record of its proceedings in the trial of each case brought before it, and such record shall be authenticated by the signature of the president and the judge advocate; but in case the record can not be authenticated by the judge advocate, by reason of his death, disability, or absence, it shall be signed by the president and an assistant judge advocate, if any; and if there be no assistant judge advocate, or in case of his death, disability, or absence, then by the president and one other member of the court.

"ART. 34. Records—Special and summary courts-martial: Each special court-martial and each summary court-martial shall keep a record of its proceedings, separate for each case, which record shall contain such matter and be authenticated in such manner as may be required by regulations which the president may from time to time prescribe.

"ART. 35. Disposition of records—General courts-martial: The judge advocate of each general court-martial shall, with such expedition as circumstances may permit, forward to the appointing authority or to his successor in command the original record of the proceedings of such court in the trial of each case. All records of such proceedings shall, after having been finally acted upon, be transmitted to the Judge Advocate General of the Army.

"ART. 36. Disposition of records—Special and summary courts-martial: After having been acted upon by the officer appointing the court, or by the officer commanding for the time being, the record of each trial by special court-martial and a report of each trial by summary court-martial shall be transmitted to such general headquarters as the President may designate in regulations, there to be filed in the office of the judge advocate. When no longer of use, records of special and summary courts-martial may be destroyed.

"ART. 37. Irregularities—Effect of: The proceedings of a court-martial shall not be held invalid, nor the findings or sentence disapproved, in any case on the ground of improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for any error as to any matter of pleading or procedure, unless in the opinion of the reviewing or confirming authority, after an examination of the entire proceedings, it shall appear that the error complained of has injuriously affected the substantial rights of an accused: Provided, That the act or omission upon which the accused has been tried constitutes an offense denounced and made punishable by one or more of these articles: Provided further, That the omission of the words 'hard labor' in any sentence of a court-martial adjudging imprisonment or confinement shall not be construed as depriving the authorities executing such sentence of imprisonment or confinement of the power to require hard labor as a part of the punishment in any case where it is authorized by the Executive order prescribing maximum punishments.

"ART. 38. President may prescribe rules: The President may by regulations, which he may modify from time to time, prescribe the procedure, including modes of proof, in cases before courts-martial, courts of inquiry, military commissions, and other military tribunals: Provided, That nothing contrary to or inconsistent with these articles shall be so prescribed: Provided further, That all rules made in pursuance of this article shall be laid before the Congress annually.

"E. LIMITATIONS UPON PROSECUTIONS.

"ART. 39. As to time: Except for desertion committed in time of war, or for mutiny or murder, no person subject to military law shall be liable to be tried or punished by a court-martial for any crime or offense committed more than two years before the arraignment of such person: Provided, That for desertion in time of peace or for any crime or offense punishable under articles 93 and 94 of this code the period of limitations upon trial and punishment by court-martial shall be three years: Provided further, That the period of any absence of the accused from the jurisdiction of the United States, and also any period during which by reason of some manifest impediment the accused shall not have been amenable to military justice, shall be excluded in computing the aforesaid periods of limitation: And provided further, That this article shall not have the effect to authorize the trial or punishment for any crime or offense barred by the provisions of existing law.

"ART. 40. As to number: No person shall be tried a second time for the same offense.

"F. PUNISHMENTS.

"ART. 41. Certain kinds prohibited: Punishment by flogging, or by branding, marking, or tattooing on the body is prohibited.

"ART. 42. Places of confinement—when lawful: Except for desertion in time of war, repeated desertion in time of peace, and mutiny, no person shall under the sentence of a court-martial be punished by confinement in a penitentiary unless an act or omission of which he is convicted constitutes an offense of a civil nature under some statute of the United States, or at the common law as the same exists in the District of Columbia, or by way of commutation of a death sentence, and unless, also, the period of confinement authorized and adjudged by such court-martial is one year or more: Provided, That when a sentence of confinement is adjudged by a court-martial upon conviction of two or more acts or omissions any one of which is punishable under these articles by confinement in a penitentiary, the entire sentence of confinement may be executed in a penitentiary: Provided further, That penitentiary confinement hereby authorized may be served in any penitentiary directly or indirectly under the jurisdiction of the United States: Provided further, That persons sentenced to dishonorable discharge and to confinement not in a penitentiary, shall be confined in the United States Disciplinary Barracks or elsewhere as the Secretary of War or the reviewing authority may direct, but not in a penitentiary.

"ART. 43. Death sentence—When lawful: No person shall, by general court-martial, be convicted of an offense for which the death penalty is made mandatory by law, nor sentenced to suffer death, except by the concurrence of two-thirds of the members of said court-martial and for an offense in these articles expressly made punishable by death. All other convictions and sentences, whether by general or special court-martial, may be determined by a majority of the members present.

"ART. 44. Cowardice; fraud—Accessory penalty: When an officer is dismissed from the service for cowardice or fraud, the crime, punishment, name, and place of abode of the delinquent shall be published in the newspapers in and about the camp and in the State from which the offender came or where he usually resides; and after such publication it shall be scandalous for an officer to associate with him.

"ART. 45. Maximum limits: Whenever the punishment for a crime or offense made punishable by these articles is left to the discretion of the court-martial, the punishment shall not, in time of peace, exceed such limit or limits as the President may from time to time prescribe.

"G. ACTION BY APPOINTING OR SUPERIOR AUTHORITY.

"ART. 46. Approval and execution of sentence: No sentence of a court-martial shall be carried into execution until the same shall have been approved by the officer appointing the court or by the officer commanding for the time being.

"ART. 47. Powers incident to power to approve: The power to approve the sentence of a court-martial shall be held to include, inter alia:

"(a) The power to approve or disapprove a finding and to approve only so much of a finding of guilty of a particular offense as involves a finding of guilty of a lesser included offense when, in the opinion of the authority having power to approve, the evidence of record requires a finding of only the lesser degree of guilt; and

"(b) The power to approve or disapprove the whole or any part of the sentence.

"ART. 48. Confirmation—When required: In addition to the approval required by article 46, confirmation by the President is required in the following cases before the sentence of a court-martial is carried into execution, namely:

"(a) Any sentence respecting a general officer;

"(b) Any sentence extending to the dismissal of an officer, except that in time of war a sentence extending to the dismissal of an officer below the grade of brigadier general may be carried into execution upon confirmation by the commanding general of the Army in the field or by the commanding general of the Territorial department or division;

"(c) Any sentence extending to the suspension or dismissal of a cadet; and

"(d) Any sentence of death, except in the cases of persons convicted in time of war of murder, rape, mutiny, desertion, or as spies; and in such excepted cases a sentence of death may be carried into execution upon confirmation by the commanding general of the Army in the field or by the commanding general of the Territorial department or division.

"When the authority competent to confirm the sentence has already acted as the approving authority no additional confirmation by him is necessary.

"ART. 49. Powers incident to power to confirm: The power to confirm the sentence of a court-martial shall be held to include:

"(a) The power to confirm or disapprove a finding, and to confirm so much only of a finding of guilty of a particular offense as involves a finding of guilty of a lesser included offense when, in the opinion of the authority having power to confirm, the evidence of record requires a finding of only the lesser degree of guilt; and

"(b) The power to confirm or disapprove the whole or any part of the sentence.

"ART. 50. Mitigation or remission of sentences: The power to order the execution of the sentence adjudged by a court-martial shall be held to include, inter alia, the power to mitigate or remit the whole or any part of the sentence, but no sentence of dismissal of an officer and no sentence of death shall be mitigated or remitted by any authority inferior to the President.

"Any unexecuted portion of a sentence adjudged by a court-martial may be mitigated or remitted by the military authority competent to appoint, for the command, exclusive of penitentiaries and the United States Disciplinary Barracks, in which the person under sentence is held, a court of the kind that imposed the sentence, and the same power may be exercised by superior military authority; but no sentence extending to the dismissal of an officer or loss of files, no sentence of death, and no sentence approved or confirmed by the President shall be remitted or mitigated by any other authority.

"The power of remission and mitigation shall extend to all uncollected forfeitures adjudged by sentence of a court-martial.

"ART. 51. Suspension of sentences of dismissal or death: The authority competent to order the execution of a sentence of dismissal of an officer or a sentence of death may suspend such sentence until the pleasure of the President be known, and in case of such suspension a copy of the order of suspension, together with a copy of the record of trial, shall immediately be transmitted to the President.

"ART. 52. Suspension of sentence of dishonorable discharge: The authority competent to order the execution of a sentence, including dishonorable discharge, may suspend the execution of the dishonorable discharge until the soldier's release from confinement; but the order of suspension may be vacated at any time and the execution of the dishonorable discharge directed by the officer having general court-martial jurisdiction over the command, exclusive of penitentiaries and the United States Disciplinary Barracks, in which the soldier is held or by the Secretary of War.

"ART. 53. Suspension of sentences of forfeiture or confinement: The authority competent to order the execution of a sentence adjudged by a court-martial may, if the sentence involve neither dismissal nor dishonorable discharge, suspend the execution of the sentence in so far as it relates to the forfeiture of pay or to confinement, or to both; and the person under sentence may be restored to duty during the suspension of confinement. At any time within one year after the date of the order or suspension such order may, for sufficient cause, be vacated and the execution of the sentence directed by the military authority competent to order the execution of like sentences in the command, exclusive of penitentiaries and the United States Disciplinary Barracks, to which the person under sentence belongs or in which he may be found; but if the order of suspension be not vacated within one year after the date thereof the suspended sentence shall be held to have been remitted.

"III. PUNITIVE ARTICLES.

"A. ENLISTMENT; MUSTER; RETURNS.

"ART. 54. Fraudulent enlistment: Any person who shall procure himself to be enlisted in the military service of the United States by means of willful misrepresentation or concealment as to his qualifications for enlistment, and shall receive pay or allowances under such enlistment, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 55. Officer making unlawful enlistment: Any officer who knowingly enlists or musters into the military service any person whose enlistment or muster in is prohibited by law, regulations, or orders shall be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 56. Muster rolls—False muster: At every muster of a regiment, troop, battery, or company the commanding officer thereof shall give to the mustering officer certificates, signed by himself, stating how long absent officers have been absent and the reasons of their absence. And the commanding officer of every troop, battery, or company shall give like certificates, stating how long absent noncommissioned officers and private soldiers have been absent and the reasons of their absence. Such reasons and time of absence shall be inserted in the muster rolls opposite the names of the respective absent officers and soldiers, and the certificates, together with the muster rolls, shall be transmitted by the mustering officer to the Department of War as speedily as the distance of the place and muster will admit. Any officer who knowingly makes a false muster of man or animal, or who signs or directs or allows the signing of any muster roll knowing the same to contain a false muster or false statement as to the absence or pay of an officer or soldier, or who wrongfully takes money or other consideration on mustering in a regiment, company, or other organization, or on signing muster rolls, or who knowingly musters as an officer or soldier a person who is not such officer or soldier, shall be dismissed from the service and suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 57. False returns: Omissions to render returns: Every officer commanding a regiment, an independent troop, battery, or company, or a garrison, shall, in the beginning of every month, transmit through the proper channels, to the Department of War, an exact return of the same, specifying the names of the officers then absent from their posts, with the reasons for and the time of their absence. Every officer whose duty it is to render to the War Department or other superior authority a return of the state of the troops under his command, or of the arms, ammunition, clothing, funds, or other property hereunto belonging, who knowingly makes a false return thereof shall be dismissed from the service and suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct. And any officer who, through neglect or design, omits to render such return shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"B. DESEPTION—ABSENCE WITHOUT LEAVE.

"ART. 58. Desertion: Any person subject to military law who deserts or attempts to desert the service of the United States shall, if the offense be committed in time of war, suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct, and, if the offense be committed at any other time, any punishment, excepting death, that a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 59. Advising or aiding another to desert: Any person subject to military law who advises or persuades or knowingly assists another to desert the service of the United States shall, if the offense be committed in time of war, suffer death, or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct, and, if the offense be committed at any other time, any punishment, excepting death, that a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 60. Entertaining a deserter: Any officer who, after having discovered that a soldier in his command is a deserter from the military or naval service or from the Marine Corps, retains such deserter in his command without informing superior authority or the commander of the organization to which the deserter belongs, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 61. Absence without leave: Any person subject to military law who fails to repair at the fixed time to the properly appointed place of duty, or goes from the same without proper leave, or absents himself from his command, guard, quarters, station, or camp without proper leave, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"C. DISRESPECT—INSUBORDINATION—MUTINY.

"ART. 62. Disrespect toward the President, Vice President, Congress, Secretary of War, governors, legislatures: Any officer who uses contemptuous or disrespectful words against the President, Vice President, the Congress of the United States, the Secretary of War, or the governor or legislature of any State, Territory, or other possession of the United States in which he is quartered shall be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct. Any other person subject to military law who so offends shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 63. Disrespect toward superior officer: Any person subject to military law who behaves himself with disrespect toward his superior officer shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 64. Assaulting or willfully disobeying superior officer: Any person subject to military law who, on any pretense whatsoever, strikes his superior officer or draws or lifts up any weapon or offers any violence against him, being in the execution of his office, or willfully disobeys any lawful command of his superior officer, shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 65. Insubordinate conduct toward noncommissioned officer: Any soldier who strikes or assaults, or who attempts or threatens to strike or assault, or willfully disobeys the lawful order of a noncommissioned officer while in the execution of his office, or uses threatening or insulting language, or behaves in an insubordinate or disrespectful manner toward a noncommissioned officer while in the execution of his office, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 66. Mutiny or sedition: Any person subject to military law who attempts to create or who begins, excites, causes, or joins in any mutiny or sedition in any company, party, post, camp, detachment, guard, or other command shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 67. Failure to suppress mutiny or sedition: Any officer or soldier who, being present at any mutiny or sedition, does not use his utmost endeavor to suppress the same, or knowing or having reason to believe that a mutiny or sedition is to take place, does not without delay give information thereof to his commanding officer shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 68. Quarrels; frays; disorders: All officers and noncommissioned officers have power to part and quell all quarrels, frays, and disorders among persons subject to military law and to order officers who take part in the same into arrest, and other persons subject to military law who take part in the same into arrest or confinement, as circumstances may require, until their proper superior officer is acquainted therewith. And whosoever, being so ordered, refuses to obey such officer or noncommissioned officer or draws a weapon upon or otherwise threatens or does violence to him shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"D. ARREST; CONFINEMENT.

"ART. 69. Arrest or confinement of accused persons: An officer charged with crime or with a serious offense under these articles shall be placed in arrest by the commanding officer, and in exceptional cases an officer so charged may be placed in confinement by the same authority. A soldier charged with crime or with a serious offense under these articles shall be placed in confinement, and when charged with a minor offense he may be placed in arrest. Any other person subject to military law charged with crime or with a serious offense under these articles shall be placed in confinement or in arrest, as circumstances may require; and when charged with a minor offense such person may be placed in arrest. Any person placed in arrest under the provisions of this article shall thereby be restricted to his barracks, quarters, or tent, unless such limits shall be enlarged by proper authority. Any officer who breaks his arrest or who escapes from confinement before he is set at liberty by proper authority shall be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct; and any other person subject to military law who escapes from confinement or who breaks his arrest before he is set at liberty by proper authority shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 70. Investigation of and action upon charges: 'No person put in arrest shall be continued in confinement more than eight days, or until such time as a court-martial can be assembled.' When any person is put in arrest for the purpose of trial, except at remote military posts or stations, the officer by whose order he is arrested shall see that a copy of the charges on which he is to be tried is served upon him within 8 days after his arrest, and that he is brought to trial within 10 days thereafter, unless the necessities of the service prevent such trial; and then he shall be brought to trial within 30 days after the expiration of said 10 days. If a copy of the charges be not served, or the arrested person be not brought to trial, as herein required, the arrest shall cease. But persons released from arrest, under the provisions of this article, may be tried, whenever the exigencies of the service shall permit, within 12 months after such release from arrest: Provided, That in time of peace no person shall, against his objection, be brought to trial before a general court-martial within a period of five days subsequent to the service of charges upon him.

"ART. 71. Refusal to receive and keep prisoners: No provost marshal or commander of a guard shall refuse to receive or keep any prisoner committed to his charge by an officer belonging to the forces of the United States, provided the officer committing shall, at the time, deliver an account in writing, signed by himself, of the crime or offense charged against the prisoner. Any officer or soldier so refusing shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 72. Report of prisoners received: Every commander of a guard to whose charge a prisoner is committed shall, within 24 hours after such confinement, or as soon as he is relieved from his guard, report in writing to the commanding officer the name of such prisoner, the offense charged against him, and the name of the officer committing him; and if he fails to make such report he shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 73. Releasing prisoner without proper authority: Any person subject to military law who, without proper authority, releases any prisoner duly committed to his charge, or who through neglect or design suffers any prisoner so committed to escape, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 74. Delivery of offenders to civil authorities: When any person subject to military law, except one who is held by the military authorities to answer, or who is awaiting trial or result of trial, or who is undergoing sentence for a crime or offense punishable under these articles, is accused of a crime or offense committed within the geographical limits of the States of the Union and the District of Columbia, and punishable by the laws of the land, the commanding officer is required, except in time of war, upon application duly made, to use his utmost endeavor to deliver over such accused person to the civil authorities, or to aid the officers of justice in apprehending and securing him, in order that he may be brought to trial. Any commanding officer who upon such application refuses or willfully neglects, except in time of war, to deliver over such accused person to the civil authorities or to aid the officers of justice in apprehending and securing him shall be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"When, under the provisions of this article, delivery is made to the civil authorities of an offender undergoing sentence of a court-martial, such delivery, if followed by conviction, shall be held to interrupt the execution of the sentence of the court-martial, and the offender shall be returned to military custody, after having answered to the civil authorities for his offense, for the completion of the said court-martial sentence.

"E. WAR OFFENSES.

"ART. 75. Misbehavior before the enemy: Any officer or soldier who misbehaves himself before the enemy, runs away, or shamefully abandons or delivers up any fort, post, camp, guard, or other command which it is his duty to defend, or speaks words inducing others to do the like, or casts away his arms or ammunition, or quits his post or colors to plunder or pillage, or by any means whatsoever occasions false alarms in camp, garrison, or quarters, shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 76. Subordinates compelling commander to surrender: If any commander of any garrison, fort, post, camp, guard, or other command is compelled, by the officers or soldiers under his command, to give it up to the enemy or to abandon it, the officers or soldiers so offending shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 77. Improper use of countersign: Any person subject to military law who makes known the parole or countersign to any person not entitled to receive it according to the rules and discipline of war, or gives a parole or countersign different from that which he received, shall, if the offense be committed in time of war, suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 78. Forcing a safeguard: Any person subject to military law who, in time of war, forces a safeguard shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 79. Captured property to be secured for public service: All public property taken from the enemy is the property of the United States and shall be secured for the service of the United States, and any person subject to military law who neglects to secure such property or is guilty of wrongful appropriation thereof shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 80. Dealing in captured or abandoned property: Any person subject to military law who buys, sells, trades, or in any way deals in or disposes of captured or abandoned property, whereby he shall receive or expect any profit, benefit, or advantage to himself or to any other person directly or indirectly connected with himself, or who falls whenever such property comes into his possession or custody or within his control to give notice thereof to the proper authority and to turn over such property to the proper authority without delay, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine or imprisonment, or by such other punishment as a court-martial, military commission, or other military tribunal may adjudge, or by any or all of said penalties.

"ART. 81. Relieving, corresponding with, or aiding the enemy: Whosoever relieves the enemy with arms, ammunition, supplies, money, or other thing, or knowingly harbors or protects or holds correspondence with or gives intelligence to the enemy, either directly or indirectly, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as a court-martial or military commission may direct.

"ART. 82. Spies: Any person who in time of war shall be found lurking or acting as a spy in or about any of the fortifications, posts, quarters, or encampments of any of the armies of the United States, or elsewhere, shall be tried by a general court-martial or by a military commission, and shall, on conviction thereof, suffer death.

"F. MISCELLANEOUS CRIMES AND OFFENSES.

"ART. 83. Military property—Willful or negligent loss, damage, or wrongful disposition of: Any person subject to military law who willfully, or through neglect, suffers to be lost, spoiled, damaged, or wrongfully disposed of, any military property belonging to the United States shall make good the loss or damage and suffer such punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 84. Waste or unlawful disposition of military property issued to soldiers: Any soldier who sells or wrongfully disposes of or willfully or through neglect injures or loses any horse, arms, ammunition, accouterments, equipment, clothing, or other property issued for use in the military service, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 85. Drunk on duty: Any officer who is found drunk on duty shall, if the offense be committed in time of war, be dismissed from the service and suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct; and if the offense be committed in time of peace, he shall be punished as a court-martial may direct. Any person subject to military law, except an officer, who is found drunk on duty shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 86. Misbehavior of sentinel: Any sentinel who is found drunk or sleeping upon his post, or who leaves it before he is regularly relieved, shall, if the offense be committed in time of war, suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct; and if the offense be committed in time of peace, he shall suffer any punishment, except death, that a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 87. Personal interest in sale of provisions: Any officer commanding in any garrison, fort, barracks, camp, or other place where troops of the United States may be serving who, for his private advantage, lays any duty or imposition upon or is interested in the sale of any victuals or other necessities of life brought into such garrison, fort, barracks, camp, or other place for the use of the troops, shall be dismissed from the service and suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 88. Intimidation of persons bringing provisions: Any person subject to military law who abuses, intimidates, does violence to, or wrongfully interferes with any person bringing provisions, supplies, or other necessities to the camp, garrison, or quarters of the forces of the United States shall suffer such punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 89. Good order to be maintained and wrongs redressed: All persons subject to military law are to behave themselves orderly in quarters, garrison, camp, and on the march; and any person subject to military law who commits any waste or spoil, or willfully destroys any property whatsoever (unless by order of his commanding officer), or commits any kind of depredation or riot shall be punished as a court-martial may direct. Any commanding officer who, upon complaint made to him, refuses or omits to see reparation made to the party injured, in so far as the offender's pay shall go toward such reparation, as provided for in article 105, shall be dismissed from the service, or otherwise punished, as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 90. Provoking speeches or gestures: No person subject to military law shall use any reproachful or provoking speeches or gestures to another; and any person subject to military law who offends against the provisions of this article shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 91. Duelling—Attempts to commit suicide: Any person subject to military law who fights or promotes or is concerned in or connives at fighting a duel, or who having knowledge of a challenge sent or about to be sent fails to report the fact promptly to the proper authority, if an officer, be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct; and if any other person subject to military law, shall suffer such punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 92. Murder—Rape: Any person subject to military law who commits murder or rape shall suffer death or imprisonment for life, as a court-martial may direct; but no person shall be tried by court-martial for murder or rape committed within the geographical limits of the States of the Union and the District of Columbia in time of peace.

"ART. 93. Various crimes: Any person subject to military law who commits manslaughter, mayhem, arson, burglary, robbery, larceny, embezzlement, perjury, assault with intent to commit any felony, or assault with intent to do bodily harm, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 94. Frauds against the Government: Any person subject to military law who makes or causes to be made any claim against the United States, or any officer thereof, knowing such claim to be false or fraudulent; or "Who presents or causes to be presented to any person in the civil or military service thereof, for approval or payment, any claim against the United States, or any officer thereof, knowing such claim to be false or fraudulent; or

"Who enters into any agreement or conspiracy to defraud the United States by obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the allowance or payment of any false or fraudulent claim; or

"Who, for the purpose of obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the approval, allowance, or payment of any claim against the United States or against any officer thereof, makes or uses, or procures, or advises the making or use of, any writing or other paper, knowing the same to contain any false or fraudulent statements; or

"Who, for the purpose of obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the approval, allowance, or payment of any claim against the United States or any officer thereof, makes, or procures, or advises the making of, any oath to any fact or to any writing or other paper, knowing such oath to be false; or

"Who, for the purpose of obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the approval, allowance, or payment of any claim against the United States or any officer thereof, forges or counterfeits, or procures, or advises the forging or counterfeiting of any signature upon any writing or other paper, or uses, or procures, or advises the use of any such signature, knowing the same to be forged or counterfeited; or

"Who, having charge, possession, custody, or control of any money or other property of the United States, furnished or intended for the military service thereof, knowingly delivers, or causes to be delivered, to any person having authority to receive the same, any amount thereof less than that for which he receives a certificate or receipt; or

"Who, being authorized to make or deliver any paper certifying the receipt of any property of the United States furnished or intended for the military service thereof, makes or delivers to any person such writing, without having full knowledge of the truth of the statements therein contained and with intent to defraud the United States; or

"Who steals, embezzles, knowingly and willfully misappropriates, applies to his own use or benefit, or wrongfully or knowingly sells or disposes of any ordnance, arms, equipments, ammunition, clothing, subsistence stores, money, or other property of the United States furnished or intended for the military service thereof; or

"Who knowingly purchases or receives in pledge for any obligation or indebtedness from any soldier, officer, or other person who is a part of or employed in said forces or service, any ordnance, arms, equipment, ammunition, clothing, subsistence stores, or other property of the United States, such soldier, officer, or other person not having lawful right to sell or pledge the same;

"Shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine or imprisonment, or by such other punishment as a court-martial may adjudge, or by any or all of said penalties. And if any person, being guilty of any of the offenses aforesaid while in the military service of the United States, receives his discharge or is dismissed from the service he shall continue to be liable to be arrested and held for trial and sentence by a court-martial in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had not received such discharge nor been dismissed.

"ART. 95. Conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman: Any officer or cadet who is convicted of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman shall be dismissed from the service.

"ART. 96. General article: Though not mentioned in these articles, all disorders and neglects to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, all conduct of a nature to bring discredit upon the military service, and all crimes or offenses not capital of which persons subject to military law may be guilty shall be taken cognizance of by a general or special or summary court-martial, according to the nature and degree of the offense, and punished at the discretion of such court.

"IV. COURTS OF INQUIRY.

"ART. 97. When and by whom ordered: A court of inquiry to examine into the nature of any transaction of or accusation or imputation against any officer or soldier may be ordered by the President or by any commanding officer; but a court of inquiry shall not be ordered by any commanding officer except upon the request of the officer or soldier whose conduct is to be inquired into.

"ART. 98. Composition: A court of inquiry shall consist of three or more officers. For each court of inquiry the authority appointing the court shall appoint a recorder.

"ART. 99. Challenges: Members of a court of inquiry may be challenged by the party whose conduct is to be inquired into, but only for cause stated to the court. The court shall determine the relevancy and validity of any challenge, and shall not receive a challenge to more than one member at a time. 'The party whose conduct is being inquired into shall have the right to be represented before the court by counsel of his own selection if such counsel be reasonably available.'

"ART. 100. Oath of members and recorder: The recorder of a court of inquiry shall administer to the members the following oath: 'You, A. B., do swear (or affirm) that you will well and truly examine and inquire, according to the evidence, into the matter now before you without partiality, favor, affection, prejudice, or hope of reward. So help you God.' After which the president of the court shall administer to the recorder the following oath: 'You, A. B., do swear (or affirm) that you will, according to your best abilities, accurately and impartially record the proceedings of the court and the evidence to be given in the case in hearing. So help you God.'

"In case of affirmation the closing sentence of adjuration will be omitted.

"ART. 101. Powers; procedure: A court of inquiry and the recorder thereof shall have the same power to summon and examine witnesses as is given to courts-martial and the judge advocate thereof. Such witnesses shall take the same oath or affirmation that is taken by witnesses before courts-martial. A reporter or an interpreter for a court of inquiry shall, before entering upon his duties, take the oath or affirmation required of a reporter or an interpreter for a court-martial. The party whose conduct is being inquired into or his counsel, if any, shall be permitted to examine and cross-examine witnesses so as fully to investigate the circumstances in question.

"ART. 102. Opinion on merits of case: A court of inquiry shall not give an opinion on the merits of the case inquired into unless specially ordered to do so.

"ART. 103. Record of proceedings—How authenticated: Each court of inquiry shall keep a record of its proceedings, which shall be authenticated by the signature of the president and the recorder thereof, and be forwarded to the convening authority. In case the record can not be authenticated by the recorder, by reason of his death, disability, or absence, it shall be signed by the president and by one other member of the court.

"V. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

"ART. 104. Disciplinary powers of commanding officers: Under such regulations as the President may prescribe, and which he may from time to time revoke, alter, or add to the commanding officer of any detachment, company, or higher command may, for minor offenses not denied by the accused, impose disciplinary punishments upon persons of his command without the intervention of a court-martial, unless the accused demands trial by court-martial.

"The disciplinary punishments authorized by this article may include admonition, reprimand, withholding of privileges, extra fatigue, and restriction to certain specified limits, but shall not include forfeiture of pay or confinement under guard. A person punished under authority of this article, who deems his punishment unjust or disproportionate to the offense, may, through the proper channel, appeal to the next superior authority, but may in the meantime be required to undergo the punishment adjudged. The commanding officer who imposes the punishment, his successor in command, and superior authority shall have power to mitigate or remit any unexecuted portion of the punishment. The imposition and enforcement of disciplinary punishment under authority of this article for any act or omission shall not be a bar to trial by court-martial for a crime or offense growing out of the same act or omission; but the fact that a disciplinary punishment has been enforced may be shown by the accused upon trial, and when so shown shall be considered in determining the measure of punishment to be adjudged in the event of a finding of guilty.

"ART. 105. Injuries to person or property—Redress of: Whenever complaint is made to any commanding officer that damage has been done to the property of any person or that his property has been wrongfully taken by persons subject to military law, such complaint shall be investigated by a board consisting of any number of officers from one to three, which board shall be convened by the commanding officer and shall have, for the purpose of such investigation, power to summon witnesses and examine them upon oath or affirmation, to receive depositions or other documentary evidence, and to assess the damages sustained against the responsible parties. The assessment of damages made by such board shall be subject to the approval of the commanding officer, and in the amount approved by him shall be stopped against the pay of the offenders. And the order of such commanding officer directing stoppages herein authorized shall be conclusive on any disbursing officer for the payment by him to the injured parties of the stoppages so ordered.

"Where the offenders can not be ascertained, but the organization or detachment to which they belong is known, stoppages to the amount of damages inflicted may be made and assessed in such proportion as may be deemed just upon the individual members thereof who are shown to have been present with such organization or detachment at the time the damages complained of were inflicted as determined by the approved findings of the board.

"ART. 106. Arrest of deserters by civil officials: It shall be lawful for any civil officer having authority under the laws of the United States, or of any State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States, to arrest offenders, summarily to arrest a deserter from the military service of the United States and deliver him into the custody of the military authorities of the United States.

"ART. 107. Soldiers to make good time lost: Every soldier who in an existing or subsequent enlistment deserts the service of the United States or without proper authority absents himself from his organization, station, or duty for more than one day, or who is confined for more than one day under sentence, or while awaiting trial and disposition of his case, if the trial results in conviction, or through the intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquor, or through disease or injury the result of his own misconduct, renders himself unable for more than one day to perform duty, shall be liable to serve, after his return to a full-duty status, for such period as shall, with the time he may have served prior to such desertion, unauthorized absence, confinement, or inability to perform duty, amount to the full term of that part of his enlistment period which he is required to serve with his organization before being furloughed to the Army reserve.

"ART. 108. Soldiers—Separation from the service: No enlisted man, lawfully inducted into the military service of the United States, shall be discharged from said service without a certificate of discharge, signed by a field officer of the regiment or other organization to which the enlisted man belongs or by the commanding officer when no such field officer is present; and no enlisted man shall be discharged from said service before his term of service has expired, except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial.

"ART. 109. Oath of enlistment: At the time of his enlistment every soldier shall take the following oath or affirmation: 'I, ———, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America; that I will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever; and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and the orders of the officers appointed over me, according to the Rules and Articles of War.' This oath or affirmation may be taken before any officer.

"ART. 110. Certain articles to be read and explained: Articles 1, 2, and 29, 54 to 96, inclusive, and 104 to 109, inclusive, shall be read and explained to every soldier at the time of his enlistment or muster in, or within six days thereafter, and shall be read and explained once every six months to the soldiers of every garrison, regiment, or company in the service of the United States.

"ART. 111. Copy of record of trial: Every person tried by a general court-martial shall, on demand therefor, made by himself or by any person in his behalf, be entitled to a copy of the record of the trial.

"ART. 112. Effects of deceased persons—Disposition of: In case of the death of any person subject to military law, the commanding officer of the place or command will permit the legal representative or widow of the deceased, if present, to take possession of all his effects then in camp or quarters, and if no legal representative or widow be present, the commanding officer shall direct a summary court to secure all such effects; and said summary court shall have authority to convert such effects into cash, by public or private sale, not earlier than 30 days after the death of the deceased, and to collect and receive any debts due decedent's estate by local debtors; and as soon as practicable after converting such effects into cash said summary court shall deposit with the proper officer, to be designated in regulations, any cash belonging to decedent's estate, and shall transmit a receipt for such deposit, accompanied by any will or other papers of value belonging to the deceased, an inventory of the effects secured by said summary court, and a full account of his transactions to the War Department for transmission to the Auditor for the War Department for action as authorized by law in the settlement of the accounts of deceased officers or enlisted men of the Army; but if in the meantime the legal representative, or widow, shall present himself 'or herself' to take possession of decedent's estate the said summary court shall turn over to him 'or her' all effects not sold and cash belonging to said estate, together with an inventory and account, and make to the War Department a full report of his transactions.

"The provisions of this article shall be applicable to inmates of the United States Soldiers' Home who die in any United States military hospital outside of the District of Columbia where sent from the home for treatment.

"ART. 113. Inquests: When at any post, fort, camp, or other place garrisoned by the military forces of the United States and under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, any person shall have been found dead under circumstances which appear to require investigation, the commanding officer will designate and direct a summary court-martial to investigate the circumstances attending the death; and, for this purpose, such summary court-martial shall have power to summon witnesses and examine them upon oath or affirmation. He shall promptly transmit to the post or other commander a report of his investigation and of his findings as to the cause of the death.

"ART. 114. Authority to administer oaths: Any judge advocate or acting judge advocate, the president of a general or special court-martial, any summary court-martial, the judge advocate or any assistant judge advocate of a general or special court-martial, the president or the recorder of a court of inquiry or of a military board, any officer designated to take a deposition, any officer detailed to conduct an investigation, and the adjutant of any command shall have power to administer oaths for the purposes of the administration of military justice and for other purposes of military administration; and in foreign places where the Army may be serving shall have the general powers of a notary public or of a consul of the United States in the administration of oaths, the execution and acknowledgment of legal instruments, the attestation of documents, and all other forms of notarial acts to be executed by persons subject to military law.

"ART. 115. Appointment of reporters and interpreters: Under such regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe, the 'president' of a court-martial or military commission, or a court of inquiry shall have power to appoint a reporter, who shall record the proceedings of and testimony taken before such court or commission and may set down the same, in the first instance, in shorthand. Under like regulations the 'president' of a court-martial or military commission, or summary court, or court of inquiry may appoint an interpreter, who shall interpret for the court or commission.

"ART. 116. Powers of assistant judge advocates: An assistant judge advocate of a general court-martial shall be competent to perform any duty devolved by law, regulation, or the custom of the service upon the judge advocate of the court.

"ART. 117. Removal of civil suits: When any civil suit or criminal prosecution is commenced in any court of a State against any officer, soldier, or other person in the military service of the United States on account of any act done under color of his office or status, or in respect to which he claims any right, title, or authority under any law of the United States respecting the military forces thereof, or under the law of war, such suit or prosecution may at any time before the trial or final hearing thereof be removed for trial into the district court of the United States in the district where the same is pending in the manner prescribed in section 33 of the act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911, and the cause shall thereupon be entered on the docket of said district court and shall proceed therein as if the cause had been originally commenced in said district court and the same proceedings had been taken in such suit or prosecution in said district court as shall have been had therein in said State court prior to its removal, and said district court shall have full power to hear and determine said cause.

"ART. 118. Officers—Separation from service: No officer shall be discharged or dismissed from the service except by order of the President or by sentence of a general court-martial; and in time of peace no officer shall be dismissed except in pursuance of the sentence of a court-martial or in mitigation thereof, nor discharged except in pursuance of statutes now in force or which may hereafter be enacted; but the President may at any time drop from the rolls of the Army any officer who has been absent from duty three months without leave or who has been absent in confinement in a prison or penitentiary for three months after final conviction by a court of competent jurisdiction.

"ART. 119. Rank and precedence among regulars, militia, and volunteers: That in time of war or public danger, when two or more officers of the same grade are on duty in the same field, department or command, or of organizations thereof, the President may assign the command of the forces of such field, department, or command, or of any organization thereof, without regard to seniority of rank in the same grade. In the absence of such assignment by the President, officers of the same grade shall rank and have precedence in the following order, without regard to date of rank or commission as between officers of different classes, namely: First, officers of the Regular Army and officers of the Marine Corps detached for service with the Army by order of the President; second, officers of forces drafted or called into the service of the United States; and, third, officers of the volunteer forces: Provided, That officers of the Regular Army holding commissions in forces drafted or called into the service of the United States or in the volunteer forces shall rank and have precedence under said commissions as if they were commissions in the Regular Army; but the rank of officers of the Regular Army under commissions in the National Guard as such shall not, for the purposes of this article, be held to antedate the acceptance of such officers into the service of the United States under said commissions.

"ART. 120. Command when different corps or commands happen to join: When different corps or commands of the military forces of the United States happen to join or do duty together the officer highest in rank of the line of the Regular Army, Marine Corps, forces drafted or called into the service of the United States, or Volunteers, there on duty, shall, subject to the provisions of the last preceding article, command the whole and give orders for what is needful in the service, unless otherwise directed by the President.

"ART. 121. Complaints of wrongs: Any officer or soldier who believes himself wronged by his commanding officer, and, upon due application to such commander, is refused redress, may complain to the general commanding in the locality where the officer against whom the complaint is made is stationed. The general shall examine into said complaint and take proper measures for redressing the wrong complained of; and he shall, as soon as possible, transmit to the Department of War a true statement of such complaint, with the proceedings had thereon."

SEC. 4. The provisions of section 3 of this act shall take effect and be in force on and after the 1st day of January, 1917: Provided, That articles 4, 13, 14, 15, 29, 42, 47, 49, and 92 shall take effect immediately upon the approval of this act.

SEC. 5. That all offenses committed and all penalties, forfeitures, fines, or liabilities incurred prior to the taking effect of this act, under any law embraced in or modified, changed, or repealed by this act, may be prosecuted, punished, and enforced in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 6. All laws and parts of laws in so far as they are inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.
And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment 127: Provides for the payment of an allowance in the Ordnance Department, not exceeding $4 per day in lieu of subsistence to civilian employees of that department traveling on official business. And the House recedes.

Amendment 128: Authorizes the appointment by the President of John Q. A. Brett to the grade of first lieutenant in the Quartermaster Corps. And the House recedes.

Amendment 129: Provides for an appropriation of $30,000 for the replacement of a bridge across the Republican River near Fort Riley, Kans. And the House recedes.

Amendment 130: Provides for the appropriation of $25,000 for cleaning out old jetties in the French Broad River, N. C. And the Senate recedes.

Amendment 131: Provides courts-martial of officers, soldiers, and employees for use of Government vehicles for private purposes and the painting on all Government vehicles of the words "War Department. For official use only." And the Senate recedes.

Amendment 132: Provides that the President in time of war may assume control of any system or systems of transportation for the use of the Government. It also provides that the Secretary of War may, in time of war, secure the services of persons for the organization of the War Department and the operation of all that functions of said department. And the House receded with an amendment agreeing to the first provision, but cutting out the last provision of the amendment.

Amendment 133: Strikes from the House bill all of the language of that bill with regard to appropriations for the National Guard, and decreasing the appropriation made by the House. And the House recedes with an amendment restoring the language of the House bill and agreeing to the appropriations made by the Senate, except as to the appropriation for ranges for Field Artillery target practice, which was restored as it was in the House bill.

Amendment 134: Strikes out the language of the House providing for the establishment of indoor and outdoor rifle ranges, and inserts a provision of the same kind, and provides for the appointment of an officer of the Army or of the Marine Corps as director of civilian marksmanship, with the rank and pay of colonel of the Army. And the House recedes with an amendment striking out the provision for pay and rank of colonel and giving to the National Board of Rifle Practice the power fixing the regulations.

Amendment 135: Increases the appropriation $2,300,000 for the expense of maintaining camps for military instruction of civilians. And the Senate recedes.

Amendment 136: Provides for the payment of teams authorized to participate in the national rifle matches, and appropriates $80,000 for the purpose. And the House recedes.

Amendment 137: Appropriates $2,000,000 for the dependent families of soldiers in the military service of the United States. And the House recedes.

Amendment 138: Strikes out the House provision for a council of executive information and inserts another provision of the same character. And the House recedes with an amendment restoring the House provision with the exception of the name of the council, which is changed to read "A council of national defense."

Amendment 139: Provides for a revision of the Articles of War. And the House recedes with an amendment, amending in several instances the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment 140: Changes the law as to the age of enlistment of men in the Regular Army and the National Guard. And the Senate recedes.

The bill as it passed the Senate carried an appropriation of $313,970,447.10; as agreed to by the conferees, an appropriation of $267,596,530.10.

JAMES HAY.
S. H. DENT, JR.
JULIUS KAHN.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for one hour.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to consume any time and I call for a vote.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman was going to explain the matter.

Mr. HAY. I will do so if there is anything anybody wants explained.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia why a bill entitled—

An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917—should be reported out of conference with such an amendment as amendment No. 139, beginning on page 102 and ending on page 159 of the conference report—that is practically 56 pages—an amendment which has nothing whatever to do with appropriations for the Army, but is an elaborate and very intricate series of amendments to the Articles of War. The statement just read by the Clerk contains this elaborate explanation of the amendment:

Amendment 139: Provides for a revision of the Articles of War. And the House recedes with an amendment amending in several instances the amendment of the Senate.

From that statement, Mr. Speaker, no one could gather even the slightest idea of the character of the proposed amendments to the Articles of War, articles which are utterly distinct from the subject of appropriations for the Army. Members of the House can not be informed as to all that this amendment means. I would like to inquire of the gentleman why there was any necessity for that sort of an amendment to a bill, the title to which relates exclusively to appropriations?

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that the Articles of War passed the Senate some time ago. They were taken up by the Committee on Military Affairs and referred to a subcommittee. When the Army appropriation bill went to the Senate the Senate saw fit to put these Articles of War on this appropriation bill. The House conferees did not think that it was a proper place for them. But they were informed that, owing to conditions now obtaining in Mexico, it was absolutely necessary that those Articles of War should be adopted as soon as it could be done. Therefore, the House conferees, insisting on some changes which they think ought to be made and to which the Senate acceded, agreed to put the articles on this bill.

I will say to the gentleman the conference report sets out the Articles of War in full. In the statement I could not undertake to set out every change that has been made in them. And the reason given by the Senate for doing it, as I stated a moment ago, was that the old Articles of War did not contain provisions which pertained to conditions which exist now in Mexico. And for that reason the War Department insisted on having this done as soon as possible, and the House conferees acceded to that request.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. What was finally done with the Senate amendment appropriating the $2,000,000 for the families of the National Guardsmen?

Mr. HAY. That amendment was agreed to by the House conferees, providing, however, that the same relief should be given to families of Regular soldiers as long as the National Guard was kept in the service of the United States on the border.

Mr. MANN. The Senate amendment, as I recall it, was the same as the bill which passed the House?

Mr. HAY. With the exception that it provides for the Regular Army.

Mr. MANN. I did not recall. Was that in the Senate amendment?

Mr. HAY. That was in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. Now, in the amendment as agreed to the $2,000,000 may be used for care of families of National Guardsmen and also families of men in the Regular service as long as the National Guardsmen are at the front?

Mr. HAY. Yes, sir; that is the proposition.

Mr. MANN. Was any estimate made during all the time as to how much this will cost?

Mr. HAY. There was not.

Mr. MANN. Frankly, it seems to me that if much use was made of this provision the $2,000,000 would hardly carry the Army through until next December.

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman that a large number of men who had dependent families have been discharged. The War Department issued an order about a month ago authorizing the department commanders to discharge men who had dependent families. A good many of them have been discharged.

Mr. MANN. I know a number of cases from Chicago myself personally where men are married and have families dependent upon them, who are now at the front; men who have been undecided as to whether they would apply for a discharge under the circumstances or not, some of them absolutely dependent upon the salaries that they were receiving before they went into the service and their families dependent now upon aid from friends or relatives. I do not know what they will do. Of course, most of these men hesitate to apply for a discharge if there is going to be anything doing. They do not know how long they will be kept there.

Mr. HAY. I can not tell the gentleman how long they will be kept there.

Mr. MANN. I understand. Nobody knows how long they will be kept there, and I can not find out why they are kept there.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I understand now that while the National Guard is on duty on the border the Regular Army shall receive for their dependent relatives, within the terms of the agreement and after the National Guard ceases service on the border or until after they are discharged, similar pay?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, does that law apply to the present emergency or does it reach into the future, and the Regular Army without regard to what its size may be shall be provided for, and the National Guard, in the future, in 1 year, or 10 years, or any other period, shall be cared for permanently by this provision? Or is it for the present emergency?

Mr. HAY. I think it is permanent law.

Mr. CANNON. You think it is permanent law?

Mr. HAY. I do. I am just going to look at it, but my impression is it is permanent law.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is at the bottom of page 12 of the report.

Mr. HAY. I think it would only apply in case where the National Guard is drafted or ordered into the service of the United States, but it would apply in the future if the appropriation held out. Of course, if the appropriation does not hold out, then it rests with Congress to say whether they will appropriate anything more or not.

Mr. CANNON. Can they recover? Suppose no further appropriation is made, can the members of the National Guard and the Regular Army, when they are in service under conditions similar to those that now exist, before a draft—or must there be a draft—

Mr. HAY. I do not think this provides for pay for the men. It provides for the support of the family, and that provision must be made on the application of the family and not of the men.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. HAY. And they could only have this relief when the National Guard is ordered into the service or drafted into the service of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. When they are ordered into the service or drafted into the service?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And during the period of that service in the present emergency and in the future?

Mr. HAY. I think so. I do not see why it should not apply in the future.

Mr. CANNON. It would apply.

Mr. HAY. I think it fixes the policy.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. There was a Senate amendment to this Army appropriation bill making some specific appropriations for the establishment and maintenance of an aviation service in the National Guard. Will the chairman of the committee kindly say what is the result on that proposition under this conference report?

Mr. HAY. Under this bill $13,000,000 is appropriated for aviation purposes. I am informed by the War Department that $10,000,000 of that will be devoted to the development of aviation in the National Guard, and that they do not need any language other than that carried in the bill to enable them to devote that amount of money to that purpose.

Mr. McKENZIE rose.

Mr. HAY. Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE].

Mr. McKENZIE. I simply wish to ask the chairman whether or not it is his understanding that this section shall apply generally to the Regular Army, or whether it is confined to the members of the National Guard drafted into or enlisted in the Regular Army?

Mr. HAY. You mean the section about dependent families?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. HAY. You know that the National Guard can not be drafted into the Regular Army. The Regular Army is one thing and the National Guard is something else, and when it is drafted into the service of the United States it does not become a part of the Regular Army. But this provision provides that the families of enlisted men of the Regular Army can receive this aid so long as the National Guard remains drafted or ordered into the service of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. And that is permanent legislation?

Mr. HAY. I think so. That is my understanding.

Mr. McKENZIE. It seems to me that the language is a little confusing.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would not contend that this is permanent legislation?

Mr. HAY. I think so.

Mr. MANN. Here is what it says:

That the sum of $2,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe—

And so forth.

That is only an appropriation of $2,000,000, and that is all there is of it.

Mr. HAY. I stated that unless Congress chooses to appropriate, then, of course, there would be no appropriation.

Mr. MANN. There is no permanent legislation except an appropriation of $2,000,000 to be expended, and when that $2,000,000 is expended there is no further authorization of an appropriation?

Mr. HAY. No; there is no further authorization of an appropriation; but I say it seems to me to fix the policy.

Mr. MANN. Fixing a policy is one thing, but permanent legislation is another thing.

Mr. CANNON. Without further legislation, then, after the present emergency is over, or after the appropriation is expended, there would not be for service a claim under which the families of the National Guard or the Regular Army might recover against the Government?

Mr. HAY. No; but I say, in my judgment, it fixes the policy of Congress.

Mr. CANNON. But it would require—

Mr. HAY. It would require further legislation.

Mr. CANNON. After the $2,000,000 of appropriation is exhausted, then Congress would have to act by further enactment and appropriation?

Mr. HAY. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. Before an appropriation would be authorized?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Will this appropriation be available for the benefit of the families of the men, dating back from the time they were drafted into the service or ordered in?

Mr. HAY. I think so.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Is this increase in the conference report over the amount that passed the House for $85,000,000?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Can the gentleman give an idea of what proportion of that increase would go to the increase of pay to the officers of the Army or to increase the pay of numbers of the Army, as compared with this bill?

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that so far as the pay of officers is concerned the appropriation is the same as it was in the House bill. The Senate increased that appropriation by $1,400,000, but receded on it, so that the amount for pay of officers of the line of the Army is the same as in the House bill. The Senate increased the appropriation for officers of the National Guard, and that increase, that part of it, was accepted by the House, because these officers have been called into the service of the United States. They are down there on the border for a time, nobody knows for how long, and therefore the House conferees thought the money ought to be provided to pay them.

Mr. MONDELL. Does this conference report increase the number over that provided by the House?

Mr. HAY. No.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement.

Mr. HAY. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. KITCHIN. Two minutes.

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina two minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Some two weeks ago we had a gentleman's agreement that we would call up no important matters of legislation, including conference reports, without giving three days' notice, so that Members could be present, if there was an attempt to have a ye or nay vote or any contest over it. Now, it is evident that we will not have time to give any three days' notice, and, therefore, under the agreement there would be no roll call on this proposition, because the three days' notice has not been given. A great many Members on both sides, Republicans and Democrats, have left here, with the understanding that they will not be called back without having the three days' notice. In view of that fact, I would like to ask unanimous consent that any Member may have the privilege of extending his remarks in the RECORD on this conference report, stating his views and how he would have voted if he had had the opportunity.

I want to say that if I had the opportunity by a roll call, I would vote against this conference report, and I am sure that there are other Members here, and some who are absent, who would do the same. So I ask unanimous consent that any Member of the House may have the privilege of extending his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of this conference report.

Mr. WINGO. For how many days?

Mr. KITCHIN. Until the end of the session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that Members may have leave for five days—

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I will not ask to limit the time, for the reason that many Members will not get back within the limit. So I think it would be well for Members to have the leave until the end of the session. This morning I phoned to three or four offices of Members who are absent, and was informed that they would not be back until near the end of the session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair understands that the remarks are to be confined to this bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, if there is not to be a roll call or record vote on this bill, I wish to say that I am against it and shall vote against it. As it passed the House it was larger than I felt it ought to be, and I only voted for it then in a spirit of compromise. I wish to add this further thought: I have no doubt that the chairman of this committee has rendered the country a great service in holding down this bill. [Applause.] I wish my conscience would allow me to vote for it, but it will not, and I shall vote against it.

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I want to ask permission of the chairman of the committee to follow up the question asked by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] with reference to certain legislation that this bill carries. I would like to direct the attention of the gentleman to amendments 49, et sequentia, on page 24 of the bill. Amendment 49 promotes Col. James Jackson to be a brigadier general on the retired list; the net result being that Col. Jackson, or Gen. Jackson, as he will very soon be, will get some two or three thousand dollars more a year in the way of salary, and that is all there is to it. Amendment 50 also authorizes a promotion. It is evidently intended for the benefit of some specific Army officer. Who he is I do not know.

Mr. HAY. I can tell the gentleman.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do not wish to ask, because I am not concerned about the individual, but it has no other purpose, and can have none except to give a promotion by a special act. That same thing is true of amendments 51 and 53.

The purpose of amendment 52 is to put a Volunteer officer on the retired list as a Regular Army officer, and I congratulate the committee on not having agreed to that amendment, which the Senate attempted to put into this bill. As to the other amendments, they have no pressing necessity and relate merely to promotions and are special legislation of a very vicious type. I would inquire of the chairman what the necessity was to allow those amendments to be put on the House by the Senate in a general appropriation bill such as this?

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman from Alabama that as to the promotion of Col. Jackson, he is a Civil War man who is, as I am informed, 84 years of age, who has been in active service with the National Guard of one of the States and has been attached to that command in active service for a great many years. The Senate thought he ought to be given this promotion and insisted upon it; and as the House conferees can not get everything they ask for, the House yielded on that amendment.

On amendment 50, where the officer is described and not named, that amendment was for the benefit of Col. Pope, who served 45 years in the Army on the active list, and lost his eyesight as a result of that service. The Senate also insisted on that amendment.

The other amendment provides for the promotion of four Civil War officers—Gen. Pennington, Gen. Ernst, Gen. Schwann, and Gen. Hains—all men over 80 years of age, who served during the Civil War, whose services were very distinguished, and who served many years after the Civil War. The Senate insisted on those amendments, and the House conferees yielded because they believed it was better to do so than to bring in an incomplete report.

Mr. MAPES. May I ask a question in that connection?

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. Why were amendments 49, 50, and 51 agreed to and amendment 52, which provided for Gen. Whitaker, not agreed to?

Mr. HAY. Because we did not think Col. Whitaker made out a good case.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the chairman yield for just one question? Was Brig. Gen. John L. Clem included in the promotions?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. He is promoted as a major general?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I thought it might not be improper at this time to suggest that that was rather contrary to the policy that the House had adopted heretofore in that same individual case.

Mr. HAY. I call the attention of the gentleman from Vermont, however, to the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs have reported that bill.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I understand that. I am speaking of the policy of the House.

Mr. MAPES. Referring again to amendment 52, does the chairman of the committee mean that the Senate conferees did not insist as strongly on amendment 52 as they did on the others, and that that was the reason it was allowed to go out? I understood the chairman to say that one reason why amendment 52 was allowed to go out was that it was not insisted on as strongly as the others.

Mr. HAY. I did not mean that.

Mr. MAPES. Was it a matter of the Senate conferees?

Mr. HAY. I say that after a conference on that particular case the Senate receded. I now yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] if the appropriations on pages 13 and 14 for pay of officers of the National Guard and pay of enlisted men of all grades of the National Guard are available for the pay of National Guardsmen of all classes?

Mr. HAY. They are of all classes of the National Guard who have been called into the service of the United States, and of those who train under the law which we passed in June last.

Mr. MONDELL. These appropriations are only available for those called by the President, who have been drafted into the Federal service?

Mr. HAY. They have not been drafted.

Mr. MONDELL. Without regard to whether they have been drafted or not, it applies to all of the militia organizations that have been called to the colors?

Mr. HAY. Called into the service of the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. I notice that the amounts carried in the bill as agreed to for officers and men aggregate about $17,000,000 in excess of the amount carried in the bill as it passed the House. Can the gentleman inform us on what basis of numbers and length of service the increase of $17,000,000 was made?

Mr. HAY. The gentleman will observe that there is no appropriation for length of service of officers and men of the National Guard. The increase was made because about 100,000 guardsmen, as near as we can be informed, have been called into the service of the United States. We have no definite information as to how long they are to remain in that service.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman recall how long the sums appropriated, amounting in the aggregate to approximately $27,000,000, will pay 100,000 guardsmen?

Mr. HAY. About nine months.

Mr. MONDELL. So that the bill is drawn in anticipation of the possibility of the men who have been called remaining in the service nine months?

Mr. HAY. They have been in the service now nearly two months. They were called out June 18, 1916. I do not know how long they will be in the service.

Mr. MONDELL. No; the gentleman is not a prophet.

Mr. HAY. If they are recalled and sent back to their States, then this money will be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that; but the fact is that the sums appropriated in the bill would pay these men for about nine months, on the basis of 100,000 men?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Beginning with the time when they were called into the service of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me again?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Some few days ago I received a letter from a captain in the National Guard who has had 15 years of service under the State. In that letter he stated that when he was called for 9 or 10 days of service for maneuvers, if that is the proper term, he received longevity pay for those 9 or 10 days' service. He asked me whether, under the law, he would receive that longevity pay when he is under service with the National Guard, under the call of the President, or by draft, either or both; and if not, then he asked me if I would obtain the enactment of legislation that would give him and those similarly situated longevity pay while in the service of the United States. Will the gentleman from Virginia kindly inform me what the law provides?

Mr. HAY. As I understand it, when an officer is called out for training purposes he gets the pay of an Army officer, and therefore would get the longevity pay if he had sufficient length of service; but when he is called into the service of the United States under the draft act he goes in as a volunteer would go in. The law so provides, and the volunteer act does not provide for longevity pay for officers who have been serving in the militia. Nor does the act of June provide for longevity pay when they are called into the military service of the United States until in both cases they have served long enough in the service of the United States to entitle them to it. When he has been called into the service heretofore under the Dick Act he got the pay of a Regular Army officer. Now he gets his pay as provided for under the act of June 3, 1916, and under the volunteer law, so that there is no law by which he can get longevity pay for service with State troops.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman has given me the status. I may be indulged to say that I would have been very glad to vote for legislation in this bill which would provide that in such a case the man would receive longevity pay. Of course I shall not vote against this conference report in these closing days of the session, but I would have been glad to vote for legislation of that kind upon this bill, although on examination I find that such an amendment was not in conference and that the conferees are without jurisdiction to consider the same; or I would be very glad if it were possible to pass such a measure separately. It seems to me there are many reasons why longevity pay should be given in such cases. I also understand that it is not now possible and has not been possible to have such a bill considered for several weeks, as there has been no quorum of the Committee on Military Affairs or quorum of the House in Washington, and business in the House only proceeds because no one demands a quorum. I hope in the future legislation may be had that will give longevity pay to officers in the National Guard when in the service of the United States.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I notice the bill is quite comprehensive and has a good many closely related and some very distantly related parts. Remembering that the body at the other end of the Capitol made some effort in considering the bill to provide for the soldiers down on the border having the right to vote for Senators and Representatives if detained down there, I would ask if anything was accomplished or anything attempted toward that end by the conferees?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, the conferees could not accomplish or try to accomplish anything toward that end, because there was not anything in the bill, either put in by the Senate or by the House, looking to voting by National Guardsmen, and if we had attempted to do anything of that sort it would have made the report subject to a point of order, as the conferees are not authorized to consider something which neither House placed in the bill.

Mr. SLOAN. It would be subject to a point of order, but if there had been no objection to it, it would have gone through with all of the rest of it, would it not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa rose.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would ask the gentleman from Virginia what amount under the bill as it comes from the conferees would be expended for the manufacture or purchase of rifles?

Mr. HAY. Five million dollars, the same as it was in the House.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And that amount, I understand, is less than asked for by the department?

Mr. HAY. Well, I do not think so. I do not think the department asked that much, but when the bill was up in the House it occurred to me that if there was anything we needed it was a reserve of rifles, and I therefore offered an amendment in the House increasing the amount to $5,000,000. In the Senate, when the bill was reported to the Senate from the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, the amount was decreased to $2,500,000. On the floor of the Senate it was again put at $5,000,000, and, of course, remained in because it was not in dispute in conference.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield a little further? In that connection, in view of these inquiries I would like to ask the gentleman to yield me five minutes for some remarks in reference to the rifle equipment issued to the militia.

Mr. HAY. Very well. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a brief statement regarding Senate amendment 137 appropriating $2,000,000 for dependent families of men in the Army. This amendment covers dependent families of men in the National Guard and in the Regular Army, and applies to the Regular Army only so long as the men in the National Guard remain drafted in the Federal service. The War Department has issued an order absolutely exempting or rather providing for the discharge of every enlisted man in the National Guard who has a family dependent upon him, and it was stated on the floor when this proposition was under discussion before that there was no necessity of appropriation for dependent families of the men in the Regular Army because none of those men had families dependent upon them.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. When I can finish this statement. Assuming that the War Department will exercise good faith and will discharge every enlisted man in the National Guard who has a family dependent on him; assuming the statement heretofore made that there are no men in the Regular Army who have families dependent upon them, then this appropriation is for a purpose which does not exist. However unselfish and generous the motives of Members may be who advocate this large appropriation, it is after all an attempt to play politics with the National Guard. It is a sop to Cerberus. I am not opposed to legislation providing for dependent families of soldiers when a great national emergency shall demand it, but that emergency does not exist. If the time ever comes when we shall have to wage a great defensive war, testing our resources in men, in munitions, and in money, then we will have to make some such provision consistent with our ability, and try to do justice to the men who are serving their country, but I submit that emergency does not exist at this time, and this appropriation, if the facts which I have stated are correct, and I think they are, is unnecessary, is an expenditure of money which can not be warranted from any standpoint of a national emergency, and ought not to have been ingrafted upon this great bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DOWELL. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. I do.

Mr. DOWELL. Do we understand from the remarks of the gentleman that the War Department has discharged all persons in the service who have dependent families?

Mr. SMALL. An order has been made providing for the discharge of every man who has a family dependent upon him.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAY. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, may I just complete my question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 17 minutes remaining.

Mr. HAY. I yield one minute additional to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. SMALL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. Is not the order issued by the department an option for a person in the service that he may be relieved if he desires upon his request?

Mr. SMALL. Oh, of course, application has to be made through the usual military channels.

Mr. DOWELL. But does not the application have to be made by one in the service?

Mr. SMALL. Of course.

Mr. DOWELL. Then, as I understand it the department does not discharge or relieve those in the service who have dependent families, but if they remain in the service $2,000,000 is to be drawn upon for the dependent families.

Mr. SMALL. Yes; and I am not willing to assume that a man in the service has less regard for his family than the Government of the United States, and that is what the gentleman's question implies. If the family of a soldier is really dependent upon him for support and the soldier knows that he may upon application secure an honorable discharge and return to his home, he will make the application.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. LOBECK. I want to ask the gentleman one other question. If a member of the National Guard be relieved from service, does the department pay the expenses to his home?

Mr. SMALL. I understand that this bill provides for transportation of a man honorably discharged, and this would be an honorable discharge.

Mr. LOBECK. Upon his request?

Mr. SMALL. Upon his request.

Mr. LOBECK. My understanding is that a soldier has to ask for his discharge. Then, if his mother or dependents will get proof from the county commissioners or some one at home, or a city official, that she needs his services, then the War Department will discharge him, so that he has to have a full line of proof as to the necessity of the dependent family before this soldier can be relieved.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has again expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. SMALL. Just to answer this question, if I may have the attention of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK]. Proof, of course, has to be offered. Unofficially I am informed by the War Department that they will be liberal as to the proof which they will exact as to the condition of dependent families, but the complete answer to the question of the gentleman is this, that under this provision they will have to submit proof that they are dependent, probably proof under more rigid conditions than for the discharge of the enlisted man. So that if there is any humiliation to the soldier involved in applying for his discharge, the humiliation will be even greater in securing assistance from the Government under the terms of this appropriation. Besides, if there is any humiliation, it is suffered by the family. Under the existing order of the War Department, the soldier does the manly thing by returning to his family and providing for them. Under this appropriation they become mendicants under Government bounty.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, some time back I called the attention of the House to the fact that although it was sometimes charged that the militia could not shoot, as a matter of fact the militia teams in all contests had defeated the Regulars and Marines at every kind of shooting—at long distance, short distance, and rapid fire.

But the National Guard can not shoot without good rifles. We were told some time ago—at least it appeared in the hearings—that the Chief of Ordnance stated we had about 700,000 rifles, in good condition, ready to issue to the National Guard. As a matter of fact, we find that we are deficient in all kinds of equipment, and in my own State rifles which are quite inferior, owing to the fact that they have been used so much as to affect their efficiency, have been issued in considerable numbers to the National Guard. I have this information upon reliable authority, and I will give the names if any gentlemen of the House so desire. These rifles have been found by test to be practically worn out and not capable of accurate shooting.

And this is not the only kind of equipment as to which deficient material has been issued. In this connection I want to speak of the size of the underwear that was issued to the Iowa National Guard, it being of some unusual, extraordinary sizes, such as hardly any man could wear, so that I was informed the soldiers got up some sort of a mock parade and marched around with two men in one shirt. I do not know how the Quartermaster's Department, or whatever department is responsible for it, obtained such goods, but apparently there was fault in its selection.

There was also issued to the cavalry and other branches of the National Guard revolvers and pistols of different caliber, something that, of course, would cause the greatest confusion and trouble if they ever got into actual warfare.

Here is the sample of shoes [exhibiting] which were furnished for our Guardsmen. I would like to have my friend from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], who sits smiling at this time, put on a pair of them, march a few miles, and see how he would like them.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am from Chicago. I could not get them on. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They are not like the Regular Army shoe and not fitted for the purpose, being too heavy and too roughly made, although the leather is good and they would be durable. We should have a standard shoe.

I do not speak of these matters so much in criticism of the Quartermaster's Department or any other department, because in this particular case, not having had a mobilization for a great many years, I suppose it is inevitable that some deficiencies should be ascertained. What I do object to, however, is statements continually appearing in the newspapers here that the delays and the deficiencies in the equipment of the National Guard is owing partly to Congress and partly to the militia system, when neither is responsible for anything of the kind. Everyone in this House within the sound of my voice, and anyone at all informed on this subject, knows we make the appropriation for the Quartermaster's Department and the Ordnance Department and the other departments that buy these supplies and control the equipment, and that the buying of these supplies is entirely in the hands of the officers of the Regular Army. The method of obtaining equipment would be just the same, no matter how additions were made to our Army. The complaint, if any, should not be of the militia system but of department methods.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield five minutes to me?

Mr. HAY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want only about two minutes to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HAY. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin as soon as the gentleman from Illinois finishes.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman now.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether amendment 139, when enacted into law, will exempt from the Articles of War any person or persons who now are amenable to existing law?

Mr. HAY. Yes; it will exempt retired Army officers and retired enlisted men.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How long have they been under the provisions of existing law?

Mr. HAY. Fifty-five years.

Now, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. DOWELL. I desire to ask the gentleman a question before the gentleman from Illinois starts. I understand that this is all the time—

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; we will extend the time if anybody wants more time.

Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the conference report. I would vote for it with even more pleasure if it carried more money. I have not yet changed my opinion as to the possible dangers of the future. I see once in a while some one's rosy view about an early settlement of the European war, and I hope that such views may be correct and that peace may come soon. I can not see how either side of the controversy in Europe can voluntarily yield. I think that the war will be prolonged, and the longer it goes on the more determined each side is that it will not be overcome, the more each side will resort to various devices involving neutral nations. And when the time comes when one side or the other over there thinks perhaps it can see defeat in the future, that side will exert every power at its command to drag other nations into the war. No reader of history can doubt such a conclusion.

When the war broke out in Europe, as I then said on the floor of the House, I set my face and mind with determination that, so far as I had any influence, this country would keep out of the war and maintain peace with both sides. [Applause.] And while I hope that we will be able to do that, the wise thing is to recognize the possibility of our becoming involved, and to at least have a small supply of ammunition on hand. I think we ought to be, more widely than we are, training some soldiers. We can arm and train without enormous expense, but if we fail to arm and train and the trouble comes, we can not get out of it without enormous expense, such as no one will now dream of.

That is for the European situation. I do not know what will happen in Mexico. I was very much surprised to read—I think in the morning paper—a statement said to have been made by Mr. Carl Vrooman, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, who, the article stated, was to be in charge of the speakers' bureau at the Democratic headquarters in Chicago, giving as the reason why we had not intervened in Mexico that there were 400,000 Japanese in Mexico, and that we were afraid to get into war. I do not want war with Mexico. I do not want war with Japan. But God knows I do not want to keep out of war merely because I am afraid. [Applause on the Republican side.] And if it be true—which I do not believe—that there are 400,000 Japanese in Mexico for the purpose of engaging in war with the United States, if there are 4,000 Japanese there for that purpose, we ought to make a larger Army appropriation bill than we have now. [Applause on the Republican side.] The United States can afford to maintain peace. It can afford to use moral suasion. It can afford to extend the sphere of its influence, through trade and pacific influence. But it can not afford to fail to prepare for war because it is afraid to fight. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 9.

So the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

BILLS OF LADING IN INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the unfinished business. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 19) relating to bills of lading in interstate and foreign commerce.

BRIDGE BILLS.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire, before taking up that bill, to pass two or three bridge bills, unless I can get recognition on the next day.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that the gentleman ask unanimous consent to lay aside the bill-of-lading bill temporarily. It will take only four or five minutes to dispose of these other bills.

Mr. ADAMSON. Unless I can get assurance of recognition on the next day—

The SPEAKER. There is not anybody who can give you the assurance.

Mr. ADAMSON. I can only ask unanimous consent to lay aside the business temporarily.

The SPEAKER. The easy way is to lay this bill aside and take up bridge bills.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is what I am asking.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not know what the bridge bills are.

Mr. MANN. They are three very simple bridge bills.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How many did the gentleman say there are?

Mr. ADAMSON. Three. One is for a bridge over the Savannah River, one is for a bridge over the Colorado River, and the other is for a bridge over the Spanish River in Alabama.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can call them up anyway after he gets through with this other bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is so, Mr. Speaker; but I wanted to know what they were, anyway.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. What is the first one?

BRIDGE ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER.

Mr. ADAMSON. The first one is Calendar No. 361, House bill 16995, granting the consent of Congress to A. N. Alford to construct a bridge across the Savannah River.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to A. N. Alford, of Georgia, and his successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Savannah River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Browns Ferry between mouth of Lightwood Log Creek and one-half mile south of Crafts Ferry, in the county of Hart, State of Georgia, on the west, and the county of Anderson, State of South Carolina, on the east, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Georgia what report the War Department has made upon this?

Mr. ADAMSON. A favorable report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS COLORADO RIVER, CAL. AND ARIZ.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the next is Calendar No. 362, House bill 16914, permitting the Needles & Oatman Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Colorado River between the States of California and Arizona.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Needles & Oatman Bridge Co., and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Colorado River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the city of Needles, San Bernardino County, State of California, about 10 miles north of the existing bridge of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. in that vicinity, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, has this bill received a favorable report from the War Department?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes. We never report such a bill without a favorable recommendation from the War Department.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia it will not be long before all of the navigable streams and all the rivers that can by any possibility be canalized for navigable purposes will be crossed by bridges, and it is of very great importance that care be exercised in the permits granted for the construction of these bridges. In my own State we have some streams that are navigable, but bridges were constructed so near to the water by what is called a "draw" that nobody now wants to put in a boat. In other words, navigation has been practically destroyed by the character of the bridges that have been erected.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I am glad the gentleman is helping me. I am glad to have his cooperation. I am going to see about those bridges in his State. I want to see that the streams are made navigable and kept navigable, and that the bridges crossing every river are passable bridges. Our duty here is to see that it is done in accordance with the law, and that the bridges which are placed over navigable streams are such as can be crossed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS SPANISH RIVER, ALA.

Mr. ADAMSON. The next bill is S. 6372.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the bill (S. 6372) to authorize the counties of Baldwin and Mobile, Ala., successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Spanish River at or near the junction of Raft and Spanish Rivers, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Baldwin and Mobile, in the State of Alabama, successors and assigns, be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and all approaches thereto across the Spanish River at or near the junction of Raft and Spanish Rivers, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting after the word "Alabama" in line 4, the word "their."

Mr. ADAMSON. I think the committee ordered that amendment but by inadvertence it was not included in the report, and I intended to offer it myself. The minutes of the committee will show that it was ordered. I sent up my copy of the bill to the Clerk, and did not have it before me.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "Alabama" insert the word "their."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend by inserting after the word "and," in the same line, the word "they."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "and" insert the word "they."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out, in line 5, the word "all."

Mr. ADAMSON. In what connection is that?

Mr. MANN. It says "all approaches."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, at the end of the line, strike out the word "all."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent to amend the title by inserting, after the word "Alabama," the word "their."

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the three votes by which the three bills were passed was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL FRIDAY NEXT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Friday. The idea is to try to get away at 4 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Friday. Is there objection? There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one hour on the subject of the eight-hour day when the House meets on Friday. I will say that it was partly due to unavoidable reason that I was unable to deliver the address yesterday. I was somewhat indisposed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that next Friday, after the reading of the Journal and the cleaning up of business on the Speaker's table, he be permitted to address the House for not to exceed one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would inquire of the gentleman if he would not be willing to take an hour on some later day? Next Friday is the day set apart for the consideration of the Private Calendar, and there are a great number of bills that Members desire to have considered.

Mr. MANN. That action was taken by unanimous consent yesterday or the day before.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I will say that I do not want to interfere with any previous action, or any important business. I am perfectly willing to take my hour after that business is concluded, if the time for adjournment has not arrived.

Mr. MANN. I think if the gentleman will ask unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock on Friday he may address the House for one hour there will be no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I want to make it clear that it is not my intention to interfere with any previous action, or any important legislation. I am willing to take the time beginning at 4 o'clock on Friday, or sooner if the business is concluded before that time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that on Friday he be permitted, at 4 o'clock, or sooner if the consideration of the Private Calendar is concluded, to address the House not to exceed one hour on the subject of the eight-hour day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 14868. An act to accept the cession by the State of Oregon of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Crater Lake National Park, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6180. An act for the relief of Lillie B. Randell;

H. R. 10546. An act for the relief of the Illinois Central Railroad Co., and for other purposes;

H. R. 10052. An act to reimburse J. T. Nance;

H. R. 6758. An act for the relief of the legal heirs of Hector M. McDonald, deceased;

H. R. 12248. An act for the relief of the estate of Mary H. S. Robertson, deceased;

H. R. 14952. An act for the relief of Mrs. John A. Fox;

H. R. 16912. An act granting the consent of Congress to Trumbull County, Ohio, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio;

H. R. 12123. An act to appropriate money to build and maintain roads on the Spokane Indian Reservation;

H. R. 8630. An act for the relief of the Farmer's State Bank of Eureka, Woodford County, Ill.;

H. R. 8200. An act for the relief of M. E. Sitters;

H. R. 8141. An act for the relief of the dependent widow of Patrick Curran, civilian employee of the Government, who was killed while in the discharge of his duties at the United States naval magazine at Iona Island, N. Y.;

H. R. 7419. An act granting a patent to a certain strip of land to Elisha A. Crandall;

H. R. 7396. An act for the relief of Hiram P. Geaslin;

H. R. 7062. An act for the relief of Erskine R. Hayes;

H. R. 5453. An act for the relief of the State board of harbor commissioners of the State of California; and

H. R. 2555. An act for the relief of the Minnesota & Ontario Power Co.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 1159. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the use of the Coos Head Military Reservation, in the State of Oregon, to the cities of Marshfield and North Bend, Oreg., both being municipal corporations, for park purposes; and

S. 6308. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease, for production of oil and gas, ceded lands of the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation, in the State of Wyoming.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 143. Joint resolution granting permission for the erection of a monument in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va., to the memory and in honor of the members of the various orders of sisters who gave their services as nurses on battle fields, in hospitals, and on floating hospitals during the Civil War; to the Committee on the Library.

BILLS OF LADING.

Mr. ADAMSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I call up the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 19) relating to bills of lading in interstate and foreign commerce.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been read.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, unless some gentleman has an amendment to offer, I ask that all the amendments be voted upon in gross.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The other day I said I was not willing to have all the amendments voted on in gross, but I should like to aid the gentleman by having all voted on in gross, except the amendments to sections 20 and 21.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. The vote will be taken on all amendments except those to sections 20 and 21. The Clerk will report all the amendments except those to sections 20 and 21.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "act" strike out the period and insert the words "unless upon its face and in writing agreed to by the shipper."

Page 4, line 5, strike out the word "An" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Possession of the bill of lading and an."

Page 7, line 5, after the word "loss" insert a comma and the word "theft."

Page 7, line 10, strike out the semicolon after the word "outstanding," insert a period, and capitalize the letter "t" in the word "The."

Page 7, line 11, after the word "fees" insert a colon in place of the period and add the words: "Provided, A voluntary indemnifying bond without order of court shall be binding on the parties thereto."

Page 11, line 16, strike out the words "the issuing of bills of lading" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the receiving of goods and issuing bills of lading therefor for transportation in commerce among the several States and with foreign nations."

Page 11, line 20, strike out the words "the consignee named in a straight bill," and insert in lieu thereof the words "the owner of goods covered by a straight bill subject to existing right of stoppage in transitu."

Page 12, line 21, strike out the word "no," and insert in lieu thereof "a."

Page 12, line 21, strike out the word "except"; same page and line, after the word "for" insert the word "all."

Page 12, line 25, after the word "bill" insert the words "and all other charges incurred in transportation and delivery."

Page 14, line 4, after the word "negotiated" insert the words "free from existing equities."

Page 18, line 14, after the word "lading" insert the words "purporting to represent goods received for shipment among the several States or with foreign nations."

Strike out section 42.

Page 19, line 7, strike out as follows: "'Owner' does not include mortgagee or pledgee."

Page 20, lines 15, 16, and 17, strike out as follows: "Second. A thing is done 'in good faith' within the meaning of this act when it is in fact done honestly, whether it be done negligently or not."

Renumber section 43 to be section 42, section 44 to be section 43, section 45 to be section 44, section 46 to be section 45.

The SPEAKER. The question is on all the amendments except those to sections 20 and 21.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the amendments to section 20.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, lines 10, 11, and 12, after the word "him," in line 10, insert the words "or in case of bulk freight and freight not concealed by packages the description made by him."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] is to the next section.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I have an amendment to section 20, and then an amendment to the amendment to section 21. I should be obliged if the committee amendment to section 20 could be put and agreed to—I shall vote for it—and when that is agreed to I shall offer my amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment to section 20.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to section 20, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 9, line 12, after the words "bulk freight," insert the words "upon written request of the shipper and payment by the shipper of reasonable charges therefor."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in sympathy with the purposes of this bill. It is founded upon the uniform bill-of-lading bill recommended by the American Bar Association, which has been adopted by many States. It is a great pity that we could not adopt it in its exact words, but new times made new problems. That bill says to every carrier, "You may issue two sets of bills of lading, one a straight bill saying, for instance, 'I have received so many bales of cotton weighing so much,' and the other a bill which simply says, 'I have received a carload of goods said to contain so many bales of cotton of such and such weight,' thus relieving itself of responsibility." The banks want to lend on the cotton and the shipper wants to get money on the cotton, and, therefore, they want the first sort of bill of lading; but as we know perfectly well a great many shipments do not necessitate that sort of a bill of lading. When you or I bring down a carload of household goods from home, the carload includes horses and furniture and harness and looking-glasses and this, that, and the other—every kind of thing that is put in the car—and the load pays a cheap rate because the railroads simply put in whatever is furnished them and we ask no warranty, and take out whatever they have loaded when the car gets here.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I would like not to be interrupted, unless the gentleman can grant me some more time. I have only five minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have not control of the time, but I would not object to an extension.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Very well.

Mr. ADAMSON. I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that his own personal case is not appropriate, because this is a case where the carrier himself loads the goods.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, but this is a case where the carrier loads the goods. All I do is to send the goods to the station, and the carrier loads them. I employ a man to carry the goods to the station, and that is all; but under section 20 as it stands every carrier would have to not only weigh the goods but to examine them and give a bill of lading stating the exact kind and quantity of the goods, and the carrier would have to charge twice as much as such a carload would pay ordinarily. All I seek to do by my amendment is to provide that if a man wishes to have careful inspection made of the amount of goods and their quality then he shall pay to have it made. Such weighing and inspection must be done by experienced men. I will give you an example. My family happens to come from a place in New Jersey—Perth Amboy—where they load clay. Those clays all look alike to the ordinary man, except that some are white, some black, some brown, and some gray; but every one of them is called by a different name in the trade. Fire clay is or was worth $5 a ton, while ordinary clay is shipped that is not worth over 25 cents a ton. If the law requires the station agent employed at a given place, perhaps where clay is mined, over there on Cheesequake Creek—if the law asks any countryman who is at the station to certify that there are so many thousand tons of fire clay in the train and he gives that certificate, then this law makes the railroad responsible. As a rule shippers do not want to borrow money on the clay; it simply goes to the factory, and there is no need of having any expert to determine kind and quantity. But if the shipper says he wants to borrow on the goods he should say so to the railroad and also be willing to pay reasonable charges, and then he should have a "straight bill of lading." In this case the shipper can say, "I am ready to pay a reasonable charge to count up the amount of that clay and what kind it is," and he is given practically a certified check for the goods.

If Congress does not make this provision that the railroad shall be paid where such a warranty is required and necessary, it will raise the rates of freight all over the United States, because it takes time to weigh and it takes experience and time to investigate and certify. It takes a first-class man who can be trusted at your station to give warranties as to the kind of goods on board the car, and it is not unfair to say to the man who is shipping cotton from the South or grain from the West, "You can have a cheap rate of freight if you do not require a warranty, but if you require a warranty of the character of this grain, or the character of this ore, or whatever it may be, and its quantity, if you require us to be sure it is on board, and to have a man there who can not be bribed, as some station agents have been, to give bills of lading when the goods were not there." And if Congress is going to require all this to be done, it is fair to say to the shipper that he must request it in writing and pay the reasonable cost before he can get that warranty. That is all this amendment asks, and, if the gentleman will pardon me, the committee amendment to the next section acknowledges that principle.

There are many cases where the shipper loads his own goods, and the committee amendment to section 2 says that the railroad company shall not be responsible for the goods when loaded by the shipper unless he has requested the railroad in writing to find out the kind and quantity and give a straight bill of lading, and then this must be done. We should only add to that request in writing so to do that it should be upon payment by the shipper of reasonable charges therefor. Whether the shipper loads or the carrier, there is no reason in either case why the extra work should be put upon the carrier without reasonable payment, and probably neither the banks nor the shippers would think this unfair. I want to say in justification of myself that this bill was brought up for final determination in committee on a day when I happened to be out of town, and I had no opportunity to be in the committee. I have no doubt I would have carried these amendments with the committee, because it is only fair. May I suggest to the House that if we want to make railroad business for the whole people of the United States very much more expensive, we should pass this bill as it is and insist that a warranty shall always be given, a counting or weighing had, and the quantity and quality ascertained, when it is not required, is not necessary, is not asked for, and is not paid for.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, it has always been the law since the dawn of civilization that a carrier has to account for whatever it receives. There are two practices which have grown up in our system of transportation. One is where the carrier himself loads the goods. He must account for all those goods and he ought to know what the goods are upon which he issues a bill of lading. There might be a lawsuit had, and he ought to determine what he is receiving. This section deals with the case where the carrier loads the goods himself and weighs or counts it and bases the freight rate on the weight. The proposition here is to make somebody pay the railroad for attending to its own business. The next section, 21, is the one that deals with the case where a shipper loads the goods himself and we have some descriptive law as to what shall be done and as to how it shall be done in order that there may be certainty at the start as to what the railroad is accountable for there. I think this amendment ought to be voted down.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, for just a moment. In this section, 20, we deal with the case where the carrier himself loads the goods into the car. Now, but a very inconsequential amount of the total shipments are loaded by the carriers. The vast amount of freight is loaded by the shipper. This is particularly true of goods going under commodity rates and is true of all bulk freight, such as coal, ores, and grains of various kinds. Now, where, therefore, the carrier loads the goods, he desires to load them because, as a rule, they are in less-than-carload lots, and the experience is that the freight loaders of the carriers can load more expeditiously, more economically as to the space in the car, and more safely so far as the transportation of the goods is concerned. So that rather than have a shipper pay the carrier for this service, the carrier might well prefer to load the less-than-carload lots for the reasons I have stated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 6, yeas 25.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, strike out, beginning on line 15, all down to the end of the page and lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, on page 10, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 21. That when package freight or bulk freight is loaded by a shipper and the goods are described in a bill of lading merely by a statement of marks or labels upon them or upon packages containing them, or by a statement that the goods are said to be goods of a certain kind or quantity, or in a certain condition, or it is stated in the bill of lading that packages are said to contain goods of a certain kind or quantity or in a certain condition, or that the contents or condition of the contents of packages are unknown, or words of like purport are contained in the bill of lading, such statements, if true, shall not make liable the carrier issuing the bill of lading, although the goods are not of the kind or quantity or in the condition which the marks or labels upon them indicate, or of the kind or quantity or in the condition they were said to be by the consignor. The carrier may also by inserting in the bill of lading the words 'Shipper's weight, load, and count,' or other words of like purport indicate that the goods were loaded by the shipper and the description of them made by him; and if such statement be true, the carrier shall not be liable for damages caused by the improper loading or by the nonreceipt or by the misdescription of the goods described in the bill of lading: Provided, however, Where the shipper of bulk freight installs and maintains adequate facilities for weighing such freight, and the same are available to the carrier, then the carrier, upon written request of such shipper and when given a reasonable opportunity so to do, shall ascertain the kind and quantity of bulk freight within a reasonable time after such written request, and the carriers shall not in such cases insert in the bill of lading the words 'Shipper's weight,' or other words of like purport, and if so inserted contrary to the provisions of this section, said words shall be treated as null and void and as if not inserted therein."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 11, line 7, after the words "so to do," insert the words "and upon payment by the shipper of reasonable charges therefor."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, this section 21 is really quite reasonable in its terms. It provides that if the shipper loads his goods himself at his own plant that the carrier is not responsible for the goods put into the car unless the shipper has a scales there and makes a request in writing of the carrier so to do and gives reasonable opportunity, in which case the carrier shall send men there to determine the kind and quantity of the goods. And when they shall ascertain the kind and quantity of the bulk freight the carrier gives a straight bill of lading for it. Now, this is fair. It is quite right; but I want to point out this, that when the carrier has to send up, we will say, to an ore dump or to some particular small town in the country, and must send men to what we will call the cotton press or the ore dump, and they have to stay there and wait—for everybody knows that takes time—and when they must certify whether it is upland cotton or middling cotton, or whatever the brands are—I do not myself know the brands—when they must certify as to the kind and quantity, all I have to say is that if that is desired by the shipper and he puts that extra work upon the railroad company, upon its agents, this bill says that he ought, in writing, to request that the extra work be done, and he ought also to pay reasonable charges. I want only to make that point plain.

I am not quite certain whether the courts would not allow him to charge extra anyhow if he has had to do that extra work. But I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of presenting a question to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I would like to send to the Clerk's desk the following letter, to be read as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If I may say so here, this letter states the case I would like to lay before the chairman of the committee and before the House in detail.

Mr. ADAMSON. Let him print that letter in the Record and ask me a question.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. All right. I would like to ask the chairman if he is willing to define what the effect of this bill would be upon a situation something like this: Heretofore it has been the practice of some transportation systems having joint lake-and-rail or water-and-rail rates, or shipping conveniences, to transport grain, for instance, originating at a Lake port in bulk cargoes, with one general bill of lading, but resorting to what is known as split bills of lading when the cargo, having arrived at the rail port for transshipment, is distributed in carload lots or units, or lesser bulk, from one part of the country to another, depending upon market conditions or market transfers and transactions. I am asked, as will be shown in this letter, whether that practice of issuing split bills of lading in anticipation of the breaking up of bulk cargoes into a rail size of units for transportation will be lawful.

Mr. ADAMSON. I understand that there is a boat company which, with the railway company, makes a through line?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Either one of them can make their bill of lading under this bill. The fact that you change the vehicle in which it is hauled does not make any difference. If they issue a bill of lading for so many tons it will be a good bill of lading under this bill.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Of course, under the Panama Canal act this lake part has been divorced from the railroad management.

Mr. ADAMSON. I understood the gentleman to say, in answer to my question, that it was an extension of a rail line, and that together they made a through line.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They do now, for all practical shipping purposes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then they can not be divorced under the Panama act.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They were divorced. That does not affect the decision which may be looked for in this bill anyway. The point is that the rail end of this through line, if there is a joint through line—

Mr. ADAMSON. If one of them takes the other's freight and hauls it to destination, either one of them can issue a bill of lading.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And either one of them can split it into as many car units as there are.

Mr. ADAMSON. But I would doubt the banking operation on such a bill of lading.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I will insert herewith the letter to which I have referred:

RUTLAND RAILROAD,
Rutland, Vt., July 31, 1916.

Mr. E. W. LAWRENCE,
General Attorney.

DEAR SIR: Am inclosing communications addressed to me by Congressman GREENE under date July 27 and 28, together with copy of the so-called Pomerene bill-of-lading bill.

At the time we were operating the Rutland Transit Co.'s steamers it was our practice to issue so-called split bills of lading. Certain parcels of grain would be loaded into steamers and Chicago and lake line bill of lading given for the entire amount, say, 60,000 bushels. The owners of the grain, of course, desired to be in position to dispose of the same immediately after shipment, and the Rutland Railroad issued so-called bills of lading against the shipment as called for by original shipper.

As an illustration, in the case of 60,000 bushels corn received from steamer the owners might sell that day 10 carload lots of 1,000 bushels each, and the Rutland Railroad issue 10 bills of lading for the 10,000 bushels, each covering 1,000 bushels, dating the bills of lading Ogdensburg, N. Y., and noting thereon the steamer and date forwarded from Chicago. When the split bills of lading were handed shippers indorsement to that effect was made on the lake line bill of lading as a protection to us.

It was practically impossible for us to have secured any grain cargoes unless we were in position to issue bills of lading prior to the grain having been loaded into cars. The owners of the grain at Chicago naturally desired to sell the same quickly, and, in our judgment, the traffic would have ceased had we not issued bills of lading for carload lots prior to the time of loading into cars. By issuing bills of lading on carload lots the owners were able to make immediate sales, whereas otherwise more than a week's delay would occur after the grain left Chicago before bills of lading could have been gotten from Ogdensburg to Chicago.

This season, having disposed of the boats and leased the elevator at Ogdensburg to the Rialto Elevator Co., we found it necessary to continue issuing split bills of lading as in previous years, protecting ourselves by requiring shippers to bring their insurance policy to us and our agent stamp on same notification, as under:

"Bills of lading Nos. — have been issued by the Rutland Railroad on — bushels, valued at $ —. In the event of loss or damage it is agreed that the Rutland Railroad Co. becomes party to the settlement under this policy as their interest may appear, as specified hereon."

Section 41 of the Pomerene bill would appear to put a stop to the methods we have heretofore employed, which, of course, are not and have not been fraudulent. As a matter of fact, this company stands back of the bill of lading it issues on ex-lake grain as above referred to.

With the above explanation, I trust you may get in touch with Congressman GREENE and have the bill amended so that we can continue the practice of issuing split bills of lading on grain, referred to, which is of considerable importance to us in the conduct of this traffic.

Yours, truly,

GEO. CASSIDY,
General Freight Agent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] withdraw their pro forma amendments. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] said that he wanted to offer an amendment to section 9.

Mr. ADAMSON. That was to line 9, section 20. He did that.

The SPEAKER. The committee amendment was voted on and carried.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is all right, then.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, before calling up House bill 13718 I desire to call the Speaker's attention to the fact that there is a Senate bill of the same import on the Speaker's table, and I ask that that bill be laid before the House. I do not remember the number of the Senate bill. The Clerk has it.

Mr. MANN. The Senate bill is numbered 5202.

The SPEAKER. It turns out that the bill was referred to the committee, and it has not been sent back.

Mr. ADAMSON. The Clerk tried to send it to the committee yesterday after the action of the House, and I sent it back to the file clerk.

The SPEAKER. Why did the gentleman send it to the file clerk?

Mr. ADAMSON. He sent it to me, and I questioned his right to do it.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Georgia another bill that he wishes to call up?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. ADAMSON. I want to make this request, Mr. Speaker: I have had one hour in each of two days. That does not constitute two days' business. I want to get the consent of the House that I can call up bills at another time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can request it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to call up two or three other bills when I can. I do not want to lose Calendar Wednesday on two or three hours.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia has passed more bills on these two days, owing to the great leniency of gentlemen who are here and the absence of those who are absent, than we usually pass in three days, and I shall have to object. There are other committees.

Mr. ADAMSON. I acknowledge the grace and affability of my friends in the House, and I am going to ask that I may have unanimous consent on a future day to get up some of these bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better ask it now.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will withhold that for a moment, I want to say that I have not succeeded in calling up that bill from the Speaker's table yet.

The SPEAKER. It is not on the Speaker's table.

REQUEST FOR LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a synopsis of a conversation which took place in my office regarding the administration. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. KETTNER] asks unanimous consent to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a synopsis of a conversation concerning the administration, which took place in his office.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, I made the point of order that there is no quorum present. I understood myself to make that point.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn. There is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order previously made, until Friday, August 11, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting estimates of appropriations required by the War Department to complete the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and to remain available until June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 1322), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FLOOD: A bill (H. R. 17366) to authorize the seizure, detention, and condemnation of arms and munitions of war in course of exportation or designed to be exported or used in violation of the laws of the United States, together with the vessels or vehicles in which the same are contained; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17367) to authorize the President to employ the land and naval forces of the United States to enforce compliance with its obligation relating to neutrality; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17368) to regulate and restrain the conduct and movements of interned soldiers and sailors of belligerent nations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17369) to regulate and safeguard the issuance of passports, and to prevent and punish the fraudulent obtaining, transfer, use, alteration, or forgery thereof; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17370) to empower the President to better enforce and maintain the neutrality of the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17371) to restrict aliens, other than diplomatic or consular officers or attachés, from acting in the United States as the agent of a foreign Government without prior notification to and consent of the Government of the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17372) to prevent and punish conspiracy to injure or destroy property situated within and belonging to a foreign Government with which the United States are at peace, or of any subdivision or municipality thereof; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17373) to amend section 13 of the act "To codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17374) to prevent and punish the impersonation of officials of foreign Governments duly accredited to the Government of the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: A bill (H. R. 17375) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved June 17, 1910; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. FLOOD: A bill (H. R. 17376) to provide for the issuance of search warrants and the seizure and detention of property thereunder, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17377) to prohibit and punish the willful making of untrue statements under oath to influence the acts or conduct of a foreign Government, or to defeat any measure of the Government of the United States in a dispute or controversy with any foreign nation; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17378) to require sworn statements, in addition to the manifests and clearances required by existing law, by masters of all vessels leaving the jurisdiction of the United States, and by all owners and shippers of cargoes thereon, during a war in which the United States are a neutral nation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17379) to authorize the collector of customs, or other officers duly empowered by the President, during time of war between foreign nations to inspect private vessels within the jurisdiction of the United States for the purpose of detecting any use or attempted use of such vessel in violation of the law of nations or of the treaties or statute law of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HARRISON: A bill (H. R. 17380) for the establishment of Gulfport, Miss., as a port of entry and delivery for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HAYDEN: A bill (H. R. 17381) to establish game sanctuaries in national forests, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BELL: Resolution (H. Res. 344) providing for the consideration of S. 509; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. TAGUE: Resolution (H. Res. 345) for the appointment of a committee to investigate the delay in delivery of certain cablegrams; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 17382) granting a pension to Elizabeth Jenkins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BEALES: A bill (H. R. 17383) to correct the military record of Adam R. Bollinger; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 17384) granting a pension to Julia Casey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17385) granting a pension to Jessie Rowland; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17386) granting an increase of pension to Robert Harper; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17387) granting an increase of pension to George Claxton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GARDNER: A bill (H. R. 17388) granting a pension to Michael W. Murphy; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAYDEN: A bill (H. R. 17389) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Margaret E. B. Thompson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE: A bill (H. R. 17390) granting an increase of pension to Julia P. Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEVER: A bill (H. R. 17391) granting an increase of pension to Henry O. Ayers; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STINESS: A bill (H. R. 17392) granting an increase of pension to Charles G. Hendrick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAGGART: A bill (H. R. 17393) for the relief of the heirs of David G. Stockwell; to the Committee on War Claims;

Also, a bill (H. R. 17394) granting an increase of pension to Clarke Dodge; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WASON: A bill (H. R. 17395) granting an increase of pension to Andy Mullen; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Memorial of General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ADAMSON: Petition of sundry citizens of Newnan, Ga., urging support of Tillman bill providing that certain sum of money now held by the United States Government be paid to Confederate veterans; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of National League of Commission Merchants of the United States, relative to Pomerene bill-of-lading bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of T. G. Pownall, relative to drilling of guardsmen in their respective States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KINKAID: Petition of citizens of Alliance, Box Butte County, Nebr., favoring passage of naval bill as passed by the Senate; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 10, 1916.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the most sacred interests of millions of Thy creatures are constantly before us. We need the inspiration of Thy spirit that we may discharge well and faithfully the duties that have come to us. We pray that Thou wilt give to us wisdom, prudence, and justice, that our spirits may respond to every call of duty, that we may be glad to enter as coworkers together with God in the great work of leading the world to higher and better things. Guide us this day in the discharge of the sacred duties of this Senate. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Saturday, August 5, 1916, when, on request of Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16460) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 6372) to authorize the counties of Baldwin and Mobile, Ala., their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Spanish River at or near the junction of Raft and Spanish Rivers, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 19) relating to bills of lading in interstate and foreign commerce, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 16914. An act permitting the Needles & Oatman Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Colorado River between the States of California and Arizona; and

H. R. 16995. An act granting the consent of Congress to A. N. Alford to construct a bridge across the Savannah River.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 1159. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the use of the Coos Head Military Reservation, in the State of Oregon, to the cities of Marshfield and North Bend, Oreg., both being municipal corporations, for park purposes;

S. 6308. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease, for production of oil and gas, ceded lands of the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation, in the State of Wyoming;

H. R. 20. An act authorizing the county of Gunnison, Colo., to purchase certain public lands for public-park purposes;

H. R. 1777. An act for the relief of Frank J. Deutsch;

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I present certain communications recently received from citizens of Arkansas and elsewhere on the subject of the immigration bill. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BROTHERHOOD RAILWAY CARMEN OF AMERICA,
 OUACHITA LODGE, No. 88,
 El Dorado, Ark., August 6, 1916.

Senator JAMES P. CLARKE,
 Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have been instructed by Ouachita Lodge 88, B. R. C. of A., to write you asking to do all you can to have the immigration bill, H. R. 10384, pass the Senate during this session of Congress.
 Thanking you in advance, I am,
 Yours, truly,

R. M. MAUPIN,
 Recording Secretary.

BROTHERHOOD RAILWAY CARMEN OF AMERICA,
 ARGENTA LODGE, No. 423,
 Argenta, Ark., July 24, 1916.

Senator JAMES P. CLARKE,
 Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Am writing you to ask you to support the immigration bill which passed the House of Representatives March 30, 1916. I would consider it a favor if you would use your influence to pass the bill when it comes up before the Senate and would appreciate it if you would let me know if you will support the bill.
 Yours, truly,

A. F. RICE.

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
 LOCAL UNION No. 2773,
 Clarksville, Ark., July 23, 1916.

Senator JAMES P. CLARKE,
 United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

YOUR HONOR: Our Local 2773, U. M. W. of A., located at Jamestown, Ark., agreed unanimously for the adoption of the Burnett restriction bill of immigration. I am authorized by this local to write to your honor, to urge your influence for the action, to pass this bill at the present session and getting it to become a law.

In the agreeable hope to comply with my request, I am,
 Your humble servant,

HENRY PSCHIERER,
 Recording Secretary.

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS,
 Cotter, Ark., July 25, 1916.

Mr. JAMES P. CLARKE,
 Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The above organization is appealing to you again for your support in clearance bills (H. R. 16681 and S. 6550), the salary increase for safety inspectors (H. R. 15950; S. 3523), and last, the appointment of Mr. Frank McManamy, as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as we feel that a man with Mr. McManamy's experience will be a good addition to the commission. Thanking you for your past favors and support, I am,

 Very truly, yours,

J. E. HARRISON,
 Secretary and Treasurer Division No. 701, B. L. E.

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
 LOCAL UNION No. 2371,
 Ozark, Ark., July 28, 1916.

Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE,
 Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The immigration bill, now pending before Congress, is of vital importance to labor. Therefore we ask that you use every effort possible to have this bill passed at this session.
 With best wishes, we beg to remain,
 Yours, respectfully,

MACK BROWN,
 W. V. HOGOM,
 T. L. RESIMONT,
 Committee.

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
 LOCAL UNION No. 1315,
 Fort Smith, Ark., July 29, 1916.

DEAR SIR: I have been instructed by Local Union 1315 to write to you about the immigration bill (H. R. 10384). We received a letter from Sam Gompers, president of American Federation of Labor, advising the local union to take some action on it. Local Union 1315 is in favor of indorsing the immigration bill (H. R. 10384). The membership of local union is 140 members.

Yours, respectfully,
 [SEAL.]

F. G. PRYOR, President,
 TONEY STEIMETZ, Recording Secretary.

LOCAL FEDERATION OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES,
 MISSOURI PACIFIC SYSTEM,
 Little Rock, Ark., July 31, 1916.

Senator JAMES P. CLARKE,
 Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Little Rock Local Federation of Railway Trades urgently requests that you vote and use your influence for the passage of the immigration bill (H. R. 10384).
 Thanking you in advance for this favor, I remain,
 Yours, truly,

[SEAL.]

O. B. DAILEY, Secretary.

ALABAMA STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
 Birmingham, Ala., July 19, 1916.

Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE,
 United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: From authentic sources the information comes to us that it will only be a short while before Congress will adjourn, and that there are several very important matters pending that will be overlooked unless some immediate steps are taken to have them enacted into law.

Among the measures pending before your honorable body the one that is most important to all who labor is the Burnett immigration bill. This bill, as you know, passed the House by a very substantial majority some time ago, and the millions of working people of these United States feel that it is only fair and reasonable that you use every influence to have this bill enacted into law before the adjournment and without amendments.

As the official correspondent of the Alabama State Federation of Labor, which is affiliated and a part of the great American Federation of Labor, I urge you as a Member of the United States Senate to use your influence and vote for the Burnett immigration bill.

This bill has been indorsed unanimously by practically every State Federation of Labor in the United States, and at each of their respective conventions they have reaffirmed their position on this measure.

Trusting you will see that this matter is brought up and passed by the Senate before adjournment and that we may receive an early reply from you, we are,

Yours, most respectfully,

J. B. WOOD, Vice President,
 L. BOWEN, Secretary-Treasurer.

ARIZONA STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
 Phoenix, Ariz., July 18, 1916.

Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE,
 Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am instructed in behalf of the Arizona State Federation of Labor to ask you to use all honorable means to bring about the enactment at this session of Congress of the immigration bill, H. R. 10384.

We understand that the above bill has been passed by the lower House, and it is feared that it may not be acted upon by the Senate at the present session.

Anything that you may be able to do toward bringing action on this bill at the present session will be considered a great favor by the labor movement of this State.

Thanking you, and with best wishes, I beg to remain,
 Very respectfully, yours,

THOS. A. FRENCH,
 Secretary-Treasurer Arizona State Federation of Labor.

ARKANSAS STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
 Little Rock, Ark., July 17, 1916.

Senator JAMES P. CLARKE,
 United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CLARKE: Every now and then our organization has to apply to you for assistance in passing measures we are particularly anxious should become laws. Now it is the Burnett immigration bill, which has passed the House and which we are very anxious to see pass the Senate at this session. We are not so afraid of defeat by vote as we are that it will be carried over as has been done before.

Anything you can do to expedite the passage of this bill during the present session will certainly be appreciated not only by the members of the State federation of labor but by the Farmers State Union as well.

With personal regards, I am,
Sincerely, yours,

L. H. MOORE, Secretary-Treasurer.

LOUISIANA STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Shreveport, La., July 16, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We beg to address you in regard to the Burnett immigration bill now in the Senate.

We earnestly request you to use your influence to have same voted on at this session of Congress; also your vote and influence to have same passed by the Senate.

Trusting that you may see yourself clear and justified in granting us this request, we beg to remain,
Yours, most sincerely,

LOUISIANA STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
T. J. GREER, President.
ERNEST H. ZWALLY, Secretary-Treasurer.

MAINE STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY,
Pejepscot, Me., July 18, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
United States Senator from Arkansas,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am writing you at this time calling your attention to the immigration bill and urging you to give it your earnest consideration, with the end in view toward using your influence in seeing that action is taken on this bill by the Senate before the coming adjournment of Congress.

We believe that this bill should be passed by the Senate as it comes from the House, and we sincerely trust that you will see that it is immediately enacted as the law of our land.

We believe that restrictions should be passed in regard to immigration and are in favor of the immigration bill as it passed the House, and we hope the Senators will see the urgent necessity of action being taken upon this important bill now. I remain,

Very truly, yours,

H. B. BRAWN,
Secretary Maine State Federation of Labor.

MINNESOTA STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
July 26, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Minnesota State Federation of Labor, which comprises upward of 40,000 members in the State of Minnesota, are vitally interested in the immigration bill, H. R. 10384, which passed the House of Representatives March 30, 1916, and which is now before the Senate for action.

We are beginning to feel that the Senate is not disposed to pass this measure with the same unanimity as did the House of Representatives, but assure you that this bill is of vital interest to the working men and women of State and Nation, and we urge you as Senator that you do everything possible by both voice and vote in its passage at this session.

Trusting that you will hear the appeal of the workers of our country for this much-needed legislation, I am, in behalf of the working men and women of Minnesota,

Respectfully, yours,

GEO. W. LAWSON, Secretary.

MISSOURI STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Kansas City, Mo., July 15, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,

MY DEAR SENATOR: The Missouri State Federation of Labor earnestly requests you to do what you can to bring the Burnett immigration-restriction bill to a vote in the Senate before the adjournment of the present session.

Organized labor of the United States is very much interested in seeing this important bill disposed of at this time. Anything you can do in our behalf along this line will be highly appreciated by labor in the State of Missouri.

Yours, respectfully,

JOHN T. SMITH,
Secretary-Treasurer.

NEW JERSEY STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Newark, N. J., July 17, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: In the name of the New Jersey State Federation of Labor, I am writing you and respectfully request that you use your best efforts to bring the immigration bill, H. R. 10384, now before the United States Senate, to a vote, and to do all in your power to have same become a law. We insist that democracy can not be developed to its highest possible point while we encourage the admission of illiterates who destroy living standards of American labor and who refuse to become a part of our national life.

The literacy test provides that immigrants over 16 years must read at least 30 words in some language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish. Surely this is a fair proposition and should be advocated by every Senator.

In the name of the New Jersey State Federation of Labor, I therefore again urge upon you to do everything in your power to have this bill become a law at this session of Congress.

Hoping that you will comply with our request, and awaiting your reply, I am,

Respectfully, yours,

HENRY F. HILFERS,
Secretary New Jersey State Federation of Labor.

NEW YORK STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Utica, N. Y., July 20, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am again calling your attention to the importance of the provisions of the Burnett immigration-restriction bill to the workers of this country.

This law is necessary for the protection of the workers of this country against the influx of illiterate labor after the war which is now in progress in European countries.

Opponents of the measure presented no new arguments against this bill. True democracy can not be developed to its highest possible point while we encourage the admission of illiterates who destroy living standards of American labor and refuse to become a part of our national life.

The enactment of this law is demanded by every right of the American workman. The New York State Federation of Labor, representing 800,000 organized workers of the State of New York, where this great influx of labor will be felt, respectfully requests you to work and vote for the passage of this measure.

Respectfully,

EDWARD A. BATES,
Secretary-Treasurer
New York State Federation of Labor.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Harrisburg, Pa., July 14, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Our organization is deeply interested in the passage of the immigration bill now before the Senate.

In deference to this interest in the bill and by direction of the executive council of the federation, I am writing you to solicit your vote for the side of the affirmative. Organized labor throughout the country feels that this bill should be enacted into law as speedily as possible.

Thanking you for favorable action on our request, I am,
Very truly, yours,

C. F. QUINN, Secretary.

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF BOOKBINDERS,
Indianapolis, Ind., July 17, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am taking the liberty of writing you at this time to urge that you use your influence to have the Burnett immigration-restriction bill passed by this session of the Senate. As you know, the bill has already passed the House, and the membership of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders will certainly appreciate whatever effort you will make toward the passage of the above-mentioned bill at this session of Congress.

Respectfully, yours,

W. N. REDDICK,
Secretary-Treasurer
International Brotherhood of Bookbinders.

INTERNATIONAL UNION OF THE UNITED BREWERY
WORKMEN OF AMERICA,
Cincinnati, Ohio, August 2, 1916.

HON. JAS. P. CLARKE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On March 30 the House of Representatives passed the Burnett immigration-restriction bill by a vote of 307 to 87, which bill has so far failed to pass the Senate.

Within the last few months every public official, including the President of the United States, has made urgent pleas for true Americanism. The constitution of our international organization provides that an applicant for membership must be in possession of his first citizenship papers, and must qualify as a citizen within the time limit allowed by the naturalization law. This provision in our constitution is rigidly enforced by an examination of membership on the 1st of October each year.

Under our present naturalization law it is very difficult for a fairly well-educated man to become a qualified citizen, and how is this possible if we admit into the United States men who are unable to read or write 30 words in their own language. These men can not be educated to become American citizens in the true sense of the word, and therefore should be restricted from coming into the country to be made the prey of unscrupulous corporations.

We earnestly urge you to insist upon the bill being reported out of committee and help the passage of same during this session of Congress. Thanking you for your assistance in the matter, I remain,

Respectfully, yours,

JOSEPH PROEBSTLE,
International Secretary.

AMALGAMATED MEAT CUTTERS AND BUTCHER
WORKMEN OF NORTH AMERICA,
Syracuse, N. Y., July 17, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Acting under instructions of the international organization of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, which I have the honor to represent as its secretary-treasurer, and which is composed of 56,000 members located throughout the various States of the Union, we are urgently requesting that you vote for and use your influence in aiding in passing the Burnett immigration bill with the literacy test included.

Our organization feels very deeply the necessity of the enactment of that bill into law, not only as a protection for Americans but for the protection of those who are lured here under false pretenses and are exploited upon their arrival, owing to their lack of education.

Hoping you will see your way clear to comply with the request of our organization, and with best wishes, we are,

Fraternally, yours,

HENRY D. CALL,
Secretary-Treasurer.

CIGAR MAKERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION OF AMERICA,
Chicago, Ill., July 18, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In behalf of the Cigar Makers' International Union, representing over 50,000 people, I earnestly request you to support and vote for the immigration bill at this session of the Congress.

Respectfully, yours,

G. W. PERKINS,
International President.

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF STATIONARY FIREMEN,
Omaha, Neb., July 15, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am writing you on behalf of our international organization, which has local unions in nearly every city in the United States, to ask you to support the Burnett immigration bill when it comes before the Senate. I also kindly ask that you use your influence to have it passed at an early date.

Thanking you in advance for the favor we are asking of you to support this bill, we remain,

Very truly, yours,

C. L. SHAMP,
International Secretary-Treasurer.

THE GRANITE CUTTERS' INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA,
Quincy, Mass., July 18, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: We are very much interested in the passage of the immigration bill at the present session of Congress. We are as much interested in the immediate passage of the bill as we are in favor of the retention therein of the literacy test. The bill without this provision would be shorn of its real value, and we are glad to know that a large majority in the Senate stands with us in favor of this qualification in the bill, as well as of the bill itself; but what we are writing about at the present time is to ask your influence and assistance in a concerted effort to bring up and pass the bill at the present session of Congress.

A rumor, perhaps unjustified, is in circulation that there are Senators, both Democrats and Republicans, who are opposed to the consideration of the bill at the present time, and which idea looks to us to be very unfair. There is nothing so dilatory as a pledge of legislation after election.

With other citizens of our great country, we have waited long for an approved immigration act, and we believe that the present bill will measure up to that requirement. We therefore at this time and in this way insist, in as far as interested citizens can insist, that the bill be called up and passed before the present session adjourns.

We hope you are with us in this worthy purpose, and it will be gratifying, indeed, to know from you, either by reply or by your action in the Senate, that you have listened to our earnest appeal for the passage of such a needy and important piece of constructive legislation.

Yours, respectfully,

JAMES DUNCAN,
International President.

INTERNATIONAL HOD CARRIERS' BUILDING AND COMMON LABORERS' UNION OF AMERICA,
Albany, N. Y., July 18, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
Senator, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: In the name of the majority of the members of this union, which counts more than 50,000 members, I kindly beg you to vote favorably for the so-called immigration bill. Furthermore, we would appreciate it if you would use your influence to see that the bill is acted upon in this session of Congress.

Hoping that your honor will consider this request favorably, I remain, Respectfully, yours,

A. PERSION,
General Secretary-Treasurer International
Hod Carriers' Building and Common Laborers' Union of America.

AMALGAMATED LITHOGRAPHERS OF AMERICA,
New York, July 26, 1916.

TO THE HON. JAMES P. CLARKE.

DEAR SIR: The American Federation of Labor in convention assembled has indorsed the Burnett immigration bill with the literacy test included.

This organization, as a component part of the American Federation of Labor, concurs in this indorsement and earnestly requests that you use your best endeavors to have this bill passed at the present session of Congress in the same form that it was passed by the House of Representatives.

Trusting that this appeal meets with your approval and that you will see your way clear to assist in the passage of this measure, we are, Respectfully, yours,

AMALGAMATED LITHOGRAPHERS OF AMERICA,
JAMES M. O'CONNOR, Secretary-Treasurer.

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Indianapolis, Ind., July 19, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In behalf of the United Mine Workers of America, labor organization numbering approximately 500,000 men, I am addressing you in the interest of the Burnett immigration bill, which is now pending in the Congress of the United States.

We regard this bill of especial importance and very much desire that it be passed at this session of Congress. The members of our organization will appreciate it very much if you will not only give this bill your full support when it is up for final passage, but if you will also interest yourself in pushing it for final passage before the Congress adjourns.

May we count on your valuable support in pushing the bill forward and also when it is up for final passage?

Very respectfully, yours,

WM. GREEN,
International Secretary-Treasurer.

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MACHINISTS,
Washington, D. C., August 1, 1916.

THE HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: As the official representative of more than 115,000 organized skilled machinists, toolmakers, and specialists of our country, I take the liberty of writing you requesting you give favorable consideration to the immigration bill now pending in the United States Senate.

We urgently request that this meritorious measure be passed at this session of Congress.

We believe that no more important legislation is before you than the legislation above referred to, and inasmuch as it has passed the House by such an overwhelming vote, and the legislation is sought by the great mass of people who desire to maintain an American standard of living, I respectfully urge upon you to use your voice and vote in an effort to have this legislation enacted into law at the present session of Congress.

I beg to remain yours, most respectfully,

WM. H. JOHNSTON,
International President.

INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S ASSOCIATION,
Buffalo, N. Y., July 20, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As secretary of the International Longshoremen's Association, I am writing to ask that you vote favorably upon the Burnett immigration bill now pending in the Senate. Not only does this legislation mean a great deal to the multitude of the American workers and their families but to all employers and the general public as well, for the reason that if the literacy test were a law it would result in a higher type of immigrants coming into this country.

Sincerely trusting, therefore, that we may see your name recorded as favoring this bill, I remain,

Sincerely, yours,

JOHN J. JOYCE,
Secretary International Longshoremen's Association.

PIANO, ORGAN, AND MUSICAL INSTRUMENT WORKERS'
INTERNATIONAL UNION OF AMERICA,
Chicago, Ill., July 17, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: On behalf of the undersigned organization, I earnestly request that you use your influence, voice, and vote in furthering the passage of the immigration bill, recently passed by the House of Representatives and now pending in the United States Senate.

Our organization has suffered more bitterly from the present indiscriminate mass immigration than any other. Unless relief is had the calling to which the members have devoted the better parts of their lives will not render them a livelihood such as every American citizen is entitled to.

It may be interesting to learn that of the 90 per cent American, German, and Irish employees of the musical-instrument industry of 10 or 15 years ago hardly 10 per cent are left. Their places have been taken by Huns, Slavs, Italians, Greeks, etc., the majority of whom are illiterate and absolutely subservient.

The present conditions of our trade, as far as the employee is concerned, are frightful. We therefore appeal to you to help keep the wolf from the home of our members, to permit us to enjoy life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Help pass the immigration bill and you will forever endear yourself to the employees, their wives, and little ones of the musical-instrument industry.

Thanking you in advance for any courtesy you may extend, we remain,

Respectfully, yours,

PIANO, ORGAN, AND MUSICAL INSTRUMENT WORKERS'
INTERNATIONAL UNION OF AMERICA,
CHAS. DOLD, International President.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP LEAGUE OF COOK COUNTY,
Chicago, July 19, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE, Senator,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: As per instruction of the undersigned organization I am writing you earnestly requesting that you do your utmost in furthering the passage of the immigration bill, recently passed by the House of Representatives and now pending in the Senate.

Our organization numbers some hundred thousand members. It is specifically organized to protect the interests of the wageworker. We are a unit on the proposition of immigration. We believe that unless some relief is had from present indiscriminate immigration, such as provided for in the bill referred to, untold injury will accrue to the employees of our industries.

Hoping you may see your way clear to comply with this request, we remain,

Very respectfully, yours,

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP LEAGUE OF COOK COUNTY,
CHAS. DOLD, Secretary-Treasurer.

BROTHERHOOD OF PAINTERS, DECORATORS, AND PAPER HANGERS OF AMERICA,
La Fayette, Ind., July 17, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The 85,000 members of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paper Hangers of America, in common with the 3,000,000 of their fellow workers represented in the American Federation of Labor and the railroad brotherhoods, are intensely interested in the passage of the Burnett immigration bill at this session of Congress. Organized labor also speaks for the several million unorganized workers who have no other means of expressing their wishes.

May we urge you to work and to vote for the enactment of this bill into law?

Respectfully, yours,

J. C. SKEMP,
General Secretary-Treasurer.

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY-TREASURER,
St. Louis, Mo., July 17, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Subject: Burnett immigration-restriction bill.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned, officers of the railway employees department of the American Federation of Labor, representing 350,000 railway shopmen, and in conformity with the recommendation of the third biennial convention of the Railway Employees Department held

In Kansas City April, 1916, appeal to you in the interest of the American workmen to render your full support toward the passage of the Burnett immigration bill as a safeguard against the invasion of our country by the pauper labor from Europe and in order to maintain the standard of living of American citizens.

Hoping that we can be assured of your full support to the passage of this bill during the present session of Congress, and thanking you in advance in behalf of organized labor,

Yours, very truly,

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES DEPARTMENT,
A. O. WHARTON, President.
JOHN SCOTT, Secretary-Treasurer.

AMALGAMATED ASSOCIATION OF STREET AND ELECTRIC RAILWAY EMPLOYEES OF AMERICA,
Detroit, Mich., July 20, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As you are aware, the United States Congress passed the Burnett immigration-restriction bill by a vote of 307 to 87. Now, as this is a measure vitally concerning the interests of the citizens of the United States, I have been instructed by our association to urge you to vote in favor of this measure before the adjournment of the present session of the United States Senate; for if some restriction is not placed upon immigration our splendid country will be flooded with an illiterate class and a great many of those in foreign countries who are inclined to promote disturbance will be admitted to our shores, and we will be continually confronted with an unsettled industrial condition which will be detrimental to the best interests of all our citizens. Trusting you can see your way clear to vote for this measure, I beg to remain.

Yours, respectfully,

REZIN ORR,
International Treasurer.

UNITED TEXTILE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., July 26, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
United States Senator, Arkansas.

DEAR SIR: At the annual convention of our international union recently held in New York City, a resolution indorsing the Burnett immigration-restriction bill was unanimously adopted.

I was instructed by the members of our executive council to write you urging you to use your best efforts to bring about the passage of this immigration bill at this present session of Congress.

Trusting you can see your way clear to comply with the above request, in order that this immigration bill, which is so earnestly desired by the large mass of the wage workers of the country, will soon become a law, I beg to remain,

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN GOLDEN,
General President United Textile Workers of America.

INTERNATIONAL TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY-TREASURER,
Indianapolis, Ind., July 31, 1916.

HON. JAMES P. CLARKE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Members of the International Typographical Union, 65,000 in number, are interested in the passage of the Burnett immigration bill now before the United States Senate during the present session. They desire it passed in the shape in which it is passed by the House of Representatives, with the literacy test intact.

Trusting you will use your influence to this end, I am,

Very truly, yours,

J. W. HAYS,
Secretary-Treasurer International Typographical Union.

WOOD, WIRE, AND METAL LATHERS'
INTERNATIONAL UNION,
Cleveland, Ohio, July 22, 1916.

Mr. JAMES P. CLARKE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are informed that there seems to be some tendency in the United States Senate to withhold action at this session on the Burnett immigration bill, which was passed by the lower House at this session by a vote of 307 to 87. Action which has been taken in this and previous Congresses must be strong proof of the fact that there is an overwhelming sentiment in this country in favor of putting restrictions upon the right of immigration, and except for the liberal use of, if not the abuse of, the veto power such a law would long ago have been upon our statute books. Developments since the European war has started have undoubtedly accentuated the sentiment in favor of restriction.

Our people are intensely interested in this question. With us it is not a question of theory. Every day we are up against the actual results of what it means to have an unlimited flood of immigration coming here all the time.

The change in conditions because of the war which resulted in hundreds of thousands of foreigners going back home and the consequent reduction of immigration has produced concrete evidence of the improvement in the average man's affairs in this country to such an extent that the demand for restriction is considerably stronger, even in the labor movement, than before the war, and we sincerely trust that the rumors that there is intention not to push the Burnett bill at this session in the Senate are wrong, but that, on the contrary, this bill will be acted upon, so that before the war closes this proposal will be a law for whatever good it can do before the tide of immigration starts this way again.

Yours, respectfully,

RALPH V. BRANDT.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a resolution adopted by the Commercial Club of the city of Larimore, N. Dak., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions adopted by the Larimore Commercial Club, Aug. 4, 1916.

Whereas the threatened strike of railway trainmen is a very serious menace to the prosperity of all classes of people in this Nation, and, if carried into effect, will inevitably paralyze industry and produce untold suffering and immeasurable financial loss; and

Whereas the question of this strike is not a thing that concerns the railroads and their employees alone, but every individual in this Nation is directly concerned: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Larimore Commercial Club request our Senators and Representatives in Congress that they introduce, or cause to be introduced, and give their most earnest support to an act or resolution compelling the parties to the dispute to submit their differences to the Interstate Commerce Commission for adjustment and, under severe penalty, to accept the findings of said commission: And be it further

Resolved, That an urgent emergency exists, that said act or resolution be given right of way over other legislation and be hurried through Congress as rapidly as circumstances will permit.

O. H. PHILLIP, President.
J. DEXTER PEIRCE, Secretary.

Mr. WEEKS presented a memorial of the American Society of Landscape Architects, remonstrating against the erection of a power plant on the banks of the Potomac River, in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PHELAN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to limit the freedom of the press, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have received several communications relating to the proposed extension of the open season for killing wild fowl in certain States, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

30 CHURCH STREET,
New York, August 7, 1916.

HON. JAMES A. O'GORMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I understand that the latest proposed regulations of the Biological Survey at Washington plan to establish an open season on wild fowl for the gunners of Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, and Missouri between February 9 and March 11, in addition to the fall open season.

This is spring shooting in mating time, which I believe you will agree with me is a crime against nature, against sport, and against the spirit of conservation, and if carried out must ultimately end in wiping out the birds, as these States are a valuable breeding ground for our depleted flocks of wild ducks and other water fowl, which are increasing in number under the beneficent Federal law.

I therefore desire to enter my earnest protest against such a measure and trust whatever influence you have in the matter will be used against same.

Yours, very truly,

CHAS. C. CLUFF.

NEW YORK, August 3, 1916.

Senator JAMES A. O'GORMAN.

DEAR SIR: The inclosed is a copy of a letter I have written the Secretary of Agriculture. It is sent that you may know and be willing to see recorded my vigorous protest against this extension of the open season for wild fowl.

Yours, respectfully,

GLEN WRIGHT.

NEW YORK, August 3, 1916.

HON. D. F. HOUSTON,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: There are no reasons for the extension of the open season on wild fowl in Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, and Missouri, from February 9 to March 11, except two—for food and for sport.

As far as food is concerned, we are past the savage stage when the sustenance of our bodies is obtained by killing wild animals. We get our meat food by the propagation of domestic animals and fowls. There is no other way in our country, with its vast growth in population.

As for desiring to kill these fowl during the mating season, there is no sportsmanship in it. A true sportsman saves, and does not kill, the goose that lays the golden egg.

There is not even need to mention the advantage in the propagation of wild fowl. Every word in nature and science is fraught with its advantages. Those trying to add this open season are small comparatively in numbers and, in my judgment, thoroughly unpatriotic in wishing to impose their will against a tremendous majority. I respectfully say that it must not be. I enter my most vigorous protest, and ask that you give ear to my protest and my solicitation.

Respectfully,

GLEN WRIGHT.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have received a large number of petitions, letters, and telegrams urging a vote on the immigration bill. I will not ask to have them included in the RECORD because of their great volume. They are all in favor of regulation of immigration.

I have observed a tendency on the part of the Senate on both sides to bring about some kind of an agreement whereby a final adjournment can be had.

If we postpone a vote on the immigration bill, the people of the United States will believe that, through expediency and shifting, we have dodged a vote on that bill. The Democratic Party is not cowardly; it is bold and courageous.

Therefore, before any agreement looking to final adjournment is had, if no other Senator does, I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the immigration bill.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, with reference to what the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has just said I desire to state that I am in accord with him, and I am strongly opposed to final adjournment until we shall have had a vote on the immigration bill.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12889) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell the unsold and unappropriated portion of lands within the town site of Newell, S. Dak., and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 771) thereon.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8816) authorizing the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the sailing vessel Golden Gate to be registered as a vessel of the United States, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MYERS. For the Committee on Public Lands I report an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 407) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

OLD FORT MIFFLIN RESERVATION.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 13984) granting to the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, a right of way through the United States military reservation at Fort Mifflin, Pa., and I submit a report (No. 772) thereon.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent to have that bill considered. It is a short bill and there can be no objection to it. It proposes to run a street through the old Fort Mifflin Military Reservation near Philadelphia.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 8, after the words "Secretary of War," to insert the words "and the Secretary of the Navy"; in line 9, before the word "supervision," to strike out "his" and insert "their"; in line 17, after the word "maintain," to insert the words "and to operate"; and in line 18, after the words "Secretary of War," to insert the words "or the Secretary of the Navy," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant to the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, an easement of a right of way for municipal purposes over a strip of land 100 feet wide, extending from Back Channel to the Delaware River, through and over the United States military reservation located in the said city of Philadelphia, county of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, and known as the Fort Mifflin (Pa.) Military Reservation; the said city of Philadelphia to have a right of way over said strip of land, and as well authority to construct a paved roadway and an industrial railway thereon for the use of the sewage treatment works of the said city of Philadelphia, and as well to construct upon the end of said right of way at the Delaware River a wharf or pier, and as well to construct and maintain under said right of way conduits from the said sewage treatment works to the Delaware River. Provided, That the exact location of the said right of way and wharf shall be fixed by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy; that the construction thereof shall be under their supervision; and that the city of Philadelphia shall remove the old earth battery and level the entire portion of the reservation west of the old fort: Provided further, That no title or property right whatever to said strip of land or interest therein, by reason of said conveyance, is to pass to the city of Philadelphia, excepting the right of use as above set forth; that the use by the city of Philadelphia of the said strip of land for any other purpose than herein set forth or the failure to maintain and to operate as directed by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy shall work a forfeiture of the above-recited right; that the said right of easement of the city of Philadelphia may be declared terminated and ended by the Secretary of War of the United States at any time and he may thereupon resume complete possession of such strip of land and all right hereunder shall cease and determine: And provided further, That the right is reserved to the United States to occupy the said right of way for military or other governmental purposes.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

DISTRICT PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12712) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," and I submit a report (No. 773) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8, paragraph 1, of an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, relating to the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia (37 Stat. L., 975) be amended by adding to the names of the companies excluded from the operation of said section, after the words "steam railroads," in the third subdivision of the last paragraph on page 975, the following: "express companies subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will state that this is a House bill, and it exempts the express companies, subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, from the jurisdiction of the purely local Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia. A similar bill originating in the Senate is now on the calendar of the other House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF RIGHTS OF EASEMENT.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 9856) granting to the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co., and to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, and to the Manufacturers' Railway Co. permission to transfer certain rights of easement for railway purposes heretofore granted by the United States to the St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railroad Co. and to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, respectively. It is purely a local bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object to the consideration of this bill on the calendar, but I give notice that I shall object to any other bill on the calendar.

Mr. MYERS. I hope the Senator from Utah will not say that at this time. I have a bill here in behalf of the militia on the border which was passed on Saturday and then reconsidered. I want to offer it again. The defect in it has been overcome. I will make that request, and I think when the Senator from Utah hears the request he will not object.

Mr. SMOOT. Did I understand the Senator to say that the bill is on the calendar?

Mr. MYERS. It is not.

Mr. SMOOT. If it were on the calendar I should object.

Mr. MYERS. I am going to make my request when I get a chance, and let the Senator from Utah object if he will.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the bill called up by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

HOMESTEADS OF SOLDIERS.

Mr. MYERS. Unfortunately, I am the last of those asking for unanimous consent. On Saturday the Senate passed a Senate joint resolution which had been recommended by the Senate Committee on Public Lands. The purpose of it was to provide that homesteaders who are serving with the militia down on the Mexican border shall not lose their time while they are serving with the troops, but that it may be counted in their favor when they come to final proof. Through the action of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] a technical defect was discovered in the act which was passed, and the vote was unanimously reconsidered.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that I understand that the joint resolution is not on the calendar, and, as far as I am concerned, I shall not object to its present consideration for the reason that the joint resolution passed the Senate once, and I am heartily in favor of it, and I think everyone in the Senate is.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In the absence of the Senator I moved to reconsider the favorable passage by the Senate of the joint resolution, and we practically agreed at the time that we would give it preference and make no objection to it when it was corrected.

Mr. MYERS. An identical joint resolution with the same omission passed the House and came here and has been considered by the Senate Committee on Public Lands and the defect remedied. I now report back with an amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 247) extending the provisions of the act approved June 16, 1898, and I submit a report (No. 774) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration and passage of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me ask the Senator a question. The joint resolution is amended now and the chapter of the act is specified.

Mr. MYERS. The amendment names the chapter.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is all that was necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 4, after the words "ninety-eight," the committee proposes to insert "chapter 458," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the act approved June 16, 1898, chapter 458 (30 Stats., 473), shall be applicable in all cases of military service rendered in connection with operations in Mexico, or along the borders thereof, or in mobilization camps elsewhere, whether such service be in the military or naval organization of the United States or the National Guard of the several States now or hereafter in the service of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

UNLAWFUL RESTRAINTS AND MONOPOLIES.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably with an amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 129) extending until October 15, 1918, the effective date of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, and I ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator from North Carolina explain what the joint resolution is.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say that this is a resolution extending the time over the next Congress, to April 1, 1917, the tenth section of the Clayton Act, in regard to competitive bidding. The subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary had a hearing. The full committee, after considering the resolution, reported the same with amendment limiting the time to April 1, 1917, instead of October 1, 1918, as the original resolution provided. It may be that that section needs to be extended. The representatives of the railroads came before us and said they feared it had a tendency to break up some of the great railroad systems of the country. I could go into it and explain it, but the committee went into it thoroughly. The railroads wanted an extension until October, 1918. The committee concluded that we would give them a six months' extension, so that when the December session comes, if we see that they are going to be injured we could make the needed amendments if we should find it should be amended. We did not have time to discuss it and study it as it probably should be, and since the Newlands resolution has passed, for the study of the question, we thought that the committee of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] might look into this very question and see whether that section needed any amendment. The representatives of the railroads feared that it would absolutely ruin them if it should go into effect in October without amendment, and we concluded to give them a six months' extension so that we could look into it at the December session. The law goes into effect the 1st of October, and it might be injurious. So the committee proposed to give them a six months' extension only, and it will work injury to nobody, and we thought it was for the best interests under all the facts and circumstances presented to the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is a unanimous report of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were, in line 8, to strike out the word "October" and insert "April," and, in line 9, to strike out the numerals "1918" and insert "1917," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the effective date on and after which the provisions of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, shall become and be effective is hereby deferred and extended to April 15, 1917.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution extending until April 15, 1917, the effective date of section 10 of the act entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' approved October 15, 1914."

BUREAU OF LABOR SAFETY.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, when we were having the call of the calendar on the last calendar day, on my motion the bill (H. R. 153) to create a bureau of labor safety in the Department of Labor was recommitted to the Committee on Education and Labor, I having called attention from the floor of the Senate to several modifications in the bill restricting its effect. It is quite difficult, there being several members of the committee out of the city at present, to hold a meeting of the committee, and those members with whom I have conferred approved my course in moving to reconsider the recommitment. I have presented to the Senate and had printed the substitute as it was outlined on the floor of the Senate by me when the bill was before the Senate. It is a bill providing for the consideration in the Department of Labor of certain safety devices.

I move to reconsider the action of the Senate in recommitting the bill to the Committee on Education and Labor that it may take its place on the calendar. I have tendered the substitute and it is printed and is now in a shape where I think we can dispose of it when we reach it in the Senate without any further consideration by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CULBERSON:

A bill (S. 6811) to authorize the seizure, detention, and condemnation of arms and munitions of war in course of exportation or designed to be exported or used in violation of the laws of the United States, together with the vessels or vehicles in which the same are contained;

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 6826) for the relief of Edward F. McDermott, alias James Williams; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 6827) to repeal a portion of the act of April 30, 1908, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 6828) for the relief of Albert Ostner; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 6829) to provide for the disposition of public lands withdrawn and improved under the provisions of the reclamation laws, and which are no longer needed in connection with said laws; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 6830) granting a pension to Philura Haney Allan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 6831) granting an increase of pension to Daniel W. Green;

A bill (S. 6832) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Newton Primm; and

A bill (S. 6833) granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Stoubus (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 6834) to amend section 217 of the United States Criminal Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 6835) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Erwin, Tenn.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 6836) granting a pension to George Moir (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 6837) granting an increase of pension to Narcissa Wion (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6838) granting an increase of pension to Charles Edgar Mason (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 6839) to authorize the incorporated town of Juneau, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction and equipment of schools therein, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Territories.

A bill (S. 6840) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey title to certain lands in the State of Nevada; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 6841) to enlarge the scope and purpose of the post-office building at Syracuse, N. Y. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

OMNIBUS PUBLIC BUILDINGS BILL.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 17052) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of certain public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for certain public buildings; to abolish the Office of Supervising Architect of the Treasury and to create and organize in the Treasury Department a bureau of public buildings and define its duties, powers, and jurisdiction; to create and establish the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings; to fix the salary and prescribe the duties and powers of the said Commissioner of Public Buildings; to create a Board of Estimates and prescribe its duties and powers; to provide for the standardization of certain classes of public buildings, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15455) to establish a United States shipping board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water engaged in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 16914. An act permitting the Needles & Oatman Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Colorado River between the States of California and Arizona; and

H. R. 16995. An act granting the consent of Congress to A. N. Alford to construct a bridge across the Savannah River.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS—CONFERENCE REPORTS.

Mr. HUGHES submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15048) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 21, 24, 25, 26, 27, 32, and 35.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 22, 23, 28, 31, 33, and 34, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following:

"The name of Adella I. Cummings, former widow of John A. Cummings, late of Company E, Sixth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and major, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following:

"The name of Benjamin F. Longenecker, late of Company B, Seventh Regiment; Company D, Fourth Regiment; and Company L, Twelfth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month."

And the Senate agree to the same.

WM. HUGHES,

REED SMOOT,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

M. E. BURKE,

JOVETT SHOUSE,

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15494) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 4, 15, 17, 18, 21, 26, 29, and 32.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 30, 31, and 33, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the amount stricken out by said amendment and on page 9, line 20 of the bill, strike out the following: "in lieu of that she is now receiving"; and the Senate agree to the same.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15455, commonly known as the shipping bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 15455) to establish a United States Shipping Board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water engaged in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States; and for other purposes.

THE DANISH TREATY.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the bill before the Senate, but I desire to advert briefly to a matter which involves the privilege of the Senate.

On Tuesday last the President transmitted to the Senate a treaty between the United States and Denmark, relating to the Danish West Indies. When that treaty was laid before the Senate in executive session on that day, I hesitated for a moment as to the motion I should make respecting the disposition of the treaty. I had in mind to move that the treaty be referred without printing. I knew, of course, that such a motion would be in contravention of the usual practice of the Senate, and fearful that such a motion might be regarded as being in some way derogatory of the membership of the Senate or of the officials of the Senate, I concluded to make the usual motion that the treaty be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed in confidence for the use of the Senate. That motion was agreed to. The text of the treaty was accordingly referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the usual number of copies was ordered printed for the use of Senators. Twenty-five of those printed copies were delivered to the Committee on Foreign Relations by the executive clerk. That is the usual number delivered in such cases to that committee.

I have this morning inquired of the committee clerk whether any of these 25 printed copies had been delivered to any Senator or to anyone else, and am informed that no one has even called or asked for one, and that the 25 copies are intact in the possession of the committee.

I will add that it is the custom for the executive clerk to deliver 10 copies of the printed treaties to the Secretary of State. That was done in this instance. These 10 copies were transmitted by the executive clerk, under seal, by special messenger, to the State Department. I have just communicated with the Secretary of State to ascertain if these transmitted copies were received; and if so, whether any of them had been given out. He advises me that the copies were duly received; that one copy is held by him for his own use, and that the other nine have been locked in a department vault.

Mr. President, this morning I find in the Washington Post, and also in certain New York newspapers with which the Washington Post is generally supposed to have some kind of alliance, what purports to be the substance of this treaty. This publication purports to give not only the substance of this treaty article by article but to quote literally from the various articles.

When the treaty was sent to the Senate, according to this newspaper report, it was accompanied by a letter of the President. I wish to read from this news report, as it appears in the Washington Post, the following:

This letter—

Speaking of the President's letter—

This letter also states that the Danish Government "has requested that publicity to the terms of the convention be withheld until such time as the two Governments shall agree to promulgate them." The department suggests that the Senate be recommended that in giving its advice and consent to the ratification of the convention the text of the treaty be not made public until the two Governments shall agree to make it public.

That treaty, according to these newspaper reports, came to the Senate in that way and with these requests from the President and the department which I have read.

Mr. President, I believe it would be a waste of time to express an opinion as to the conduct and the act of a newspaper that would print such a document of international import in the circumstances stated. I know, as you do, how the men who represent the great publications of the country seek the news; we are familiar with the activities they exercise; we know the extremes to which they resort to get the news. I have no special criticism to make of these news gatherers who make their living in that way, so long as they use fairly honorable means; and I think I may well say, and say it with the approval of every Senator, that the correspondents and representatives of the press who are entitled to seats in the Senate gallery are honorable men, and that few, if any, of them ever resort to other than honorable means in the prosecution of their work; furthermore I believe that, as a body, they would not tolerate dishonorable methods in the acquisition of news. In personal intercourse I would trust them as far as I would any other class of men I know. I make no criticism of the correspondents; but that a great newspaper should, to the manifest detriment of the public interest, print a document of the kind in question, no matter how obtained—and which the President had specially asked, for the reasons he stated, might be held in strict confidence—is another and a very different question. It is unnecessary for me to characterize a performance of that kind by a great publication that professes to be and ought to be deeply concerned about the national honor. I need not comment upon that. All Senators and all patriotic Americans must have but one opinion about that.

My chief purpose in speaking at this time, however, is to express the wonderment I have as to how this document was obtained. The executive clerk, Mr. Dawson, in whose integrity I have the highest confidence, advises me that he still has in his possession all the printed copies sent to him from the Printing Office, except those he has given out in an authoritative way. As I have mentioned, Mr. President, there are only three, possibly four, ways that this treaty could have been surreptitiously obtained or given out. First, it might have been done by a Senator, for every Senator is entitled to a copy of this confidential print. It is published for the confidential use of Senators. Secondly, it might have been obtained by some official of the Senate surreptitiously and by him surreptitiously disposed of to a news gatherer; thirdly, it might have been abstracted by some official in the Printing Office and disposed of to a news gatherer; or, fourthly, it might have been surreptitiously given out by some dishonest official of the State Department. In no other way could it have been given out that I can conceive of.

Mr. President, for the moment I wish to speak of the Senate only, and when I have done that I shall close, at least for the present. I think, however, that at the next executive session I shall bring this matter before the Senate and ask the judgment of the Senate as to what course should be taken in the premises.

Mr. President, it is hard for me to believe that a Senator of the United States would give this treaty away as seemingly has been done by somebody. Every Senator had a right to a printed copy; every Senator had a right to go to the executive clerk and ask for one of the printed copies. If any Senator did that and received a copy, he knows it. That is easily ascertainable. Moreover, every Senator who received a copy knows what he did with it. If he exposed it to the public, he did a dishonorable act and ought to be disciplined by the Senate. A man who so disregards and defies the rules of the Senate treats with contempt and scorn the body of which he is a member. I have heard Senators say in open session and in executive session that they did not have the greatest respect for the rules governing executive sessions; but I have never yet heard one of them say that he did not make an exception of treaties where secrecy was manifestly required; and I am speaking now to that one point, and will not diverge from it.

Here is an instance where secrecy manifestly should have been observed. Here is a treaty sent to the Senate, where the foreign contracting power is said to have requested the Government of the United States to keep the treaty secret until final action is had by both Governments with respect to it. Why that request was made I scarcely venture to inquire. None of us think for a moment that any foreign influence would be attempted, or, if attempted, could be made effective in impressing itself upon the action of the Senate of the United States; but I do not know how that might be with respect to other countries.

We do know that a treaty of similar import was negotiated between the United States and Denmark concerning these very possessions some years ago; and it has been currently reported as an open secret that a foreign Government—possibly more than one foreign Government—exerted an influence to prevent the ratification of that treaty.

Mr. OVERMAN. And it failed of ratification.

Mr. STONE. Yes; it did fail. Whether that had to do with the request of the President and the Secretary of State or of the other high contracting party to this treaty that the matter be held in confidence, I do not know; but I do know that when two sovereignties make an agreement like this, and it is desired, especially desired, by one or both of the contracting parties, that the agreement should be treated in confidence until final action is taken, it immediately becomes a question of national fair dealing—therefore of national honor. In that view every Senator, separately, must, at least in the first instance, establish his own individual standard of national honor; but above and beyond him the Senate must establish its own standard.

Mr. President, I shall be very sorry to believe that any Senator has been guilty of such infinite, unspeakable disregard of the decencies and proprieties that should be observed in international intercourse as that here indicated; and, of course, any official of the Senate guilty of such a crime should be instantly discharged. It is hard for me to believe that any Senate official could be guilty of this offense.

This much I wanted to say as expressive of my indignation if, perchance, this moral—aye, this dirty—crime against the Senate and against the decencies of international intercourse has been committed by a Senator or by any official of the Senate. Whether we should go further and take affirmative action I shall, as I have said, probably lay before the Senate at the next executive session; but I have felt that this much, at least, ought to be now said in the open Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not rise to take issue with the Senator from Missouri with reference to his views as to the duty of the Members of this body to observe the rules of the Senate so long as they are the rules of the Senate; but those of us who have been here any length of time have witnessed these incidents time and time again, and in reading the history of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate and its transactions for the last 50 years we find that these things have recurred about every so often during the entire history of the Senate. We have our rules, which require secrecy upon our part, silence in regard to these matters; but we all know that the silence becomes vocal, and the things become known when they are of sufficient moment for the public to be interested in them. And they become known in a garbled, unsatisfactory, unreliable way.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, will my friend allow me?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. The public interested here is not alone the public of the United States, but the public of the world.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to say that the Senator from Missouri is perhaps justified, more particularly as I understand that the foreign power requested that this matter be kept secret until it was disposed of. That would add a further reason to any reason which might be found for secret action with reference to treaties. But I only rose, Mr. President, to point to the moral that this matter of dealing with treaties in executive session is not only wholly fruitless of any result so far as the executive sessions are concerned, but, in my judgment, it has long ago served its purpose, has become a relic of antiquity, and should be dispensed with. That which is made public in an inadequate and questionable way should be hereafter made public in an effective and dignified way.

There is scarcely any treaty which comes before this body which ought not to be considered in the open. There is scarcely any treaty which should not be considered and debated the same as we consider and debate other important measures. Almost all of these treaties are such treaties as the public are concerned to know about before they are made as well as after they are made. These are matters upon which the public are entitled to be advised before it is too late to object.

I am quite satisfied in my own judgment that treaties have been made in the past which it would have been well, it would have been wholesome, if the public had been thoroughly informed about before they were considered as to their contents. It is not sufficient that they be made known after the binding obligation has been entered into. In my humble opinion, our form of government justifies the people in having full knowledge before many of these obligations are entered into. There are exceptions, but they are exceedingly few.

Mr. President, a short time ago we made a treaty with the Republic of Nicaragua. I am not going to discuss it now, although I purpose to do so at some time; but it would have been altogether to the credit and to the dignity and, in my judgment, to the honor of this Government had that treaty and its details been fully known and fully discussed before the public prior to its ratification. In my humble judgment, if the people of the United States had known fully what that treaty contained, the circumstances under which it was made, and the circumstances under which it was to be ratified by Nicaragua, and the only circumstances and conditions under which it could have been ratified by Nicaragua it never would have been made by this Government at all.

What is this treaty, Mr. President? It is a real-estate deal. We are going to pay a very large sum of money. The people who will have to pay may well claim the right to know all about it before the obligation to pay is incurred. It has been known for months and years that such a transaction was possible. The general outlines of it have been known for months, and all except the details have been known to the public for the last two or three weeks. We know that we are proposing to purchase certain islands; that we are paying for them a certain sum; that it is for a certain reason, supposedly. There is nothing connected with this treaty, so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, which the people of the United States might not well know in advance of their entering into an obligation to pay $25,000,000 for the lands which we are to get. How much better it would be that the facts be put out in full and with frankness rather than have them go out by connivance.

As the Senator from Missouri has said, if a foreign power dealing with us requested that nothing be said until the matter was closed, that presents another question which I am not at this time going to discuss. But I do want to go on record, once and for all, that there are very few treaties, of a limited number and of a peculiar nature, which require secrecy so far as this Government is concerned; and the quicker the Senate of the United States dispenses with these executive sessions and the consideration of this class of treaties in executive sessions and deals with them in the open the better it will be for the dignity of the Senate and the better it will be for the people of the United States. When this great war in Europe shall have been fully written secret diplomacy will be found to be one of its contributing causes. I am hopeful we will soon rid ourselves of this relic of a discredited age.

RESIGNATION OF FORMER DIRECTOR OF THE CENSUS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of calling attention very briefly to a matter of somewhat recent history which seems to me to have been made pertinent at this time by a telegram sent out by the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield, and published in the papers yesterday relative to the appointment of Mr. William J. Harris as successor to E. Dana Durand, former Director of the Census. That telegram perverts the facts. I would not speak of this subject if I were not entirely familiar with it.

As reported in the press, the Secretary of Commerce asserts that Mr. Durand resigned from his position, and, on account of the existence of the vacancy, Mr. Harris was put in his place. Mr. President, that is not correct. The fact is that the Secretary of Commerce called upon Mr. Durand somewhere about the 1st of April and stated to him—and now I am quoting from what Mr. Durand afterward told me—that he, Mr. Redfield, desired the position of director and wanted Durand's resignation. Mr. Durand stated to Secretary Redfield the importance of the work then in progress and about to be completed which he thought he ought to be permitted to finish. Mr. Durand believed, or thought he had reason to believe that the Secretary would withhold the sending of his successor's name to the Senate until the special work of the Thirteenth Census was completed, which would be in about two months. It appears, however, that on that day, or the day after, the name of Mr. Harris was sent to the Senate for director, and the next day Mr. Durand sent in his resignation. This nomination was sent to the Senate on April 17, as I recall, and immediately referred to the Committee on the Census, of which I am a member. Soon after it was referred there a meeting of the committee was called, which I attended. I had learned indirectly that Mr. Durand was about completing the work, and that unless he did complete it the reports would go out under the name of his successor, and whatever credit should have gone to Mr. Durand would go to the new director, and whatever defects might be found in it would undoubtedly be charged to Mr. Durand. I called the attention of the committee to this fact. There were several Democratic members of the committee who agreed with me, but there seemed to be some doubt as to just exactly what the situation was; and so, from the committee room, I called up the Director of the Census, Mr. Durand, and he told me—which I subsequently reported to the committee—the facts as I have stated them to you.

It was at that time the opinion of the majority of the committee that this nomination of Mr. Harris should not be acted upon at once. One of the Democratic members of the committee volunteered to talk to the President about it, as he was sure that the President did not understand the situation. I was informed by that Senator that he did talk with the President, and that he had the impression from the President that a message was going to be sent by the President to the Senate withholding the nomination until the census report was completed. The Senator never heard anything more from the President. Soon afterwards another meeting of the Census Committee was held and a majority reported favorably upon the nomination of Mr. Harris. Unfortunately, I am not permitted to recite what occurred in the executive sessions of the Senate. It is sufficient to state, however, that that nomination was held up in the Senate until the 25th day of June, at which time Mr. Durand had stated he would have had opportunity to complete the census report.

Mr. President, I think it is perhaps proper for me to state that I was largely instrumental in holding up that nomination, in spite of the great efforts which were made to have it confirmed; and so Mr. Harris did not take his position until the 1st of July, or about that time, being confirmed on the 26th of June, as I recall.

I make this statement, Mr. President, because I believe it well for the country to have the facts in reference to this matter. Mr. Durand had made a very satisfactory director.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. TOWNSEND. In just a moment. Mr. Durand was practically removed, for the Harris nomination was sent in first and Durand resigned a day or two afterwards, or about that time. He resigned under pressure and after he had stated to the Secretary that he felt that he ought to remain in his position until the census reports were completed.

I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether it is his idea, and that of his political associates, to make this Durand business one of the rare issues of the campaign? The Senator's party is very much in search of issues, and I was just wondering whether this was to be one of them.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Neither the Senator from Michigan nor his party is in search of issues; the Senator from Missouri has already discovered that there are many; but I and my party have become somewhat weary of misrepresentations and misstatements on the part of representatives of this administration. The Senator may characterize this as a small matter, but it impeaches the truthfulness of a Cabinet officer and is characteristic of the administration.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to inquire of the Senator from Michigan whether or not, when both of Mr. Cleveland's administrations came to an end, our good Republican friends who succeeded him kept in office Democratic Directors of the Census?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think not. I am not arguing that point, and my complaint was not so much against your having that office. I did not say that I would oppose your having the office when this man's work was completed. It was only a matter of two months.

Mr. HARDWICK. Right there, Mr. President—

Mr. TOWNSEND. Just a moment; let me answer the question. The question at issue is whether a telegram sent out to the country by the Secretary of Commerce was true or false.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now if the Senator will yield, in the two instances when Republicans succeeded in power after each one of Mr. Cleveland's terms, did they wait until the Democratic Directors of the Census completed their work; and if so, how long?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will say that I would have had a good deal more respect for the Secretary of Commerce if he had said: "We want that office, and we are making no excuse for taking it. We are not pretending that this man resigned when we forced him out of the position."

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator knows we were entitled to it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the office of Director of the Census is to be regarded as political spoils, yes. Your party was in power. You took it as spoils with which to reward a spoilsman.

I am objecting now to the misrepresentation of the way in which you obtained it. Secretary Redfield states that he did not force Durand out of office to make room for a political worker. That Harris was appointed because of his political service I have no doubt. On this point I will quote some evidence that was put into the RECORD by the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] at the time Mr. Harris was a nominee for a place on the Federal Trade Commission. This was what the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] put in the RECORD. He quotes from an editorial in the Post of May 17:

W. J. HARRIS A POWER, HE SAYS.

"William J. Harris, of the Federal Trade Commission, is the dominant power now in Georgia politics," said Crawford Wheatley, of Americus, Ga., one of the delegates at large from Georgia to the Democratic national convention, at the New Willard, yesterday.

"At the recent State convention in Macon," continued Mr. Wheatley, "the name of Mr. Harris, who was on the ground to look after the administration's interests, elicited almost as much applause as that of the President. He was the only person asked to address the convention, although both Senator THOMAS W. HARDWICK and Gov. NAT HARRIS were present. As a further mark of confidence the slate of delegates to the national convention which he approved was elected." Mr. Harris and the President were both indorsed by the convention.

Now, I am not critically complaining of Mr. Harris for being interested in politics, if it is clean politics. I think a little more of a man, whether he be an officer or not, if he takes a wholesome, proper interest in politics. He can do that and not violate the true spirit of civil service. What I am stating to the Senate is the fact, however, and it is the fact, that Secretary Redfield was absolutely unfaithful to the record in his telegram. Mr. Harris was appointed for political reasons. His name was sent in and Mr. Durand was forced out of the office, and the intention was to give the new appointee credit for the work which Mr. Durand had done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to congratulate our friends on the other side that at last their candidate and they have found an issue in this campaign. After having thrashed over the whole field and been unable to discover any legitimate criticism of this administration, overpowered by the record of the President and by the magnificent legislation passed in the interests of the great masses of the people, they found an issue. True, the Democrats have given the country a great financial system, while the Republicans with their many years of rule had failed. True, the Democrats met the financial stress in 1914 following the war, when in 1907 the Republicans failed. True, act after act has been passed by the Democrats in the interest of the great body of the people, legislation which long since would have been passed but for opposition or neglect by the Republicans. That is of no avail.

The great issue made by Mr. Hughes and the Republicans is that Secretary Redfield recommended the removal of Durand from the office of Director of the Census. It is a splendid issue. It is worthy of Mr. Hughes and his associates.

Mr. OVERMAN. For another issue they have the appointment of Mr. E. Lester Jones as Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That was not noticed by the distinguished Senator from Michigan this morning, so I pass it by as of no importance. But this is an issue, an issue worthy of the Republican Party, and it is entitled to discussion.

It is true that if this removal had been induced solely for partisan reasons we would have followed the example of the Republicans under like circumstances. The Senator does not deny that. His associates can not deny it.

But let us consider this question for just a few moments. If I were criticizing the Secretary and the President, it would be that they did not remove Mr. Durand sooner. If they had done so, there would have been ample cause. He was inefficient as an executive officer. If you will study his record, it will show a waste of money, a duplication of work, a carelessness of management that might be expected from a scientist and perhaps a great statistician, but a man without executive capacity and without the kind of force that is needed for a Director of the Census.

Now, upon this subject I have had some experience. I had the honor of filling, 20 years ago, the office of Secretary of the Interior. At that time the Census Bureau was under the Interior Department. A vacancy took place. I fell into the usual view that the man to fill the place must be a great statistician. I knew one who could fill it. It was first offered to the professor of political economy of Yale, now the president of that institution. He could not take it. Then, looking around for a great statistician, we located him at the head of the Labor Bureau. But the law did not allow the President to name as head of two bureaus the same man. Therefore I prepared a statute, so zealous was I, and submitted it to the President, and induced him to send it to Congress and secure its passage, that we might have the great Commissioner of Labor also Director of the Census. I want to say very frankly that I found at the end of a few months that he did not dispatch the work of bringing the business to a close with effectiveness. He resigned, and his chief clerk filled the place a great deal better than did the able statistician.

The work of the statistician is not the work of the director. It should not be the work of the director to prepare himself the papers that go into the census reports. You have better work done by the Director of the Census when he does not undertake to write the reports himself, but as the executive officer insists that the various statisticians in charge bring their work together, and he supervises publication with speed and economy.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that we can lay the record for economy and dispatch and effectiveness made by Mr. Harris alongside that of Mr. Durand, and Mr. Durand's reputation will not gain by it. I will not say that Mr. Durand is not a statistician and not an accomplished man, but I do say that he neglected the administrative work of the Census Bureau; that he allowed waste in publications; that he allowed duplications in preparation; that he allowed duplication in work, and a great deal of work was thrown away. The expense bill he ran up was unnecessary.

Mr. President, with reference to the other portion of the issue between Mr. Durand and Mr. Redfield as to who first spoke of resigning, that is a question between them. I do not know. The Senator from Michigan does not know.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. You know what you were told. I only know what I was told. I do not care. I would really have more regard for the Secretary if he had not waited for the resignation but had removed Mr. Durand. If I had occupied his place, I would have suggested to him as soon as I found his mode of handling business that a vacancy was desirable.

Mr. OLIVER and Mr. PENROSE addressed the Chair.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], as he rose first.

Mr. OLIVER. I will ask the Senator from Georgia if it is not a fact that the Secretary himself, as reported in this morning's papers, stated that he did not know at the time of the removal of Mr. Durand of his inefficiency. Assuming that the statements the Senator makes are true and that Mr. Durand was inefficient, is it not true that the Secretary confesses, as reported in to-day's paper, that he was not aware of that fact at the time the removal took place?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not recall now just how soon after Secretary Redfield took charge of his office this subject arose. He took charge on the 5th of May. The confirmation of Mr. Harris was in the latter part of June, was it not?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The 26th of June.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It was in the latter part of June. I do not recall just when Mr. Harris's nomination came to the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The 17th of April.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Secretary, then, had but a little over 30 days in which to familiarize himself with Mr. Durand's lack of administrative capacity.

Mr. OLIVER. I am referring to the statement made by the Secretary in which he states that he did not know it when he removed Mr. Durand, but if he had known at that time what he afterwards knew he would have removed him.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. As I construe the statement, it is that he understood it was the wish of Mr. Durand to go to Wisconsin, and at the time he named Mr. Harris it was not with the view of removing Mr. Durand against Mr. Durand's wish, but with the opinion that Mr. Durand was going to Wisconsin, and at that time he was not familiar with what he has since learned, the lack of administrative capacity of Mr. Durand. He must have learned it later on. If he had been familiar with the work of the Census Bureau, I believe he would, even before Mr. Durand's resignation, have agreed with the views I have expressed. I had learned something about it prior to that time. I had occasion to look into a part of the work of the Census Bureau, and had reached the conclusion that administrative force was lacking, and that the administration was making exactly the same mistake I made as Secretary of the Interior in seeking a statistician when an effective business man was much better at the head of the Census Bureau.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator has referred to the fact that the Republican nominee has finally discovered an issue, which, as I understand it, is that it is wrong to displace a good official by a man who is unknown and untried. I ask the Senator whether if that, carried to its logical conclusion, should not result in returning the present incumbent of the Presidency to his office the 5th of November?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not only that, but we would be glad to hear from this candidate some frank declaration that if he comes into office none of his followers are to have places. That would cause a scattering even in their present limited number.

The truth is that the only issue which now seems to be worthy of being pressed is a hollow sham. If Mr. Durand had simply been removed to give place to another man who was competent and a Democrat, I for one would cordially approve the change. I believe it is desirable for an administrative officer to have the heads of the departments and bureaus around him in perfect sympathy with him.

I reiterate, Mr. President, that the administrative record of Mr. Durand was a failure, that it was accompanied with waste and lack of economy and lack of force, and that it does not compare favorably with the administrative record of his successor.

So far as the issue of fact is concerned between Mr. Durand and Mr. Redfield, if the Republicans now desire to change their great cause of appeal to the public from the first proposition, that Mr. Durand was removed to make place for a more competent administrative officer, who was a Democrat, and limit it to the issue as to whether Mr. Durand was right when he said he did not voluntarily resign, or Mr. Redfield was right when he understood that Mr. Durand wanted to resign, they can take that as their issue. They can submit that as their great issue and say to the people of the United States, here is an issue of veracity between Redfield and Durand, an issue of veracity between the Secretary of Commerce and the retired Director of the Census, and this issue of veracity is a sufficient reason for turning down the great record of the Democratic Party in its service to the people, and the great record of Woodrow Wilson in leading this country magnificently and caring for the interests of the people of the country for three years and a half in a way never before surpassed, through difficulties never equaled by a President since the time of Abraham Lincoln. If they think that is a basis for them to present their case to the people, I am willing for them to make all out of it they can.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am reminded that somewhere in the Good Book the prophet said in talking unto the idolatrous people who were falling down to worship the golden image, "Cry aloud, for he is a god." The Senator and his party have worshiped at the shrine of the President and their only arguments are cries unto him. They believe that he alone is their salvation. They cry aloud, and it is only a cry, it is the word that the Senator hopes the country will take without any regard to the facts and circumstances which attend it.

The Senator's disposition to brush aside what I have proven to be a deliberate misstatement of facts is all right in the course of the political program that is marked out for him. Never mind if the facts are not true; do not let them embarrass you; brush them aside or deny them.

I rose to correct the record that has been made relative to this matter. The Senator says that Mr. Durand was an inefficient officer. I never heard that statement except from the Senator. He made it before the committee. I can see why the Senator might be very anxious in establishing such an excuse when the boss of Georgia politics was demanding that he should be recognized in some place and therefore some place had to be created for him and a false excuse is better than none at all.

I know of no comparison that has been made between two Directors of the Census, Durand and Harris. I know the general impression is that under Mr. Durand's direction there was compiled the most complete census that was ever made. It ought to be so. I admit that the last census ought to be the best census, because we are supposed to learn something and gain some information from experience. But as I said, I have never heard Director Durand attacked for his inability except by the senior Senator from Georgia.

But that is outside of the issue. The Senator, in answering, says that Republicans are making this an issue in the campaign. Oh, this is only just one little incident, and the Senators are squirming on the other side over the arraignment of their party and hope to make the record clear by stating it is all right; but unfounded declamations will not weigh much as arguments with the people, who are not going to be satisfied entirely with words, but are going to insist on knowing the truth about this weak, inefficient, and unreliable present administration.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], in replying to the remarks of the Senator from Georgia, suggests the difficulty of making a campaign upon words merely. I may not quote him accurately, but I think that is the substance of his criticism. I think it is a good one. It recalls an editorial in to-day's New York Herald which I have read within the hour. It is so appropriate, so much in line with the Senator's criticism, and so short that I venture to read it. It is entitled "Mr. Hughes hit out," and is as follows:

The Herald thinks that Mr. Hughes is making a mistake in his frequent attacks upon Mr. Wilson. There is likely to be a monotony in faultfinding. Mr. Hughes can do a great deal better if he will take a page out of his own policies when he was governor of the State of New York. He is regarded by the American public generally with confidence, and when he was governor he was responsible for considerable constructive legislation. He wrote the public-service law in New York State, which has since been copied by the National Government and by every State in the Union. It is true that he made a good many enemies among the race-track gamblers by his position on race-track betting, but he has since been vindicated as to that. Mr. Hughes, by telling the public what he will do, rather than by finding fault with Mr. Wilson, will, we think, make greater headway with the thinking public.

Mr. President, this comes from a newspaper which supports the candidacy of Mr. Justice Hughes, and points the finger of criticism, when the public, Republicans and Democrats alike, are directing their comments. The nominee indulges in a tirade of words, unaccompanied by any suggestion of a constructive or other positive policy, and this will continue in all probability.

The Senator from Michigan seems to think that we upon this side of the Chamber are uneasy regarding the progress of the campaign. We may become so, Mr. President, but not yet. We perceive less reason for uneasiness than we did a month ago. The candidate is not so formidable as he seemed. A good many years ago California had a governor whose name was Newton Booth. He led the great fight of the people in the early seventies against the Central Pacific Railroad monopoly, and led it successfully. The people, without regard to party, sent him to the Senate of the United States in the belief that he would there grow in usefulness and power. He was classified as an independent. After occupying his seat for four long years and attempting little, the then Senator from Nevada, Mr. Nye, sneeringly remarked that the Senator from California was like a squab—biggest when he was first born. The modern application of that criticism is too obvious to require comment.

When the Republican nominee for President maps out a policy of his own and quits condemning others, there will be time enough for Democrats to seriously consider his candidacy; but he gives no sign of doing this, Mr. President. This effort to catch everybody and everything is consistent only with a policy of denunciation of the other side—a policy to which Mr. Hughes, as a most excellent lawyer, has doubtless had frequent occasion to resort in his days of previous, as he will also in his days of subsequent, practice at the bar. He will declare no constructive policy, because it may offend where perhaps offense would be more serious than the satisfaction which it would give in other directions. To use his own elegant expression, well befitting the lips of a former Justice of the Supreme Court, "You might just as well expect a revival meeting from a disorderly house."

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber when the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] began his remarks on the subject which he discussed, but as I came in he was reading from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I afterwards learned that it was the RECORD of May 18, 1916. I do not want to take the time—

Mr. FLETCHER. May I make a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CHILTON. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to know whether or not the shipping bill, House bill 15455, is before the Senate for consideration?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not only up for consideration but it is being considered and discussed, I will say to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CHILTON. I hope the Senator from Florida does not think that I will not stick to the subject.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not know what the Senate was proceeding with, and I wanted to ascertain that for my own information.

Mr. CHILTON. I think my discussion will fit anything that has been before the Senate or which may hereafter come before the Senate. I will stick to the rule.

Mr. President, I do not want to take any part in what I consider, without meaning any reflection upon Senators who have engaged in it, this hypocrisy about appointments to office. I think what has been done in regard to Mr. Durand was done within the rights of everybody connected with it.

Mr. Durand was given proper consideration by the Committee on the Census. The whole matter was discussed, and, after going over it, the name of Mr. Harris was regularly and legally reported for confirmation and approval to the Senate; and he was confirmed by the Senate. He made a splendid official. I have been chairman of the Committee on the Census, and I know that he was a good Director of the Census, observing not only the civil-service law but every other law. His record is there to stand for itself, and it is just as good a record as that of Mr. Durand or of anyone else who ever occupied the position. In my judgment, Mr. Harris improved upon Mr. Durand's work and showed superior adaptability to the work.

I had intended, however, Mr. President, to call attention to the remarks of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], which were made on May 18, 1916, and to a newspaper clipping which was at that time read by the Senator from Nevada and which has been again read to the Senate this morning by the Senator from Michigan, as he himself informs me. As the Senator from Michigan has read it, I shall not weary the Senate by again reading it. It was a newspaper report of an interview with a distinguished citizen of the State of Georgia concerning the popularity of Mr. Harris in that State, and containing some inaccurate statements as to what Mr. Harris had done in that State at a Democratic convention.

The facts are that Mr. Harris did not go to the State of Georgia at that time to attend a convention at all, but that he went there upon private business. A notice had been given of a public sale of some property in which he was interested, and he had to go there upon that business. The sale was within a few miles of the place where the convention was held. As to attending the convention, he was on his way home, and stopped over to see some old friends. He did not go there to represent the administration nor himself nor the Democratic Party; but, I repeat, he was simply in the State on business, and dropped by the convention to see many old friends.

It is hypocrisy for us to talk about men not doing those natural things if they have been in politics at all. Anyone who has risen to the prominence to which Mr. Harris has risen must be known by the prominent men of both parties in the State, and it would be perfectly natural under the circumstances which I have stated for him to drop into a State convention, either a Republican or a Democratic convention.

But, Mr. President, the essential thing is that he was not a delegate to that convention; he was not there to represent the administration; he was there only incidentally, as I have said, having gone to the State primarily upon business which required his personal attention. Being there upon private business, I say he did not attend the convention—I have looked into that—he did not attend the convention; he was not upon the floor of the convention. If there at all, he only attended as anyone else would, and sat in the gallery, as did any other spectator.

Mr. Harris is popular in the State of Georgia, Mr. President, as he is popular here. It would be very natural that at a gathering of the Democrats of Georgia, as it would be natural for the Democrats in any other State, to indorse first the splendid administration of President Wilson. Inasmuch as the President had signally honored Mr. Harris and Mr. Harris had signally honored both positions to which he had been appointed, it was most natural that the Democrats would link his name with that of the great President who appointed him, and would thank the President in effect for making the appointment.

I wanted to make this statement. The statement of the Senator from Nevada on May 18 that Mr. Harris was engaged actively in politics in that State was made upon information that was not correct, and I know that the distinguished Senator from Nevada, if he had known the facts, would not have made the insinuation which he made at that time. In his earnestness to see to it that the Federal Trade Commissioners shall not participate in partisan politics the interview from an overzealous Georgian was read into the RECORD, and that interview did Mr. Harris an injustice, even though it did disclose the fact that he is popular in his native State.

I suspect that in the exigencies of politics, in the dearth of other issues, the Senator from Michigan would now possibly put the same construction upon the act which the Senator from Nevada mistakenly put upon it at the time. We can excuse our Republican friends in this great emergency, when they have nothing else to talk about and have to pick up these little inconsequential matters upon which to base some kind of a plea to the American people to put a face upon the remarkable campaign which they are beginning. If they could not enlarge upon these small matters, what would they have to talk about?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, it seems that the real issue involved in this controversy is overlooked. Mr. Durand is not the issue in the present contest; but the Secretary of Commerce deliberately and publicly stated that Mr. Durand was not removed, but that his resignation was voluntarily tendered.

Now, it turns out as a well-established fact that Mr. Durand was removed against his desire and his will, and the Secretary of Commerce is detected, to put it mildly, in a deliberate misrepresentation to the American people.

I am not going to blame the Democratic Party for being spoilsmen. I never expected anything else. I can not claim to be a fanatic civil-service reformer myself. I believe in a moderate degree of civil-service regulation; but what I abhor is the hypocrisy, Mr. President, which characterizes the whole transaction.

President Wilson in his campaign goes before the people upon a lofty standard of the "moral uplift," and with many pretentious declarations in favor of the civil service, and then, after he is inaugurated, we see a greater raid upon the merit system than has been witnessed in the history of the country since the time of Andrew Jackson. It was given forth that the postmasters were to be permitted to serve their four years' tenure of office. That has always been a custom recognized by the Republican Party. These officials are not within the classified service, and, so far as the people are educated to the civil-service standards, they are looked upon as the spoils of war; but there has always been a thought that it was for the interest of the service, and perhaps to the advantage of the party in power, to permit each postmaster to serve out his four years, and then, when his four years' term had expired, the question of a new appointment came up. Otherwise this enormous patronage, amounting to many thousand postmasters, was thrown upon the party in power all at once; changes of a sweeping and radical character were made, the party in power was embarrassed, and the service was disturbed.

An intimation that that rule would be observed was held out by the Postmaster General or some accredited official of the administration. It had always been the custom of Republican administrations when in power. I know that following Cleveland's last administration, which is the most recent precedent, in Pennsylvania I do not recall a case where the Senators from Pennsylvania or the Representatives from that State requested the removal of a Democratic postmaster until his term had expired; and even toward the expiration of the Congress prior to Mr. Cleveland's relinquishing the presidential office the Republicans in the Senate cheerfully acquiesced in the confirmation of Democratic postmasters up to the 4th of March. On the other hand, when Mr. Wilson was elected, we witnessed the deliberate "holdup," through a threatened filibuster, of all the long list of nominees for postmasters and other appointments sent in by President Taft during the short session of the last Congress during his administration. Then, when the present administration assumed office, the postmasters all over the country were ruthlessly beheaded. The intimation that they were to be permitted to serve four years was cast to the winds; and, further than that, honorable men, who had served as postmasters during the 18 years of Republican control, were besmirched by innuendo, trumped-up charges, and accusations trivial in nature, but calculated to reflect on their character for the rest of their careers, just as charges were trumped up against Durand. It is the infernal hypocrisy of the whole transaction, Mr. President, to which I object and which every honorable American in the country will protest against when he knows all the facts.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. PENROSE. I do.

Mr. BRYAN. Did I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania to say that the postmasters were not permitted to serve out their terms under the present administration?

Mr. PENROSE. Of course they were not.

Mr. BRYAN. I am sure that, so far as my State is concerned—

Mr. PENROSE. I do not know anything about the Senator's State.

Mr. BRYAN. They were permitted to serve out their terms in every instance of which I have any knowledge.

Mr. SIMMONS. And everywhere else.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator ought to know about Florida.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That was true after some time had elapsed following the accession of the present administration to power; but at the beginning of this administration nomination after nomination was sent to the Senate in cases where the term of office had been shortened until there was a persistent effort in the Senate and in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to prevent the consideration of nominations of men sent in to succeed postmasters whose terms had not expired, unless there was cause for removal.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not know of a single instance where a postmaster has not been permitted to serve out his term.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PENROSE. For an inquiry; yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to say for the information of the Senator from Pennsylvania that, so far as the State of Colorado is concerned, I do not know of a single instance where a postmaster was removed before his term of office had expired.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, the thirst for office among the Democrats perhaps had not been acquired in Colorado until recently; but in Pennsylvania and in nearly every other State the contrary has been the fact; and proof conclusive that such is the fact is shown in a book, accessible to any Senator, containing a very long list of offices, the nominations to which were not confirmed during the third session of the Sixty-second Congress, ending March 4, 1913. Why were the nominations of these men held up if not to gratify the spoilsmen in the Democratic Party? If the administration in power had beheaded these men without this hypocrisy, this fraudulent pretense, I would not object; but I know, as a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, how Republican officials, honorable men, efficient officers, have been humiliated in their homes and besmirched down here at the department, with no opportunity to secure an investigation and no opportunity to defend themselves, subjected to an infamous and cowardly attack, which I resent and every other honorable man would resent. The methods pursued, perhaps, more than what was done afford a source of serious complaint, not only in the Post Office Department but in all the other departments.

It is well known, and can not be denied, that the invasion of all these new, untried, and inexperienced men as postmasters all over the country resulted in an utter demoralization of the service. In the city of Philadelphia we have never had a worse administration of postal matters than under the present Democratic postmaster, who was put in there after the resignation of the Republican postmaster. I have visited the State of the Senator from Florida, and have seen postmasters in charge there at some of the post offices who would hardly be competent, physically or mentally, to sweep the streets.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I am sure the postmasters to whom the Senator refers must have been Republicans.

Mr. PENROSE. No; this was a good Democrat I had in mind. There was only one Republican in the town, and he—

Mr. BRYAN. He was the postmaster. I have no doubt.

Mr. PENROSE. He was not the postmaster. The Post Office Department has been completely demoralized, as is well known. In the city of Philadelphia the collector of customs was removed with this same hypocrisy and false pretense, charges not openly made, not authenticated, no one taking the responsibility for them, whispered in the corridors of the Treasury Department—an honorable man who stands as high as any citizen in Philadelphia or in Pennsylvania; and yet he was put out and a Democrat was appointed whose chief qualification for the place was his ability to go over the country talking free silver and inflated currency, and who has hardly been one hour a day in the customhouse since he has held the office.

The Republicans, Mr. President, were consistent—in my opinion frequently almost too rigid—in the administration of the merit system. It is well known to every Senator—and I have no doubt many of them have complained about it on the Republican side—that the Civil Service Commission under President Taft was really a Democratic institution, and that any complaint whatever of activity in politics—I have known numbers of cases to occur in Philadelphia—was immediately taken up and attended to, and in very numerous instances the official whose partisan activity was complained of was suspended for 30 or 60 days, or whatever the penalty might be. I have heard of no such case under the present Democratic régime.

It is claimed, and I believe correctly, Mr. President—I have not the exact data—that some 20,000 additional places have been created under the present administration, at an annual expense of from forty to forty-five million dollars; and it is no exaggeration to say that most of these places have been purposely kept out of the civil service by riders put into appropriation bills, and that fully 50 per cent of these men are not performing duty one hour a day, but are attending to their own private business or actively participating in the politics of their localities. That is one considerable item in this deficit which is staring us in the face and which no revenue bill which the Democratic Party can bring into this Chamber will cure or correct—wastefulness in the Government service, and to a large extent incompetence.

Mr. President, I suppose the proceedings of the National Civil Service Reform League have some authority. I do not know who the officers are. Probably there are as many Democrats, or more, on the board of management than there are Republicans; but their indictment of the Wilson administration for violation of the civil-service principle is certainly astonishing to those who are not familiar with the details.

They say—I refer to the report of December 11 and 12, 1913, and do not quote exactly, but refer to some of their declarations:

The change in administration in Washington has been followed, as was expected by serious assaults on the merit system. In the last session of the last Congress hostility to the civil-service law displayed itself openly. The occasion for these early attacks was the order of President Taft, issued on October 15, 1912, placing in the competitive classified service the 36,000 fourth-class postmasters south of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers and west of the Mississippi River. The order was attacked because, as has been the case in every extension of the classification, beginning with the passage of the civil-service law in 1883, the order of October 15 covered in thousands of political appointees who had never passed an examination. The resolution to repeal the order, made in the form of a rider to the Post Office appropriation bill, was recognized, however, as clearly political in its purpose, and was adopted by a vote of 141 to 107, 40 Democrats, to their credit, refusing to approve this backward step.

Thus, Mr. President, immediately after the inauguration of the present administration, a large majority of the Democratic Party in the House of Representatives started the raid upon the merit system by urging the repeal of this executive order of Mr. Taft.

Then they go on to say:

Early in the special session of the present Congress other signs of a determination to overthrow the merit system became manifest. The first serious effort came in the form of a rider to the tariff bill, inserted by the Senate committee, providing that the force employed for the collection of the income tax should for two years be appointed without compliance with the requirements of the civil-service law. The exemption of this force is peculiarly dangerous because of the great inquisitorial powers which will vest in these collectors, carrying with them rich opportunities for corrupt favoritism or oppression in the collection of the tax, if the appointment of the force is not safeguarded from politics by the barriers of the merit system. In its vigorous opposition to this rider this league, fortunately, had the co-operation of commercial and civic organizations throughout the country, and the amendment was scathingly criticized by the press.

Mr. President, this rider invaded what ought to be a branch of the Government service maintained upon the very highest grade, yet the Democratic majority deliberately kept these thousands of appointees outside of the requirements of the civil service; for what reason? Simply to reward the Democratic spoilsmen. Anyone who has seen the class of men who invade the houses of individuals or the offices of banks and corporations to ask them questions about their corporation tax or their income tax knows how unworthy and how unfit a large number of them are for the responsible and confidential duties with which they are intrusted.

Then, Mr. President, I should say that this rider before its passage was amended so as to provide that the appointments should be made under rules and regulations to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and by the adoption of a clause directing that the income-tax employees outside of Washington should be employed on general internal-revenue work when not engaged in the collection of the income tax.

The latter clause makes it possible—to pack the general internal-revenue force with political appointees, but in its amended form the rider undoubtedly left with the President the power to order that the appointments be made under civil-service rules and regulations. This the league earnestly requested the President to do, but thus far no action has been taken.

Says the Civil Service League—

And this, Mr. President, in the face of the repeated and pretentious claims of Mr. Wilson, when he was a candidate, that he believed in civil-service reform and abhorred the spoils hunter. Under no Republican administration can such a condition be recalled; and not since a period long before the Civil War has there been such a ruthless and unscrupulous and brazen raid upon the merit system as we have witnessed under the present Democratic administration, notwithstanding the halo of righteousness and uplift which the present administration has assumed.

The Secretary of the Treasury, meanwhile, has issued a set of regulations governing these appointments which call in general for a statement from applicants as to their training, experience, and so forth, and for references as to their character. The best that can be hoped from this system is a weak pass examination, necessarily far inferior to the competitive tests which would have been set by the Civil Service Commission.

Almost every month witnesses an additional assault upon the merit system and the efficiency of the public service.

Upon the heels of this successful effort came—

Says the report referred to—a worse rider to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, removing from the competitive classified service practically all deputy collectors of internal revenue and deputy United States marshals. The deputy collectors had been in the competitive classified service since 1907; the deputy marshals since 1909. For their exemption there is no shadow of excuse. The classification of the Internal Revenue Service was followed by striking increases in economy and efficiency. The exemption of the deputies can work only injury to the service, not merely through lowering its efficiency but through increasing the political activity of the deputies, which will again be felt with special force in the Southern States. * * * It was only by the narrow majority of 5 that the rider was approved, 57 Democrats voting against it.

The League goes on further to say that—

This proviso was most obnoxious, not only per se but because of its appearance as a totally irrelevant rider in an appropriation bill. The League urged the President to veto the bill and thus check the growing tendency of Congress to force the President's hand in civil-service matters through rider legislation. At the same time it confidently expected that if he did not follow this course he would at least exercise the power which the language of the bill gave him and order that the deputies should remain in the competitive classified service. To the deep regret of the League, however, neither of these things was done. Instead, the President signed the bill and issued a memorandum—

Reciting his reasons for not issuing the civil-service order, the report of the League goes on to say:

The League takes issue squarely with the President on his statement that the deputies were never intended to be included under the ordinary provisions of the civil-service law. Their appointment through competitive examinations has worked most successfully, while their exemption, if one may judge from past experience, can result only in grave prejudice to the service. The President's statement of his opposition to the spoils system may have some wholesome effect on Congress.

But it did not have any wholesome effect, Mr. President, as the Civil Service League thought it might, because other attacks upon the merit system continued to follow.

The report of the League goes on to say:

The league regrets that in the selection of ministers abroad the President has in many cases displaced experienced, trained diplomats with men of neither experience nor training, in some cases apparently distributing these posts as mere political rewards. It is evident that this country is far from an established merit tradition in this part of its foreign service, but the unfavorable criticism so widely made of several of the diplomatic appointments indicates the growing interest of the people in the complete reclamation of the foreign service from the taint of partisan politics. It is especially encouraging that business men and business organizations have shown a lively interest in a matter which so vitally affects the entire Nation.

In other words, Mr. President, our diplomatic system, which had been built up so carefully by experienced men, has been completely revolutionized, and I doubt whether there is a single minister abroad to-day who can speak the language of the country to which he is accredited, unless it be the minister to England.

Now, about the Civil Service Commission, Mr. President. On August 10 we noticed in the Washington Post the astonishing information that the officials of the Civil Service League can not get access to the records of the commission. I will ask the Secretary to read this short extract from the Post.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEES CIVIL SERVICE SECRECY—REFORM LEAGUE CHARGES IT WAS NOT ALLOWED TO INSPECT RECORDS.

NEW YORK, August 9.

Charges that the Federal Civil Service Commission has inaugurated a policy of secrecy which threatens to endanger the civil-service law and has been sustained in that action by President Wilson were made by the National Civil Service Reform League to-day.

The league made public correspondence it has had with the president of the Civil Service Commission and also with President Wilson. League officers charged that the Federal Civil Service Commission for the first time, with the exception of one short period in 1899, refused permission for an examination of its records on the ground that an attempt might be made to mislead the public and attack and embarrass the Wilson administration. The league wanted to observe the practical effect of the Executive order of May 7, 1913, requiring fourth class postmasters to submit to a competitive examination, declaring that in many instances the effect of the act was simply to replace Republicans with Democrats.

Mr. PENROSE. That is an extraordinary position for the Civil Service Commission to take with the consent of the President. It has only been taken heretofore upon the one occasion referred to, and I am not advised as to the reasons for it then; but upon every other occasion under Republican administration the books and the data and the archives have been opened.

Such should be the practice of every department, with a few exceptions. How can it embarrass the administration of President Wilson to permit the Civil Service League to examine these archives? Is there anything there that shows guilt, or that shows violations of law, or that shows an entire disregard for the merit system, that these doors must be kept locked and closed to an honorable and respectable association which have for years, from their point of view, and to the best of their ability, endeavored to advance a propaganda in which they believe? I charge now that they are kept locked because they do not dare open them to the National Civil Service League, because the disclosures there would be too shocking and glaring to everyone, not alone to those interested in the merit system but to those interested in efficient public service.

The League goes on to say:

The Civil Service Commission has been reorganized, the President retaining Commissioner McIlhenny, who is now president of the commission, and appointing Mr. Charles H. Galloway, of South Carolina, and Mr. Hermon W. Craven, of the State of Washington, as successors to Gen. Black and Commissioner Washburn, whose resignations he accepted. President McIlhenny has been a member of the commission since 1906. Neither of the new members has had any experience in civil-service matters. The work before the commission now is of greatest importance, including, as it does, the development of an efficiency system for the entire service as provided for by Congress in the summer of 1912. As John R. Procter, president of the United States Commission, said 12 years ago: "The nature of the examinations depends really, not only upon the rules, but upon the commission which is to execute them. A commission could run the standard down until an entirely different class of men was obtained, or gradually work it up so as to bring in only the highest class of candidates." The new members of the commission will need months of labor to give them the proper mastery of the definite details of the commission's work, but, although for these reasons it is unfortunate that in making the changes in the commission's personnel the President did not select men of some practical experience in civil-service administration, the league confidently hopes for a sound, progressive administration of the law.

I might add in passing that Mr. Black resigned from the Civil Service Commission because he was unwilling to comply with the request of the President to agree to the proposal to take the fourth-class postmasters out of the civil service. This was in 1913. That hope has been considerably shattered. Here we have the statement made by the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Florida that no postmasters were changed in their States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the shipping bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is already before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SIMMONS. We are now considering it.

Mr. PENROSE. We are considering the statistics regarding the civil service, and, I take it, when the shipping bill is passed the $50,000,000 will be largely squandered to pay liberal salaries to Democratic officeholders, who will be carefully relieved from any civil-service requirement and who will walk the quarter-deck, whether they have ever been off of dry land or not before.

The League, in reference to these post offices, says:

Thirty thousand of the presidential postmasters have been changed.

This, remember, was in December, 1913. So the ax was swinging quite actively at that time, not very long after the President assumed office.

Forty-six per cent of the collectors of internal revenue, 36 per cent of the United States district attorneys, and 20 per cent of the registers of the General Land Office.

For an administration that has been in office for only a few months I think that record is doing fairly well from the spoil hunter's point of view.

In some cases the appointments have been distinctly political, notably in such instances as the appointment of William J. Harris as Director of the Census to succeed E. Dana Durand, and of Patrick H. Quinn, a Democratic district leader of Brooklyn, to be shipping commissioner in New York City.

The League declares:

To this task department heads and the President himself have been forced to devote an enormous amount of time and energy which should have been devoted to the consideration of questions of real importance.

Still, I can imagine, Mr. President, that while the policy of "watchful waiting" was in full force leisure was afforded for the President to consider the appointment of Democratic workers and supporters of the administration in different parts of the country.

The League goes on to say:

Another feature of the national administration which calls for serious consideration and early action is the lack of any real system of promotion on merit in the departments.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. President, the demotions and the promotions have utterly disregarded merit within the classified service. Good Democrats were promoted and good Republicans demoted. As far as I have been able to discover, in the Philadelphia customhouse and elsewhere, there has been absolutely no other reason for causing these changes; and when it was not quite convenient to demote or promote, the handy method of abolishing a place has been resorted to; so that the Republican suddenly woke up in the morning and found his place abolished, and, being in the classified service, was compelled to take any place, however inferior it might be, available or else leave the service entirely.

In the Department of State the League cites as an illustration:

In the Department of State the two foreign trade advisers, men of valuable experience and training, voluntarily resigned because they believed the failure to recognize merit in filling the higher posts, and the substitution of politics for merit, made a career in the service impossible. Their places were filled by the selection of two men without experience, who evidently obtained appointment as a reward for personal or political services. The Solicitor of the Department of State is understood to have resigned for the same reasons.

Mr. President, this making of Executive orders has been a marked characteristic of the present administration. The league says:

The exercise of the power by Executive order to grant special exceptions permitting the appointment of an individual without complying with the requirements of the civil-service rules has been carefully watched by the league, and it is manifest that its abuse must be closely guarded. During the four years of President Taft's administration an average of 61 special exceptions a year were granted. Seventy-two of these exceptions were granted within the last two months of his administration.

Later on I shall come to the number granted by the present administration and compare them with those granted during the administration of President Taft. I will show that they far exceed similar orders in number under any preceding administration. The league goes on to say:

President Wilson announced on the 5th of March that he did not propose to see applicants for office in person unless he himself invited the interview, and that it was his intention to deal with appointments through the heads of the several executive departments. The attitude of the several Cabinet officers toward civil-service reform therefore immediately became a subject of great interest to the National Civil Service Reform League. The Secretary of State has clearly made or proposed appointments in payment for political services, and some other Cabinet officers have given signs of accepting a doctrine which Mr. Bryan publicly favored in 1908, namely, that the national offices should be divided between the two great parties in proportion to their political strength. Acceptance of this precept has been indicated by making some removals, some transfers, and some promotions in the classified service in such a way as to bring in or advance Democrats.

Then the League refers to the experience of the men who have been appointed:

Henry Morgenthau, chairman of the Democratic finance committee, displaced William Rockhill as minister extraordinary and envoy plenipotentiary to Turkey. Mr. Morgenthau was wholly without experience in diplomacy. Mr. Rockhill had been in the Diplomatic Service for 19 years as chief clerk and Third Assistant Secretary in the Department of State, minister and consul general to Greece, Roumania, and Serbia, director of the International Bureau of American Republics, commissioner of the United States in 1900-1 in connection with the Boxer insurrection in China, minister to China in 1905, ambassador to Russia in 1909, and thence transferred to Constantinople in 1911.

But the fact that Mr. Morgenthau was chairman of the Democratic finance committee and contributed a great many thousands of dollars to the national committee for the election of Mr. Wilson apparently gave him every qualification necessary to represent the American Republic in the foreign country referred to.

Of the 22 members displaced 13 had had several years' experience in the Diplomatic Service. None of the 22 who were appointed had ever had any experience. Every one of them, as far as I know—and I hope I will be able to show when I can get the paper—was a contributor in sums ranging from $1,000 to $30,000 or $50,000 to the election of Mr. Wilson. That was their diplomatic experience and qualification for representing this country abroad.

I am not one to criticize a man for making a campaign contribution. I think it is a laudable proceeding on his part, an evidence of his patriotism and interest in his party; but I do object to this hypocrisy which enables an individual and a party to come into power under lofty pretenses and then practically sell every diplomatic office in the gift of the President for the consideration of a campaign contribution ranging from $5,000 to $30,000.

How much more was contributed beyond the amounts recorded and admitted is a matter of general gossip and conversation among those who are supposed to be familiar with the facts.

As the League declares:

None of the 22 new appointees had ever had any experience. As has been already mentioned, several of the appointments of obscure men to diplomatic posts have seemed to the public to be made in payment of political debts.

Says the Civil Service League:

It must be said with regret that the action of the administration with regard to the appointment of ambassadors and ministers, like much of the action on this subject in all preceding administrations, goes to establish the fact that in the United States there is no such thing as a profession of diplomacy.

I want to repeat that I do not want to be understood as criticizing these changes as a party man. What I do object to is the pretense of regard for civil service and the brutal performances which are witnessed afterwards, the unfair treatment of the Republican officeholders, who have been besmirched and had charges whispered about them which they could not deny or meet in order to bring about their removal from office, when it could have been done just as well in a straightforward, direct, and honest way.

The League goes on to say:

The rider placed by the Senate and House on the urgent deficiency bill was an unblushing attempt on the part of Congress to limit the range of the merit system in the national service and enlarge the range of the spoils system. To the adoption of this measure the Republicans in the House were uniformly opposed, and 57 Democrats stood by the pledge in the Democratic platform. The votes in favor of this pernicious measure were given by Democrats only.

I will soon be through, Mr. President. I had not intended to discuss this matter to-day, but on a later occasion. However, the occasion having arisen in a natural way, I have taken advantage of it.

The League further declares:

None of the new ministers appointed to succeed them can equal in trained qualifications the men they displaced. There are other men of experience in the Diplomatic Service from among whom it should not have been difficult to find proper representatives, in full sympathy with the administration's foreign policies and worthy of promotion.

Study of appointments, even to the higher position of ambassador, shows the existence of similar conditions. The Russian embassy, for example, filled in the recent past by such professional diplomats as John W. Riddle and William W. Rockhill and later by George von L. Meyer, promoted from Italy, has been offered to Henry M. Pindell, a newspaper editor of Peoria, Ill., of considerable local political prominence, but apparently without any special fitness for this difficult post. As to Turkey, another difficult post—

And so forth.

I have here a list of contributors to the Wilson campaign fund, which is a matter of public record and of considerable interest. I have not examined it very carefully. I notice James W. Gerard, of New York, ambassador to Germany, contributed $13,500 to the Wilson campaign, and Mr. Henry Morgenthau, who the Civil Service League says displaced a trained diplomat and had no qualification whatever for the position, contributed $10,000 on the first installment and $20,000 on the second installment.

There are a large number. Mr. Frederic C. Penfield, who is upholding the honor and dignity of the country in Austria, contributed $10,000 and then followed along with $12,000. Mr. Charles W. McAlpin, who was said to have been offered the minor position of minister to the Netherlands, contributed $2,000.

Mr. McCombs, who was said to have been offered the ambassadorship to France, if the newspapers can be relied upon, contributed $11,000.

Charles R. Crane, who is said to have been offered the ambassadorship to Russia, but declined it, contributed $40,000 and then a little later $10,000.

There is a long list of minor contributions, all of them promptly rewarded with office, of the type of Walter W. Vick, of Rutherford, N. J., who contributed $1,750, and was made general receiver of customs at Santo Domingo.

I want now to read briefly from the report of the proceedings of the National Civil Service Reform League, held in Chicago, Ill., December 3 and 4, 1914:

The first two of these acts—the exception of the field income-tax-collection force and the removal from the classified service of deputy collectors and deputy United States marshals—had passed into history at the last meeting of the league. The third inroad on the classified service followed in short order. On the eve of the passage of the currency bill, Senator OWEN, of the Committee on Banking and Currency, offered an amendment directing that employees of the Federal Reserve Board be appointed without complying with the requirements of the civil-service law. Despite the almost universal condemnation of this item as the most indefensible spoils grab in years, it was retained in the act by a majority of 1. Vice President MARSHALL breaking a tie and casting his vote in favor of the spoils rider. As soon as the officers of the league were informed of this action of the Senate, the President, the Members of the House, and the conferees on the bill were urged to reverse the action of the Senate. The House Democratic managers, however, accepted the Senate amendment without demur, and the bill was signed by the President on December 23. As enacted into law, a declaration was attached to the rider to the effect that the provision should not prevent the President from putting the employees in the classified service. After careful consideration of this section the officers of the league reached the conclusion that this provision allowed the President to order these places to be filled in accordance with the civil-service law at the very beginning of the system. In support of this conclusion it was urged that no worse menace—

I want to quote just what the League says:

In support of this conclusion, it was urged that no worse menace to the success of the new currency and banking system could be imagined than that its administration should be subjected to partisan politics; that the difficulty of excluding political influences in the future would be increased because of the fact that at the inception of the new system the force of employees under the board had been appointed without complying with the civil-service law and that this failure would be used as an excuse for wholesale changes in that force and for its reorganization on a partisan basis.

President Wilson decided that he did not have authority to act upon the league's suggestion, because the language of the currency act "distinctly provides for the employment of the employees of the Federal Reserve Board without regard to the civil-service rules." He assured the league, however, that "the Federal Reserve Board will not allow political considerations to influence its selections in the least, and that they will be made solely upon merit."

The statement of the President is branded with insincerity on its face.

He assured the League, however, that the Federal Reserve Board would not allow political considerations to influence its selections in the least, and that they would be made solely upon the merits, an assurance, Mr. President, which has had the effect of rendering every Republican unavailable for appointment in this department of the Government.

Now, the League goes on to say:

Successful in this attempt, the spoilsmen grew bolder and turned their attention to the Post Office appropriation bill. The House Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads attached to this great supply bill a rider removing all assistant postmasters from the competitive classified service. In which they had been placed by President Taft's order of September 30, 1910. This order was one of the great advances toward the reclamation of the Postal Service from politics. This attack on the civil service aroused friends of the merit system, who made it clear that the exemption of the assistant postmasters was one of the most backward steps that could be taken. It is a notorious fact that in the greater number of offices the assistant postmaster is the actual postmaster; that the holder of the title of postmaster is but the titular head, an absentee officeholder, whose time is given more to political management than to post-office administration.

Approximately 24 per cent of these officers have been appointed under the civil-service rules and regulations, either by promotion, transfer, or through open competitive examination. All of the 1,700 assistant postmasters carried into the service by Executive order have been in office for more than three years.

No action was taken on the legislation advocated by Mr. Moon until August, when Representative CULLOP offered an amendment striking out the provision relating to assistant postmasters and substituting therefor a section providing a four-year tenure of office for all employees of all post offices, to be selected by the postmaster "irrespective of any civil-service law to the contrary." The Cullop section was actually approved in the Committee of the Whole, but when the committee rose 87 Democrats joined with 75 Republicans and Progressives in rejecting the proposal. The House retained in the bill, however, by the small majority of 19 votes, the Moon provision relating to assistant postmasters.

Even these efforts made repeatedly to undermine the merit system on several occasions, to their credit be it said, have been resisted by a large part of the Democratic Party in the House of Representatives.

The League calls attention to another flagrant attack on the merit system:

The Indian appropriation bill furnished the next opportunity for attack on the law. To this measure a section was attached exempting over 100 physicians in the Indian Service from the operation of the civil-service law. In some respects this rider was worse than any of its predecessors. The Indians affected by the legislation are the wards of the Nation. To intrust the care of their health to any but physicians of sound training and high qualifications would be little short of criminal. The feasibility of selecting qualified physicians for the public service through civil-service examinations has been demonstrated many times and in all parts of the country. In the Indian Service itself the evidence conclusively shows that physicians employed under the contract system without examination are far inferior to those who have been selected through competition. In the face of this evidence the House took the places out of the classified service. The Senate fortunately declined to yield to this sordid desire to provide places for congressional favorites at the expense of the wards of the Nation, and these positions were retained in the competitive schedule.

The League goes on to express its opinion about the conduct of the State Department:

In spite of the open disapproval—

The report says—

In spite of the open disapproval of the business interests of the country, Congress next accepted the statement of the Secretary of Commerce that 14 important positions of commercial attaché credited to American ministers abroad should be filled without regard to the civil-service law. In urging the appointment of these attachés on a merit basis, the league called attention to the fact that as unclassified positions that would be regarded by members of Secretary Redfield's party as legitimate party spoils. Pressure to treat them as such would be great, and while the present Secretary might succeed in resisting it, about these places would always linger the atmosphere of political favoritism, which pervades the unclassified service of the United States. Nevertheless these positions were removed from the merit system with the result that they may be made the means for the payment of political obligations upon every change of administration.

Congress completed the reactionary record in the passage of the Trade Commission bill by exempting attorneys, special experts, and examiners of the new board from the operation of the law.

And since this report was made we will all recall that every commission that has been authorized contains this rider, that the civil-service regulations shall not apply to its employees. This is true of the rural-credits bill and of nearly every other measure providing for a commission that I have in mind.

I have some other matters in connection with this indictment of the Democratic Party, now in control of the Government, relative to the civil service, but I do not know that it is necessary to detain the Senate any longer upon the subject.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. PENROSE. For any inquiry; yes.

Mr. BRYAN. May I inquire of the Senator if the book from which he is reading makes any reference to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill which was passed in 1912 and which President Taft vetoed because it had in it a revision of the civil-service law, cutting down the term to five years? Does the book from which the Senator has been reading make any reference to that?

Mr. PENROSE. It may do so, but I have not noted it. I will give the Senator the book when I am through.

Mr. BRYAN. What does the Senator think of that legislation?

Mr. PENROSE. I do not quite understand to what the Senator from Florida refers.

Mr. BRYAN. In the appropriation bill for the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government for the fiscal year 1913 both branches of Congress included a provision making radical changes in the civil-service law. I have before me the veto by President Taft of that bill, dated August 15, 1912. He vetoed that appropriation bill because it contained that provision. Was the Senator from Pennsylvania at that time opposed to any curtailment of the civil service, or did the Senator then vote for the legislation which President Taft later vetoed?

Mr. PENROSE. I have not the slightest recollection of it in the multitude of matters which have occurred since then.

Mr. BRYAN. It is remarkable to me that a civil-service reformer like the Senator from Pennsylvania does not remember that.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not pretend to be a civil-service reformer, but I merely make the statement that, after many pretentious claims on the part of the Democracy during the campaign in favor of civil service, there has been no more reckless or scandalous raid made upon the merit system than has been made by the present party in power. They have practically destroyed that system; they have taken the great bulk of appointments, scattered all over the country, out of the civil service, and have filled them to the detriment of the public service and to the inefficiency of the service, as is well known in the Post Office Department and in other departments. That Republicans may have been offenders in the past I am not prepared to argue about; but their offenses were trivial compared to this gigantic drive which has been made in the last two years, with the result that we have had this enormous increase in the number of places—some 20,000—at an annual expenditure of $45,000,000 a year, filled by men who, in many instances, are not doing an hour's work a day, as the figures will prove, so far as the discharge of their official duties is concerned.

I shall only refer, Mr. President, to the Executive orders made under the present administration. It is really too small a matter for me to discuss in view of the very extensive operations through riders on appropriation bills. I only call attention to the fact that the number of Executive orders made for very trivial, and frequently for very ridiculous, reasons have been greater than those made by any other administration in recent years.

Therefore, Mr. President, to conclude, it seems to me that the Durand case is only the beginning and an illustration of an utter prostitution of the Government departments to partisan spoils-men and to party requirements, accompanied, not by a straightforward avowal of that purpose but with a hypocritical pretense that men resigned voluntarily when, as a matter of fact, they were compelled to resign, or they have been removed by trumping up charges which they could not answer or deny. The party in power every month for the last three years has been getting bolder and bolder until here, openly on the floor of the Senate and in the House of Representatives, we witness the placing of these riders on appropriation bills.

I shall ask, if there is no objection, to have the list of contributors referred to by me printed at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The list referred to is as follows:

Amounts contributed to Wilson campaign fund as reported by Democratic national committee; amounts contributed to McCombs, McAdoo, and Quincy prenomination funds, as are shown in testimony before Campaign Contributions Committee of the Senate (subcommittee of Committee on Privileges and Elections), 1913.

McAlpin, Chas. W., New York.—Offered (?) minister to the Netherlands.		2,000

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, some hour or more ago, about the middle of the address of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], I felt quite a desire to briefly reply to a part of the address which he had delivered; but he has continued at such length, and other engagements conflicting, I shall be unable to more than pay my respects to his address.

Mr. President, a week ago last Monday night, the nominee of the party of the Senator from Pennsylvania delivered his address in New York City accepting the nomination. On Wednesday morning, in the Senate of the United States the Senator from Pennsylvania spoke. I was not surprised that he spoke. The address delivered on Monday night by his candidate for the Presidency had fallen so flat and had been so utterly without issues, that the real leader of the Republican Party, a man than whom there is no one in the party with a stronger personality or a more powerful intellect, spoke upon the floor of the Senate. Realizing that no issues had been raised, he felt called upon for his party to present some. They could not have put up an abler member of their party to present issues. Some one else may be the candidate; some one else may be the nominal leader; but in the party there is no one who has greater influence or comes here having the right to control and to speak for it more than he.

I was, however, surprised—no, not surprised—that in his criticism of Democratic extravagances one of the things he first mentioned was the creation of an armor plant—such a Democratic extravagance; such a horrible thing, by building a Government armor plant to take away some of the revenues that had been made before by private companies.

To-day, Mr. President, the great Senator from Pennsylvania comes as a champion of the Republican Party to do what? To point out an issue against the Democratic administration, charging it with lack of fidelity to the civil-service system. What a spokesman the Republican Party finds for civil-service reform, for the elimination of all regard to politics, freedom from recognition of party service, selection of men solely without reference to politics to fill office. Where could the Republican Party find among its members a better spokesman upon such a subject than the great champion of civil-service reform in the Republican Party, the Senator from Pennsylvania? The choice is well made as their spokesman to present this issue.

Wednesday, a week ago, dissatisfied with the speech of their candidate, he presented issues for his party. Coming again to-day, he presents issues for his party; and his leadership in the party authorizes him to speak. His issue is the disregard of civil-service reform by the Democratic Party; some recognition by the President in some few cases of men in the party who have contributed something to Democratic success.

With what sincerity we must recognize such a criticism from the Republican Party when it puts up as its champion of reform the Senator from Pennsylvania to make it! How severe is the blow directed at the Democratic Party when it comes backed with the marvelous record for selection for office of men solely on account of merit which backs the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. President, I was almost amused when I heard the Senator read so long from the report of the Civil Service League. I wondered when the Senator from Pennsylvania became familiar with their reports and when they first interested him. Indeed, I wondered when they first really interested anybody in his party.

It is not necessary in answering him to take up the individual cases that he cited. I undertake to say that following either of Mr. Cleveland's terms more postmasters were removed by the Republicans before the end of their full terms than were removed after the close of Mr. Taft's administration. One of the Senator's charges was that postmasters did not serve out their terms; and from every State where a Senator replied the charge was challenged, for the great bulk of the postmasters were permitted to serve out their terms.

Mr. President, speaking of postmasters, let us see what the record of the Senator's party was. In every single administration that it had it held fourth-class postmasterships for political spoils; but just at the close of the last administration, after they had filled every one of those places with their spoils-men, they blanketed them over with the civil service and kept them in office.

What was the course of the present administration? An order was passed providing for civil-service examinations for fourth-class postmasters. Examinations were held, and the appointees were limited to the three highest on the eligible lists. The Senator says that many Republicans were turned out. I am not surprised at that. I should not be surprised if 99 per cent of the political appointments which his party had made had lost out in those examinations; and yet the great Senator from Pennsylvania comes here as the champion of his party to talk about civil-service reform and the recognition of merit in office!

He then branches off on deputy collectors and deputy United States marshals. For myself, I want to say that I do not think a deputy United States marshal can be selected properly under civil-service examination.

There are qualities required of the vast majority of those who serve as deputy marshals that can not be ascertained or covered by civil-service methods; but I do not think the Senator can attack the efficient service of the men who have received appointments in that department of the public service.

Then the Senator branched off to the Diplomatic Corps. I want to know how many Democrats were left by the Republican President in diplomatic positions after Mr. Cleveland's last term?

The Senator, however, goes further, and he reads from some one in criticism of our representative to Turkey, Mr. Morgenthau. Mr. President, I challenge a criticism of Mr. Morgenthau's service in Turkey. It is said that he took a great interest in Mr. Wilson's campaign and perhaps contributed some money to it. Ah, he showed his wisdom; he showed his knowledge of men; he showed his appreciation of capacity in the course which he pursued; and, then, when the President sent him to Turkey, the President, at least for once, made a splendid selection, for Mr. Morgenthau handled the difficult responsibilities of that office in a manner that has brought to our Nation as much credit as have the acts of any representative who ever went to Constantinople as ambassador from the United States.

But the Senator says that promotions and demotions have been made on account of politics. I challenge the accuracy of that statement.

Mr. PENROSE. I can give the Senator a number of specific instances, if he wants them, at any time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator may find a few instances—

Mr. PENROSE. They occurred all over the country.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Of Republicans reduced and of a few Democrats who were promoted; but I have had a good deal of observation, and my observation, department by department, has been an utter disregard of Democrats in connection with promotions and a failure to right the wrongs that have been done to Democrats under preceding Republican administrations.

Mr. PENROSE. That is just what I complain of, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. That is just what I complain of. With loud claims of virtue, the Democratic administration proceeds with the ax, and decapitations go on every day. If the Senator would make a candid admission that he is a spoilsman and that this thing is going on, I would stop.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not catch the Senator's remark.

Mr. PENROSE. I say that is just what I am criticizing in this whole proposition—the lofty pretenses that are made of virtue and purity, and the utter, reckless disregard under the surface of every principle of decency in administering the civil service. If the Senator would come out in a straightforward manner and admit that he is a spoilsman, and wants the places, and that these things are being done, I would not complain; but when he says that the civil-service rules are not manipulated and offices are not abolished to facilitate the demotion of Republicans and the promotion of Democrats, he is either ignorant or he deliberately makes a statement which I know to be without foundation in fact.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, now, the Senator must be a little careful in his speech. The Senator can not say that I am deliberately making any statement that is not accurate. I say that I have watched the departments, and that the Republicans are promoted oftener than Democrats. I say that from my own knowledge. It is true; and any statement to the contrary, coming from whomever it does, is false.

My complaint is that wrongs done the Democrats in the departments under previous Republican administrations have not been righted; I have been utterly unable to get them righted; and demotions made in the departments of Democrats because they were Democrats have been allowed to remain.

Mr. PENROSE. They must have been pretty tough cases, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They were superior men—vastly superior to the Republicans who secured the promotions.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. The most recent diplomatic appointee, Mr. Fletcher, who has been made ambassador to Mexico, is a Republican.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And I criticize that appointment; for, if I had been President, I would have sent a Democrat instead of a Republican to Mexico.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to interrupt the Senator, Mr. Fletcher has not been sent anywhere as yet.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senate has confirmed his nomination and he has been given his commission.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The trouble seems to be that the administration does not seem to know where the capital of Mexico is, and so Mr. Fletcher is still in Washington.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not taking issue with the Senator from New York on that subject; not at all. I do not know where it is, certainly. I wish I did.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I always believe the Senator from Georgia in making statements makes them absolutely as he understands the situation to be; but do I understand the Senator to say that, for instance, in the Government Printing Office there have been promotions of Republicans and demotions of Democrats?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I know very little about the Printing Office.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from Georgia—
Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let me answer the Senator's question first. He has asked me about the Printing Office. I know very little about the Printing Office, except I know that two or three people in whom I was interested were demoted and one of them turned out. I do not think I ever secured a promotion, except in the case of one man, and that was when there was a vacancy above him. That is my experience with the Printing Office. Beyond that, as to the whole list of employees in that branch of the service I do not know anything.

Mr. SMOOT. I have the names of all of them, I will say to the Senator, and if he doubts my word I can go to my office and get the list and read exactly what promotions and demotions have been made. There have been demoted, I think, 95 per cent of all the Republicans in the Printing Office, and I do not know of a promotion that they could not give a Democrat, with the exception of Capt. Brian, that has not been given.

I did not desire to enter the debate in a controversial way, but simply wanted to state this fact, because I think the Senator from Georgia wants to have the Record correct.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I want to say to the Senator from Georgia—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am speaking of my utter inability to get any recognition of Democrats in the departments.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I can not say what influence the Senator from Georgia may have in getting them, but I know that others get them; I know that the promotions are made and that demotions are made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My observation is that they do not make them—

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield to me, I merely want to suggest that, if we may believe current newspaper reports, the Assistant Secretary of State, now acting Secretary of State, was an alternate delegate to the Republican National Convention.

Mr. SMOOT. Who?

Mr. HARDWICK. The Assistant Secretary, and present acting Secretary of State, Mr. Polk. That is what the newspapers state. I do not know whether it is true, but, if it is true, it does not look like we are very partisan in dealing with these matters.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I desire merely to correct what I fear is an inaccuracy. Do I understand the Senator from Georgia to say that the Acting Secretary of State was an alternate to the Republican National Convention?

Mr. HARDWICK. I have seen that statement published; that is all I know.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I wish to assure the Senator that that is an error, because the Acting Secretary of State was born a Democrat and has been a Democrat all his life.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am very glad indeed to hear it. I was merely citing that instance, because I had seen it printed, and I suppose that other Senators have seen that statement in print.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I never saw it.

Mr. SMOOT. If it was printed, it was a mistake.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Speaking of the Acting Secretary of State, the counsellor of the State Department I know, as I know his father and knew his grandfather. His father is a leader in medical science. His grandfather was a bishop and a general. He is a Democrat in person and by descent. I want to say that, of course, I have not paid detailed attention to the departments. I am speaking only of my own observation, and I do understand and know that, so far as my observation has been able to go, they have had commissions or committees in charge of promotions, and wherever I have been able to detect what appeared to be favoritism it seemed to be a personal rather than a political favoritism. I think there has been a good deal, and always will be a good deal, of favoritism in connection with promotions in the departments, but whenever I approached the departmental officers they all have assured me that nothing but the merit system applied and that the records of employees in whom I might be interested would be considered and promotion made based on records alone. There are in the General Land Office to-day several Democrats who were demoted by the Republicans. Those men have been in that office since I was head of the Interior Department, and they are all very able men. One man whom I have in my mind particularly, who I think is the ablest lawyer in the Interior Department, whom I appointed when I was Secretary of the Interior to a $2,500 place, was demoted purely on account of politics by a Republican administration, and the present Secretary would not restore him to his former place upon the ground that the department officials were acting under the civil-service law, and that unless a vacancy occurred the promotion could not be made. So my personal observation has been that recommendations have practically nothing to do with promotions. I have not made many, because I do not think they should have anything to do with promotions except to call attention to the merits of particular men that they might be considered by the department.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, has the Senator ever investigated the Forestry Service appointments?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not very fully.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that nearly all the employees are Republicans, and have been so for many years.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not gone into that very fully, except that I understand that everyone connected with it of any prominence, if not a Republican, is a Progressive, a member of the present party of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. To what department is the Senator from Georgia referring?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Forestry Department. I think it is just beehived with men who supported the "Colonel" in the last race.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. I suppose it is necessary to retain a few Republicans in the departments to run them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know whether that was the reason, and I was not sure whether the Senator thought that that branch of the Republican Party was the most efficient part of its operating machine.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, we are a united brotherhood, Mr. President, marching on to victory—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. And I have no doubt they are just as efficient as anyone else.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Pennsylvania seems to be pretty thoroughly converted. There was an old adage, which I might paraphrase humorously, that "While the lamp holds to burn the Senator from Pennsylvania has the right to become a Progressive"—changing the language a little—although they had better watch him. He will take the whole thing if they give him a chance.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, in making my criticisms upon the horrible picture of the civil-service record of the present administration, I was not expressing my own opinion, but was expressing the deliberate criticisms of a responsible nonpartisan body of gentlemen constituting the National Civil Service Association. The Senator has the right to say that perhaps, I having been a partisan a large part of my active life, such criticisms ought to be made conservatively; but I was quoting from the report of the Civil Service Commission, which condemns in emphatic—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Civil Service League, the Senator means.

Mr. PENROSE. The Civil Service League, which is nonpartisan, and three-fourths of which may be Democrats so far as I know, but they are all gentlemen engaged in a propaganda which they believe in; and it is very apparent, from reading their last two annual reports, that they condemn in emphatic terms every legislative and administrative act of the present administration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if you will go back you will find that that same league has condemned every administration that has ever existed, so far as its treatment of civil-service problems was concerned. While I believe in a genuine civil service, while I believe in a genuine recognition of merit in appointments, I must confess that I am not sure that the kid-glove crowd connected with the Civil Service League know more about it than practical men who have had more to do with political affairs. If you will go back to your previous administrations you will find that they never have commended anybody. They have always found something to criticize. That is their business.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, Mr. President, they may never have commended anybody. Their task is criticism, I admit, but in the whole history of the league—I do not know how long it has been in existence—there never was an indictment of an administration of the character and extent that is contained in this year's and last year's report with reference to the Wilson administration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will ask the Senator if he has read all their reports?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. All their previous reports?

Mr. PENROSE. I read them every year with very great interest, as I read a great many other reports. I have them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not them here; but I really can find in them ample material criticizing all the other administrations besides.

Mr. PENROSE. It may be, but never an indictment such as is contained here.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think there could have been a much weaker one than this report contains.

Mr. PENROSE. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly it is, and I was giving mine.

Some one sends me a memorandum giving me the name of an auditor in the Post Office Department, and states that he is a partisan Republican. I do not know whether he is or not. I will say that I have found him as courteous in my dealings with him as anyone else I have found; and I will not add his name personally to this controversy, because whatever party he belongs to, I have found him exceedingly pleasant to deal with, and I am glad he is left, no matter what party he is connected with.

Mr. PENROSE. If he is the gentleman I have in mind, he is kept there because a new man absolutely could not do his work. He is a skilled expert, has been in the department a great number of years, and is kept there, not out of any love and affection, but simply because the department could not get along without him.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. However that may be, that is an excellent reason for keeping him.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I believe in keeping that kind of men, and I am glad that the Senator from Pennsylvania also believes in keeping them.

Mr. President, I have taken more time than I intended. I only desired to rise to express a recognition of the fact that when the Senator from Pennsylvania speaks and presents issues against the Democratic Party, that the Republican Party is speaking; for mental power and force of character he stands among the very first in his party, at the very head. I speak seriously. I am perfectly frank and sincere when I pay tribute to his great ability and his strength of character. Whenever he speaks and presents his indictment of the Democratic administration I know that no one will present a stronger one. However much it may surprise him I desire to close by adding that having listened to his indictment of Wednesday a week ago, and his fully prepared indictment of to-day, I feel that the Democratic Party may be congratulated that nothing serious is presented.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to add either to the jest or the zest of the particular question raised by the able Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and countered upon by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. There is a view I desire at this time to express, hoping that I may allay for the future time a misconception and set at end an indulgence that is generally enjoyed by certain members of our honorable opponents—the Republican Party—concerning an expression used by the President of the United States. It is that of "Too proud to fight."

To-day's papers bring me the information that the candidate for the Presidency of the United States on the Republican ticket, Judge Hughes, after doing me the compliment of making some reference to myself and to my expressed views, makes an allusion to the President and scoffs at the President in terms touching himself, such as "Not too proud to fight."

Mr. President, it has been a busy occupation on the part of certain gentlemen in America to seize upon that expression, "too proud to fight," and, playing around and about it, to capitalize it to what they imagine is their political advantage. As I desire to have something to say touching that expression which the President of the United States used, and concerning that which the able candidate of the Republican Party is quoted as saying, I prefer to impose upon the Senate for a moment by expressing some views—some to be quoted, as they consist mostly of historical and classical allusions.

Mr. President, we who admire the independent intelligence of Judge Hughes deplore that he has surrendered to the yelp and bark of "Blanche," "Sweetheart," and "Tray" in the refrain of "too proud to fight," and upon this attack President Wilson, charging the use of the expression as a confession of weakness or cowardice on the part of the President, speaking for himself and his country. I had hoped that Judge Hughes might be saved from the exhibition of ignorance displayed by so many lesser but anxious assailants of that which they did not understand.

The expression "too proud to fight" used at Philadelphia by the President to an audience of courageous, Christian people, was the adaptation of an old quotation from the classics, ancient as the Scripture. Its meaning is known to be that a brave people, filled with the consciousness of their right and conscious of their superior strength, were too proud to fight where a concession of what was right would bring justice to all. Too proud to use brute strength to overcome a weak people where by understanding, on the basis of humanity, the rights of all would be preserved and the friendships of all maintained. The President presumed on the intelligence of his audience to understand.

The expression "too proud to fight" is the adaptation of the line from the Latin "non dimicare est vincere," meaning "Not to fight is to conquer."

Lord Chatham used it January 20, 1775, in Parliament, in his speech on the removal of the English troops from Boston. There he applied the "too proud to fight" adage to the condition of America in her weakness compared to Great Britain, as our strength is compared to Mexico. Said Chatham:

Allay the ferment prevailing in America by removing the obnoxious hostile cause, obnoxious and unserviceable, for their merit can only be inaction—"non dimicare est vincere."

Continuing, he said:

Their force would be most disproportionately exerted against a brave and generous people. * * *

Closing with the query, he cried out:

Is the spirit of persecution never to be appeased?

Mr. President, Charles Sumner, in a speech in the United States Senate in the Trent affair, on January 7, 1862, sustaining President Lincoln, who had declined to permit war over a principle contended for by an opponent, fixed in international law, but which our Nation under excitement had in haste violated—and concerning which had we gone to war would have involved us in a conflict to establish that which we knew was not the principle of right but the principle of force—Senator Sumner said, referring to what was called "surrender":

In this surrender, if such it may be called, the National Government does not even "stoop to conquer." It simply lifts itself to the height of its original principles. The early efforts of its best negotiators, the patriotic trial of its soldiers * * * may at length prevail. Yet * * * there are victories of force; but here is a victory of truth.

Concerning this speech of Mr. Sumner, in his adaptation and construction of the phrase "too proud to fight," one of his American historians, Mr. Morse, has this to say:

The speech was generally approved by men of all parties on this side of the ocean. It smoothed the ruffled sensibilities and turned apparent humiliation into triumph.

Mr. President, I often regret that President Wilson can not find it compatible with his sense of the dignity of his position to sometimes enter into explanations—not that he should descend to make defense where accusation is made from sources absurd and ridiculous, but that he might demonstrate to the great mass of his fellow mankind how, prompted by malevolence in some instances and by ignorance in others, are the sources of the assaults upon him.

Mr. President, as the present campaign progresses let us all hope that, out of a wish for a just discussion of real issues and from a respect to the dignity of the contest, there may be an end to the display of frenzy or foolishness and that both candidates may be exempt from the malevolence of malice or the absurdities of ignorance.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in the speech of the Senator from Illinois. It reminds me a good deal of Coke upon Littleton.

Mr. LEWIS. I may say, in answer to my able friend, that Coke upon Littleton has its present application only in referring to something that has been badly burned and smoked out. Coke invariably has to be. I do not know to what my able friend may refer in the application he makes; but I did intend to light a small fire, hoping that in its conflagration little bugs that had buzzed and hummed around this particular political possibility may be burned out. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, unless an order to the contrary has been agreed to in my absence, I ask that the first reading of the bill be in full. It can then be taken up for amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There has been no order made, as the Chair understands.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] asked on yesterday that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for committee amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the very question I asked. I was not present when that order was made, and I simply wanted to know the situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary informs the present occupant of the chair that there is no record of any such order. Does the Senator from Florida make that request?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Would the Senator from New Hampshire object to such an order?

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the bill be read in full first. I think we will not gain any time by the other procedure.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I understand the bill is simply being read now, and not for amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was no unanimous consent granted to waive the reading of the bill, so it must be read.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hardwick	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Hollis	O'Gorman	Smoot
Brandegee	Hughes	Overman	Sterling
Bryan	Husting	Phelan	Stone
Chilton	Jones	Pittman	Swanson
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Reed	Thomas
Clarke, Ark.	Lane	Shafroth	Thompson
Cummins	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Tillman
Curtis	Lewis	Shields	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Williams
Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. LANE. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on official business.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is absent on important business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia and Mr. RANSDELL entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, and Mr. WARREN answered to their names when called.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I dislike exceedingly to take a single moment of time in discussing a matter not related to the bill under consideration, but in accordance with the notice I gave on the 7th instant that I would occupy a few moments in calling attention to the powers, duties, and responsibilities of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, I avail myself of the opportunity to do so at this time.

For many years prior to 1912 we had controversies in both Houses of Congress over the rates for gas, electric light, telephone service, and transportation on the street railways of the District. In view of that fact there was a strong demand made that a public utilities commission should be created that would take out of Congress all such matters, and have them adjusted by a commission clothed with full powers to ascertain values, regulate rates and charges, and enforce their demands. At that time I was chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and in response to that demand, during the recess of Congress, I came to Washington in midsummer and spent about a month in formulating a bill that would meet the popular demand on that subject.

In considering the proposed legislation the services of the District attorney, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and leading citizens of the District were availed of, and the men at the head of the several public utilities were also required to present their views. To my surprise no man at the head of a public utility opposed the proposition that a public utilities commission should be created. Most of the laws passed by the several States of the country were carefully examined, and after a study covering three or four weeks a bill was framed, many provisions of which will be found in the statutes of Wisconsin, New York, and Maryland. I presented that bill to the Senate and secured its passage as an amendment to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, the public sentiment being so strong in its favor that there was no objection to its consideration as an amendment to that bill. The House concurred in the amendment, and it became a law on the 4th day of March, 1913.

As before suggested, the law was passed for the express purpose of taking out of Congress the discussion of matters relating to public utilities of the District, as the States had similarly done with a view to relieving the legislatures of all matters of that kind. The statute creating the commission is as strict a law as any State in the Union has passed, and is fully adequate to protect the people in all their rights as against the corporations.

On Thursday of last week, when the District of Columbia appropriation bill was under consideration, and an amendment was pending reducing the price of gas in the District, I called attention to the fact that the matter should be left entirely to the Public Utilities Commission. I have a distinct recollection of a disagreeable observation that I heard made by a Senator sitting quite a little distance from me when the charge was made that I was defending the corporations, and in that way opposing the interests of the common people of the District, but such suggestions never disturb me in the least. It will be recalled that my contention on that occasion was that Congress should not interfere with a matter that had been placed unreservedly in the hands of a commission with express legislative authority to do the very thing that was being done in the Senate, to wit, to regulate the price of public-utility services.

I now propose, in as brief a manner as possible, to call attention to some of the salient features of the act of March 4, 1913, and trust that Senators will give attention to them. I will take such paragraphs from the law as relate to the powers, duties, and responsibilities of the public-service commission, not for the purpose of controversy, but that the matter may be fairly presented to the Senate.

Par. 2. That every public utility doing business within the District of Columbia is required to furnish service and facilities reasonably safe and adequate and in all respects just and reasonable. The charge made by any such public utility for any facility or services furnished, rendered, or to be furnished or rendered, shall be reasonable, just, and non-discriminatory. Every unjust or unreasonable or discriminatory charge for such facility or service is prohibited and is hereby declared unlawful. Every public utility is hereby required to obey the lawful orders of the commission created by this section.

Par. 6. That the commission shall ascertain, as soon and as nearly as practicable, the amount of money expended in the construction and equipment of every public utility, including the amount of money expended to procure any right of way; also the amount of money it would require to secure the right of way, reconstruct any roadbed, track, depots, cars, conduits, subways, poles, wires, switchboards, exchanges, offices, works, storage plants, power plants, machinery, and any other property or instrument not included in the foregoing enumeration used in or useful to the business of such public utility, and to replace all the physical properties belonging to the public utility. It shall ascertain the outstanding stock, bonds, debentures, and indebtedness, and the amount, respectively, thereof, the date when issued, to whom issued, to whom sold, the price paid in cash, property, or labor therefor, what disposition was made of the proceeds, by whom the indebtedness is held, so far as ascertainable, the amount purporting to be due thereon, the floating indebtedness of the public utility, the credits due the public utility, other property on hand belonging to it, the judicial or other sales of said public utility, its property or franchises, and the amounts purporting to have been paid, and in what manner paid therefor, and the taxes paid thereon. The commission shall also ascertain in detail the gross and net income of the public utility from all sources, the amounts paid for salaries to officers and the wages paid to its employees, and the maximum hours of continuous service required of each class. Whenever the information required by this paragraph is obtained it shall be printed in the annual report of the commission. In making such investigation the commission may avail itself of any information in possession of any department of the Government of the United States or of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Par. 7. That the commission shall value the property of every public utility within the District of Columbia actually used and useful for the convenience of the public at the fair value thereof at the time of said valuation.

Par. 9. That the commission may at any time, on its own initiative, make a revaluation of the property of any public utility.

Par. 11. That the commission shall prescribe the forms of all books, accounts, papers, and records required to be kept, and every public utility is required to keep and render its books, accounts, papers, and records accurately and faithfully in the manner and form prescribed by the commission, and to comply with all directions of the commission relating to such books, accounts, papers, and records. In so far as practicable for the purposes of this section, the form prescribed shall be the form accepted by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Par. 21. That the commission shall ascertain and fix adequate and serviceable standards for the measurement of quality, pressure, initial voltage, or other condition pertaining to the supply of the product or service rendered by any public utility, and prescribe reasonable regulations for examining and testing such product or service and for the measurement thereof. It shall establish reasonable rules, regulations, specifications, and standards to secure the accuracy of all meters and appliances for measurements, and every public utility is required to carry into effect all orders issued by the commission relative thereto.

Par. 34. That the commission or any commissioner or any person or persons employed by the commission for that purpose shall, upon demand, have the right to inspect the books, accounts, papers, records, and memoranda of any public utility, and to examine, under oath, any officer, agent, or employee of such public utility in relation to its business and affairs. Any person other than one of said commissioners who shall make such demand shall produce his authority to make such inspection or examination.

Par. 35. That the commission may require, by order or subpoena, to be served upon any public utility in the same manner that a summons is served in a civil action in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the production within the District of Columbia at such time and place as it may designate of any books, accounts, papers, or records kept by such public utility in any office or place without the District of Columbia, or verified copies in lieu thereof, if the commission shall so order, in order that an examination thereof may be made by the commission under its direction. Any public utility failing or refusing to comply with any order or subpoena shall for each day it shall so fail or refuse forfeit and pay to the District of Columbia the sum of $100, to be recovered in an action to be brought in the name of said District.

Par. 41. That if upon such investigation the rates, tolls, charges, schedules, or joint rates shall be found to be unjust, unreasonable, insufficient, or unjustly discriminatory, or to be preferential or otherwise in violation of any of the provisions of this section, the commission shall have power to determine and by order fix and order to be substituted therefor such rate or rates, tolls, charges, or schedules as shall be just and reasonable. If upon such investigation it shall be found that any regulation, time schedule, act, or service complained of is unjust, unreasonable, insufficient, preferential, unjustly discriminatory, or otherwise in violation of any of the provisions of this section, or if it be found that reasonable service is not supplied, the commission shall have power to determine and substitute therefor such other regulations, time schedules, service, or acts and to make such orders respecting and such changes in such regulations, time schedules, service, or acts as shall be just and reasonable.

Par. 42. That if upon investigation it shall be found that any rate, toll, charge, schedule, or joint rate, or rates, is unjust, unreasonable, insufficient, or unjustly discriminatory or preferential, or otherwise in violation of any of the provisions of this section, or that any time schedule, regulation, act, or service complained of is unjust, unreasonable, insufficient, preferential, or otherwise in violation of any of the provisions of this section, or if it be found that reasonable service is not supplied, the public utility found to be at fault shall pay the expenses incurred by the commission upon such investigation.

Par. 55. That the commission shall, within its jurisdiction—

Have general supervision of all gas corporations and electrical corporations having authority under any general or special law or under any charter or franchise to lay down, erect, or maintain wires, pipes, conduits, ducts, or other fixtures in, over, or under the streets, highways, and public places in the District of Columbia for the purpose of furnishing or distributing gas or of furnishing or transmitting electricity for light, heat, or power, or maintaining underground conduits or ducts for electrical conductors, and all gas plants and electric plants owned, leased, or operated by any corporation.

Investigate and ascertain, from time to time, the quality and quantity of gas supplied by persons or corporations; examine or investigate the methods employed by such persons and corporations in manufacturing, distributing, and supplying gas or electricity for light, heat, or power, and in transmitting the same, and have power to order such reasonable improvements as will reasonably promote the public interest, preserve the public health, and protect those using such gas or electricity and those employed in the manufacture and distribution thereof or in the manufacture and operation of the works, wires, poles, lines, conduits, ducts, and systems connected therewith, and have power to order reasonable improvements and extensions of the works, wires, poles, lines, conduits, ducts, and other reasonable devices, apparatus, and property of gas corporations and electrical corporations.

Par. 61. That all public utilities to which an order of the commission applies shall make such changes in their schedules on file as may be necessary to make the same conform to said order, and no change shall thereafter be made by any public utility in any such rates, tolls, or charges, or in any joint rate or rates, without the approval of the commission. Certified copies of all other orders of the commission shall be delivered to the public utility affected thereby in like manner, and the same shall take effect within such reasonable time thereafter as the commission shall prescribe.

Par. 63. That all rates, tolls, charges, time and condition of payment thereof, schedules, and joint rates fixed by the commission shall be in force and shall be prima facie reasonable until finally found otherwise in an action brought for that purpose.

Par. 64. That if at any time the commission shall be in doubt of the elements of value to be by them considered in arriving at the true valuation under the provisions of this section, they are authorized and empowered to institute a proceeding in equity in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, petitioning said court to instruct them as to the element or elements of value to be by them considered as aforesaid, and the particular utility under valuation at the time shall be made party defendant in said action.

Par. 66. That no injunction shall issue suspending or staying any order of the commission, except upon application to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia or a judge thereof, and only upon notice to the commission and after hearing had.

Par. 85. That if any public utility shall violate any provision of this section, or shall do any act herein prohibited, or shall fail or refuse to perform any duty enjoined upon it for which a penalty has not been provided, or shall fail, neglect, or refuse to obey any lawful requirement or order made by the commission, or any judgment or decree made by any court upon its application, for every such violation, failure, or refusal such public utility shall forfeit and pay to the District of Columbia the sum of $200 for each such offense. In construing and enforcing the provisions of this paragraph, the act, omission, or failure of any officer, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any public utility acting within the scope of his employment, and instructions shall in every case be deemed to be the act, omission, or failure of such public utility.

Par. 87. That every day during which any public utility, or any officer, agent, or employee thereof, shall fail knowingly or willfully to observe and comply with any order or direction of the commission, or to perform any duty enjoined by this section, shall constitute a separate and distinct violation of such order, or direction, or of this section, as the case may be.

Par. 88. That whenever, after hearing and investigation as provided in this section, the commission shall find that any rate, toll, charge, regulation, or practice of any public utility within the District of Columbia is unreasonable or discriminatory, it shall have the power to regulate, fix, and determine the same as provided in this section.

Par. 24. That every public utility shall file with the commission, within a time to be fixed by the commission, schedules, which shall be open to public inspection, showing all rates, tolls, and charges which it has established and which are in force at the time for any service performed by it within the District of Columbia, or for any service in connection therewith or performed by any public utility controlled or operated by it. The rates, tolls, and charges shown on such schedules shall not exceed the rates, tolls, and charges now allowed by law, and shall be the lawful rates, tolls, and charges within the District of Columbia, and shall remain and be in force until set aside by the commission.

Par. 73. That no public utility shall hereafter issue any stocks, stock certificates, bonds, mortgages, or any other evidences of indebtedness payable in more than one year from date, until it shall have first obtained the certificate of the commission showing authority for such issue from the commission.

Par. 74. That no public utility shall issue any stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness for money, property, or services, either directly or indirectly, nor shall it receive any money, property, or services in payment of the same, either directly or indirectly, until there shall have been recorded upon the books of such public utility the certificate of the commission in this section provided for.

Par. 75. That no public utility shall declare any stock, bond, or scrip dividend or divide the proceeds of the sale of any stock, bond, or scrip among its stockholders.

Par. 76. That no public utility shall issue any stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness secured on its property in the District of Columbia for the purpose of any reorganization or consolidation in excess of the total amount of the stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness then outstanding against the public utilities so reorganizing or consolidating; and no such public utility shall purchase the property of any other public utility for the purpose of effecting a consolidation until the commission shall have determined and set forth in writing that said consolidation will be in the public interest, nor until the commission shall have approved in writing the terms upon which said consolidation shall be made.

Par. 77. That no public utility shall apply the proceeds of any such stock, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidence of indebtedness to any other purpose, or issue the same on any less favorable terms, than that specified in the certificate issued by the commission.

Par. 78. That all stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, and other evidences of indebtedness issued contrary to the provisions of this section shall be void.

Par. 79. That any public utility, or any agent, director, or officer thereof, who shall, directly or indirectly, issue or cause to be issued any stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness contrary to the provisions of this section, or who shall apply the proceeds from the sale thereof to any purposes other than that specified in the certificate of the commission, shall forfeit and pay into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia, not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000 for each offense.

Par. 80. That each and every director, president, secretary, or other official of any such public utility who shall make any false statement to secure the issue of any stock, certificate of stock, bond, mortgage, or other evidence of indebtedness, or who shall, by false statement knowingly made, procure the commission the making of the certificate herein provided, or issue, with knowledge of such fraud, negotiate, or cause to be negotiated, any such stock, certificate of stock, bond, mortgage, or other evidence of indebtedness in violation of this section, shall be guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 or by imprisonment for a term of not less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Par. 81. That if any public utility, or any agent or officer thereof, shall, directly or indirectly, by any device whatsoever, or otherwise, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person, firm, or corporation a greater or less compensation for any service rendered or to be rendered by it in, or affecting or relating to, the conduct of a street railroad or street railroad corporation, common carrier, gas plant, gas corporation, electric plant, electric corporation, water-power company, telephone line, telephone corporation, telegraph line, or telegraph corporation, or pipe-line company, or to the production, transmission, delivery, or furnishing of heat, light, water, or power, or the conveyance of telephone or telegraph messages, or for any service in connection therewith than that prescribed in the public schedules or tariffs then in force or established as provided herein, or than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person, firm, or corporation other than one conducting a like business for a like and contemporaneous service, such public utility shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared to be a misdemeanor and unlawful, and upon conviction thereof shall forfeit and pay to the District of Columbia not less than $100 nor more than $1,000 for each offense; and such agent or officer so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $100 for each offense.

It will thus be seen, Mr. President, that every possible safeguard has been thrown around the interests of the public in this statute, and that the duties of the commission are specifically laid down, with penalties for the nonobservance of their duties.

The chief point that I desire to emphasize is that provided in paragraph 24, which states:

The rates, tolls, and charges shown on such schedules shall not exceed the rates, tolls, and charges now allowed by law, and shall be the lawful rates, tolls, and charges within the District of Columbia, and shall remain and be in force until set aside by the commission.

Another matter that is worthy of particular attention is the provision relating to the issuance of stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness. This provision makes it utterly impossible for any corporation in this District to do what is alleged against the Washington Gas Light Co., and absolutely safeguards the public against any increase of the capitalization of that or any other corporation without the sanction of law. The provision placing in the hands of the commission complete power and authority to change the rates, tolls, and charges is full and conclusive, and yet the Senate, unmindful of that provision, saw fit to change the charges for gas in the District of Columbia. It was an open and palpable nonobservance of law, as Congress had transferred its authority in that regard to a commission, which was clothed with authority and directed to do the very thing that Congress did.

Mr. President, I call attention to this matter in justice to myself. I am not now a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia and do not expect in the future to have much to do in the framing of laws for this District, but, after a service of 22 years on the committee, I am quite unwilling that it should go to the country that I have neglected my duties and permitted the corporations of the District to take advantage of the consuming public. It is a charge that has no foundation in fact and ought not to be made by any Member of this body, and I think I feel entirely justified in saying that under no circumstances would it have been made by any Senator on either side of the Chamber who has served with me for a considerable length of time. If we are to utterly ignore the statute placing the authority to which I have called attention in the hands of the Public Utilities Commission and proceed to legislate ourselves on matters that are entirely in their hands, we certainly should follow that by abolishing the commission, which under such circumstances will be a useless, unnecessary, and costly institution. Failing in that, we should refrain from legislating on matters that are in the jurisdiction of the commission, placed there by Congress in an unrevoked statute.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. WORKS. Does the Senator know of an instance since the enactment of this legislation on the subject where the work of the commission has proved unsatisfactory and in which they have neglected their duties in any way?

Mr. GALLINGER. I confess I can not answer that question. Having been responsible for this statute to a very large extent, and recalling the fact that we had safeguarded it to the extent that we had, and placed in this commission this absolute and undisputed power, I confess it was a surprise to me that the matter should ever have been brought up in the Senate.

Mr. WORKS. I wondered at it myself, and that led me to inquire whether the Senator had any knowledge of the reason for taking that course.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not.

Mr. WORKS. I think the Senator is perfectly right in saying that the matter should be left to the commission, as we have constituted that commission with ample authority. I think I had something to do with that legislation myself, as the Senator will remember.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from California had.

Mr. WORKS. I had something to do with getting that law into proper shape, and I thought it was fairly satisfactory.

Mr. JONES addressed the Senate. After having spoken for an hour and three quarters,

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire of the Senator whether he thinks he can conclude his address this afternoon?

Mr. JONES. No. I have taken much more time than I had expected. I really hoped that I would not need to start in to-day because I simply had notes made. I think if I had had time to reduce my remarks to writing I could have cut them very much shorter, because I have gone on very much longer now than I expected. I could not get through to-day, and if the Senator from Florida would like to have the Senate take a recess I shall be very glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to save all the time I can in the matter, but under the circumstances, as this has been a long day, I expect we would not lose any time if we took a recess now.

Mr. JONES. I think not. I may be able to condense my notes to-night and make my remarks shorter to-morrow.

[Mr. JONES's entire speech is printed in the Senate proceedings of August 11, 1916.]

Mr. FLETCHER. If it suits the Senator, I will move that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. JONES. Very well.

Mr. FLETCHER. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, August 11, 1916, at 10 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, August 11, 1916.

(Legislative day of Thursday, August 10, 1916.)

The Senate reassembled at 10 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think we ought to have a quorum present before beginning the labors of the day. I observe but one Senator on the other side of the Chamber. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brady	Gronna	Nelson	Sherman
Bryan	Hardwick	Norris	Simmons
Chamberlain	Hollis	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Chilton	Husting	Penrose	Smith, S. C.
Clapp	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Smoot
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Pomerene	Sterling
Colt	Kenyon	Ransdell	Vardaman
Culberson	Kern	Reed	Warren
Dillingham	Lane	Robinson	Works.
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Shafer
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CURTIS, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. TOWNSEND answered to their names when called.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] is absent on account of sickness in his family, which has continued for some little time. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. SIMMONS rose.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the purpose for which I rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. OLIVER, Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. WILLIAMS, and Mr. BANKHEAD entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

SPANISH RIVER BRIDGE, ALABAMA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6372) to authorize the counties of Baldwin and Mobile, Ala., their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Spanish River at or near the junction of Raft and Spanish Rivers, which were, on page 1, line 4, after "Alabama," to insert "their"; on page 1, line 4, after the word "and" where it occurs the second time, to insert "they"; on page 1, line 5, to strike out "all"; and to amend the title so as to read "An act to authorize the counties of Baldwin and Mobile, Ala., their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Spanish River at or near the junction of Raft and Spanish Rivers."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PORT OF NEW YORK.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the League for Municipal Ownership and Operation in New York City with reference to an investigation of the terminal facilities at the port of New York. The communication will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The communication is as follows:

THE LEAGUE FOR MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP AND OPERATION IN NEW YORK CITY,
New York, August 10, 1916.

Hon. WOODROW WILSON, President of the United States; Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL, President of the Senate; and Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Speaker of the House, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: The port of New York is not a port of New York State nor of any locality, but of the United States. The problem of the port terminal facilities for all railroads, particularly in view of the shipping arrangements and connections, is a national problem. We are now confronted with a crisis in the port development due to the effort of the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co. to secure a monopoly of the west side of Manhattan from about Canal Street north and of the west side of The Bronx, so that it may prevent other railroads from securing access to the city on the same terms.

We therefore respectfully request that Congress appoint a committee to investigate the port problem of New York City as a national problem, or, if it commend itself to your judgment, that the recently appointed Committee on Railroads include such a study as part of its task.

The Pennsylvania Railroad and the Central Railroad of New Jersey monopolize a large part of the water front of the Jersey shore opposite New York City. The problems of the two sides of the Hudson River are one, in fact, despite the dual governmental control.

The New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co. has a long unenviable record of manipulation and privilege. It now owns an important, if not the controlling, interest in 8 noncarrier and in 42 carrier companies. It is capitalized for $400,000,000, and the assessed value of its realty holdings in New York City is approximately $40,000,000, while the assessed value of realty holdings of one of its subsidiary companies in the city is nearly $6,000,000.

Because of its easy grades and few curves the Central can carry freight from the west cheaper than most of the railroads terminating on the Jersey shore, but it enjoys the same freight rates, so that it includes the lighterage charges which railroads terminating in New Jersey have to pay on freight carried to New York.

As the late Mr. James J. Hill pointed out, the problem of terminals is the most important problem for railroads to-day.

We are seeking Federal aid to dredge the harbor, which gives the National Government a direct monetary interest in the problem of port development in addition to the vital connection due to the fact that the city of New York is the chief port of the country.

We urge that you will take prompt action on this request, as a proposal is pending to grant this monopoly to the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co., which will militate not only against the city of New York, but against the commerce of the country, and most injuriously affect the proper interest of the farmers, at least throughout the Middle West.

Yours, truly,

AMOS PINCHOT,
Honorary President.

FREDERIC C. HOWE,
President.

JOHN J. HOPPER,
Chairman Committee on West Side Improvement.
FREDERIC C. LEUBUSCHER,
Chairman of the Executive Committee.

EMBARGO ON WHEAT.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a telegram from the National Association of Master Bakers with reference to placing an embargo on the exportation of wheat, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15455) to establish a United States Shipping Board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water engaged in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States; and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I see the chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. SIMMONS] is present, and I should like to ask him a question or two for information. I want to ask the Senator whether he can tell me what bill it is intended to make the unfinished business when the shipping bill shall have been disposed of?

Mr. SIMMONS. I could not answer the Senator definitely without knowing when the shipping bill will probably be disposed of. If the shipping bill can be disposed of to-day, why, we might take up one bill, and if it can not be disposed of to-day, we might take up a different bill. Does the Senator from Washington think that we can have a vote on the shipping bill to-day?

Mr. JONES. I doubt that; but I had understood that it was the program when the shipping bill was disposed of that the revenue bill would be taken up and made the unfinished business.

Mr. SIMMONS. The program is not a rigid one; it has some little elasticity. The order in which the bills are to be taken up according to the program is to be determined by the steering committee.

Mr. JONES. Well, has the steering committee determined upon what bill will be taken up or is likely to be taken up when the shipping bill is disposed of?

Mr. SIMMONS. That depends, as I tried to state to the Senator a little while ago, on when the shipping bill is disposed of. I will try to answer the Senator as definitely and as frankly as I can. If the shipping bill shall be disposed of to-day, I think probably the workmen's compensation bill would be taken up.

Mr. JONES. If that bill should be disposed of to-day, what bill would then be taken up?

Mr. SIMMONS. We might possibly take up the Philippines bill.

Mr. JONES. The conference report?

Mr. SIMMONS. There are several of those small bills which, likely, will take very little time; and if we had a hiatus of probably a day or two days, as the revenue bill is not ready this morning and will not be ready to-day, we would probably take up one of those bills; especially the workmen's compensation bill might fill in some little time.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask the Senator whether or not the revenue bill since it came over from the House of Representatives has been yet considered by the Finance Committee?

Mr. SIMMONS. The revenue bill has not yet been laid before the full membership of the Finance Committee. The revenue bill has been under consideration, however, during the last month by the majority membership of the committee, in pursuance of the custom and practice that has obtained in the Senate with reference to revenue bills from time immemorial.

Mr. JONES. So that, as I understand, the revenue bill has not yet been given any consideration in the full committee?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; the revenue bill has not yet been taken up by the full committee.

Mr. JONES. As I understand, the majority members of the committee have not yet agreed upon the terms of the revenue bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. Practically the majority members of the committee have done so. There is only one subject with reference to which we have not finally come to a conclusion.

Mr. JONES. Will the majority members of the Finance Committee submit their agreement to the full committee before it is submitted to the Democratic caucus, or will they first submit it to the Democratic caucus?

Mr. SIMMONS. They will first submit it to the Democratic caucus. They have already—if the Senator wishes to go into that—submitted it to the Democratic caucus. The Democratic caucus is now considering it; but I should say that there is one title of the bill that we have not yet submitted to the caucus, because the Democratic membership of the committee has not yet agreed as to that. I have no doubt, however, I will state to the Senator, that at our meeting this morning we shall agree.

Mr. JONES. Is that to be a meeting of the committee members?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is the meeting of the Democratic committee members, yes. I have no doubt we shall agree this morning, and that at our caucus to-night we shall be prepared to present the whole bill as we have amended it.

Mr. JONES. Can the Senator give me any idea as to the time the bill is likely to be considered by the Democratic caucus?

Mr. SIMMONS. I could not give the Senator anything more than a conjecture. I have very strong hope that we shall be able to lay the bill before the full committee on Monday, and that on Tuesday morning I shall be able to present the bill to the Senate.

Mr. JONES. So the Senator hopes that the Democratic caucus will be able to complete its consideration of the bill this week?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. JONES. And that on Monday he will present it to the full committee?

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I hope, and what I believe we shall be able to do.

Mr. JONES. And he will expect the full committee to act upon it immediately without any further consideration, and he will be prepared to report it on Tuesday?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator that I have been a member of the Finance Committee for now quite a long time. Several tariff bills have been framed since I became a member of that committee—one in 1909, known as the Payne-Aldrich bill. That bill was framed altogether by the Republican members of that committee, without any consultation whatever with the minority members. When it was finished we were called together; it was laid down before us and we were told to take it or leave it. We took it because we could not help ourselves. I do not know, and therefore can not say, whether or not the full committee will require a long time for the consideration of the bill or not; but I know—

Mr. JONES. The Senator, however, is—

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator permit me to finish?

Mr. JONES. I was not asking for all these explanations. I was simply asking for facts; that is all I wanted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall be through in one second. I know when we passed the present tariff act this same course was pursued. We presented it to the full committee, and we were through with our labors in a very short time. The same thing was done with reference to the present emergency act. I am merely meaning to say that heretofore—I am not making any criticism of the Republican action in establishing this precedent—but I mean to say that heretofore no time has been consumed in the full committee after the majority membership have reported the result of their deliberations.

Mr. JONES. Merely in the interest of the facts, I will ask does the Senator know whether or not the Payne-Aldrich bill was submitted to the Republican caucus in the Senate?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think Senator Aldrich was the caucus probably at that time and the committee, too, very largely.

Mr. JONES. That is the Senator's idea of the Republican caucus?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that was about what it resolved itself into at that time.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from North Carolina is mistaken about that.

Mr. JONES. The Senator knows, as a matter of fact, that that bill was not submitted to a caucus?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no recollection of that having been done.

Mr. JONES. It is my recollection that it was not.

Mr. SIMMONS. Not a caucus of the full membership of the Republican side, but probably a caucus of the controlling few.

Mr. JONES. Of course the Senator has no more right to make an assertion of that kind than we have to assert that because he is the chairman of the Finance Committee whatever he says goes, and that they merely go through the form of sending the bill to a Democratic caucus.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is pretty good evidence in the present situation that that is not the case.

Mr. JONES. That is the Senator's view. I have my idea of it. I have an idea that, as a matter of fact, the bill will be determined at some place other than the Democratic caucus, by somebody other than the Democratic members of the Finance Committee, and that it will be determined by somebody other than the membership of the House of Representatives or of the Senate, and by the same power that has practically determined the action of our Democratic friends with reference to several different kinds of legislation.

But, Mr. President, I did not intend to make any suggestion of this kind. I simply wanted to get at the facts in order to a certain extent to govern my action with reference to the shipping bill as to the time I might desire to take in connection with that measure, which I know the caucus has decreed shall go through in a certain way. Now, if it were the intention to take up the revenue bill—and, by the way, the Senator refers to tariff bills. Does the Senator call the revenue bill a tariff bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; it is a revenue bill; but they have been treated alike. There are some tariff items in the bill.

Mr. JONES. I did not understand the Senator's last remark.

Mr. SIMMONS. I say there are some tariff items in the bill, but it is a revenue bill. However, revenue bills and tariff bills have generally been treated alike as party measures.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to say to the Senator from North Carolina that the shipping bill will not be disposed of to-day. It may possibly be disposed of to-morrow afternoon, but, in my opinion, it is quite as likely to go over until Monday.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thank the Senator for the information. I have tried to answer the Senator from Washington very frankly, and I desire to say, in addition, that I hope to be able to present the revenue bill to the Senate on Tuesday morning, and trust that he will be in a situation then to take it up immediately and proceed with its consideration to a final vote.

Mr. JONES. As to that, I want to ask the Senator if the shipping bill is not disposed of by Tuesday morning, and the committee is prepared to report upon the revenue bill, whether that report will be submitted?

Mr. SIMMONS. The report will be submitted, but of course we would not undertake to displace the shipping bill.

Mr. JONES. Does not the Senator think it would be very desirable that those Members of the Senate who have not had access to the secret meetings of the Democratic members of the Finance Committee, who have not had access to the meetings of the caucus, who do not know anything about what the committee is going to report, and will not know anything about it until Tuesday morning, should have some little time to consider the measure which the Democratic members have been considering for several weeks, and, therefore, does not the Senator think that it would be well to have his revenue bill reported as soon as possible, and then not have it taken up as the unfinished business for at least two or three days, until other Senators can have an opportunity to inform themselves with reference to its provisions?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state very frankly to the Senator that on Tuesday, when I present the revenue bill, if I am able to do so at that time, if Senators on the other side, members of the Finance Committee especially, should ask for a day or two days' delay in order that they may examine the bill, if there is anything that we can take up to fill in that time, I shall be very glad to extend to them that opportunity. I want to say, however, to the Senator that we have had printed the only hearings that I think were had, and we have also had the briefs printed and hope to get them to Senators to-morrow. Every day as the committee has proceeded in a general way we have given to the press the result of our action during that day; so that the Senate, as well as the public, have had an opportunity to keep up in a general way with what we were doing in the committee. Of course things that we have done in the committee may be somewhat modified, and I see the force of the Senator's suggestion.

There is no disposition on our part not to permit the minority to have ample opportunity to examine the revenue bill before we take it up for consideration, if we can do so; and if the shipping bill is not finished until Monday, and I should report the revenue bill on Tuesday, I would be perfectly willing to take up the workmen's compensation bill or any of several other measures which will not consume very much time, some of which can be disposed of, in all probability, in a day, and some in less than a day, although others may take two or three days. We might fill in three or four days in that way and give the minority members opportunity to further investigate and examine the revenue bill.

Mr. JONES. I thank the Senator for his frankness in giving me the information desired.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. When the Senator kindly yielded to me before I meant to say to my friend the Senator from North Carolina that all this legislation will be greatly expedited if the majority tries to furnish a quorum at 10 o'clock. I have been here every day, with one exception, since Congress assembled in December, helping to supply a quorum. I do not know how long my strength will hold out or how long my sense of duty will impel me to come here at 10 o'clock in the morning to supply a quorum for the majority of this body. We wasted 20 minutes this morning and 20 or 25 minutes yesterday in getting a quorum, and the Senator must not be surprised, and complaint must not be made, unless matters are expedited by a quorum being supplied by a party that has 17 majority in this body, if some of the rest of us conclude to take a little rest in the forenoon.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think there is justification for the criticisms and even the strictures of the Senator from New Hampshire. No one regrets more than I the fact that we can not secure prompt attendance at our early morning sessions; but we are doing everything we can to bring about a better situation in that respect, and we will continue to do so, and I hope we will improve somewhat. If the Senators on the other side, however, would attend in larger numbers it would help those of us on this side who do come to make a quorum. Of course, the obligation is on us; I recognize that the Senator is entirely right about that; but I hope that there will be no disposition by Senators on the other side of the Chamber to embarrass us in getting a quorum by absenting themselves.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not say that there is any.

Mr. GALLINGER. None at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. But I hope there will be none.

Mr. GALLINGER. None at all, except that we are getting a little discouraged, being called here at 10 o'clock in the morning on these sultry days and required to remain here until half-past 6, when it is becoming incumbent upon us to supply a quorum. We would like very much to have our burdens alleviated as much as possible by our friends on the other side.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, just at this particular time we seem to have rather a better attendance over here than on the other side.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Hampshire, before he takes his seat, whether the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber intend to occupy the entire day in the discussion of the shipping bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. I should think so, although possibly not.

Mr. THOMAS. I have an amendment to the bill which I desire to present briefly, but will probably be otherwise engaged to-day, and if the Senator intends, or if the Republican Members of the Senate intend, to occupy the day I shall make no effort to address the Senate until to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will frankly state to the Senator from Colorado that, as I understand the situation, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] will complete his address this morning. I shall occupy probably about one hour, and I think the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] will probably be prepared to speak, but I do not know how long he will occupy. I think the Senator will have an opportunity during the day to speak on the amendment to which he has referred.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not care for the opportunity, Mr. President, unless it is necessary to expedite the consideration of the bill. To-morrow will suit me quite as well.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to make one further observation. I think probably attendance on this side and on the other side would be somewhat improved if it were understood that both sides were eagerly and actively cooperating to get through with this legislation and to get home. There has been a little suspicion that there was a disposition to unnecessarily prolong the discussion, and I think that policy has had something to do with the meager attendance that we have sometimes had. But I understand that the minority now give us assurances that there will be no disposition whatever to indulge in any unnecessary discussion.

Mr. GALLINGER. That has been announced over and over again by Senators on this side of the Chamber; and I want to ask my good friend from North Carolina—because we are good friends—that he drive from his mind those evil suspicions that he has of the Members on this side of the Chamber. We are good-natured. We would defeat all this legislation if we could, but we know we can not; and we are quite as anxious to go home, after proper legislation has been enacted, as can be the Senator from North Carolina or his associates.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator understands I have no personal suspicion. It is rather in the nature of a political suspicion.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator says that it has been suspected that there was some purpose of delay on this side, and so on. I submit that there is nothing in the Record, nothing in the proceedings of the Senate, to warrant any such suspicion as that, so far as this side is concerned. My judgment is that an examination of the Record will show that more time has been occupied on that side of the Chamber during the last three or four months, if not during the entire session, than upon this side of the Chamber.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for just a moment—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is perfectly natural when this side is responsible for legislation, and the Senators on this side are reporting bills, defending them, and explaining them to the Senate; so it is hardly a fair criticism.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but it seems to me there is nothing to justify the Senator from North Carolina in saying that they are suspicious on that side that unnecessary delay has been caused on this side.

Mr. HARDWICK. That may be. I am not passing on that question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I would suggest to the Senator also the other fact, that the legislation that is presented here generally has been legislation that has been considered in secret caucus and has been discussed on that side, and the first impression we get of it is when it is reported here to the Senate.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is not true in the majority of instances. It has been true in a very few instances.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, in the case of all the large bills—all the bills that have occupied considerable time.

Mr. HARDWICK. Just one or two bills; that is all.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have gotten the information that I desired; and now I will state to the Members of the Senate, for their convenience and in order that possibly it may expedite the business of the Senate, that I shall take until about 12 o'clock, and under the circumstances I do not expect and do not care whether Senators remain here or not. In fact, I should prefer that they go about the necessary business of the Senate, in order to expedite the conclusion of the session.

Mr. KENYON. What time did the Senator say he would finish?

Mr. JONES. I will go on until 12 o'clock, anyway, from the notes that I have here. I will say that I give this notice largely for the benefit of the Democratic members of the Finance Committee and the Democratic caucus, so that they can "get a move on them" with this revenue bill that they are trying to get up.

I am anxious that it shall get out here just as soon as possible, so that we will have an opportunity to consider it for a while, and then proceed with its consideration in the Senate, and get through with it as soon as possible.

[Mr. JONES resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday. The entire speech is as follows:]

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I appreciate the conditions under which we are considering the shipping bill and under which Senators have been laboring for a long time. We have been meeting at 10 o'clock in the morning and remaining in continuous session until 6.30 in the evening. In addition to that we have our committee meetings to attend, departmental work to look after, and also work at our offices that must be attended to. The temperature has been about 90 degrees and the humidity has been very high. Under the circumstances I know that many Senators are almost exhausted, mentally and physically. It is not surprising, therefore, that there is not very much interest being taken in the shipping bill.

Not only for these reasons, but also because of the fact that the bill has been up for consideration heretofore and has been considered at considerable length—although it has been very materially changed from what it was at that time—and that it is also understood that under caucus action no changes can be made in the bill as reported, that no amendments can be added to it, and that the bill is going to pass as reported by the caucus through the committee, I want to say to Senators who are here that they do not need to remain unless they desire to do so.

Mr. BORAH. I trust the Senator does not insist on our going?

Mr. JONES. I think that for "the good of the service" I ought to insist upon your taking a little rest. I desire to say that I am going to take about the remainder of the day in considering the matter. I say that, so that Senators who may not desire to stay here may go to their offices or go anywhere else that they desire to go, and I shall not yield, so far as I can retain the floor, even for a call for a quorum. Therefore Senators will not be disturbed.

Mr. President, never was party expediency so patent in legislation as now. Convictions are sacrificed and mature beliefs in the fundamentals of constitutional government are thrown to the winds to promote party success. Sentiment is strong for child-labor legislation by the Federal Government. Republicans were for it and for enacting it at this session. A majority of the Democrats were against it because of their belief in the doctrine of State rights. They were not in favor of acting upon it at this session. Their caucus arranged a program. Child-labor legislation was omitted. This must have been done with the approval of the President and with the knowledge that he was opposed to such legislation as unconstitutional. The political effect of such action soon became apparent. Fearful of it, the President, who had deliberately and maturely declared such legislation not only unconstitutional, but absurd, without any expression of any change of view, communicated to some of the leaders of his party that he desired this legislation passed. He did not communicate his views to Congress, but he did emphasize his suggestion by coming here to the Capitol in person and conferring privately with some of the leaders of the Democratic Party.

I have heard it suggested, Mr. President, that this was a sort of prearranged theatrical performance; that it was understood as a part of the program that the Democratic caucus would leave this legislation off its program, and this would give the President the opportunity to come down to the Capitol and have it heralded abroad through the press that he had forced his party to take up this legislation, and in this way to secure some credit for this legislation. Whether that is so or not, it is very much in line with the policy that has been largely pursued with reference to various legislative matters. What was said by the President only those Senators who conferred with him know, but the caucus was called together again. Why? What was the need of such action? Republicans were for the legislation; they were not opposed to it; they were urging its passage; they were demanding early action upon it. The caucus was necessary either to carry out this theatrically staged performance or it was necessary to suppress Democratic opposition. The caucus ordered the bill taken up. It was passed; and yesterday afternoon a great newspaper, fully aware of all the facts, said editorially:

The President himself is not committed to the constitutionality of the bill; rather the other way; but he wanted it, and will sign it on the score of political expediency. He needs the bill in his campaign.

The immigration bill was on the legislative program, according to the newspaper reports and according to the general understanding about the Senate. The people want it; their Senators are for it; the President is against it. He thinks it is politically unwise to pass the bill now. He does not want to have to veto it on the eve of a campaign, and so he decrees that it go over. The Democratic caucus, again bowing to the Executive will, declares that the bill shall not be taken up.

Rather an unusual performance took place to-day. During the morning hour, soon after the Senate met, under the order of business of petitions, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] rose and announced that he proposed to see to it that the Senate should take a vote on the immigration bill before the session is over. Following suit, the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] made the same announcement; and yet, upon a motion to take it up a few days ago a solid Democratic vote is recorded "nay" and a solid Republican vote is recorded "yea." This vote will be found at page 11873 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 31. It is interesting to note that upon that roll call the distinguished Senators who announced to-day that they proposed to have a vote on the bill are recorded as not voting; but, as I have said, every vote to table the motion to take up the immigration bill was a Democratic vote, and every vote against tabling that motion was a Republican vote. The ambassadors of sovereign States obey the Executive mandate and caucus decree rather than the people's will. The people themselves will pass upon the record thus made.

Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss the propositions that have been before the Senate to-day. It did occur to me, however, that if a simple, plain statement of fact like that made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] can cause so much commotion, so much apparent excitement and uneasiness, and such loud protests from our Democratic friends on the other side, they will certainly be in such a hysterically delirious state of mind before November comes around that will be beyond the conception of any finite mind.

Mr. President, the bill that is under consideration is known as the shipping bill. It is another party caucus decree imposed upon an unwilling majority by Executive domination. Its fundamental principles are not approved by a majority of the Democrats, much less by a majority of the membership of Congress. It is another headstone erected at the grave of another discarded pledge of the Democratic platform of 1912. The uncertain, hesitating, vacillating, erratic action of the Executive is and has been reflected in the same kind of action by the majority in Congress. It has been reflected with reference to this measure.

Last Congress the ship-purchase bill, so-called, was presented. It was very earnestly urged by the Executive and by the executive departments. It was a departmental framed and conceived measure. It did not have the approval of the great majority of the Democratic Members of this body, but it was pressed upon us as an emergency measure. Advantage was taken of the conditions created by the war to press the measure upon Congress for consideration. It was urged that it must be passed; American shippers were without transportation facilities; freight charges were very high; and the only relief that was offered after the emergency shipping bills that had been enacted was the passage of this measure as it was then presented. The bill now before the Senate is very much different from the bill that was urged then.

That bill went through a peculiar performance. It was introduced here, went to the committee, and was reported; then objections were made to it, objections were presented to the different provisions of it, and substitute after substitute was reported. The country thought the bill would furnish them some relief. Determined opposition was made to it, not only on this side of the Chamber but on the other side of the Chamber. The methods of the opposition were vigorously denounced. All sorts of parliamentary schemes were devised in order to overcome the opposition. It was attempted to make the country believe that the opposition to the bill was a captious one, and that the majority sentiment of this Chamber was being thwarted; and yet, Mr. President, the RECORD will show that at no time was there a measure before this body for passage that commanded a majority vote of the Chamber.

The bill failed. We went home last summer and came back here in December, and have been in continuous session ever since. There has not been any special hurry about pressing this bill that was so urgent during the short session of the preceding Congress. Almost every conceivable kind of legislation has been taken up ahead of this bill. The Executive has not seemed to be very urgent about it. The departmental heads did not seem to be so insistent upon it, and many began to expect that the bill probably would not be pressed. Senators on the other side of the Chamber from time to time expressed the hope and the belief that the bill really would not be urged for final action. Many of them hoped that it would not come to a vote. They did not believe in it. They do not believe in it principles now. They do not believe that it will be of any special benefit to the people of the country, and they do not believe that it will rehabilitate our merchant marine.

It is framed on principles that are against their lifelong convictions, and, as I said, they hoped it would not be pressed. They thought it would not come up, but they could not escape the Executive mandate. Notwithstanding the fact that apparently there are no ships that can be purchased—at least, none that can be purchased at a reasonable price—notwithstanding the fact that no ships can be built for possibly two years, notwithstanding the fact that any alleged emergency can not possibly be met by this bill, word came down to the majority that they must pass it.

Why? Well, I do not know; but I have my ideas about it. I am inclined to think that its passage has been insisted upon simply to show that they can do it; that it has been insisted upon to satisfy somebody's vanity; that its passage is insisted upon simply to show the minority and the people of the country that when the Executive and the executive departments want something done, and decide that it shall be done, they can get it done.

Furthermore, I believe that behind the pressing of this bill now is about the same idea that there appears to be behind some of this other legislation. There is politics in it. There are political motives. It is thought, I suppose, that they can make the people of the country think that some great thing has been done toward building up the merchant marine of this country, and when this bill is passed our friends will go out on the stump and tell the people what wonderful things they have done toward building up an American merchant marine.

The American people are anxious for a merchant marine. We all want to see ships flying the American flag, manned by American sailors, carrying American products to all the markets of the world; and if our opponents can just simply tell the people that they have done something to bring about this desired end they think that the people will not look very much further; that they will not examine the particular legislation to see whether or not it will really do what they claim it will do, but that they can simply say, "We have passed legislation for the upbuilding of the merchant marine," and that will end it.

Of course the election comes in a couple of months. Nothing can be done under the bill before that time. Its effect can not be determined. They may start the members of this board to drawing their $10,000-a-year salaries. That may be done; but that will be as far as any accomplishment will come about before election. That is the way it has been with reference to a good deal of this legislation that they have passed and of which they are so proud.

The child-labor bill, for which most of us are heartily in favor, has been put off until the session is nearly over. It has not been pressed until just the last few days, and it does not go into effect for a year, so that the beneficent results that we hope will come from that legislation will not be taking effect until this administration is out of power.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to suggest that it was the effort of the Democratic friends of this measure to have it on the statute books as much as a year ago?

Mr. JONES. Oh, I have gone over that.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is not a new proposition, so far as this side is concerned. It can not be claimed that it is done now for election purposes.

Mr. JONES. I am afraid the Senator has not honored me by his presence. I have not asked him to do so and I do not expect him to stay here, but I have already expressed my views with reference to that matter. I have not seen any special activity toward pressing this bill to passage until just the last month or two. As a matter of fact, as I said, a good many Senators on that side of the Chamber privately expressed from time to time the hope and the belief that the bill would be allowed to slumber and pass over, and that it would not be passed; but that, of course, is not a matter of record, and may not count for anything.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that I have not been present during all of his remarks; but I distinctly heard, as I thought, the proposition that there was no chance whatever of getting ships, and therefore this was simply a play to the galleries before the election; and I wanted to remind him, in that connection, that this effort was made over a year ago.

Mr. JONES. Oh, that was not the reason I gave for thinking that this was simply a play for the election—the fact that the ships can not be purchased, or anything of that kind; but it was the dilatory way in which this bill has been pressed during the last year that led me to conclude that the main purpose of pressing it now is to get it through so that the Democratic Party could say at election time that they had done something, or tried to do something, for the American merchant marine. Of course, my friend from Florida will not agree to that; I know that; but I form my opinion simply from the record and from what has been done and from what has not been done. I form my opinion largely because of the intense activity during the short session a little over a year ago, and the urgent appeals made then for the immediate passage of the bill, and the very dilatory action and the sort of half-hearted way in which the bill has been pressed during the last year.

Then, there is the rural-credits legislation. That was passed finally. It went all through the two years of the first part of this administration and very little was done with reference to rural-credits legislation, although it was declared, I think in one of the first messages of the President, that it was of equal importance with other banking legislation. Yet nothing was done. It was not pressed. It was not urged. Nothing was enacted, and this session got very far along before the legislation was passed. The board provided for in that bill has just been appointed, and now it is stated that it will not go into active operation for six months; so that there will be nothing coming to the people prior to the election to show them any of the benefits of the legislation that has been enacted.

The benefits will all be in the future, and whatever political advantage may come from anticipated benefits will of course come to our Democratic friends from this legislation. It will be found to be a mere makeshift; an expensive, cumbersome, and burdensome system that will have to be perfected and simplified by the Republican Party. It will do this promptly after the 4th of March.

I simply call attention to this condition of the record in the hope that the people will just consider these things a little bit when our Democratic friends are telling them what wonderful things they have done for them. You will not be able to put your finger upon any very substantial benefit that can be traced to Democratic legislation.

Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, everybody is anxious for an American merchant marine. Everybody realizes its importance to every industry in the country and to every class of our people. It is a part of our patriotic desire that we should see the American flag flying upon American ships in the harbors of the world and across the seas from continent to continent. Its importance as a means of defense in case of war, its importance as a matter of industrial preparedness, can not be questioned. That is beyond argument. We need not point out the necessity and the importance of a merchant marine. We need not cite the opinions of the fathers of the Republic as to our need of a merchant marine and as to its importance in time of war and in time of peace. Everybody appreciates that.

It is said that the purpose of this bill is to build up an American merchant marine; that that is the intention of those who press it. With the declared purpose and with the declared intention, nobody can be in disagreement. The main question and the sole question is whether this bill will accomplish the purpose and the ends desired by everybody.

Mr. President, the question of building up an American merchant marine is not a party question; at least, I do not consider it a party question; I never have considered it a party question. I have hoped that legislation for its development could be framed and passed free from partisanship. There has been heretofore no substantial difference in party platform declarations with reference to the building up of an American merchant marine. Of late years the only declarations that we have had in party platforms have been of a general character. We have not gotten down to specific methods or specific plans. The last specific declaration of the Republican Party was in 1896—that is to say, that is when they declared for a specific plan of building up the American merchant marine—and I want to read the platform then:

We favor restoring the American policy of discriminating duties for the upbuilding of our merchant marine and the protection of our shipping in the foreign carrying trade, so that American ships, the product of American labor, employed in American shipyards, sailing under the Stars and Stripes, and manned, officered, and owned by Americans, may regain the carrying of our foreign commerce.

Mr. President, in my judgment, that was not only a patriotic declaration, but it was a wise declaration. It was the declaration of a wise policy to be pursued by this country. It was a declaration in favor of a policy that had been tried and tested in the early days of the Republic and had been found to be most efficient. Under this policy our merchant marine sailed every sea and entered every harbor. Our ships were the superior of the ships of any other nation.

Our sailors were the superior of those of any other nation, and through our shipping, through our seamen and our sailors, our Navy was able to gain victories in the War of the Revolution and the War of 1812 that not only reflected glory upon our sailors and our seamen, but that really brought victory out of defeat and saved our Republic from humiliation, if not from overthrow.

The Democratic platform of 1912, as I construe it, declared for the same policy, although not definitely or in so many words. The declaration is as follows:

We believe in fostering, by constitutional regulation of commerce, the growth of a merchant marine which shall develop and strengthen the commercial ties which bind us to our sister Republics of the South, but without imposing additional burdens upon the people and without bounties or subsidies from the Public Treasury.

Mr. President, when that platform was uttered the Democratic Party was in control of the House of Representatives. It had been in control for two years. Legislation for the upbuilding of the merchant marine had been presented. The bills had been reported from the committee, which was controlled by Democrats. What did they propose? Did they propose Government ownership? No. Did they propose Government operation? No. Did they propose Government purchase? No. They proposed a system of discriminating duties, and a bill was reported to the House carrying a provision for discriminating duties for the building up of the American merchant marine, and my recollection is that that provision in the bill met with the unanimous approval of Democrats and Republicans.

During that session one of the most distinguished Members of this body, one of the most able Members of this body, was chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives. He was the majority leader on the floor of the House, and he made a powerful speech in favor of building up the American merchant marine and in favor of a particular policy for doing that very desirable thing. What did he urge? What did he press upon his party colleagues and upon Congress? He urged the system of discriminating duties, and he presented in favor of that policy an argument which, in my judgment, is unanswerable.

What had the Democrats in the House of Representatives proposed when they were in the minority during the many years of Republican control? Had they proposed Government ownership? No. Did they propose Government purchase of ships? Did they propose Government operation of ships? No; but time after time they filed minority reports recommending and urging the establishment of the system of discriminating duties, and presented in these reports an argument which has not been answered to this day.

Mr. President, it is for these reasons and because of this action by the Democrats in the House when they were in the minority and when they were in the majority that I assert that their platform of 1912 was a declaration in behalf of the system of discriminating duties.

There, Mr. President, was a common ground upon which all parties could have gotten together upon this great proposition. In my judgment there is a common principle or policy upon which the great majority of the Members on both sides of this Chamber could unite; and, in my judgment, it would result in the permanent building up and development of a merchant marine for this country.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] on yesterday twitted the Republicans because we had done nothing, although we were in control of the Government for a great many years. Well, that is true. We did not pass legislation for the building up of the merchant marine. We did not do it for the same reason that you did not do it during the first two years of this administration—simply because there were some in our own party who, joining with the opposition, were able to defeat the propositions that the majority presented. It is true that the Republican majorities presented what might be considered and has been termed a subsidy plan and a subvention plan or fast ocean-mail pay plan. As I say, this did not command a majority, and so nothing was done. Republicans called no party caucus to stifle honest opinions and sincere convictions. Every Republican Senator and Representative was left free to discharge his duty as a representative of the people.

But you now are in a position of taking up plans that you never indorsed before, that you never advocated before. You are now in a position when you get in power of abandoning every proposition that you advanced when you were in the minority. Why have you done it? It is harder for you to explain why you have done that than it is for us to explain why we did not pass any legislation. If your party believed when it was in the minority in the discriminating-duty plan, you would not have had a bit of trouble in passing a proposition of that kind when you were in the majority. You could have passed it in the last Congress if you were in favor of it when you were in the minority and continue to be in favor of it. You could not only have passed it by your votes, but you could have secured at least a majority of those on this side of the Chamber for it. Why do you not press it now? Were you sincere when you were in the minority? If so, why have you changed? If you were insincere, why?

Mr. President, during the first Congress of this administration you did make a feeble attempt at doing this. You did show that you really believed in that policy, and in your tariff bill the House of Representatives put in a provision, weak it is true, very ineffective it is true, but nevertheless embodying the principle of discriminating duties. In the Senate you struck it out, and you struck it out by Democratic votes. It could not have been stricken out in any other way, because there were several Republican votes in favor of that provision. It went to conference. Our esteemed colleague the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] was one of the conferees and he insisted upon that provision. I do not remember now whether it was modified or not, but the principle of it was embodied in the bill and it became a part of the law.

It applied, however, only to those countries with whom we had no treaties that would be contravened by its terms. There are no very important countries that it applied to. It did not amount to very much, and yet little as it was, what did your administration do? As I understand it, public officials are sworn to support the laws that we pass and the Constitution, and yet your Attorney General's office has appeared in opposition to that law, and instead of trying to sustain it your administrative officers and your judicial officers have been doing their utmost to defeat it. So I understand it is now before the Supreme Court of the United States with the Attorney General's office represented against the law.

Mr. President, the administration took up something else. Another plan suggested itself to them, and they prepared the bill and sent it down to us expecting us to pass it if they did not order us to do it. You took up something that had never been submitted to the people of the country. You took up something that had never been passed upon by the people of the country. You took up something that you had not declared for in your platform, but which, in my judgment, is squarely against the declaration in your party platform of 1912. In that platform you specifically declare that you will not place any burden upon the Treasury of the United States. Yet you propose to take out $50,000,000 directly from the Treasury to put this plan into operation. You have denounced subsidies and yet this bill will in effect be a far greater subsidy than was ever proposed by any of the much-denounced subsidy bills.

You involved in it a principle that the American people are against except as a last resort, and that is Government ownership. No party platform has even declared in favor of it. At no national election has the policy been indorsed or approved. Yet that was the fundamental principle of the bill that was submitted by your administration and pressed upon Congress day in and day out. But it was finally defeated. It is still the fundamental policy of this bill, although acknowledged by few.

If you read the debates in another body with reference to this measure, you will find that those urging this bill disavow their belief in Government ownership. You will not find the proponents of the bill in this body favoring Government ownership. They present this bill and urge it upon special grounds. They urge it as meeting a special emergency. They urge it as providing for a naval auxiliary. They try to avoid the fundamental principle of the bill.

Mr. President, if this is a bill for the development of an American merchant marine, if it is a bill for the building up of the American merchant marine, it must embody a policy that is applicable not only to the present but to the future, and more to the future than to the present. If there is any policy in this bill it is the policy of governmental ownership. If that policy is not in the bill then there is no policy in it and it is a mere makeshift, a mere sham, a mere fraud, a mere pretence. If that is the policy we need not expect private capital to try to compete with it or the Government.

Mr. President, we need a policy for the upbuilding of the merchant marine. We are not so much in need of something to meet an emergency as we are in need of something that will develop a merchant marine for the future necessities of the country, for the future necessities of our commerce, and to take care of the situation that is bound to confront us when the present abnormal conditions are over, and when an almost equally abnormal condition will come the other way. What we want is not so much a policy or a plan that will bring ships immediately to our assistance as a policy that will develop ships for the future and that will develop a privately owned American merchant marine and continue the activity that is now under way.

How much shipping, Mr. President, is it estimated that we really ought to have under the American flag, that we really need, to give us a merchant marine that would meet the emergencies of war in the future as well as the needs of peace? A conservative estimate is from six to ten million tons of American shipping to carry about 60 per cent of our foreign commerce. What is the estimated cost of such a merchant marine? From $750,000,000 to over $1,000,000,000. Is it proposed by those who support this bill and who advocate this policy, if it is to be called a policy, that the Government is going to put up $750,000,000 or $1,000,000,000 in the development of an American merchant marine? No one would contend that. In fact, they disavow that. They would not dare submit such a proposition openly and squarely to the people. And yet that is the effect of this bill if it contains any policy at all.

If they admit that is what the Government is going to do, then the fears of those who came before our committee and told us that they were afraid of this bill because it is an entering wedge for permanent ownership and Government operation and a Government-built merchant marine were well founded. If you do not advocate it, if that is not what you want and what you believe in, then this bill amounts to nothing. It proposes to appropriate $50,000,000. Suppose you take that $50,000,000 and build ships in the costly, expensive way that they must be built now, how much tonnage do you get? The highest estimate was five or six hundred thousand tons. We need from six to ten million tons. You probably would get about 250,000 tons out of this $50,000,000 now.

Oh, but they say that is something. Yes, it is something. Oh, but they say that every ship you add to the merchant fleet of the world furnishes that much additional means of transportation for our products, and that is what we want. That is true to a certain extent. It does add and should add a few more ships; but what figure would those ships cut under present conditions toward reducing freight rates? Take a bucketful of water out of the ocean and you get it that much nearer being dry, but you do not see any effect when taking that bucketful out, and for all practical purposes you are no nearer the bed of the ocean than you were before you took the bucketful out. So it is with this. Taking the most extreme case, even if you could get to-morrow all the ships that will be constructed with the money provided in this bill, they would not show any appreciable reduction in the freight that must be paid under present conditions for the transportation of the products of the farm, the factory, and the mine. Only the specially favored few who would lease and operate such ships under this bill would profit from them. This bill is urged for the benefit of the people. Its real beneficiaries will be a few ship operators or a few great exporters.

But they say we want to build up the American merchant marine. We all want to do that. They are going to tell the people that this legislation has been enacted for the purpose of building up an American merchant marine. I will not deny that. They will tell the people that we intend by this bill to promote the development of the American merchant marine. I will not deny that. I will not question the sincerity of the purpose of our friends who are behind this bill. I will not question the honesty of the intention of those who press this bill. We are all in favor of the purpose that they have announced; we are all animated by the same intention. Will this bill promote the purpose that they announce? Will it carry out the intention that animates them? These are the real issues involved in this bill.

Those who came before the committee represented, of course, private interests and private capital, and they testified that this bill would deter private capital from going into the shipbuilding, owning, and operating industry. Of course, we must take into account that they are probably moved to a certain extent by selfish motives, and yet if we can not take the opinion and the judgment, with proper allowances, of men who are acquainted with the condition and character of this as well as other industries, it seems to me that we are going almost without a rudder; that if we must take the judgment of men who know nothing from practical experience about a certain line of business as to what is best to carry on that business, then we must say that experience is a detriment rather than a benefit, that experience disqualifies a man instead of qualifying him to judge what is best along the line of his work and his activity. To follow such a course is to reverse all business and human experience, judgment, and rule of action.

The men who came before the committee not only said that this measure will deter private capital from going into the shipbuilding industry, but they said that they know it has already done that, and there are those who specify the particular cases wherein capital was ready to go into the shipbuilding industry, but has not gone in because of the pendency of this legislation.

Mr. President, the men who make these statements are men of integrity; they are men of high character and standing, and there is not any reason apparent why their word should be doubted. As a matter of fact, I believe that the passage of this bill will deter the building of more ships by private capital and enterprise than can be built under it. Instead of enlarging our merchant marine it will actually diminish it in the ultimate result.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Washington that the effect of this legislation will be disappointing; but when the Senator states that certain men experienced in the shipbuilding business have come before the committee and stated that this legislation will retard or interfere with the building of ships by private companies, in the light of the fact that the number of ships to be built by the money appropriated in this bill is so insignificantly small compared with the demand for shipping—that fact, coupled with the fact that the Government is going out of this business by the terms of this bill in five years, seems to rather discount the sincerity or the force of the statement made by these gentlemen who came before the committee that this legislation would prevent the building of shipping. I do not see how this legislation is going to interfere with it at all.

The ships are to be built to be put into the trade; they are to be given to private companies to operate, and if the business of the country demands it I do not see how it is possible to interfere with the prosecution of private enterprise.

Mr. JONES. Well, Mr. President, this is what they say. They say that this is but the beginning; this is but the start; that while the bill now provides that only $50,000,000 shall be invested in the building of ships, their observation has always been that when the Government gets started along a certain line the demand is for more and more and more, and that we are not likely to stop with $50,000,000 for the construction of ships, but that we will keep on appropriating an additional amount or turning over and over this $50,000,000, and this will have a tendency to, in fact will, drive private capital out of the shipyards and shipping lines. That is the argument they present.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But if that is the purpose of the Government and of the Democratic administration, that answers the Senator's argument that the appropriation which this Congress is making, and which this administration is favoring for shipbuilding, is wholly inadequate and insufficient to meet the demand of the shipping trade, for, as the Senator says, it will require six or seven hundred million dollars to do it. It is the purpose of the administration to begin to inaugurate a policy which is going to supply this much-needed facility for transporting goods by water. That answers the Senator's argument that the administration has been neglecting its duty just that far.

Mr. JONES. But here is the trouble about that. While we need from six to ten million tons of American shipping to carry our commerce in American ships, when the European war is over there will be shipping of other countries available to do that business. We shall not in a sense need American shipping, except as we think we ought to have it under the American flag. They say there will be ships available when the European war closes; when the English ships that are now used in transporting armies and munitions of war and supplies; when the German ships that are now interned; when the French ships that are now being used for war purposes are all released, we shall have almost as much tonnage available for transporting the world's commerce, including our own, as we had at the outbreak of the war. That, I think, is true. It is not so much that we should have to add six or ten million tons under the American flag to the world's shipping as it is desirable to have it under the American flag, notwithstanding the other supply of tonnage may be reasonably sufficient for the world's business. They say, if the Government is going to put up money for the building of ships, while, of course, it does not come any way near supplying the immediate demand, yet the tendency, and the continued tendency, is to get more and more Government money for that purpose; and the more we do that, the more we retard private capital from going into the business.

The Senator from Mississippi knows, as I do, that capital is awfully timid. I think many times that capital is too timid; but I can not speak from experience; I have not been able to handle any capital, and so I do not know just how timid I would be with it or how courageous I would be with it; but I fear I am too courageous with everybody else's money.

We here in Congress do not seem to be very timid about appropriating the people's money and making demands upon the people's money; but, notwithstanding our courage, it is true that capital is timid, capital is scary. It is also true that neither you nor I, as legislators, can compel capital to go into any particular line of industry or business; and if we pass this legislation, which scares capital, whether it has good grounds to be scared or not, if it is scared capital will not put its money into it.

These gentlemen say this will be the result. I do not say that they are entirely right about it, but I have not had experience sufficient to say that they are wrong. Their contention is reasonable, to my mind, and should not be lightly cast aside. At any rate, as I say, these men state they know instances where shipbuilding concerns and ship-operating concerns intended to let contracts for a certain number of ships and that they have refused to do so because they saw that this bill was being pressed. If this has already been done, we may expect such a course to be continued after the bill is passed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I really think that the result of the building of these ships is not going to be in the interest of the masses of the people; I do not think it is going to affect freight rates. I think about it as I did a year ago when the matter was up for consideration. I think it is going to enable capitalists to lease ships and to operate them for their special benefit, and that the probabilities are that the loss which the Government will sustain will be pocketed by the people who pay the taxes. I do not feel, though, that there is anything in this measure that capital has anything to be alarmed about.

Mr. JONES. The Senator may be right about that. I am simply giving him what men—able men and careful men—testified to before our committee. I agree with the suggestions that the Senator makes with reference to the benefits that are to come, or the lack of benefits that are to come, from this legislation; that when our friends go out and tell the people that they have done something for the upbuilding of the American merchant marine, something that will help them in getting cheaper freight rates, and all that sort of thing, that the people will never realize those benefits; that they will never see any benefits from it. They may hope for them hereafter, but they will not come. They will go, as the Senator says, to the men who lease these ships; they will go, as I have said, to some special few ship operators, or to some specially favored interests or exporters.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I want to make myself more distinct and definite about one statement which I have made. I think the provision of this bill which creates a shipping board, with the power to regulate freight rates, will redound to the interests of the shippers to some extent; but, so far as the competition which is going to be created by the building of ships under this bill is concerned, I think the effect will be well nigh infinitesimal.

Mr. JONES. I did not understand the Senator in his other remarks to refer to what effect might come from the regulative powers given to the shipping board. That I shall discuss a little bit later on if time will permit.

Mr. President, as I have said, we need a policy for the future, and I shall present a little later my suggestions as an individual Senator as to what I think ought to be done. The present conditions are the greatest incentive possible to the development of an American merchant marine. The existing war conditions are the greatest subsidy, if it may be called such, or subvention or encouragement toward the building of an American merchant marine that we could have, and these conditions simply illustrate what the Government must do in order to have a permanent development of the merchant marine to a greater or less degree.

Prior to the war we were wondering why capital did not go into the business of building up an American merchant marine. We were wondering why ships were not being constructed in our yards to fly the American flag, to carry our products across the sea, and to bring foreign products to our shores. We were trying to devise this measure and to encourage capital to go into this industry. It seemed, however, that nothing could be done. Away back—I think in 1891—we passed an act known as the ocean mail pay act. We thought by that act we were giving ample compensation and affording sufficient inducements to lead capital to go into the construction of fast ships to carry not only our mails but our products. My recollection is that only four ships ever took advantage of the act between this country and Europe, and a few ships to nearby countries; certainly the fast ships we secured under the provisions of that act amounted only to two or three or four, and they are the only source of pride that we now have in our merchant marine under the present conditions.

Then it was found that that act did not offer sufficient inducement to capital to enter the ocean carrying trade under the American flag. Capital did not go into that business.

I might argue from my lack of knowledge of the industry and of the business, that the law which we passed gave ample compensation to warrant capital to put its money into shipping, and I might present good reasons for my belief from an academic standpoint; yet the facts are that capital did not go into the business, and capital would not go into it and has not gone into it under that law, and will not do it. But the very moment that the demand for shipping became great enough to offer rewards sufficient to lead capital from other lines of industry and other lines of development into this line of development. It went there, it is going there now, and it will continue to go there as long as conditions exist as they are now; and as long as there is hope for a reasonable return on the investment capital will continue along this line. If these conditions are to continue, we do not need any legislation to encourage the development of an American merchant marine. They will not continue. This fact makes a definite policy for the future imperative. What are the shipbuilding conditions now?

Why, Mr. President, ships are being built now faster than they have ever before been built in this country; they are building just as fast as the shipyards of the country can construct them; and, Mr. President, do you know that during the last year more tonnage has been available for the transportation of American commerce than ever before in the history of our country? That may seem remarkable to some who have not given this matter any particular thought.

I believe that a great many people throughout the country think that during the last two years we have not had as many ships for the transportation of tonnage as we did before the European war commenced; and yet the fact is that we have had a greater tonnage for this purpose than we ever had before. I believe that, whatever strength there may be throughout the country to the support in behalf of this proposed legislation, it comes from the thought and the belief that we have had a much smaller supply of ships than we had before the war began; yet, if we stop to think for a moment that our foreign commerce is greater in the aggregate by one or two billion dollars than it ever was before, we will realize that we must have had more shipping to transport it, unless, of course, our foreign commerce was made up of products of a much higher class than usual, commanding higher prices and requiring less cargo space.

I have the Commerce Report here with reference to shipbuilding and tonnage available, and I want to put it in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES. Well, I want to read some of it, Mr. President.

I have here the Commerce Report for Saturday, July 8, 1916. At page 84 is the heading, "American shipbuilding during fiscal year."

This, now, is as to what our shipbuilding plants have been doing. This shows that under the conditions that now confront us and that now surround us, American capital and American industry and American shipyards are more active than they ever were before; that when the opportunities offer and when the encouragement is presented that warrants capital going into this line of work, it goes there, and that it is engaged in it now.

The Bureau of Navigation, Department of Commerce, reports 1,030 vessels of 347,847 gross tons were built in the United States and officially numbered during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, compared with 1,266 vessels—

That is, a greater number of vessels.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, what was the first number the Senator gave?

Mr. JONES. The first number was 1,030 vessels of 347,847 gross tons. I was going to call attention to the fact that the number of vessels built in the preceding year was greater than in this last year, but the tonnage was much less. In other words, the ships in the prior year, while greater in number, were smaller in tonnage—compared with 1,266 vessels of 215,711 gross tons during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915.

That is, the tonnage for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, was 347,847 gross tons, while the tonnage for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, was 215,711, showing 130,000 tons more for the fiscal year 1916 than the fiscal year 1915.

The seaboard yards—

Now, this describes these ships—have built 35 large steel merchant steamers aggregating 191,859 gross tons, the largest merchant steel output in their history. Of these, 21 steamers are each over 5,000 gross tons, the largest being the steamer H. H. Rogers of 10,050 gross tons, and 14 are between 3,000 and 5,000 gross tons each. The Newport News (Va.) Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co. built 6 of 40,329 gross; Maryland Steel Co., Sparrows Point, Md., 8 of 35,665 gross; Union Iron Works, San Francisco, Cal., 5 of 32,665 gross; New York Shipbuilding Co., Camden, N. J., 7 of 32,164 gross; and Fore River Shipbuilding Co., Quincy, Mass., 4 of 24,932 gross. The Newport News, Camden, and Quincy yards were also engaged in naval construction.

Of these steel ocean steamers, 24 of 138,858 gross tons have been registered for foreign trade, 8 of 34,386 gross tons enrolled for the coasting trade, one, the steamer Pacific, of 6,034 gross tons, was sold to Norwegians, and up to June 30 the two remaining had not been documented.

Of the relatively small output of the Great Lakes, 8 vessels of 14,775 gross tons are each under 2,500 tons, built for the ocean trade, of which 4 are for foreign trade and 1 (Morris Adler, of 2,481 gross) has been sold to Norwegians.

Then I will put in the rest of this article, with the table, if there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES. Then, at page 223 of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Commerce, Mr. Chamberlain, the Commissioner of Navigation—

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator, are those the hearings of this year?

Mr. JONES. Yes; of this year. Mr. Chamberlain, the Commissioner of Navigation, gave a statement of the ships and their tonnage, and so forth, built or under contract on the 1st of the months of February, March, April, May, and June of this year. You will note, Mr. President, that it shows a steady increase. On the 1st of February the tonnage of the ships built or under contract was 901,371. On the 1st of March it was 945,798, or an increase of over 44,000 tons in one month contracted for. On the 1st of April it was 1,067,856 tons, or an increase of 120,000 tons in one month contracted for. On the 1st of May it was 1,129,014 tons—an increase there of over 60,000 tons contracted for in one month. Then, on the 1st of June it was 1,147,534, or an increase of 18,000 tons contracted for in that month.

I will ask to put this entire table in the Record, Mr. President. It is found at page 223 of the hearings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, that shows, and the testimony is to this effect, that our shipbuilding plants are running to their fullest capacity; that they are limited in their output by the lack of competent help and experienced and trained men; that if the labor supply were better and greater they could put out more ships or probably would put out more ships, but that they are now running to their utmost capacity, and that we are building more ships than we ever built before.

As to the shipping facilities of the United States for the year 1916, I have here the commerce report of Tuesday, August 1, 1916, and at page 404 I find this heading:

SHIPPING FACILITIES OF THE UNITED STATES FOR 1916.

The merchant shipping, American and foreign, cleared from seaports of the United States, 25,475,103 net tons for Europe, South America, Asia, Africa, Australia, and Oceania during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, was the largest in the history of the United States notwithstanding the European war, the capture of the port of Antwerp, and the closing of the Black Sea, the blockade of the ports of the central powers, the withdrawal of German and Austrian merchant ships from trade, and the dangers of submarines and mines cast adrift in the routes of ocean commerce.

Mr. President, that was a surprising statement to me, although if I had thought for a moment about the tremendous increase in our foreign commerce I would have been compelled to realize that our shipping facilities must have been greater than before, and I believe that that will be a surprising statement to the people of the country. The people have the impression that our shipping facilities have been less since the war began than before. This is an official statement from our Department of Commerce and is as nearly correct as any such information can be.

Up to the year just closed the greatest volume of clearances from the United States for the over-seas continents named was 24,872,403 net tons during the year ended June 30, 1914, just before the outbreak of the European war.

That shows, Mr. President, nearly 1,000,000 tons more shipping available for the transportation of our commerce in the year ending June 30, 1916, than in 1914, when we had the greatest tonnage available for that purpose.

Now, notice this, too:

Much of the net tonnage in that year (1914) was space for passengers (tourists and immigrants) on ocean steamers, while during the fiscal year just closed such fast steamers to a great extent have been withdrawn from trade to serve as allied transports and hospital ships or held in port to avoid capture, and their place has been supplied by cargo steamers. (A net ton is 100 cubic feet of ship's closed-in space available for cargo or passengers.)

In other words, Mr. President, the tonnage available for cargo carrying for the year ending June 30, 1916, has been very much greater than the tonnage available for any preceding year.

Mr. President, I should like to put in the RECORD the remainder of page 404, pages 405 and 406, and part of 407—the remainder of that article.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

OVER-SEAS SHIPPING.

American shipping cleared for the over-seas continents during the year just closed was more than threefold that in 1914 so cleared—2,448,305 net tons, compared with 745,242 net tons for the fiscal year 1914. The American net tonnage cleared from the United States for these continents in the years ended June 30, 1914 and 1916, the foreign net tonnage so cleared, and the combined American and foreign tonnage were as follows, American tonnage more than doubling in each case and foreign tonnage showing a decrease, except to Asia:

SHIPPING BOUND FOR EUROPE.

During the past fiscal year our shipping facilities (net tonnage) for the export trade to Europe have been the greatest in our history. Although the net tonnage in 1914 was a trifle larger—half of 1 per cent—much of that net tonnage in 1914 was for the passenger trade, as stated, which in 1916 was relatively small, and cargo space in 1916 was supplied to help to meet the great volume of our exports. During 1914 the American Line mail steamers to Southampton and the Red Star Line passenger ships to Antwerp were virtually the only American ships in trade with Europe; in 1916 American ships traded with the maritime nations of Europe, except Belgium and the blockaded Central Powers. The total tonnage clearances to France and Italy almost doubled, the clearances to Norway, Denmark, and Sweden more than doubled, and to Greece increased over threefold. The following summarizes the net tonnage clearances to European countries:

CLEARANCES FOR SOUTH AMERICA AND AFRICA.

American shipping in trade with South America has developed more rapidly in the past fiscal year than in any other direction. The American tonnage cleared was almost five times greater than in 1914, and in trade with Argentina particularly the increase is notable. The withdrawal of foreign ships has been made good by increased American tonnage. The increase in total clearances is partly due, of course, to improved financial conditions in those countries, except Peru, and to the removal of the risk of destruction which checked trade with South America for some months after the outbreak of the war. The clearances for South America follow:

Destination.	American.		Foreign.		Total.

Total.....	192,479	945,353	2,237,171	1,764,720	2,429,650	2,710,073

The clearances from the United States for Africa on both oceans and on the Mediterranean increased from 406,457 net tons in 1914, to 464,033 net tons in 1916. In 1914 the American shipping thus cleared was insignificant, only 4,263 net tons, while in the past year it mounted to 79,412 net tons, of which over half, in spite of submarine warfare in the Mediterranean, was cleared for Egypt and Algiers.

The foreign net tonnage clearances decreased from 402,194 in 1914 to 384,681 in 1916.

TRANS-PACIFIC VOYAGES.

The total tonnage clearances from the United States of ships on trans-Pacific voyages to ports in Asia, Australia, the Philippines, and foreign islands of the Pacific increased from 1,990,195 net tons in the fiscal year of 1914 to 2,374,272 net tons in 1916, and of these amounts American net tonnage increased from 100,833 net tons in 1914 to 288,588 net tons in 1916. The table below shows that the gains have not been uniform, but there have been marked increases and decreases in shipping facilities between the United States and the countries and colonies comprised within the limits named. Clearances to "other Asia" show the greatest increase from 59,176 net tons in 1914 to 618,610 net tons in 1916. During the past year "other Asia" has meant mainly Vladivostok, and the tonnage increase shows shipping facilities provided for the export of locomotives, cars, rails, motor trucks, and steel products generally to Russia through Siberia. Russian Black Sea ports being closed and Baltic ports, especially Riga, partly closed during the year. The effect of the withdrawal of the Pacific Mail ships to Hongkong is to be noted and clearances to the Philippines also show a marked decrease. The Philippine figures do not include Government transports.

SHIPPING TO NEAR-BY FOREIGN PORTS.

The gain of 602,700 net tons in export clearances of shipping from the United States across the seas and into waters, to a greater or less extent, the zones of naval and submarine operations and of war risk has been offset, however, by decreased clearances to foreign seaports on or near the coasts of North America. In 1914 these amounted to 14,750,083 net tons; in 1916 to 13,420,158 net tons. The principal decreases have been in clearances to the British West Indies, preoccupied with war, 738,649 net tons, and to Mexico, Haiti, and the Dominican Republic, disturbed by internal dissensions, 688,717 net tons.

In North American waters the foreign clearances of American ships show a large gain, but proportionately not so great as in overseas trade, from 4,395,082 net tons in 1914 to 7,296,777 net tons in 1916. While the figures are larger, they represent a much smaller number of ships and these of less tonnage than the figures for overseas trade, because the voyages in American waters are relatively short and the same ship clears often during the year. To Cuba, Panama, and Central America the American tonnage more than doubled in the year.

Out of 38,895,261 net tons of shipping cleared on ocean voyages to foreign ports during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, 9,745,082 net tons were American, or 25 per cent; in the fiscal year 1914, out of 39,622,486 net tons only 5,141,324, or 13 per cent, were American.

NOTE.—Including frequent but short fresh-water foreign trips to Canada across the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence, American tonnage in 1916 was 34 per cent of the total. Detailed figures will be printed in the Monthly Summary of Foreign Commerce of the United States, June, 1916, to be issued by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce about the middle of August.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have just shown that our private yards are taxed to the utmost; that they are running to full capacity; that they are putting out all that labor can put out. Where will we get our ships built under this bill? "Well," they say, "we provided in this bill that they may be built in the navy yards, as well as in private yards." Mr. President, ordinarily we might have some of them built in our navy yards, but does anyone think that we are going to have any capacity in our navy yards for building merchant ships if we adopt the naval program that has just passed the Senate? Every navy yard in the country will be taxed to the utmost, together with the private yards, in order that these naval ships—that is, these battleships and battle cruisers and scout cruisers and torpedo boats and ammunition ships and hospital ships and colliers and submarines—may be constructed at as early a date as possible, as should be done.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. As a matter of fact, I think our Government-owned yards are to be enlarged for the purpose of meeting the demands of the Navy. That is contemplated under the bill we have recently passed.

Mr. JONES. They will have to be enlarged. We do provide that several of the yards shall be fitted up for building capital ships—that is, the battleships and battle cruisers, and so forth. It will have to be done in order to carry out this program that we have provided for.

Mr. President, as I have said before, this bill is urged upon us to meet an emergency, and our attention is called to the high freight charges that must be paid for the transportation of products to this port and that port. We find in the hearings a long list of charges that this man and that man and this merchant and that merchant have had to pay for the transportation of their freight. I remember that in the last Congress, when the ship-purchase bill was presented, we had printed a special document from the Treasury Department giving letters from merchants in different parts of the country telling about what the freight charge was upon their shipments and appealing to the Congress to pass some legislation to reduce these freight charges and bring them relief. Now, this bill is urged upon that ground, and the hope is held out to the farmers of the country more than to anybody else that they will get great relief as a result of the passage of this bill.

How will they get it? "Well," they say, "we will buy more ships." Are there any ships to be bought, Mr. President? It is reported that some ships can be bought from this company or that company. Well, suppose we buy ships; what relief will that bring for the freight situation? If you buy ships you do not add anything to the transportation facilities.

There are no ships now that are not being used except some ships which the Government itself owns. Why, Mr. President, in the military bill here a few days ago we had an item that provided for the sale by the Government of the transports Mcade and Crook, and the showing was made that one of these vessels had been tied up at a wharf for several years. Notwithstanding the tremendous demand for ships for the carrying of freight, and notwithstanding the fact that it was said that our Government has expended two millions in freight charges for the transportation of nitrates since this war began, one of these Army transports has been tied up at the wharf for a good many years—a striking example of the efficiency or lack of efficiency of Government ownership. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] says that if we had passed the bill which he put in, that ship would have been available. I guess that is true; but it is also true, so far as I am concerned, that when that bill did not pass the department ought to have recommended some legislation to pass that would make that ship available if it could not be used under existing legislation. No doubt we have had to pay thousands of dollars wharfage charges for this ship all the years when it would have been so valuable for the transportation of freight.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to suggest that the Senator would hardly class such a ship as a seaworthy vessel—a ship 43 years old. I remember that one of the two vessels the Senator mentions was said to be 43 years old, and the other forty-some years old.

Mr. JONES. Why, the only reason the department urged that they be permitted to sell them was that they should go into the commercial trade of the country. They are foreign-built ships and could not be admitted to the coastwise trade unless you put them in under special legislation of some kind. No, Mr. President; these ships will go into the foreign trade when you sell them to some private buyers, who are, no doubt, ready to purchase them now, and want to purchase them now, and who will make something out of them.

Mr. President, the Senator from Florida says these are old ships. They are old ships; and yet Admiral Benson testified before us that they had one naval transport that was built in 1879 and is good for 10 years yet.

No, Mr. President, the Meade and the Crook are going to be put to commercial uses when this Army bill becomes a law, and the parties who are now no doubt ready to purchase them will get hold of them at a bargain. Will they reduce rates? No. They are buying them to take advantage of the present high rates. We struck out that item in the Senate and it went back in the conference, and these vessels will be sold and the people will pay high rates for the transportation of their production.

But, Mr. President, as I was saying, to buy ships that are already in the transporting business will not bring any relief to the shippers. It will not add any increased shipping facilities. It will have absolutely no effect whatever upon freight rates and transportation charges. It will simply transfer the ownership of certain ships from one owner to another, and that is all there is to it. The second owner possibly will be not nearly so efficient as the first owner.

Friday, August 11, 1916.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on yesterday, when the Senate took a recess, I was considering the suggestion that the shipping bill is urged and pressed upon us for the purpose of meeting an emergency. It will not meet any emergency, Mr. President. There are no ships to buy—at least no ships that can be bought except under very peculiar circumstances that do not reflect very much credit upon our Government, and which I shall refer to just a little bit later on. No present emergency can be met by the building of ships, because the testimony conclusively shows that it will be practically two years before any ship of considerable size can be contracted for now and constructed and put in operation. I think we have every reason to expect that the present deplorable war in Europe will close, at any rate, within two years, and that the abnormal conditions created by it will be largely ended before that time; but the high freight charges are pointed to as showing the necessity for this measure. It is claimed that our producers and our manufacturers and our shippers have to pay enormous freight rates, and many instances of these enormous charges are cited.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that at the present price of shipping it would not be possible, if the proposed shipping board spent every dollar of the $50,000,000 carried by this bill, to secure over 300,000 additional tons; and how could that small tonnage of itself, even if it were all acquired and afloat, regulate and affect the price of the tonnage on all the other ships?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I referred to that yesterday, and also have a further note down here, and was going to refer to the very idea suggested by the Senator from Minnesota. I am very glad indeed to have his suggestion, because coming from him—a man of his experience and knowledge with reference to these matters—it carries much more weight than the suggestion would from me. But this suggestion is made to hold out the inducement to our farmers and our merchants and our producers that if we will just pass this bill lower freight charges will prevail, and this will be reflected in the price that they will get for their commodities.

Mr. President, it is true that high freight charges are paid now to the shipowners for the transportation of products and goods and wares and merchandise, and so forth; but I contend, Mr. President, that this is not only the normal result of the abnormal conditions, but that the purchaser of these goods across the water, the foreigner, is the man who pays these high freight charges. As a matter of fact, while it is not so intended, the passage of this bill, if it would accomplish what its sponsors say it will accomplish, would benefit the foreigner and not the American. That is not the purpose, but that would be the result if there is any result.

Prior to the breaking out of this war freight charges were normal. Prices of produce were comparatively low. But since the war broke out, and since the freight charges have increased, the farmers and producers of this country have been getting higher prices than they received before. Why, Mr. President, I note in a newspaper just yesterday that the producer of wheat is getting almost $1.50 a bushel for his wheat. If these freight rates were reduced, is there anybody who will have the hardihood to contend that the producers of wheat would get the benefit of that reduction in rates? Do our friends contend that if freight rates are reduced the price of wheat will be increased? Surely not. Who would get the benefit of it? The men in England or France or the countries of Europe that buy wheat. They would get the benefit of this reduced transportation cost, not our producers.

The price of our commodities is high, not because freight rates are high but because the demand for them is so great; and when the demand is great the consumer, the purchaser, the buyer pays the transportation charges and the producer gets the price that the demand warrants. Of course, if with increased ships the freight charges were reduced, and that benefit went to the producer of goods and products and not to the consumer, then, under present conditions, of course our people would get a great benefit. But nobody, it seems to me, can seriously contend that the freight charges, the charges for transportation, are paid now by our people. They are not paid by our farmers; they are not paid by our merchants; they are not paid by our business men; but they are paid by the people across the water, who must have our products, who must have our goods, and who must pay for the transportation to their shores, and who are paying for it and have been paying for it and will continue to pay for it while these conditions exist.

Mr. President, high prices to the producers almost uniformly come with high freight charges, because high freight charges can only be paid when there is a tremendous demand for these things, and the people who must have them must get them, no matter what transportation charges have to be paid. Why, Mr. President, we could argue with more force and with more basis that the longer these rates are kept up the longer will continue the high prices for the farmer than we can argue that if you should reduce these freight rates to the people across the water and change the conditions so that these charges would not be so high it would lower the price to our people. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, you will find that when we do get down to normal conditions in the transportation world, when we do get an abundance of shipping for the transportation of products it will not be long until the prices paid to the farmer and to the other people will come down. That price will come down abnormally, too, unless something is done to prevent the flooding of our markets from abroad. That should be our greatest concern now, and immediate steps should be taken to meet it.

Mr. President, the holding out of this hope, especially to the farmers of the country, that if we will just pass this shipping bill they will get higher prices for their products is a false hope and can not deceive them, in my judgment.

But, Mr. President, if this bill should pass, and if the ships that it is hoped to build or buy under it could be gotten tomorrow, would it lower freight charges? Not at all. As the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] suggested a while ago, it would be a mere drop in the bucket. Possibly not more than 250,000 or 300,000 tons of additional shipping could be gotten. What would that amount to as compared with the shipping that we had for the year ending June 30, 1916—twenty-five million and odd tons? It would amount to nothing, and all that it would do would be what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] suggested yesterday: It would put in the hands of some transporters a few ships and enable them to make tremendous profits out of the present condition of things. The real benefit that would come if the ships that the money in this bill might purchase or build could be made available tomorrow would come to the transporters who are taking advantage of these abnormal conditions and the abnormal situation, and it would not benefit the people of the country at all.

But, as I said, when this bill passes it will be two years before any new ships can be gotten; and if you buy ships that are now in the transportation business it does not increase the transportation facilities. That would certainly have nothing to do with the reduction of rates. That would not benefit anybody, except that the Government would transfer the ownership of these vessels to another party, either itself, or it would put them in the hands of some privileged or special favorite and let him make the money that is now being made by the present owners of such ships.

Mr. President, I have been led to think that it is the hope of some of those who press this bill that if it is passed ships can be gotten and used for a specific purpose, used for the transportation of particular products or particular items, in order to get these items and these products transported at cheaper rates than they are now transported. It has been suggested on this floor and it was suggested in the committee that our people have been paying for nitrates from Chile—I think it was $34 a ton freight charges—and that this is outrageous and we ought not to have to pay it. Therefore, they urged the passage of this bill.

What does that mean, Mr. President? If it means anything it means that it is expected that the ships will be taken for the purpose of carrying nitrates and giving the consumers of nitrates a special advantage. Is that the purpose of this bill? Is it the purpose of those who press this bill, or the hope of those who press this bill, that it will be used to give special privileges and special advantages to particular people, to particular localities, or to special lines of trade? They dare not avow openly any such purpose as that.

But under the terms of the bill as it is now prepared I doubt if they could use it for this purpose even if they wanted to. The Democratic caucus and the Democratic members of the committee decided upon certain amendments to the bill, and they are now in the bill, under which the operation by the Government is practically prohibited, and the result will be under the bill as prepared now that whatever ships are purchased, whatever ships are built, will be turned over to private parties upon a lease.

Mr. President, those private parties will put those ships in whatever trade they want to put them in. They will put those ships where they can get the most money out of them; and if they can get the most money for transporting products from Atlantic ports to European ports, they will do it, and they will not go to transporting nitrates. They will not transport nitrates unless it is a money-making proposition; and the farmers whom they may try to make believe will get a benefit by the cheaper transportation of nitrates will see the ships their money has built going where they can make the most money—where they can get the highest rate. They will see these ships used for the carrying of munitions of war from Atlantic to European ports.

They present figures here showing tremendous prices or charges for the transportation of lumber; they present facts showing that at certain ports there are no vessels available for the transportation of lumber; and they hold out the hope to the lumbermen that, if we will pass this bill, there will be some ships available at those ports for transporting lumber.

They hold out to the lumber manufacturer the hope that, if we pass this bill, he will get lower rates for the transportation of his lumber.

Mr. President, these ships will not be sent to those ports unless they can get more money by sending them to those ports than they can by sending them somewhere else. These ships will not be sent to transport lumber unless they know they can get more for the transporting of lumber than they can get for the transporting of something else.

No, Mr. President, this bill is a false hope. Suppose the Government does not lease these ships, but operates them itself, will our people expect that the Government will operate the ships at a lower rate than the going price of freight transportation? Do our friends who favor this bill suppose that? If they do, then that amounts to a pure subsidy. That, then, is a purely Government special privilege to some individual or some locality or some business. Our Democratic friends pretend to look upon a matter of that kind in holy horror.

Do the people of the country want shipping operated in that way? What does it mean? It means that if congressional influence is strong enough with the administration and with those who operate these ships to get them to send a ship to this port or that port in preference to some other it will be done, and one locality or one port will be discriminated against by such a preference. Or if some particular business, some great exporting house, desires additional transportation facilities it will come down here to Washington and get the Senators and Representatives from that State to go to the shipping board and point out to them their special needs. They can show the great benefit that will come if they will just send one of these ships to their port and let them load it and send their products abroad. If they do so, and some other locality, some other exporter, will suffer, if it or he is discriminated against; he can not get the service.

Mr. President, I can not imagine any condition of things more detrimental to our prosperity than a condition like that. There is nothing more detrimental to honest business and honest administration and honest government than a condition of things like that. The people of this country do not desire anything like it. There is too much political influence in governmental affairs. Yet it is likely to come about under a policy of this character.

Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the honored chairman of the Finance Committee, urged this proposition on the ground of naval preparedness. He said we need as naval auxiliaries merchant vessels in conjunction with regular naval vessels, to be available in time of war as well as in time of peace. I have taken some time to examine the debates in the House, and I have been struck with the great number of Representatives who have based their support of this bill upon the ground of its desirability from a naval standpoint. They support this bill because it will furnish ships as naval auxiliaries, and that is made the primary purpose of the bill so far as they are concerned.

I rode down in the car a few days ago with a very prominent Democratic Member of the House who had been against a ship-purchase bill. He said, "I give my support to the bill now because of its naval-auxiliary feature." He said, "I am in favor of the bill now because the primary purpose of it, the basic purpose of it, is to furnish auxiliaries for our Navy." I called his attention to the terms of the bill itself. I called his attention to the fact that under the terms of the bill the primary purpose of it is commercial. He said, "I did not understand that the bill was framed in that way." He said, "If I had understood it that way, I would not have supported it."

Now, what does the bill do, Mr. President? Many of the people of the country are for it because they think it furnishes primarily a naval auxiliary. Many of the people of the country are for it because they do not understand that its primary purpose is to furnish commercial ships to engage in the transporting trade of the world rather than as naval auxiliaries.

The title of the bill reads as follows:

To establish a United States shipping board—

For what purpose?

for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary.

That is the first purpose specified in the title of the bill—a naval auxiliary—and then—

And a naval reserve and a merchant marine.

That is apparently subordinate. But what are the terms of the bill itself? They seem to go on the theory that most of the people will not look any further than the title of the bill. They may have a good deal of basis for that. A great many people may not read any further than the title. In many of our States we have a constitutional requirement that the purpose of a bill must be expressed in the title.

Our friends, I suppose, are going on the theory that the people of the country understand that Congress must express the purpose of the bill in the title, just as they are required to do in State legislation. Of course, that is not so. We can put anything in the bill and nothing in the title, or we can put one thing in the title and something else in the bill; it does not invalidate the bill. I do not suppose we need any title at all, that all we need is the enacting clause.

Section 5 of the bill is the legislative part of it, so far as the naval auxiliary and so on is concerned. What does it provide?

That the board, with the approval of the President, is authorized to have constructed and equipped in American shipyards and navy yards or elsewhere, giving preference, other things being equal, to domestic yards, or to purchase, lease, or charter, vessels suitable—

Now, suitable for what? Suitable for a naval auxiliary, as the title says? No—suitable, as far as the commercial requirements of the marine trade of the United States may permit, for use as naval auxiliaries or Army transports.

In other words, the primary consideration in the construction of these ships and in the purchase of these ships is commercial. The prime motive for which they are to be constructed and purchased is commercial, and only in so far as commercial purposes will permit their use as naval auxiliaries shall they be used for that purpose.

Mr. President, I proposed in the committee to turn that around and authorize the purchase and construction of these ships for naval auxiliary purposes, and to be used as may be for commercial purposes. With a change like that I would support the bill, at least so far as its fundamental features were concerned. I would have some very serious objections to some of the other provisions, but that is the fundamental proposition with me. That would eliminate the principle of Government ownership and operation in private industry.

I have voted in the Senate for the expenditure of $30,000,000, I think it was, for the purchase of naval auxiliaries. The Senate passed a proposition of that kind without a dissenting vote. The Senate would pass a proposition like that now without a dissenting vote. But our friends would not make that change. They insist upon the commercial feature of it being the primary and main purpose of the bill.

The Senator from North Carolina said we ought to standardize the building of ships, and he suggests that it has been proposed by some that if we would standardize our ships we could build them much more cheaply than they can build ships abroad. In other words, he seems to suggest that this $50,000,000 would be a sort of an experimental fund for the purpose of trying out the idea some people have with reference to standardizing the construction of ships.

Mr. President, it may be true that we can standardize the construction of our ships. I think they have already done that to a certain extent. I do not believe that the Government needs to go into that experimental business. I am satisfied that private capital and private energy and private initiative and private development will bring forth the highest possible efficiency in the construction of ships, whether by standardization or otherwise, and that if we will give our capital the proper encouragement, if we will take the proper steps to continue as nearly as may be in time of peace the basic influences under which we are having such a stimulus in the shipbuilding industry and the ship-operating industry as we have now, our people will standardize ships, if that is the best and cheapest way to construct them. The Government does not need to do it. We do not need to take the people's money to experiment in a proposition of that sort.

The Senator from North Carolina says that we need ships for the South American trade, and he seems to hold out the idea that we will get them for that trade under this bill. There is nothing in the bill requiring any of these ships to go into the South American trade. There is nothing under this bill requiring any of these ships to be put in any special trade. I should like to see more transportation lines between this country and South America, but we will not get them under this bill unless conditions of trade warrant their going there.

It was urged when we had the other shipping bill up that the Government would take its ships where business had not been developed sufficiently to warrant private enterprise to go; that the Government would develop the business and then turn it over to private enterprise. Under a proposition of that sort there might have been some development of transportation lines to South America or some country, but there is not anything of that sort in this bill.

These ships will be leased, and the lessee will put them wherever he can make most profit out of them. If he can make more profit by going to South American ports, he will go there. If he has not any business there, he will not go there. He will not take these ships to develop business. He will take these ships and put them where the business is; where he can get the highest freight rates for the transportation that he furnishes.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] suggested that we wanted ships that we could keep under the American flag; that could not be transferred when the European war closes and when these abnormal conditions pass away to foreign flags. He said that Mr. Marvin, who appeared before our committee, suggested that the ships that came in under the American flag under our emergency act were likely, when the war closed and when these abnormal conditions ceased, to re-transfer themselves to a foreign flag. Well, that is true; that is very likely to happen unless this Government gives better encouragement for ships to remain under the American flag than it has been doing.

Why did many of these ships come under the American flag under the emergency act? They came under the American flag because it was safer for them to do it; they came under the American flag because they were afraid to sail under any other flag. They did not come under the American flag because they wanted to be under the American flag, but simply because they thought it was more profitable for them to do it at the time and safer for them to do it. When these abnormal conditions pass away and the European war ceases they will leave the American flag if it is more profitable for them to go under some other flag. That is true. If we do not make our laws of such a character that they can operate under the American flag as cheaply or more cheaply than they can operate under any other flag, they are going to leave our flag. That is natural, and they can not be blamed for it. They are in this business to make money; they are not philanthropists; they are not conducting a charitable enterprise. They will go where they can make the most money. Of course if the Government buys the ships, or if the Government builds the ships, it can prevent their going under another flag; but if they can not operate at a profit under American laws and American policies, Mr. President, they will not be operated, except at the expense of the American people. If private enterprise can not operate a privately built ship at a profit under American laws, then private enterprise can not operate these ships under American laws unless the Government gives them some special rates, in other words, unless the Government gives them a subsidy, which is anathema to our Democratic friends. If private parties will not operate these ships, then the Government must operate them, and again the people will put up the difference. That is all there is to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask my friend from Washington, who is very familiar with attempted legislation on this question of rehabilitating the American merchant marine, if he has ever seen a bill that provides so great a subsidy as does this bill which is now under consideration?

Mr. JONES. I do not think so.

Mr. President, if I were in favor of Government ownership and Government operation, I would consider this is the last business and this is the worst time that it could be put into effect. Those who are in favor of Government ownership, those who are in favor of Government operation, are taking the very worst line of business and the very worst time to demonstrate the efficiency or the merit of their contention.

Government operation of ships is entirely different from Government operation of railroads. A railroad is fixed; it has fixed termini; it has a fixed line; a fixed route, and, to a certain extent, a fixed business that must come to it; that it must get. You can put your hand on it; you can control it; you can compel it to run; you can compel it to handle products; you can regulate it. It can not get away from you. If it does not like what you demand it can not help itself. It must continue to run or go into bankruptcy.

How is it with shipping? You can not do anything of this kind with it. A ship may be in this port to-day, in a port 100 miles away to-morrow, and the next day in a port a hundred miles away from that. A ship may run between two certain ports to-day and between two entirely different ports to-morrow. A ship may find business at this port to-day and find none there to-morrow, and none at the port to which it goes.

A railroad to a certain extent has no competitor. No other train runs upon its line except its own. How is it with shipping? One ship is hardly over a certain space in the ocean until another goes along the same track. One ship enters a port and docks. Immediately at its side comes another ship and docks. If we have an American ship landing at one of our ports, not only can another American ship land by its side, but here comes a ship on its same track from England or Germany or France, or from any other country on the face of the earth; that ship may come with a crew receiving but half the wages received by the crew of the American ship. It may come from a port where the charges and dues were nothing like the charges and dues which the American ship has had to pay. It may be a ship that cost in its original construction not more than 75 per cent of the cost of the American ship. You can try to regulate it. If it does not like your regulations it will go somewhere else to do business or transfer to another flag. All these and many other various conditions show the difficulty of the operation of ships, and especially the operation of Government ships by the Government. I will not take up the time to point out other varying conditions. They will occur to anybody who will think about the matter for a moment.

But what about the present conditions as affecting the entrance into this business by the Government? Everybody knows that the present conditions are as unfavorable as they possibly could be.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. REED. The Senator has just said that conditions are as unfavorable as they possibly could be. One of these conditions is the fact that ocean rates are about four times as high as they were normally. Is that one of the things that make the conditions unfavorable?

Mr. JONES. I have gone into the matter of ocean rates heretofore, and I do not want to take any more time than is necessary, and therefore I do not care to go into that further. I could not, I think, convince the Senator from Missouri in any event.

Mr. REED. No; the Senator could not convince anybody of that if he would give the facts.

Mr. JONES. The Senator has his opinion, and I have mine; but I have answered that suggestion, I think, very fully in my remarks.

I was just going on to point out some of the unfavorable conditions, to my mind, for the Government going into the ownership and operation of ships aside from the suggestion of the Senator, whether or not that is a valid suggestion. What are the conditions which the Government will have to face if it wants to purchase ships now? It is going to have to pay the highest possible price; it is going to have to buy ships in the highest possible market.

Mr. REED. Why are ships high?

Mr. JONES. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator does not need an answer to that question.

Mr. REED. It is because they get high rates for shipment. I will answer the question myself; and that is the reason why it is profitable to go into the business.

Mr. JONES. Certainly; I think I have touched on all that, but I am coming now to the specific conditions which will confront the Government if it is going to go into the ownership and operation of ships, without discussing further the reasons.

The Government, if it buys ships, will have to pay the highest possible price; and what is it confronted with? It is confronted with the absolute assurance that within one, two, or three years it will face a great reduction in the value of those ships; in other words, we are going to buy ships on a high market with the absolute certainty that if we want to sell them in the near future we will have to sell them on a low market.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it not a fact that four or five years ago the usual price paid per ton for the construction of a ship ran from $30 to $40, and is it not also a fact that to-day offers are made of as high as $100 to $120 per ton in order that shippers may secure ships to carry on the trade that commerce demands?

Mr. JONES. That is true; I was just coming to that.

Mr. SMOOT. And if the Government of the United States should undertake to purchase ships to-day they would have to pay the market price, which is $100 to $120 per construction ton; and if in two or three years they are compelled to sell those same ships the price no doubt would be about the same as it was before the advance in price owing to the demand for ocean carriers.

Mr. JONES. That is absolutely true, although the case is even stronger than that.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. The price of ships has increased even more than the Senator from Utah has suggested. Lately the premier of the Government of Australia purchased 10 ships to send wheat and other cereals to Europe, and they cost on an average over $160 per gross ton; and the records show that there have been many sales from $125 to $150 per ton.

Mr. JONES. That is correct, and I was just going to mention that in connection with the proposal that the Government build ships.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to the testimony of Mr. Marvin before our committee. On page 18 of the hearings the following appears:

Senator BANKHEAD. Can you tell this committee about what would be the cost of, say, a 7,000-ton ship—what it would cost to build it and put it into service?

Mr. MARVIN. It would cost about $500,000. Ships have been built in this country at as low a rate as $50 per ton dead-weight capacity. The prices have gone up, because the cost of labor has risen and the cost of materials has risen.

So that he estimates that a 7,000-ton ship would cost about $500,000.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, anybody who will examine the testimony taken by our committee and the testimony before the House committee, and take it altogether, will be convinced that the statements made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] are correct; that if we were to purchase ships now, instead of paying from $30 to $40 or $50 a ton, or at about that rate, we would have to pay from $100 to $150 or $175 per ton for the ships. And nobody can deny that when normal conditions come about again if the Government desires to sell the ships, they could not be sold for a price to exceed $30, $40, or $50 a ton.

Suppose the Government should construct its ships. It will have to make its contracts now, and contracts for the construction of ships will be based upon present conditions, not on what they will be two or three years from now. The Government will have to pay for ships that it will have constructed from $100 at the lowest to $150 or $175 per ton gross. How far will the $50,000,000 proposed to be appropriated by this bill go? As I said yesterday, we will probably under Government construction and Government administration and operation get about 250,000 or 300,000 tons, and inside of four years the vessels acquired will not be worth $25,000,000—that would be a high estimate—and possibly by the time the ships are built, two years from now, they will not be worth half the contract price.

Any business man can see why that will be so; the people of the country can see why that will be so; they can appreciate the fact that when all the ships of the world are available for commercial transportation the price of ships must go down, and that these ships will be available inside of two years there can hardly be any reasonable doubt. If we were to contract under this bill to-morrow for the building of these ships, we could not get them short of two years; and I think I am justified in saying that what we would now contract to pay $50,000,000 for would not be worth over $25,000,000 when they were actually completed.

Do the people of this country want to do that? Do you call that a subsidy to anybody or for any particular purpose? Is that economy? Is that wasteful administration? Is that a wasteful policy? It seems so to me. I can not make anything else out of it. How can you expect to demonstrate the efficiency of Government operation and Government construction when you are confronted with a situation like that?

Why, as I said, if I were the strongest advocate of Government ownership and Government operation, and wanted to demonstrate the merit of my contention, this would be the last line of business and the last time that I would want to go into it in order to demonstrate it. Under this bill the people of this country will get the fewest possible ships for the money expended, and when they want to dispose of them they will get the lowest possible price for them. Somebody will get a greater subsidy than was ever before suggested and the people would get the least benefit.

Mr. President, under this bill there are various restrictions and impositions placed upon shipping in the foreign trade.

It is understood by a great many that under the terms of this bill the shipping board will have the right and the power to regulate the rates to be charged in foreign trade. Our friends on the other side seem to contend that this is not so. At any rate they declare that it is not their intention to do that; but I know that many of the shipping people think that is so. One man who contracted some time ago for the construction of eight or nine ships to go into the foreign trade—a man whom I know personally; a man of the highest character and splendid business judgment, and I am satisfied that what he says is his honest conviction—wrote me a few days ago that if this bill goes through with the provisions with reference to regulation of rates and the publication of rates and the publication of their business in the foreign trade he will take his ships out of the foreign trade, or he will get rid of his ships at the very earliest possible opportunity; and he is not a Republican either. He may be mistaken in regard to the effect of the bill, but I am satisfied he believes what he says, and that he will do what he says he will do; and that is the great trouble with this bill. I think he is right in his view of the power given the board. Instead of promoting the development of the American merchant marine, instead of adding to its shipping, it will destroy the American merchant marine and drive men out of it who are in the foreign trade.

Mr. President, why is it that our people do not go into the foreign trade now? That is to say, why is it that they did not go into it before these abnormal conditions came up? Because they apparently could not compete with their foreign competitors. They did not think their investment was safe. They did not see a profit in it. They deemed our laws too harsh or too restrictive. They may have been mistaken, but they did not go into it, and there was no power that could compel them to do so. If we put upon them additional restrictions and additional impositions, we simply hamper and fetter our own development. That is all there is to it.

Why, Mr. President, instead of trying to regulate, instead of trying to control and hamper what we have not got, we ought to offer every possible inducement to bring into being what we so much desire. What we want is a shipping in the foreign trade. We have not got it except as it has come under these abnormal conditions that are soon going to cease. We want it; and instead of restricting it, instead of hamstringing it, instead of fettering it, we ought to make it free and offer every possible inducement and every possible encouragement for our people to go into the foreign trade.

In my judgment, by the restrictions that we have put into this bill—with a good purpose, of course; with a good intention, of course; in the hope largely of benefiting not the merchant marine but the shippers of the country—we will not only prevent the development of our foreign merchant marine, but we will destroy what we get under these abnormal conditions.

We did not begin to regulate our railroads until we got the railroads, and there is a great deal of question as to whether our regulation of railroads is a success or not. I am not going into that subject; but it does seem to me that it is not wise, it is not good statesmanship, to begin to regulate our shipping until we get our shipping. Then, we must not forget that, as I said a while ago, the shipping business is different from the railroad business. After we get our shipping we will have to be very careful about our regulating, for fear we will drive it from under the American flag, drive it to some other country. Ships do not have to come to this country. They can go anywhere in the ocean, free. If the restrictions, no matter how reasonable we think they are, are not satisfactory to the shipowner, he does not have to come under them.

Mr. President, what is going to confront us very soon? What is going to confront the shipping industry that we are building up now more rapidly than we ever did before? Why, Mr. President, that shipping industry is going to be confronted within the next three or four years with the most tremendous competition from every maritime country on the face of the earth. The ships of England that are now commandeered by the Government for the transportation of troops, Government supplies, and ammunition; the ships of France that are used for the same purpose; the ships of Germany that are tied up in neutral ports; the ships of England that are tied up in neutral ports, if there are any—all will be set free to engage in the commerce of the seas, and they will all meet our ships, not under our regulations, not upon our terms, but under their regulations and upon their terms. They are free.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator that it is estimated, I think from reliable sources, that at least 3,000,000 tons have gone to the bottom of the ocean.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes; that is true. There will be some little shortage for a while. How long will that last? What are the shipyards of England doing now? What are the shipyards of Germany doing now? I do not know. They may be engaged in the building of naval ships, warships; but the minute the war closes they will run day and night to their utmost capacity in the construction of merchant ships. I saw in a paper the other day that in Germany they are constructing a large number of great merchant ships, one of them of 56,000 tons.

I do not know whether it is true or not—I suspect it is—they know this war is going to end. They are going to make every possible preparation for it. They know that when this war ends a commercial war will begin. They are going to be as fully prepared to engage in this commercial war as they possibly can be when the peace that they know is inevitable comes, and we are going to have to face it. They are going to go after our market at home and abroad. They know it is the greatest and richest in the world. They want it. They are going to take it if they can, and they are going to coordinate every governmental power with private enterprise to take it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I assume the fact has not escaped the attention of the Senator that very recently a proposition was made in the French Assembly to make a grant of a considerable sum of money to the Government of France for the purpose of getting a fleet of steamships; but after debate it was concluded that the proper thing for France to do was to make a loan of 100,000,000 francs to the shipbuilders of France, and that loan has been made, to be repaid with a very small rate of interest.

Mr. JONES. That is correct. I am glad the Senator made the suggestion. There are a great many of these things that ought to be suggested that I did not feel that I had the time to take up. I have taken much more time than I ought to have taken or than I expected to take; but that simply illustrates what these countries are doing to-day and are going to do in order to meet the conflict that is coming. Why, Mr. President, instead of hampering their shipping they are not only leaving it perfectly free but they are giving it every possible encouragement, not only by direct subsidies and subventions but by loans, such as just mentioned by the Senator from New Hampshire, and by secret relief and secret benefits and secret encouragements, and everything of the kind.

We propose to regulate the rates. There is not a country on the face of the earth that pretends to regulate the rates to be charged by its shipping in foreign commerce; and if that is true—and it is true—why should the United States, when its shipping is just being built up, start out upon a proposition that can not do anything but hamper it?

The advocates of this measure say they do not intend to do it by this bill, but they do not make it very plain. It ought to be made plain. There are those in the shipping business who think that this board is given the power to regulate, to a greater or less extent, the rates to be charged, and I believe they are correct.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Washington to section 18. I suppose he has already referred to it; but in view of what he has just said, I suggest that the language of the bill is very plain upon the point just mentioned. It does give the shipping board absolute power to fix the rates for every common carrier by water in foreign commerce; and when we turn to the first section of the bill and find how a common carrier by water in foreign commerce is defined, it will be seen that the attempt is made here to give the board power to regulate or fix the rates on all such commerce. My question is, Does the Senator from Washington, or does the Senator in charge of the bill, or any Senator who favors the bill, believe that we can regulate the rates of foreign ships?

Mr. JONES. I do not know how it can be done.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like, at some time during the discussion, to know what the interpretation of that and kindred sections is with respect to that subject—as to whether the United States can fix the rates for every ship that comes into our ports, either to deliver goods or to carry away goods from our shores?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to have that question answered at some time during the discussion. It was not answered in the committee. It was contended that they could do it. It was claimed to be the intention to regulate these foreign carriers as well as our own, to see that our own people are put on the same basis with them. It was contended also that this bill did not give this board the power to regulate charges by our ships in foreign commerce. I can not see any construction of that kind in the language of the bill. Under the language of the bill I agree with the Senator from Iowa that it does give this board, or attempts to give this board, that power.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I would suggest that section 18 provides as follows:

That no common carrier by water in foreign commerce shall demand, charge, or collect any rate, fare, or charge which is unjustly discriminatory between shippers or ports or unjustly prejudicial to exporters of the United States as compared with their foreign competitors.

I do not think there is any question but that Congress has the power to deal with that. I do not think there is any doubt but that we can prevent discrimination of that kind. We have various means of doing that.

In giving clearances from our ports we may require compliance with such rules and regulations as we may see fit to require. Other countries have done it, and we have that power under the Constitution. We can absolutely prohibit a foreign ship from coming into the port of New York or other ports of the country. We have not seen fit to do it in the past; but with reference to the general powers exercised by other countries in the matter of control of freight-rates, and the statement which has been made that no country on earth has done such a thing, I call attention to some of the remarks I had occasion to submit the other day where I gave instances of that kind. Australia has done it, for one; Norway in large measure; Japan; Austria-Hungary; Canada in very large measure.

Mr. JONES. But are not those Government ships, or ships carrying Government mails, or something of that sort?

Mr. FLETCHER. Not altogether.

Mr. JONES. Practically every one of them, I understand.

Mr. FLETCHER. In the case of Australia, the Commonwealth Government has assumed power to control the movements of Australian shipping, and has also secured authority to regulate freight-charges between Australian ports.

Mr. JONES. That means Australian ports. We are talking about foreign trade.

Mr. FLETCHER. France has exercised very large control.

Mr. JONES. In foreign trade?

Mr. FLETCHER. In foreign trade.

Mr. JONES. And fixed rates?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; a large measure of control of their ships.

Mr. JONES. Is it true that France tried to regulate the rates in the foreign carrying trade?

Mr. FLETCHER. It has practically controlled the rates where the Government requires certain things to be done, certain payments to be made, just as Great Britain when charging a large percentage of the profits of shipping has been in a large measure dealing with the question of rates.

Mr. JONES. She is not interfering with the charges her ships will make in their dealings with other countries.

Mr. CUMMINS. The answer of the Senator from Florida is hardly satisfactory, if it be an answer at all. My question was whether it was claimed by the supporters of the bill that an American shipping board could fix the rates that should be charged by a foreign ship carrying goods to this country or taking goods away from this country. That is just the power that is attempted to be given to the shipping board.

Mr. FLETCHER. I undertook to show that we can prevent a discrimination against our own exports by foreign ships.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. If the Senator from Washington will permit me just a moment more the language of the bill is:

Whenever the board finds that any such rate, fare, or charge is demanded, charged, or collected it may alter the same to the extent necessary to correct such unjust discrimination or prejudice and make an order that the carrier—

That is whether an American ship or a foreign ship—shall discontinue demanding, charging, or collecting any such unjustly discriminatory or prejudicial rate, fare, or charge.

I venture to say we can confer no such authority upon a shipping board, and I venture, further, the assertion that there is no country on earth that has attempted to give any department of its Government the authority to fix a rate that should be charged by a foreign ship.

Mr. JONES. I agree entirely with the Senator from Iowa. He is absolutely correct. I did not intend to go into the special terms of the bill. I was talking about the commercial contest which is going to confront us when this war closes, and I called attention to what I think the fact will be, that every maritime nation on earth will do its utmost to get as much of the carrying trade of the world as possible, that they will offer every possible encouragement and inducement to their merchant marine, and they will place just as few restrictions upon it as possible.

England especially is the great maritime power. England especially desires to control the sea. She has done it and she is going to try to continue to do it, and we might just as well face the fact now that Great Britain will do everything in her power to keep us off the sea. England will do everything in her power to prevent the development of the American merchant marine. It has been the whole course and policy of Great Britain to destroy where she could the maritime interest of other nations and develop her own. It is a wise policy from her standpoint; she can not be blamed for doing it; but it does look strange that we should play into her hands when the great opportunity presents itself to us now to take our place in the maritime trade of the world.

What has been the policy of England? What has she done to build up her maritime interests? I want to call your attention briefly to some of the acts that she has passed just to illustrate what she will do in behalf of this same interest, an interest that is absolutely necessary to England's perpetuity and to her supremacy.

In 1600 Sir Walter Raleigh uttered this fundamental truth:

Whosoever commands the sea commands the trade, whosoever commands the trade of the world commands the riches of the world, and consequently the world itself.

That has been the basis of England's action. That has been the principle that has underlain her policy with reference to shipping from the beginning. That expression of Sir Walter Raleigh was simply the expression of the principle that had been animating Great Britain prior to that time. In 1381 England passed this law:

That for increasing the shipping of England, of late much diminished, none of the King's subjects shall hereafter ship any kind of merchandise either outward or homeward but only in the ships of the King's subjects, on forfeiture of ships and merchandise, in which ships also the greater part of the crews shall be of the King's subjects.

Suppose we should pass a law like that to take effect when this war is over. We would develop an American merchant marine, we would continue its development, and while it might seem like a harsh proposition, it would probably bring very great results.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. In this connection I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that England, Germany, France, Japan, Austria—I might say every maritime nation of the world—has passed laws since the beginning of this horrible war preventing the sale of a merchant vessel to anyone outside the citizens of the country passing the law. They see the necessity of maintaining their merchant marine.

Mr. JONES. They are getting ready for the conflict that is to come.

Mr. SMOOT. They have passed laws that would prevent a citizen from selling a ship to a citizen or company of any other country. They can plainly see what is coming, that the greatest conflict in the world will be upon us in a very little while, and if we pass legislation such as this—

Mr. JONES. They will laugh at us.

Mr. SMOOT. It will be impossible for us to do any trade at all.

Mr. JONES. Yes; they are laughing in their sleeves now at the action we are taking.

Along in 1662 and for a short time after that the Dutch navigators began to go about the sea and to develop their merchant marine. They began to supplant the English, and they got so bold about it that England's attention was called to it. They went down the English Channel with brooms at the masthead to signify to Great Britain how they were sweeping her off the seas. What did England do? Did she sit supinely by and allow that to go on? Did she pass some Government-ownership proposition or something of that sort? This is what she did: Here is a statement prepared by Hon. Alexander R. Smith, now editor of the Marine News, and one of the best informed men with reference to the merchant marine that we have in this country. He says:

When Oliver Cromwell, a trifle more than two and a half centuries ago, had composed the differences that had previously existed in England and had brought about an orderly condition in that turbulent country he paused for a moment to gaze seaward, and instantly he realized that he had but half completed the work high destiny had imposed upon him. Passing down what were then called the Narrow Seas, now commonly called the English Channel, were numerous Dutch ships that, too arrogantly for Cromwell's gorge, flaunted at their mastheads a broom heralding to the world the fact that they "swept the seas," because at that time the maritime dominance of the Dutch was unquestioned.

Cromwell, happily for England, was a man of action. He was also a man of indomitable determination. He set about the task of removing the brooms from the mastheads of Dutch ships. It was some task, but Cromwell accomplished it, and he did it so thoroughly that since that time Dutch participation in maritime affairs has been of a minor character.

How did she do it? She passed this law:

Act 12, Charles II, Chapter VIII, section 3: And it is further enacted, etc., that no goods or commodities whatsoever of the growth, production, or manufacture of Africa, Asia, or America, or of any part thereof, which are described or laid down in the usual maps or charts of those places, be imported into England, Ireland, or Wales, islands of Guernsey and Jersey, or town of Berwick-upon-Tweed in any other ship or ships, vessel or vessels whatsoever but in such as do truly and without fraud belong only to the people of England or Ireland, Dominion of Wales, or town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, or of the lands, islands, plantations, or territories in Asia, Africa, or America to His Majesty belonging, as the proprietors and right owners thereof, and whereof the master and three-fourths at least of the mariners are English, under the penalty of the forfeiture of all such goods and commodities and of the ship or vessel in which they were imported, with all her guns, tackle, furniture, and apparel, one moiety to His Majesty, his heirs and successors, and the other moiety to him or them who shall seize, inform, or sue for the same in any court of record by bill, information, plaint, or other action wherein no essoin, protection, or wager of law shall be allowed.

Now, that was an effective method of promoting British maritime interests and destroying the Dutch. It did accomplish its purpose. That is the character of method that England has been using, when it was necessary, to develop her merchant marine.

By this law only the nations of Europe could carry their own products or manufactures into British ports in their own vessels. The rest of the nations and all other parts of the world were dependent on British shipping. So were all the colonies of Great Britain and the British domestic trade. The monopoly set up by this law violated the right of every people excluded from the carriage of their own merchandise to market.

England had no regard for that. She was looking after her own interest, protecting her own people. It may have been some little hardship, because they could not bring goods to England in some of the ships that possibly would have carried them a little cheaper, but it built up the great merchant marine of Great Britain upon which the very life and perpetuity of the nation depended.

What did she do in reference to the colonies, a part of her own people? In the navigation act of 1771 this provision is found:

No goods or commodities whatever of the growth, production, or manufacture of Europe, Africa, or America shall be imported into England or Ireland or into any of the plantations (American Colonies) except in ships belonging to English subjects of which the master and the greater number of the crew shall also be English.

That is familiar history, of course, to every Member of the Senate; yet I thought it might not be amiss to call attention to it now, to put it in the Record, to show what England has done and to show what we are likely to meet—the principle, at least, and the policy we are going to meet in a commercial contest with the world when this war closes. England will leave nothing undone to maintain not only her supremacy upon the sea but to keep just as much as possible other nations off the sea and out of the maritime business.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is a more recent example that has always attracted my attention. We were having a great prosperity, so far as our merchant marine was concerned, under the historic principle of the founders of the Republic in the matter of discriminating duties. Great Britain, with her usual foresight and wisdom, induced our Government to agree to a policy that forbade us giving any advantage to our shipping that Great Britain did not give to hers; that is to say, we would abolish the discriminating-duty policy and we would have reciprocity, as it was called. We were foolish enough to enter into that commercial agreement with Great Britain, which is still in existence, but Great Britain immediately commenced giving large subsidies to her vessels, and handicapped us in that way, so that without subsidies given by our Government we were utterly unable to compete with Great Britain. That, to my mind, had a great deal to do with the decline of our merchant shipping in competition with Great Britain and other countries that gave governmental help to their ship-building industry.

Mr. JONES. When the Underwood tariff bill was under consideration here in the Senate, I remember that, one night along about 12 o'clock, I made a speech on that proposition; and I convinced myself, at any rate, if nobody else, that our abandonment of the discriminating-duty system was the primary cause for the decline of the destruction of our merchant marine. I did not intend to go into the matter here and to take the time up fully. I thought I made it pretty clear in that speech; I thought I showed, by five-year periods, how this operated, and showed how England did not accept our proposition that we embodied in the statute until she had everything ready to destroy us, until she had her discriminating features all framed up and in operation; and then she continued them after she had accepted our proposition of reciprocity and fair treatment. I have urged time and again, and I urge again, that we get rid of the treaties—that we get rid of these fetters that bind us now—and let us start into this commercial campaign at least upon an equality with these foreign countries, unfettered at any rate by any act of our own. We ought to get rid of those treaties just as quickly as possible. I made some remarks along this line a month or so ago, and will not go into it now further.

We hear talk about retaliation. We can meet them on a retaliation proposition now. We have got to meet them anyhow. They will discriminate against us in every conceivable way—secret and open.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I will venture to suggest to him that some months ago I offered a bill in this body restoring the discriminating-duty policy of the Government and providing for an abrogation of the commercial treaties. It went to the Committee on Commerce, and I suppose it is safely lodged in the pigeonholes of that great committee. I have never heard of it since.

Mr. JONES. It is there.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator called attention to Great Britain and her wisdom in looking after her own interests, especially her merchant marine. If the Senator will permit me I will read a few lines which I proposed to use myself, but I am sure it will get a wider circulation if it goes in the Senator's speech than in mine.

Mr. JONES. Oh, no.

Mr. GALLINGER. It shows how a newspaper of Great Britain looks upon the experiment we are now trying in this country. It is from the London Spectator of February, this year:

All over the world experience has shown that the intervention of the state in any particular industry frightens away private capital. American economists are fond of emphasizing this point when they contrast the American railway system, constructed by private enterprise, with the railways of India, constructed by Government enterprise.

He might have added the railways of Canada, where the greatest possible scandals have grown out of the governmental construction of the Canadian railroad:

The disproportion of mileage is enormous, and far greater than can be explained by the difference, admittedly great, between the industrial conditions of the two countries. Therefore, from the point of view of the British shipping industry, we certainly hope that President Wilson will persist in this bill, which might be briefly described as a scheme for handicapping American commercial enterprise by State competition.

They are felicitating themselves in Great Britain on this legislation as giving a further boost to British shipping to the disadvantage of ours.

Mr. JONES. I am very glad indeed that the Senator read that to the Senate. I had not seen that article. It confirms the ideas I have expressed in reference to the attitude of England regarding this legislation. She is not afraid of it. As I said a while ago, she is laughing in her sleeves at our effort to try to do something for our merchant marine. As long as we go along these lines there will be no trouble with Great Britain. She will not be opposing our legislation or anything of that sort, because her interest can not be served better than by the passage of such legislation as this.

What is England doing now? She is stopping our ships. She is confiscating their cargoes. She is taking them into port, holding them up, delaying them. She is delaying our mails, not letting them get through. She is blacklisting our citizens, blacklisting our ships, blacklisting the citizens of neutral countries so that they can not trade with us, so that they can not ship in our ships, and all this sort of thing. She is doing it on the plea, of course, of the necessities of war; yet there are some of those things that can not be explained upon any other theory or upon any other principle than that she wants to stop the development of the American merchant marine in certain lines of industry where we are threatening to get in.

A Senator the other day suggested that there were some ships that our Government could buy. I have heard of some. Why can we buy them? Why do they want to sell them? Because Great Britain has blacklisted them; that is why. What did the owners of one of these ships try to do some time ago? They tried to get some war insurance from the Government. What word was sent to them by the Treasury Department? "We can not give it to you, because England will not consent to it." That is what we have done. It was taken up by a party who knows how to do these things with the head of the Treasury. The Secretary ordered the insurance granted and kept the telegram. England took some of the ships of that company and is using them to-day. She told this company it could sell some of the others, but she would fix the price. That is her treatment of American citizens. No wonder they would sell to the Government that will not insist on the rights of its citizens being respected.

What is England doing in South America now? Blacklisting firms that would like to do business with this country; and they can not do it, because England objects.

I have another matter that I am going to call to the attention of the Senate in a very few days, showing how England is dominating not only our commerce but our legislative policy. We will not pass any legislation here for the interest of our own people, for the development of our own industry, which England objects to. England is doing all these things and many more, and all we say to her is, "Tut, tut, don't do it any more."

Mr. GALLINGER. And she keeps on doing it.

Mr. JONES. Of course she keeps on doing it, and she will keep on doing it as long as she gets away with it, as the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] suggests to me. Certainly she seems to be getting away with it all the time. She has gotten away with it from the very beginning of this administration, at her behest, without any reason given from that day to this. We repealed a statute that we had deliberately placed upon our books and imposed the tolls upon every American ship going through the Panama Canal that is imposed on the ships of any other country on the face of the earth going through that canal. At England's behest we turned over to the world this great enterprise constructed upon American soil by American energy and capital, and discriminated against our own people in the interest of England and other nations. From that day until this England has had her way in everything which she desires.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this is the opportunity for this country to do what we have been wanting to do for many, many years. It seems to me that this is an opportunity that is similar to that which presented itself to Great Britain during the Civil War, which she took advantage of. It seems to me that the condition brought about by this terrific conflict across the water opens up the opportunity for us to provide a policy under which when conditions become normal our shipping development can continue.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it seems to me the Senator's argument now is directly in conflict with his contention some time ago when he was agreeing with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] that no country could undertake to regulate its foreign rates.

Mr. JONES. Oh, no; it has nothing to do with the foreign-rate proposition.

Mr. FLETCHER. It has to do with foreign shipping.

Mr. JONES. That was not the question a while ago. I did not say they did not regulate the shipping. They do everything under the sun to encourage their shipping. They may get some of the profits that they have gotten, but they do not try to fix their rates, to fix the amount they shall charge their customers, unless it is in the case of ships getting a subsidy or subvention for carrying the mails, or something of that sort.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let me read the Senator what Mr. Runciman said in the House of Commons:

The control [by the Government] of shipping is now so wide and so adequate that there is no vessel which can go and trade anywhere without permission of one kind or another. The last gap in that control is filled up by the licensing committee having to license vessels, not only those which run between foreign ports, but also those which run between this country and allied countries (p. 217).

Then they proceed to limit importations, absolutely controlling the products which may or may not come into their country. The remedy decided upon by the Government in February, on the principle that high freights are due to the fact that the supply falls short of the demand, was to place restrictions upon imports. The first imports to be affected were paper, paper-making materials, tobacco, dried fruits, furniture woods, stones, and slates. Orders in council were issued prohibiting the importation into the United Kingdom of any article which came under the general head of "luxuries."

That is the kind of control the United Kingdom exercises over its shipping.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, that is a war measure; that is a war proposition. We are not at war with England or with any other great power. We do not need any war measure of that kind; but the Senator will find that, as soon as the war is over, whatever restrictions they put upon transportation that interfere with the development of their merchant marine will be taken off.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not contend that we want to exercise any such power; but I am only answering the suggestion that the Government has no such power as is proposed to be exercised in this bill.

Mr. JONES. But, Mr. President, that does not answer the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, in my judgment, at all. The suggestion of the Senator from Iowa did not apply to conditions or to propositions like that. However, the Senator can take care of that matter better than I can.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] evidently misconstrued what I said. I said that England, as an example, has never attempted to fix the rates which should be charged by an American ship plying between the ports of Great Britain and the ports of the United States. I still adhere to that assertion, and insist that Great Britain would have no authority to fix those rates. Of course we have the power, in the absence of a treaty to the contrary, to exclude all foreign ships from our ports and not to permit them to do business with us at all. I have no doubt about that power; but that is entirely different from the authority to regulate the rates which shall be charged by a ship foreign to the country passing the law.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does not the Senator think that, included in the larger power, would be the power to prevent discrimination against our own people in the matter of shipping? That is the point, it seems to me—that the larger power must include the lesser.

Mr. CUMMINS. All I have to suggest in answer to that is, Suppose we should fix one rate for the ship and Great Britain should fix another rate for the ship, which rate would prevail?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, as I was saying, I think we need now a policy, and we ought to adopt a policy looking to the permanent development of the American merchant marine through private enterprise and private capital. Nobody contends that it is the intention of the Government to invest seven hundred and fifty million or one or two billion dollars in the construction or purchase of ships. This bill provides a mere drop in the bucket. It is proposed and urged as an emergency proposition. It is not pretended that it will lead to a positive or a permanent development. If it has any effect whatever, it will be a deterrent, rather than an encouraging effect. We should now adopt a policy, if possible, that would take care of the situation that is going to confront us when the European war is over. If we could adopt a policy which would insure the construction of cargo ships, which would insure that anyone who built a cargo ship would have a cargo coming back to America after he had carried away our goods—if we could adopt a policy under which the building of fast ships would be encouraged for the carrying of our mail and of our passengers, then indeed would we continue the building up of the American merchant marine; then indeed would we extend our trade, build up our shipping, and develop our shipyards, afford lower rates, and furnish good transportation for the producers of our country.

Mr. President, I want to notice briefly some of the provisions of the bill, and I am going to do that as hurriedly as possible, for I have already taken much more time than I intended to take. There is one amendment that I think ought to be made in the bill. Under the definition of "common carrier by water in foreign commerce" the bill says that this phrase means:

A common carrier, except ferryboats running on regular routes, engaged in the transportation by water of passengers or property between the United States or any of its Districts, Territories, or possessions and a foreign country, whether in the import or export trade.

Mr. President, my judgment is that that covers what is commonly known as tramp ships as well as ships going upon regular lines and regular routes. The great majority of the world's commerce—of the world's cargo-carrying commerce—is done by tramp ships. Those ships do not go regularly from port to port. They may on one voyage visit the ports of two or three or any number of different countries before coming back to the home port. Sometimes they are gone from their home ports for 8, 10, or 12 months, touching at the ports of various countries. They may go with a cargo from one port to another, and from that port in ballast to a third port for a cargo, and take that cargo to a fourth port, and so on. It does not seem to me that we ought to attempt to regulate these vessels which are purely independent shipping carriers, if we might say that, independent of the regular lines; and any regulation or restriction that we place upon ships of that character is bound to strangle and to throttle the tramp ships, so far as our tramp ships are concerned, and is bound to concentrate the carrying trade in regular shipping lines, in great transportation companies. The tramp vessels ought to be excepted from the terms of this bill, in my judgment, just as ferryboats are excepted; but our Democratic friends have held their caucus and have decided upon the amendments to this bill; hurried it out of committee, with no opportunity to propose these changes; and, of course, it has come into the Senate; it is here, and it is going to be passed under the party decision of a party caucus. Only amendments that are agreeable to the party caucus can go on the bill.

The paragraph from line 12 to line 17, on page 2 of the bill, has been ver- materially amended from the way it came over from the other House, but I think it ought to have been stricken out entirely. Under it, I think, it is possible, and not only possible, but I think it is the real construction, that his board will have jurisdiction over wharfmens and even draymen handling the merchandise between the ship and the wharf. All those men in the various ports of the country will have to make their reports to the shipping board, file their charges, be liable to prosecution for failure to do so, and be subject to the control of the shipping board. That seems to me to be really ridiculous, but, notwithstanding that, the majority insist upon its going into the bill.

Mr. President, I think that the majority have made a very wise amendment in striking from this board the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of Commerce. If we are going to have a shipping board, it ought to be one entirely free from politics; as free as it possibly can be. It ought to be entirely free of having as a part of its membership a purely political officer. It would be just as much out of place to have the Secretary of War a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission as to have any departmental officer on this board. The committee and the caucus did very wisely, I think, in cutting this provision out of the bill, and I hope that will be insisted upon when the bill goes to conference. The people will certainly have much more confidence in the impartiality of this board if there is not a Cabinet officer on it than if it has Cabinet officers in its membership.

As to section 5, I have already called attention to the fact that under that section the title of the bill is practically nullified; that while under the title the naval auxiliary feature is made a principal and primary purpose of the bill, under section 5—that is, the legislative part of the bill—it makes the commercial feature the fundamental and principal proposition and the naval auxiliary part purely incidental, and it could be left out of consideration entirely.

I want, however, to call attention to the language here with reference to the construction of these ships, if we are going to construct them. The bill reads:

That the board, with the approval of the President, is authorized to have constructed and equipped in American shipyards—

That is all right—

and navy yards—

That is all right—

or elsewhere.

What does that mean? Well, that means elsewhere; it means in Japan, in China, in Great Britain, in France, in Germany, or anywhere else by foreign labor and out of foreign material. Under what conditions can these ships be constructed elsewhere? giving preference, other things being equal—

Mr. WADSWORTH. And they never are equal.

Mr. JONES (continuing reading)— to domestic yards.

Mr. President, under that clause every ship that the Government may order constructed is very likely to be built in a foreign shipyard. It may be that they could not get it done now while the European war is on, but if the war closes, and then we call for bids for the construction of these ships, every one of them will go to a foreign yard, because, under that language, if the bid of the foreign yard is one dollar less than the bid of the domestic yard other things are not equal—that is, other things besides one being the domestic yard and one the foreign yard—they are not equal.

I wanted to put in a provision something like this: That the ships could be built elsewhere if the bids of the domestic yard were considered extortionate or excessive. That is substantially the provision that the Republicans enacted with reference to the Panama Canal; but my Democratic friends would have nothing of that; they must have this provision.

Why, Mr. President, what are the conditions? Laborers in Japanese shipyards get from 40 to 80 cents a day, while in American shipyards they receive from $2.50 to $6 a day. Japan is becoming efficient in the shipbuilding industry; she is encouraging her shipyards; and whenever the time comes that this Government calls for bids for the construction of the ships provided for by this bill and opens those bids to the shipbuilders of the world, we will find that the Japanese and the English and the Germans will underbid our domestic yards. Then, instead of practically insisting upon the employment of American labor, the encouragement of American capital, the building of American ships, we will have ships for the Government built by foreign labor out of foreign material by foreign capital.

Mr. President, section 9, as it came to us from the House, contained a provision that if any foreign-built ships were given American registry under this act or under the emergency act which we passed in 1914, such ships could not engage in the coastwise trade except that such vessels might "engage in trade with Alaska, Hawaii, or Porto Rico, whether or not en route to or from a foreign port, if the board finds such trade is not being adequately served by a regular line or lines of vessels."

What has the Senate committee done? The Senate committee has provided absolutely that any foreign-built ship enrolled or registered or licensed under this bill may engage in the coastwise trade anywhere and under all circumstances. They leave no discretion, even to the shipping board, to exclude them. If service between American ports is adequate and sufficient, still foreign-built ships can engage in that trade.

Mr. President, the coastwise trade policy is one that has been in force in this country for over a hundred years. In my judgment the people of the United States are in favor of maintaining that policy. Under it we have developed a great American merchant marine. It is practically the only merchant marine we have, or did have when the conflict in Europe broke out. We are proud of it, and when some of us have urged developing a merchant marine many of our Democratic friends have pointed to the aggregate tonnage of the American merchant marine in the domestic trade, a merchant marine which has been built up under a policy of protection. Our Democratic friends are against protection in any form or character, and they seem to want to strike down this protective policy and this protected industry. This is but the entering wedge to the opening up of the coastwise trade of the United States to foreign-built ships; and, Mr. President, when the time comes that the coastwise trade of America is open to foreign-built ships, then will go the last vestige of American shipping. It may take time, but it will go, just as our foreign shipping has gone. England, of course, is rejoicing at the efforts we are putting forth to build up a foreign merchant marine, but she is rejoicing even more to see us strike at our domestic merchant marine.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. Purely for information, I ask the Senator from Washington whether there is any other provision in this bill for the registration or enrollment of a vessel except the provisions contained in section 9?

Mr. JONES. That is the only section of the bill bearing upon that question.

Mr. President, I received a memorandum this morning prepared by Mr. Smith, to whom I referred a while ago, calling attention to the fact that under this provision if the shipping board leases a foreign-built ship, as it can do under this bill, or charters one, this bill attempts to allow that vessel to go into the coastwise trade. He also touches in this memorandum much better than I could do upon some other features of the bill. I ask that I may insert the memorandum at this point in my remarks as a part thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The memorandum referred to is as follows:

This bill attempts to define the status of "common carriers" by water with a view to compelling such carriers to go into the matter of printing and filing rates in the same manner that common carriers by rail file their rates in the case of water carriers with the shipping board as in the case of rail carriers with the Interstate Commerce Commission. It won't work, except in the case of regularly established lines. An independent ship may be on time charter for a while, on a trip charter another time, may be a common carrier on one trip or on a passage one way, and a private carrier on another trip or on one portion of a trip. She may be a common carrier, in short, for so brief a time, and in such a limited manner as to permanence, as to render it quite impossible for her owners to prepare the classification of rates and file them in the same manner that a regularly established line or a railroad could and would.

The effect of the obligations imposed on independent common carriers by water will be to discourage the use of independent steamships of the tramp variety from intermittently performing the functions of a common carrier. On the contrary, they will be compelled to confine their operations largely, if not wholly, to the carriage of bulk cargoes or perform the service of private carriers. It will, in short, be utterly impossible to compel these intermittent carriers by water, which shift by seasons first into this trade and then into that, carrying grain from Argentina a few trips, cotton from Gulf ports a few trips, sugar from Cuba still other trips, grain from the Black Sea other trips, and bulk cargoes from different parts of the world as they are seasonally accumulated, to submit to either the expense or the annoyance of filing schedules of rates, agreements and the like, as steamships of regularly established lines may do. To sum it up, the competitive influence of the itinerant or independent carrier will be tremendously abridged in the trade with the United States, and not at all abridged in the trade of other countries not with the United States. Thus the export and import commodities of other nations, rivals to ourselves, will be carried under far less hampering restrictions than ours will be, with greater expense to us and less expense to our rivals.

It will not be difficult, nor will it be a serious hardship, for regularly established lines of steamships to conform to the requirements imposed by this bill upon "common carriers," either in foreign or in domestic trade. Where the obvious purpose of the men who have drafted these provisions is to increase the competition of independent ships with regularly established lines of ships just the reverse will, in all probability, be accomplished. The regularly established steamship lines, which regard the independent steamships of the tramp or itinerant variety, the ship of no known regular run or route as the bane of their existence, interfering with their business and often compelling regular lines to abate their rates, will no longer be annoyed by the independent ships, because the provisions of this bill will drive the independent steamships out of precisely the competition that the regular lines of steamships would be most pleased to have them driven out of. It is a case of aiming at the goose and hitting the gander.

The mobile seas, the wide waters of the world, upon which the independent water carriers are ever moving, first in one direction and then in another and still another, will shun the trade of the United States, except only in such cases as they act as private rather than as common carriers; precisely the reverse, doubtless, of what the men who have drafted these provisions intended or desired. Because it is not to be assumed for a moment that it is the purpose of these provisions to strengthen the grip of the regularly established lines on the business they control as common carriers and to weaken the competition of the independent, itinerant steamship, and yet that is precisely what the bill will accomplish if unamended.

Legislators, unfamiliar with the details of transportation, who have succeeded in so legislating as to regulate the transportation by rail where freight moves always over fixed lines or fixed routes, and never vary as to their functions as common carriers, think they can apply the same sort of legislation to the ever shifting and changing independent carrier by water, but they will learn that the whole effect of the provisions they have framed will merely be to make more and more difficult, more and more impossible, the competition of independent water carriers with regularly established lines. Traffic conditions by sea are so entirely different from what they are by rail that the rules applicable to rail carriers will not work with independent water carriers.

Probably, however, nothing is so absurd, so ridiculous, so utterly impossible, as the provisions of sections 5 and 9, giving the shipping board power to charter and lease foreign vessels and place such vessels under American register or register and enrollment, or register enrollment and license, as vessels of the United States. These terms "register" and "enrollment and license" refer to certain documents issued by the customs authorities, defining the nationality, status, and destination of vessels, or the areas within which they may operate. It is proposed by this bill to authorize the shipping board to take a British ship, for instance, under charter or lease, a transaction that would not in the ordinary traffic of the seas in the least degree interfere with the nationality of the vessel, and make of her during the time of her lease or charter an American vessel. In the first place, the owners of the vessel would not consent to such an undertaking, as the laws of Great Britain would prevent them from consenting to it. Secondly, Great Britain certainly would not consent to allow a ship really British, as to her ownership, to be registered or enrolled and licensed as a ship of an alien nation. The same is true of other foreign owners of foreign ships and the governments of the countries whose citizens and subjects own these foreign ships.

The whole scheme of legislation as to charter and lease of foreign vessels and documenting them as vessels of the United States, as proposed by the bill in sections 5 and 9, is as impracticable as the building of a railroad line from the earth to Mars. It is a lot of tomfoolery that will make the legislators of the United States the laughing stock of the whole maritime world. One feels foolish in attempting to analyze such incongruous and unheard-of absurdities. The courts will throw out everything intended in sections 5 and 9 as to the chartering and leasing of foreign ships by the shipping board, and all attempts to register or enroll and license such chartered or leased foreign ships as vessels of the United States will be declared by our own courts and by the courts and the governments of other nations as utterly and wholly futile and null and void. Such foreign vessels can not have any status as American vessels unless owned by American citizens, in which case they cease to be foreign vessels; but they do not cease to be foreign vessels while merely under charter or lease, and so long as they remain foreign vessels they can not by any legislative legerdemain become vessels of the United States.

With a zeal worthy of a far better cause, Congress is to be asked to kill off American-built ships in the coasting and lake trade of the United States and substitute foreign vessels, built by foreigners, for them. To the extent that this is planned in the way of purchase of foreign-built ships by the shipping board it will probably be lawful and accomplish the object sought, to wit: To destroy American shipowning in our coastwise carrying, as it has been all but destroyed in foreign carrying, and to destroy the industry of building ships of ocean types in the United States for coastwise carrying, as, until this war, such shipbuilding for foreign carrying had well-nigh ceased. The effect of this will be to destroy American shipping in coastwise trade as it has already been destroyed in foreign trade, and the same instrument that has all but wiped out American ships in foreign trade will accomplish their destruction in coastwise trade, and that instrument is free trade—Democracy's fetish.

But the attempt to accomplish the same thing through the charter or lease of foreign vessels by the shipping board and the registration or enrollment and license, or registration, enrollment, and license, of such chartered or leased foreign vessels as vessels of the United States is something so irreconcilable, in law and in fact, as to stamp it upon its very face as the quintessence of clumsy and immature legislation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate to refer to the provisions of the bill which authorize the shipping board, if it deems it wise, to organize one or more corporations in the District of Columbia for carrying out the purposes of this act. So far as I am concerned, I can see absolutely no use of any such authority as that. It looks to me like a sort of fifth wheel to a wagon; it looks like a proposition to furnish some additional offices of some kind; but I am going to leave the discussion of that matter to others who have given that particular feature of the bill probably much more thought than I have. I repeat, however, that I can see no necessity for it myself from any standpoint whatever.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. Upon that point I desire to ask the Senator a question, also for information. I assume that the bill was discussed in the committee rather carefully and fully.

Mr. JONES. That is a very violent assumption on the part of the Senator. The bill was not discussed in the committee. The committee had some hearings, and then when the subcommittee reported the bill to the full committee for consideration, the bill came up one day—perhaps I ought not to state these things; perhaps I have no right under the rules to go into that; but I will say the bill was not discussed in the committee to any extent.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not able to fully understand this sentence:

The total capital stock thereof shall not exceed $50,000,000.

Does that sentence mean that the total capital stock of all the corporations organized under this section shall not exceed $50,000,000, or does it mean that the total capital stock of any one corporation organized under the section shall not exceed $50,000,000?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I had not given that point any thought. I have merely assumed all the time that the meaning is that the aggregate of the capital of whatever companies are formed shall not exceed $50,000,000. I will yield to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who can probably answer that question definitely.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is the clear understanding that the total capital stock is to be limited to $50,000,000 for any or all corporations formed under this act.

Mr. CUMMINS. That may have been the intent of the members of the committee, but I think it is very imperfectly expressed.

Mr. JONES. I can readily see that when the Senator calls my attention to it. As I have said, I have simply assumed all the time that $50,000,000 was the aggregate of the capital stock, but I did not notice the language particularly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me to ask a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask the question merely for information, as my examination of the bill has been somewhat casual. Is there any provision in this bill by which the Government will be called upon to guarantee any dividend or income from the stock of the corporation which it organizes?

Mr. JONES. No; there is not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, does the Senator think that anybody will buy the stock?

Mr. JONES. The Senator is just as able to form an opinion with reference to that as I am. The Government will buy the stock; the Government will have the stock.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Washington allow me to reply to that inquiry?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. If anybody thinks he can use the Government through this corporation to advance his interests he will buy the stock; if he does not think so he will not buy the stock.

Mr. JONES. That is the only circumstance or condition under which the stock would be bought.

Mr. President, the bill provides that the Government may operate the ships proposed to be acquired under this bill for five years after the close of the war, but those who hope to have the Government operate these ships, even for a five-year period, will need to study very carefully the amendments which have been put in the bill by the committee, under which the operation of the ships by the Government, in my judgment, is absolutely out of the question. They will not be operated by the Government; they will be leased to private parties, who will operate them, and they will charge whatever rates they see fit to charge and whatever rates the transportation market will command; and the people of the country, who hope to get relief through these ships and their operation, will find themselves very badly disappointed, for the only ones who will secure benefit will be the favored few who are able to get these ships and possibly to lease them at a cheaper rate than they could lease ships from private parties and to charge for their operation the highest possible transportation market price.

Mr. President, I said a moment ago that if the primary purpose of this bill were so expressed as to show that it is the naval auxiliary feature I could support it, so far as that feature of it would go, and I would be perfectly willing to vote for $50,000,000, if it were necessary, to buy or construct ships primarily to be used as naval auxiliaries, and giving the Secretary of the Navy authority at any time and at all times when they were not needed for naval purposes to use them for commercial purposes. I would not limit it to 5 years; I would not limit it to 10 years; I would not limit the period at all.

I would not have our naval ships tied up at the wharves like our Army transports have been for several years; but if they are not needed by the Government let them be used, if necessary, to carry nitrates from Chile or Peru, or wherever the nitrates come from, and at a lower rate, in order to help out the Government and the farmers of the country, authorizing the board, if they thought wise, even to lease these ships to private parties, subject to be taken back for the use of the Government if required. I would be willing to do that, and I could see some reason in doing that. There would not be any danger in that to private capital and some relief would come to the people. Every ship man that came before the committee said he would have no objection to a proposition of that character. They recognized the wisdom of having the Government use its ships even for commercial purposes when not needed for governmental purposes. They did not see any danger or any deterring influence in a policy of that character; but that is entirely different from what is proposed in this bill.

Mr. President, sections 15 and 17 of the bill prohibit certain things upon the part of common carriers by water. They prohibit entering into combinations, or paying rebates, or using "fighting ships," or retaliating against shippers, or making threats against them, or using unfair or unjustly discriminatory measures, or making or giving any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to persons or localities, or allowing any person to obtain transportation at less than the regular rates by deceit or false weights, and things like that.

Of course, nobody has any objection to prohibiting all those things, but what is the use of putting them in this bill? They are already covered by another act that we have already passed. There is another board that has authority to inquire into and prohibit and punish, in my judgment, all of the things enumerated in those sections so far as any governmental agency can prohibit them.

I have here the Federal Trade Commission act, the first part of section 5, of which reads as follows:

That unfair methods of competition in commerce are hereby declared unlawful.

The commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations, except banks, and common carriers subject to the acts to regulate commerce, from using unfair methods of competition in commerce.

Now, then, what is commerce under the terms of that act?

"Commerce" means commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, or in any Territory of the United States or in the District of Columbia, or between any such Territory and another, or between any such Territory and any State or foreign nation, or between the District of Columbia and any State or Territory or foreign nation.

That seems to me to be as broad as it can be; and these, it seems to me, are clearly unfair methods of competition—every one enumerated here. I think the Federal Trade Commission has full authority, as far as any governmental agency can act, to meet all these situations. There is no provision in this bill that excludes the Federal Trade Commission from going into any acts that are covered by the authority of the proposed shipping board.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Washington understands that section 15 applies to foreign ships as well as to American ships.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Has the Senator given special attention to the definition of the word "rebate"? If he has, I should be glad to know whether, in his judgment, it narrows or broadens the scope of that word as it is ordinarily understood.

Mr. JONES. I have not examined into that especially.

Mr. CUMMINS. Allow me to call the Senator's attention to it at this point, then, because it is very instructive.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I shall be glad to have the suggestion of the Senator with reference to it.

Mr. CUMMINS. The first paragraph of the section says:

That no common carrier by water shall directly or indirectly * * * pay, or allow, or enter into any combination, agreement, or understanding, express or implied, to pay or allow, a deferred rebate to any shipper. The term "deferred rebate" in this act means a return of any portion of the freight money by a carrier to any shipper as a consideration for the giving of all or any portion of his shipments to the same or any other carrier, or for any other purpose, the payment of which is deferred beyond—

I am now reading the amendment of the committee—

the completion of the service for which it is paid, and is made only if, during both the period for which computed and the period of deferment, the shipper has complied with the terms of the rebate agreement or arrangement.

I think that is a rather curious provision. In my opinion, it expressly authorizes or legalizes rebates which are just as obnoxious to common sense and good reason as the rebates that are prohibited.

Mr. JONES. There is one thing certain: It restricts the meaning of the words "deferred rebate," and to that extent would merely weaken the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it would weaken it, if not destroy it.

Mr. JONES. So it simply emphasizes my contention that it would be better to leave these things to be taken care of as they are now, by a governmental agency that we have already provided after the fullest discussion and most careful consideration, instead of duplicating the jurisdiction, and, by specific definitions like that, limiting the general declaration of the Federal Trade Commission act declaring unlawful all unfair methods of competition.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. As to the observation made by the Senator from Iowa, in the hearings before the House committee, at page 14, the Senator will find the statement of Dr. Johnson as to that. He says:

This is equivalent to saying that the proposed legislation proceeds in the right direction. It permits rival steamship lines to form conferences and to enter into agreements for the regulation of services and rates, but subjects the agreements and all the rates fixed by agreements to Government knowledge and regulation. Legislation of this kind is sound in principle and is needed in the public interest.

This is the statement of Dr. Johnson with reference to that provision—that it subjects these agreements to Government knowledge and regulation.

Mr. JONES. I will leave the Senator from Iowa to answer that suggestion, if he so desires.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will do so in my own time.

Mr. JONES. The opinion of Dr. Johnson is very valuable along some lines and worthy to be followed in certain directions; but on matters of legal construction, and things of that sort, I do not think it is an opinion that is entitled to a great deal of weight.

Mr. President, section 16 is, I think, one of the most seriously objectionable sections of the bill. When the people of the country realize what our Democratic friends are trying to do in that section, in my judgment they will condemn this legislation very bitterly. The people of this country are in favor of the antitrust law, known as the Sherman Act, against conspiracies in restraint of trade. It is an act that of recent years has been construed by the Supreme Court of the United States and has been made effective if properly enforced. I do not believe they are in favor of its repeal. Yet this section absolutely repeals the Sherman law as to agreements made by common carriers by water, whether interstate or foreign.

What does it do? It permits combinations and agreements for the fixing of rates, the receiving of special rates and accommodations, regulating competition, pooling or apportioning earnings, losses, or traffic, allotting ports or restricting or otherwise regulating the number and character of sailings between ports, and all that sort of thing. It allows these things to be done with the approval of the shipping board. This bill places it in the absolute power of the shipping board, so far as legislation can place it there, to approve and make lawful every agreement or combination for the pooling of rates or fixing of rates or apportioning ports or dividing business that these carriers may enter into. Do the people of the country want that done? And it expressly says what?

Every agreement, modification, or cancellation lawful under this section—

And it is lawful when it is approved by the shipping board. That is what makes it lawful. If the shipping board approves these agreements, they are lawful.

Every agreement, modification, or cancellation lawful under this section shall be excepted from the provisions of the act approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies."

Then it goes further and says—and amendments and acts supplementary thereto, and the provisions of sections 73 to 77, both inclusive, of the act approved August 27, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," and amendments and acts supplementary thereto.

Now, Mr. President, I am simply going to call attention to what that section permits this board to do and what it does with reference to the Sherman law.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. JONES. In just a moment. This shipping board can approve an agreement made between two companies to-day and disapprove a similar agreement made between two other companies to-morrow—the one would be lawful and the other would be unlawful—with reference to pooling of rates, regulating rates, apportioning business, restricting business, and all that sort of thing.

I now yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not only is the section open to all the objections suggested by the Senator from Washington, but I desire to mention another: The section provides that agreements existing at the time of the organization of the board shall be lawful until disapproved by the board.

Mr. JONES. That is true.

Mr. CUMMINS. It does not even require the action of the board in order to make lawful existing agreements which may be in violation of the antitrust laws.

Mr. JONES. That is true. Mr. President, that provision also nullifies the following provision inserted in the act of August 24, 1912:

No vessel permitted to engage in the coastwise or foreign trade of the United States shall be permitted to enter or pass through said canal if such ship is owned, chartered, operated, or controlled by any person or company which is doing business in violation of the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," or the provisions of sections 73 to 77, both inclusive, of an act approved August 27, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," or the provisions of any other act of Congress amending or supplementing the said act of July 2, 1890, commonly known as the Sherman Antitrust Act, and amendments thereto, or said sections of the act of August 27, 1894. The question of fact may be determined by the judgment of any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in any cause pending before it to which the owners or operators of such ship are parties. Suit may be brought by any shipper or by the Attorney General of the United States.

Congress enacted that provision of law for a purpose. Congress solemnly declared that ships acting contrary to the Sherman law and acts supplemental thereto, operated by persons violating that law, should not pass through the Panama Canal. This section repeals that provision. Did our Democratic friends do it purposely? Did they intend deliberately to nullify the act of 1912 prohibiting ships operated contrary to the Sherman law from going through the Panama Canal? Is there some special interest to be served or benefited by this action? It looks like it. They propose now to let such ships go through the Panama Canal. How? By having their agreements and their contracts in violation of the Sherman law declared lawful by the shipping board.

Mr. President, sections 17 and 18, in my judgment, simply handicap our shipping, simply put them at a disadvantage with the shipping of foreign countries, and will simply retard the development of an American merchant marine rather than encourage it. They ought to be left out of this bill. They ought to be left out at least until we get an American merchant marine to regulate, and then see whether or not we should put restrictions upon it. The regulation of rates in interstate commerce by water by a proper board is not seriously objectionable, although that should be carefully guarded, and should apply to regular lines, unless you want to favor monopoly and drive out the weak operator and the ship that goes from port to port and picks up business wherever it can and at such rates as it can secure.

Mr. President, I have prepared, as expressing my own views as clearly as they have thus far been formulated and determined, subject to change, some provisions which I should like to see adopted as a substitute for this bill. I am not going to offer this matter as an amendment or substitute for the bill, however. Why? Simply because it is a useless thing to do, because our Democratic friends are in the majority. They have decreed by caucus that this bill shall go through. They have decreed by caucus that it shall go through in a certain way, with certain amendments, and that all other amendments will be voted down. So it is useless to offer this as a substitute, and I am not going to do it; but I am going to ask that it be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, such will be the order.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after 30 days from the signing of a treaty of peace closing the war now existing in Europe, the date to be announced by proclamation of the President, all goods, wares, and merchandise imported in vessels not admitted to registration under the laws of the United States shall be subject to a duty of 5 per cent ad valorem in excess of the duties otherwise imposed, and all goods, wares, and merchandise, excepting tea and coffee, so imported which otherwise are admitted free of duty shall pay a duty of 5 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That the foregoing provisions shall not go into effect as to goods, wares, and merchandise imported in the vessels of other nations with which we have treaties which said provisions contravene until said treaties have been duly abrogated; and the President is hereby directed to abrogate any treaties which would interfere with the taking effect of said provisions in the manner provided by said treaties.

SEC. 2. That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to pay for ocean-mail service under the act of March 3, 1891, in vessels hereafter built and registered in the United States and of a speed equaling or exceeding that of the fastest foreign vessels in the same service, at the date of contract, on routes to Europe, and otherwise complying with the terms of said act, at a rate not exceeding $10 per mile on the outward voyage by the shortest practicable routes; and in vessels hereafter built and registered in the United States of the second class, described in and otherwise complying with the terms of said act, on routes to South America, to the Philippines, to Japan, to China, and to Australasia at a rate not exceeding $4 per mile on the outward voyage by the shortest practicable routes, and in vessels of the third class, described in and otherwise complying with the terms of said act, hereafter built and registered in the United States on said routes to South America, to the Philippines, to Japan, to China, and to Australasia at a rate not exceeding $2 per mile on the outward voyage by the shortest practicable routes: Provided, That, subject to the foregoing provisions, every contract shall be awarded to that responsible bidder who will contract, under penalties prescribed by the Postmaster General, for the highest running speed between the points named in the contract.

SEC. 3. That a board is hereby created, to be known as the United States shipping board, and hereinafter referred to as the board. The board shall be composed of five commissioners, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; said board shall annually elect one of its members as chairman and one as vice chairman.

The commissioners appointed shall continue in office for terms of two, three, four, five, and six years, respectively, from the date of their appointment, the term of each to be designated by the President, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he succeeds.

The commissioners shall be appointed with due regard to their fitness for the efficient discharge of the duties imposed on them by this act, and to a fair representation of the geographical divisions of the country. No commissioner shall be in the employ of or hold any official relation to any common carrier by land or water, or own any stock or bonds thereof, or be pecuniarily interested therein. No commissioner shall engage in any other business, vocation, or employment during his term of service. Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. A vacancy in the board shall not impair the right of the remaining members of the board to exercise all its powers. The board shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

The board may adopt rules and regulations in regard to its procedure and the conduct of its business.

SEC. 4. That each member of the board shall receive a salary of $7,500 per annum. The board shall appoint a secretary at a salary of $3,500 per annum, and employ and, until otherwise provided by law, fix the compensation of such attorneys, officers, naval architects, special experts, examiners, clerks, and other employees as it may find necessary for the proper performance of its duties and as may be appropriated for by Congress. The President, upon the request of the board, may authorize the detail of officers of the military or naval forces, or the transfer of employees of other services of the United States for such duties as the board may deem necessary in connection with its business.

With the exception of the secretary, a clerk to each commissioner, the attorneys, naval architects, and such special experts and examiners as the board may from time to time find necessary to employ for the conduct of its work, all employees of the board shall be a part of the classified civil service and be selected and appointed in accordance with the civil-service rules and regulations.

The actual and necessary expenses incurred by the members of the board or by its employees under its orders, in making any investigation, or upon official business in any other place than in the District of Columbia, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the board.

Until otherwise provided by law the board may rent suitable offices for its use in the District of Columbia.

The Auditor for the State and Other Departments shall receive and examine all accounts of expenditures of the board.

SEC. 5. That the board shall investigate the relative cost of building merchant vessels in the United States and in foreign maritime countries, and the relative cost, advantages, and disadvantages of operating in the foreign trade vessels under United States registry and under foreign registry; it shall investigate the legal status of mortgage loans on vessel property, with a view to means of improving the security of such loans and of encouraging investment in American shipping; it shall examine the navigation laws of the United States and the rules and regulations thereunder and all matters intimately connected with the subject of shipping, foreign and domestic, and make such recommendations to the Congress as it deems proper for the modernization of the laws of the United States, and for the adequate development of the American merchant marine in domestic commerce, and in all lines of foreign commerce in competition with foreign shipping, upon a fair and equitable basis, and discharge such other duties as may from time to time be imposed upon it by law.

It shall, on or before the 1st day of December in each year, make a report to the Congress, which shall include its recommendations and the results of its investigations, a summary of its transactions, and a statement of all expenditures and receipts under this act, and of the operations of any corporation in which the United States is a stockholder, and the names and compensation of all persons employed by the board.

SEC. 6. That when used in this act the term "common carrier by water in foreign commerce" means a common carrier, except ferryboats running on regular routes and except boats running in a ferry service between this country and Canada making not less than six trips a week, and excepting vessels commonly known as "tramp vessels," engaged in the transportation by water of passengers or property between the United States or any of its Districts, Territories, or possessions and a foreign country, whether in the import or export trade.

The term "common carrier by water in interstate commerce" means a common carrier engaged in the Great Lakes and coastwise trade in the transportation by water of passengers or property between one State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States and any other State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States, or between places in the same Territory, District, or possession.

The term "common carrier by water" means a common carrier by water in foreign commerce, or a common carrier by water in interstate commerce, as above defined.

The term "person" includes corporations, partnerships, and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of the United States or any State, Territory, District, or possession thereof, or of any foreign country.

The provisions of this act shall apply to receivers and trustees of all persons to whom the act applies and to the successors or assignees of such persons.

SEC. 7. That when the United States is at war, or during any national emergency the existence of which is declared by proclamation of the President, no vessel registered or enrolled and licensed under the laws of the United States shall, without the approval of the board, be sold, leased, or chartered to any person not a citizen of the United States or transferred to a foreign registry or flag.

Any vessel sold, chartered, leased, transferred or operated in violation of this section shall be forfeited to the United States, and whoever violates any provision of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to imprisonment of not more than five years or both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 8. That the President, upon giving to the person interested such reasonable notice in writing as in his judgment the circumstances permit, may take possession, absolutely or temporarily, for any naval or military purpose, of any vessel receiving ocean mail pay under this act: Provided, That if, in the judgment of the President, an emergency exists requiring such action he may take possession of any such vessel without notice.

Thereafter, upon ascertainment by agreement or otherwise, the United States shall pay the person interested the fair actual value at the time of taking of the interest of such person in every vessel taken absolutely, or if taken for a limited period, the fair charter value for such period. In case of disagreement as to the fair value it shall be determined by appraisers, one to be appointed by the board, one by the person interested, and a third by the two so appointed. The finding of a majority of such appraisers shall be final and binding upon both parties.

SEC. 9. That any vessel receiving ocean mail pay under this act may be listed by the Secretary of the Navy as a vessel of the United States Naval Auxiliary Reserve. The officers and members of the crew of any such listed vessel who volunteer for the purpose and are citizens of the United States or its insular possessions may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, be enrolled in various ranks and ratings corresponding to those of the United States Navy, not above the rank of Lieutenant commander, as members of any naval reserve force established by law.

SEC. 10. That no common carrier by water in interstate commerce shall, directly or indirectly—

First, Pay, or allow, or enter into any combination, agreement, or understanding, express or implied, to pay or allow a deferred rebate to any shipper. The term "deferred rebate" in this act means a return of any portion of the freight money by a carrier to any shipper as a consideration for the giving of all or any portion of his shipments to the same or any other carrier, or for any other purpose, the payment of which is deferred beyond the period for which computed and is made only if, during both the period for which computed and the period of deferment, the shipper has complied with the terms of the rebate agreement or arrangement.

Second, Use a fighting ship, either separately or in conjunction with any other carrier, through agreement or otherwise. The term "fighting ship" in this act means a vessel used in a particular trade by a carrier or group of carriers for the purpose of excluding, preventing, or reducing competition by driving another carrier out of said trade.

Third, Retaliate against any shipper by refusing, or threatening to refuse, space accommodations when such are available, or resort to other discriminating or unfair methods, because any shipper has patronized any other carrier or has filed a complaint charging unfair treatment, or for any other reason.

Fourth, Make an unfair or unjustly discriminatory contract with any shipper based on the volume of freight offered or unfairly treat or unjustly discriminate against any shipper in the matter of (a) cargo space accommodations or other facilities, due regard being had for the proper loading of the vessel and the available tonnage; (b) the loading and landing of freight in proper condition; or (c) the adjustment and settlement of claims.

Any carrier who willfully violates any provision of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000 for each offense.

SEC. 11. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by water in interstate commerce, either alone or in conjunction with any other person, directly or indirectly:

First, To make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, or description of traffic in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any particular person or description of traffic to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever.

Second, To allow any person to obtain transportation for property at less than the regular rates then established and enforced on the line of such carrier, by means of false billing, false classification, false weighing, false report of weight, or by any other unjust or unfair device or means.

Third, To induce, persuade, or otherwise influence any marine insurance company or underwriter, or agent thereof, not to give a competing carrier by water as favorable a rate of insurance on vessel or cargo, having due regard to the class of vessel or cargo, as is granted to such carrier or other person subject to this act.

SEC. 12. That every common carrier by water in interstate commerce shall establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable rates, fares, charges, classifications, and tariffs, and just and reasonable regulations and practices relating thereto, and to the issuance, form, and substance of tickets, receipts, and bills of lading, the manner and method of presenting, marking, packing, and delivering property for transportation, the carrying of personal, sample, and excess baggage, the facilities for transportation, and all other matters relating to or connected with the receiving, handling, transporting, storing, or delivering of property.

Every such carrier shall file with the board and keep open to public inspection, in the form and manner and within the time prescribed by the board, the maximum rates, fares, and charges for or in connection with transportation between points on its own route; and if a through route has been established, the maximum rates, fares, and charges for or in connection with transportation between points on its own route and the points on the route of any other carrier by water.

No such carrier shall demand, charge, or collect a greater compensation for such transportation than the rates, fares, and charges filed in compliance with its section, except with the approval of the board and after 10 days' public notice in the form and manner prescribed by the board, stating the increase proposed to be made, but the board for good cause shown may waive such notice.

Whenever the board finds that any rate, fare, charge, classification, tariff, regulation, or practice, demanded, charged, collected, or observed by such carrier is unjust or unreasonable it may determine, prescribe, and order enforced a just and reasonable maximum rate, fare, or charge, or a just and reasonable classification, tariff, regulation, or practice.

SEC. 13. That whenever a common carrier by water in interstate commerce reduces its rates on the carriage of any species of freight to or from competitive points below a fair and remunerative basis with the intent of driving out or otherwise injuring a competitive carrier by water it shall not increase such rates unless after hearing the board finds that such proposed increase rests upon changed conditions other than elimination of said competition.

SEC. 14. That no common carrier by water in foreign commerce shall demand, charge, or collect any rate, fare, or charge which is unjustly prejudicial to exporters of the United States as compared with their foreign competitors. Whenever the board finds that any such rate, fare, or charge is demanded, charged, or collected it may alter the same to the extent necessary to correct such unjust prejudice and make an order that the carrier shall discontinue demanding, charging, or collecting any such unjustly prejudicial rate, fare, or charge.

SEC. 15. That every common carrier by water shall establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable regulations and practices relating to or connected with the receiving, handling, storing, or delivering of property. Whenever the board finds that any such regulation or practice is unjust or unreasonable it may determine, prescribe, and order enforced a just and reasonable regulation or practice.

SEC. 16. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by water, or any officer, receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or employee of such carrier or person, or for any other person authorized by such carrier or person to receive information, knowingly to disclose to or permit to be acquired by any person other than the shipper or consignee, without the consent of such shipper or consignee, any information concerning the nature, kind, quantity, destination, consignee, or routing of any property tendered or delivered to such common carrier or other person subject to this act for transportation in interstate or foreign commerce, which information may be used to the detriment or prejudice of such shipper or consignee, or which may improperly disclose his business transactions to a competitor, or which may be used to the detriment or prejudice of any carrier; and it shall also be unlawful for any person to solicit or knowingly receive any such information which may be so used.

Nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the giving of such information in response to any legal process issued under the authority of any court of a State or of the United States, or to any officer or agent of the Government of the United States, or of any State, Territory, District, or possession thereof, in the exercise of his powers, or to any officer or other duly authorized person seeking such information for the prosecution of persons charged with or suspected of crime, or to another carrier, or its duly authorized agent, for the purpose of adjusting mutual traffic accounts in the ordinary course of business of such carriers.

SEC. 17. That the board may require any common carrier by water, or any officer, receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or employee thereof, to file with it any periodical or special report, or any account, record, rate, or charge, or any memorandum of any facts and transactions appertaining to the business of such carrier or other person subject to this act. Such report, account, record, rate, charge, or memorandum shall be under oath whenever the board so requires, and shall be furnished in the form and within the time prescribed by the board. Whoever fails to file any report, account, record, rate, charge, or memorandum as required by this section shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each day of such default.

Whoever willfully falsifies, destroys, mutilates, or alters any such report, account, record, charge, or memorandum, or willfully files a false report, account, record, rate, charge, or memorandum, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject upon conviction to a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or to both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 18. That any person may file with the board a sworn complaint setting forth any violation of this act by a common carrier by water, and asking reparation for the injury, if any, caused thereby. The board shall furnish a copy of the complaint to such carrier or other person, who shall, within a reasonable time specified by the board, satisfy the complaint or answer it in writing. If the complaint is not satisfied, the board shall, except as otherwise provided in this act, investigate it in such manner and by such means, and make such order as it deems proper. The board, if the complaint is filed within two years after the cause of action accrued, may direct the payment, on or before the day named, of full reparation to the complainant for the injury caused by such violation.

The board, upon its own motion, may in like manner, and, except as to orders for the payment of money, with the same powers, investigate any violation of this act.

SEC. 19. That orders of the board relating to any violation of this act shall be made only after full hearing, and upon a sworn complaint or in proceedings instituted of its own motion.

All orders of the board other than for the payment of money made under this act shall continue in force for such time, not exceeding two years, as shall be prescribed therein by the board, unless suspended, modified, or set aside by the board or any court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 20. That the board shall enter of record a written report of every investigation made under this act in which a hearing has been held, stating its conclusions, decision, and order, and if reparation is awarded, the findings of fact on which the award is made, and shall furnish a copy of such report to all parties to the investigation.

The board may publish such reports in the form best adapted for public information and use, and such authorized publications shall, without further proof or authentication, be competent evidence of such reports in all courts of the United States and of the States, Territories, Districts, and possessions thereof.

SEC. 21. That the board may reverse, suspend, or modify, upon such notice and in such manner as it deems proper, any order made by it. Upon application of any party to a decision or order it may grant a rehearing of the same or any matter determined therein, but no such application for or allowance of a rehearing shall, except by special order of the board, operate as a stay of such order.

SEC. 22. That for the purpose of investigating alleged violations of this act the board may, by subpoena, compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, documents, and other evidence from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. Subpoenas may be signed by any commissioner, and oaths or affirmations may be administered, witnesses examined, and evidence received by any commissioner or examiner, or, under the direction of the board by any person authorized under the laws of the United States or of any State, Territory, District, or possession thereof to administer oaths. Persons so acting under the direction of the board and witness shall, unless employees of the board, be entitled to the same fee and mileage as in the courts of the United States. Obedience to any such subpoena shall, on application by the board, be enforced as are orders of the board other than for the payment of money.

SEC. 23. That no person shall be excused, on the ground that it may incriminate him or subject him to a penalty of forfeiture, from attending and testifying, or producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence, in obedience to the subpoena of the board or of any court in any proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this act; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing as to which, in obedience to a subpoena and under oath, he may so testify or produce evidence, except that no person shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

SEC. 24. That in case of violation of any order of the board, other than an order for the payment of money, the board, or any party injured by such violation, or the Attorney General, may apply to a district court having jurisdiction of the parties; and if, after hearing, the court determines that the order was regularly made and duly issued, it shall enforce obedience thereto by a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise.

SEC. 25. That in case of violation of any order of the board for the payment of money, the person to whom such award was made may file in the district court for the district in which such person resides, or in which is located any office of the carrier or other person to whom the order was directed, or in which is located any point of call on a regular route operated by the carrier, or in any court of general jurisdiction of a State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States having jurisdiction of the parties, a petition or suit setting forth briefly the causes for which he claims damages and the order of the board in the premises.

In the district court the findings and order of the board shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, and the petitioner shall not be liable for costs, nor shall he be liable for cost at any subsequent stage of the proceedings, unless they accrue upon his appeal. If a petitioner in a district court finally prevails, he shall be allowed a reasonable attorney's fee, to be taxed and collected as part of the costs of the suit.

All parties in whose favor the board has made an award of reparation by a single order may be joined as plaintiffs, and all other parties to such order may be joined as defendants. In a single suit in any district in which any one such plaintiff could maintain a suit against any one such defendant. Service of process against any such defendant not found in that district may be made in any district in which is located any office of or point of call on a regular route operated by such defendant. Judgment may be entered in favor of any plaintiff against the defendant liable to that plaintiff.

No petition or suit for the enforcement of an order for the payment of money shall be maintained in a district or State court unless filed within one year from the date of the order.

SEC. 26. That the venue and procedure in the courts of the United States in suits brought to enforce, suspend, or set aside, in whole or in part, any order of the board shall, except as herein otherwise provided, be the same as in similar suits in regard to orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but such suits may also be maintained in any district court having jurisdiction of the parties.

SEC. 27. That the board may investigate the practices of any foreign carrier entering our ports, and if, in its judgment, such foreign carrier is using unfair and unjust methods and practices in competition with our carriers or shippers, or exporters, it may call upon such carrier to desist from using such methods and practices, and if it fails or refuses to do so, the board may issue an order prohibiting such carrier from entering our ports, and so long as such order continues in effect no such carrier shall be permitted to enter at any of the ports of the United States.

SEC. 28. That whoever willfully violates any provision of this act, except where a different penalty is provided, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not to exceed $5,000.

SEC. 29. That this act shall not be construed to affect the power or jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission nor to confer upon the board concurrent power or jurisdiction over any matter within the power or jurisdiction of such commission; nor shall this act be construed to apply to intrastate commerce. That in so far as any of the provisions of this act may be inconsistent with the Federal Trade Commission act, they shall supersede the same.

SEC. 30. That if any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to certain circumstances, is held unconstitutional, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to circumstances other than those as to which it is held unconstitutional, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 31. That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the establishment and maintenance of the board, including the payment of salaries herein authorized.

Mr. JONES. I will briefly state now what the substitute provides.

The first section provides for a system of discriminating duties, to take effect 30 days from the signing of the treaty of peace. We do not need any special encouragement now. What our shipping people and our shipping interests and our capital would like to have would be a formulated policy that they could act under when conditions become normal; and so I provide that this shall take effect and be in operation 30 days after the signing of the treaty of peace, and direct the President to abrogate all our treaties that would be contravened by those provisions.

Mr. President, that is a policy that has met heretofore with Republican approval. It is a policy that has met heretofore with Democratic approval. It could be enacted as an absolutely nonpartisan measure; as, in my judgment, a wise, patriotic, American measure for the building up of the American merchant marine.

The second section provides for an increase in the ocean mail pay provided under the act of 1891 and provides that it shall be paid only to ships hereafter built and plying between certain ports. Under that provision there would not be a dollar taken out of the Treasury of the United States unless an additional ship was added to the American merchant marine of a certain class and of a certain speed and of a certain character described in this provision and plying between American ports and certain other ports.

In other words, we would not pay out a dollar unless we got the ships and unless they did the business. And what is the money that we pay out? You may call it a subvention if you want to, but it is payment for service rendered the Government in the carrying of our mails to foreign countries and in the construction of these ships in a certain way to meet certain requirements and certain emergencies, if they come up, under provisions that make them available in case of war for use by the Navy and the Government of the United States. In other words, that section, if any money were paid out, would insure the construction of fast ships running between certain ports and available for naval auxiliaries.

Then I provide for a shipping board to investigate the conditions of shipping at home and abroad, to investigate all the phases and all the disadvantages under which our people act, and submit recommendations to Congress from time to time; and I give them certain regulatory powers over interstate shipments, but practically none over foreign shipments, leaving it to the board to suggest to Congress, after due investigation and due consideration, what change in the law we should make along those lines. I do not give them power to nullify the Sherman law. I leave them several of the regulatory features of the present bill, to be controlled by the Federal Trade Commission as they have authority to do now under the law.

Mr. President, this bill has been placed in no party platform. The people have never asked for it. They have never approved it. It is a farce, a sham, a delusion, a wasteful makeshift, and a fraud upon the people. It will furnish $10,000 jobs to a few party favorites with many less expensive minor positions. It will take $50,000,000 out of the public treasury to pay these high salaries and buy or build a few very costly ships to be turned over to private parties and used by them at as high freight charges as they can extort from the producers and shippers of the country. It will furnish no additional ships to meet the present emergency or reduce the high freight charges. It will destroy the development of a merchant marine by private capital and provide little relief in itself. It will further handicap our own shipping and encourage that of our rivals. It attempts to regulate rates to be charged in the foreign trade, which has never been done and is not now being done by any other nation on earth. It will destroy the merchant marine we now have and place us absolutely at the mercy of our commercial rivals for transportation facilities. It will stifle industry, prevent investment, suppress energy, aid the strong, destroy the weak, prevent competition, encourage monopoly, and eventually destroy the development that has come from the present conditions and make us more subservient and dependent upon foreign shipping than ever before.

For these and other reasons I can not vote for this measure.

Mr. President, I have here one or two things I want to put in the Record, and then I am through. The Senator from Minnesota called my attention this morning to an article in the Nautical Gazette which I ask may be printed in the Record, so far as the part that I have indicated in ink is concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Nautical Gazette of Thursday, Aug. 10, 1916.]

Absolutely no power is given to deal with vessels' equipment or control in operation or otherwise. Neither is the power of the board to be in conflict with the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission. These powers, however, should be such that the shipping board should rule in all nautical matters and both commissions work in unity.

As stated, the whole enactment is partisan, a mistake beyond recall, and the amendments are similar. Shipping interests are neutral but expect fair treatment and would appreciate such.

With the administration intent on shipping problems, it is perhaps fitting to ask, Why has it drawn up a bill without any consideration of bulldozing to operator, operator to underwriter, underwriter and operator to shipper, and to the end that all matters nautical be entirely placed in the hands of a competent board of nonpartisan membership.

Better have it forget the $50,000,000 corporation altogether and cooperate with the shipping interests, who are making strenuous efforts to put the United States merchant marine on the seas and are preparing to cope with the inevitable competition practically in sight.

Let it not lose sight of the fact that all the world is building ships to-day. The emergency of moving cargoes has been overcome without any Government aid by private enterprise, who reasonably may ask, Is the country ready for the reaction which inevitably is coming? Has our gold surplus so much thought of been accumulated merely as a beacon light?

It would be fitting indeed for the administration to think it over and arrange whereby shipping interests may be able in foreign competition to obtain credit against such reserves on foreign shores in the obtaining of trade in general competition and presenting the American flag on all the seven seas.

Mr. JONES. Then, I have here a letter from Mr. N. J. Blagen, a large lumber-shipping man of my State, in which he discusses this bill at considerable length, especially from the standpoint of a local interstate coastwise shipper. He discusses it from the standpoint of a man who is thoroughly familiar with the conditions under which small ships are operated, going from port to port; and I want to put that in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The letter is as follows:

GRAY'S HARBOR LUMBER CO.,
Hoquiam, Wash., July 26, 1916.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. JONES: Replying to yours of the 20th instant (reference H. R. 15455).

First of all allow me to say that I think this entire act should be defeated, as the establishment of a merchant marine on the basis herein outlined will be a colossal failure. It is not only the wasting of fifty or one hundred million dollars, but the injury that it will inflict upon the country in a general way will be far greater. One of the first things that will happen in connection with it will be that the labor unions will try to control the operation of this fleet to such an extent that it can not be anything but a failure, and through the operation of this will force the same influence upon other industries of the country, which will have a tendency to destroy business and industries, and eventually ruin the laboring man.

The regulation prescribed in this act for foreign commerce is intended to injure and destroy as far as possible such commerce. The least we should do for our citizens is to give them a free hand in competing with the rest of the world in this field of operation. If that was done and all of our antiquated and freak laws in reference to shipping and water-borne commerce repealed we would soon control the shipping traffic of the world. In my judgment we have come to a time when shipping will be very materially changed. That is to say, commerce will be carried in larger ships, so constructed that they can be operated for less money and carry a much larger cargo, and in that way reduce the cost. This can be accomplished very much better by and through the American citizens than anyone else, because we are willing to learn from the rest of the world and add thereto such new ideas as the past and present teaches us. We are about the only nation that is willing at all times to adopt new and improved methods quickly, providing it promises to be profitable.

In this respect I believe we are passing through the most critical history of our Nation in reference to water-borne and foreign transportation. We must remember that we are in competition with countries that have the very best seamen and sailors at less than half what we have to pay ours, and it should be apparent to all that it takes some wise guiding hand to build ships and operate against such competition. Yet I am satisfied that it can be done by our American spirit of progress and ingenuity, but not with the handicap that the Government has or proposes to place on our citizens.

Section 19 of this act reads in part as follows:

"That every common carrier by water in interstate commerce shall establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable rates, fares, charges, classifications, and tariffs, and just and reasonable regulations and practices relating thereto and to the issuance, form, and substance of tickets, receipts, and bills of lading, the manner and method of presenting, marking, packing, and delivering property for transportation, the carrying of personal, sample, and excess baggage, the facilities for transportation, and all other matters relating to or connected with the receiving, handling, transporting, storing, or delivering of property."

Apply this to the carrying of lumber from Oregon and Washington to California, in which service there are usually about 100 steam schooners operating under normal conditions. There are scarcely any two of them that will receive the same rate, and it is not often that they receive the same rate for two trips in succession, but change from trip to trip. Again, there is some lumber that is shipped in large bulk from one mill loading the boat in one day and unloading at the other end in one place in from one to two days. The same material is frequently shipped from a number of other mills in small quantities, so that a boat has to take three or four days more to get her cargo, sometimes taking as long as four or five days, and frequently has to deliver it at two or more places. Now, say such a boat is worth from $200 to $400 a day, according to the rate prevailing. It is very evident that the one cargo can be carried for much less than the other, and yet under this bill, as I understand it, it would have to be carried at the same rate. We have a large volume of lumber business moving in a much more exaggerated way than shown above. I have known a steamer coming in here putting on as many as 16 different parcels from a large number of mills, to be delivered to as many as 10 different places. How could any general tariff or freight rate apply to such a business as against a mill that gives a boat a full load to a single point of delivery? In the one case each parcel has to be marked and kept separate; the boat is responsible if any of it is missing, mislaid, or delivered to the wrong party; so that you can readily see that one is worth a great deal more than the other. Yet it is the same kind of lumber, from the same point of origin, and to the same point of destination.

Another thing, the lumber market has always been subject to constant change either up or down, and so has the freight rate, largely in sympathy with the lumber market, but more often because of either plenty of tonnage or scarcity of it, which has been fully demonstrated during the last few years. Take, for instance, a year or two before the war, the first year of the war, and, in fact, up into last year freight was very low because tonnage was very plentiful. Since that time all of the large boats have gone offshore or onto the Atlantic coast, so that only the smaller boats have been left on this coast, thereby creating a scarcity which has had the effect of very much higher rates. To give you a concrete illustration of how this works: Our company is part owner in two coastwise steamers carrying about 800,000 feet of lumber each. The rates were so low that these two steamers could not make expenses, and consequently were laid up for over two years. Meanwhile we employed larger steamers that carried twice that much to carry our lumber, which they could do at a small profit. In other words, legitimate competition came into play just the same as legitimate competition has come into play in lumber business during the last few years, when we have been forced to introduce and adopt such methods by which we have been able to materially reduce the cost of production, and those mills that have not been able to introduce such methods have been forced out of business, all of which is perfectly legitimate and according to natural laws.

Again, these steamers pick up such freight from time to time on their return trip as they can get, and unless they make a low rate they will not get any of this freight, because it will be shipped on regular lines. These rates on lumber are often arranged by telegraph or telephone in a few minutes, and are increased or decreased in accordance with the market, available tonnage, quick dispatch, good service at both ends of the line, and many other circumstances that go to make up competition and efficiency, thereby rendering as good service as possible for the least amount of money. Supposing these steam schooners (as I take it they would all be common carriers where they carried lumber generally for different mills and lumber yards) would have to file a regular tariff with all the regulations that go with it, how could they compete with one another? It may be stated that no competition is wanted. Then why not carry this on to the mill that produces the lumber and cut out the competition, and so on all along the line, which would mean that we would all become machines for the Government to support? It must be evident that if this whole thing were carried to its final analysis the Government would have to support us all, and, of course, we would all then do as little as we had to if all competition, which is supposed to be the life of trade, was done away with. This is saying nothing of the enormous annoyance that these steamers would be subjected to by the constant interference on the part of the Government officials. You will naturally say that a lumber mill like ours is not under the regulation or supervision of the Government, but if you knew the annoyance and interference we have with the Government officials in an institution like ours you would be surprised. Take in consideration the income tax. While we make an absolute complete report, absolutely true in every detail, file same with the proper officials in proper time, yet we are annoyed by these officials off and on from time to time going through our books and annoying our whole office force from morning until night, to say nothing about all the other annoyances that come up from week to week from them wanting information of various kinds. It is very easy for me to understand what annoyance a steam schooner would be put to under this regulation.

Then, again, such a little thing as a ferryboat running across the Columbia River, of which there are a good many. Just think of the annoyance and inconvenience they would be put to as they have no office force or regular organization for handling all this detail work in connection with the filing of tariffs, making reports, etc. In other words, they would practically be forced out of business, and those that continued would have such an added expense and monopoly on the business that the rates would naturally be very materially increased, and with perfect monopoly the service would suffer. Taking it altogether, the idea of the Government running individual business is the greatest mistake that can possibly be thought of. If the Government wants to go into transportation by water, the manufacture of lumber, the operation of railroads, the handling and selling of merchandise, the operation of factories of every kind, as well as the handling of every business enterprise in the country, I suppose they can do so, but I think that most of us would agree that it would be a mistake and a failure. If they can not handle all of it, much less can they successfully operate part of it.

The regulation of railroads thus far in the United States has certainly been a colossal failure, and my judgment is that it always will be. I think it safe to say that the construction and operation of railroads in the United States had attained the highest degree of efficiency of any country in the world under the private ownership and free open competition and operation. No doubt some serious wrongs were committed in the development of such an enormous amount of railroad construction in so short a time, but the principal object was achieved, namely, the construction of first-class railroad systems under efficient management and operation, and last but not least cheap transportation. I think during all of these years of free and open railroad competition there was a constant downward tendency in rates, but what about it now since the Government undertook to regulate them? Is it not a decided cry for increase? Just about the same time the railroads were relieved of free transportation and rebates. This in itself must have added enormously to their net income and should have been the means of big reductions in rates.

My company is one of the largest shippers on the Pacific coast, shipping between four and five thousand carloads of lumber annually, and I will say without any fear of successful contradiction that if the railroads had been left absolutely free to make rates as they saw fit we would have a lower rate on lumber to the East to-day than we have.

After the construction of the Great Northern Railroad, Mr. J. J. Hill issued a rate of 40 cents per hundred pounds on lumber from here to Minnesota Transfer, and stated that if the time ever came when he could get all he wanted to carry at that rate the construction of the Great Northern would be an assured success. The time came when they could get more than they could carry, and with it came the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate tariff. Mr. Hill, together with others, applied for an increase of 20 per cent and they allowed him 10 per cent, whereas if there had been no regulation we feel positive that a reduction of at least 10 per cent would have been made in rates.

When the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway arrived on this coast their traffic manager told us repeatedly that they were determined to make a reduction in rates on lumber going East, but, after a long struggle, were prevented from doing so by the competing lines. Before the regulation of railroads, when a new road was built into a given territory there was nearly always a reduction in freight rates, but since the regulation was inaugurated there has been a constant cry for increase, and why? Partly because of the enormous increase in operation, caused by the interference of our Government, and also the fact that all the roads are now in one enormous combination, practically indorsed by the Government. In this way competition has been done away with and there is no need for them to ever think of such a thing as making a reduction in rates or to increase their efficiency. They are simply saying to the Government, "You have told us how to run our railroads, and now you can pay for it."

Now, it might look very well to the average man to feel that the Government controls the railroads and that they can regulate them, but what good is that when we have to pay more for our transportation? You will hear railroad officials claim that, because of increase in wages, etc., it costs more to transport freight than it used to. This I do not think can be borne out by the facts. Twenty-five years ago a locomotive with an ordinary crew would take from 25 to 30 cars to a train, carrying, perhaps, 20,000 pounds to the car. To-day the same crew with perhaps two or three additional men will take from 40 to 50 cars, carrying from 40,000 to 60,000 pounds to the car. In other words, one crew will take from two to three times as much as a crew did 20 or 25 years ago. Is it not evident that they can transport freight for a great deal less money? Right here allow me to say it is a well-known fact that the interest on capital invested in any railroad is a very great factor in the cost of operation. Now, consider the increased volume of trade and tonnage as compared with what it was 25 or 30 years ago. This should have the same tendency to materially decrease cost of transportation.

For your information I may say that 20 years ago we loaded from twenty to thirty thousand pounds of lumber in a car and to-day we can easily average 70,000 pounds to a car. Therefore instead of costing the railroads more for their traffic it costs considerably less. I am paying twice as much for labor and material to-day than I did 25 years ago, and yet I am producing lumber for about one-third of what I did at that time. It is all done by improved methods and efficiency. The very same thing holds good in the operation of a railroad. The trouble is that the railroads now have been told by the Government to do as they are told, and in turn they say to the Government, "You can pay for it." There is no more competition and no special reason why they should exert themselves to acquire additional traffic or income and see that their properties are made profitable, but simply say to the Government, "We are entitled to so much interest on our investment, and in order to get it we must have increased rates." The same identical thing will hold true in our shipping industry.

If regulated as proposed in this act it will mean a very material increase in cost, and all of this increase in various lines of industry might be all right if it applied to every business and every individual in the United States, so that we could all get a share of it. It would then, of course, amount to nothing, because we would all have to contribute to it, but the serious trouble is when only a few, such as railroads, shipowners, and a few others are forced to levy higher rates on the public which the great masses have to bear and be burdened with without getting any value received in return. All of this class of legislation has but one tendency—to disturb and destroy business activity and put unearned profits into the pockets of a few at the expense of the masses.

Altogether I am opposed to the entire bill. From start to finish it is a piece of legislation that stands for destruction instead of construction, but I am especially opposed to the last part of the bill where it refers to the interstate commerce, as it can not possibly accomplish any good, but is sure to do a great deal of harm.

Yours, very truly,

N. J. BLAGEN.

Mr. JONES. I have here, Mr. President, two telegrams—one signed by several transportation lines of the Pacific and one signed by the Seattle Chamber of Commerce—that I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the telegrams will be printed in the RECORD.

The telegrams are as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., August 4, 1916.

WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Referring section 9, House bill 15455, as reported by Senate committee, permitting foreign vessels engaged United States coastwise trade. While during present emergency conditions we favor permitting these vessels enter intercoastal trade, in our opinion such conditions do not apply to direct coastwise trade, as there are sufficient American-built steamers to efficiently and promptly handle all traffic offering in that trade. In view of this and of large number new vessels under construction American yards, many of which will undoubtedly enter coastwise trade, convinced the grave mistake as we, as great injustice to lines now regularly engaged therein, permit foreign-built vessels enter that trade. Such change in protective policy under which coastwise merchant marine has been developed to present proportions would, instead of assisting further development, seriously cripple or perhaps destroy it. Earnestly urge exert best efforts have section amended to exclude such vessels from direct coastwise trade.

SEATTLE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

SEATTLE, WASH., July 29, 1916.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned steamship companies operating American-built vessels in the coastwise trade on the Pacific coast, respectfully, but most earnestly, protest against section 9 of House bill No. 15455 as reported by the committee to the Senate, permitting foreign-built vessels to engage in the United States coastwise trade. The regular coastwise lines have built up their trade at great expense and are giving a high-class service on regular schedule at low rates, not only with suitable cargo steamers but also with combination passenger and freight steamers, thereby furnishing a facility greatly needed by the traveling public. It would work a great hardship and a grave injustice upon these lines and tend to destroy their passenger and freight service to subject them to the competition of these cheaper built and cheaper operated foreign freighters, for the present increased selling prices and building costs of foreign vessels are undoubtedly merely a passing phase of the extraordinary conditions temporarily existing because of the war. Such vessels, when in the foreign trade, and presumably the same privilege would be granted them when engaged in both the foreign and coastwise trade, could employ under the Executive order of September 4, 1914, foreign-licensed officers, and would not be subject to either United States inspection or measurement when trading foreign at rates relatively much higher than the coastwise rates, and calling at two or more American ports these steamers could afford, whenever having unfiled space, to carry freight between such American ports at abnormally low rates, with which the American coastwise steamers, depending exclusively on coastwise business, could not compete. There is now ample American-built tonnage to promptly and satisfactorily handle all traffic now offered, or likely to offer, in the direct coastwise trade; also in the intercoastal trade as soon as the off-shore rates become normal. Moreover, the recent testimony of the Commissioner of Navigation before the committee shows that to-day there are building in American yards 372 steamers, aggregating 1,147,534 gross tons, equivalent to over 18 per cent of all the present tonnage in the coastwise trade, and there can be no doubt that a large percentage of this new tonnage and of the heavy additional tonnage that will undoubtedly be constructed will eventually find its way into the coastwise and intercoastal trade. What element, therefore, of necessity, of justice, or of prudence is there in permitting these foreign-built vessels or other vessels acquired under this act to invade the coastwise trade that now almost everywhere has to meet the competition of railroads and the constantly increasing expenses of operation with practically no opportunity, because of competition already existing, for any corresponding permanent increase in rates.

May we not ask you to lend your best efforts to have section 9 so amended as to exclude not only foreign-built vessels but all vessels acquired under this act from the coastwise trade, thereby maintaining our traditional governmental policy under which our coastal fleet has grown to be the largest in the world.

Mr. JONES. An extract on page 31 from the report of the House committee quoting from the report of the joint committee that made a report some time ago on conditions in the merchant marine I ask may be printed as a part of my remarks. I call attention to the fact that in this report they state that many if not most of the evils in the interstate shipping trade have already been met by legislation that we have passed and referring to the act there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter will be printed.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The act of August 24, 1912, providing for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, contains provisions extending the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission over interstate transportation which involves the carriage of property by rail and water, in the following particulars, viz: (1) to establish physical connection, where this is reasonably practicable and justifiable, between the rail carrier and the dock of the water carrier by directing either or both of the carriers to construct the connecting tracks; (2) "to establish through routes and maximum joint rates over such rail and water lines, and to determine all the terms and conditions under which such lines shall be operated in the handling of the traffic embraced"; and (3) "to establish maximum proportional rates by rail to and from the ports to which the traffic is brought, or from which it is taken by the water carrier, and to determine to what traffic and in connection with what vessels and upon what terms and conditions such rates will apply." Section 11 of the act also provides for the divorcing of common carriers by water from the railroads under certain conditions. These legislative requirements go far toward eliminating some of the undesirable practices which were found by the committee to exist in the domestic commerce of the United States.

Mr. JONES. I have here an article entitled "The projected surrender of our coastwise shipping." I desire to have that printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE PROJECTED SURRENDER OF OUR COASTWISE SHIPPING—IN CONTRAST TO THE PRESENT DESTRUCTIVE POLICY, REPUBLICAN LEGISLATION WOULD ENCOURAGE SHIPBUILDING AND INCREASE REVENUE.
TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN.

Sir: The ostensible purpose of the administration shipping bill is to help restore American shipping to foreign carrying; its real purpose is to deliver over to foreign shipowners and foreign shipbuilders the control of our coastwise carrying, the cream of our domestic maritime business. Everybody knows, and no one better than the administration, that to appropriate $50,000,000 with which to do a work that would require from $750,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 is to attempt the impossible; and yet it is doubtful if the last-named sum would suffice to replace with American ships the foreign ships now engaged in our foreign carrying.

For more than half a century possession of our coastwise carrying has been the objective of our maritime rivals. They have the active and zealous—I might say the fanatical—aid of American free traders. With the administration dominated by free traders, with Congress in the possession of free traders, what more natural than that this time of all times should be selected for the delivery of our coastwise carrying to foreign maritime interests? With such a purpose in the minds of our foreign maritime rivals ever since 1854, and with the opportunity now presented of putting it into effect, why should they not seize and make the most of it?

Ever since the Spanish-American War there has been a redoubling of free-trade activity in the line of turning American coastwise carrying over to aliens. With the extension of our coastwise navigation laws successively to Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, and the opening of the Panama Canal, ever-increasing fleets of ocean-going American-built steamships have been necessary, because none but American-built vessels may engage in our domestic carrying under a law that has been among our statutes uninterruptedly since 1817.

So long as our domestic carrying was conducted in vessels of a type that was unsuited to ocean going, especially foreign going, business foreign opposition to the growth of our domestic marine was not pronounced. But as soon as it was apparent that the accommodation of the most rapidly growing portion of our domestic carrying—that between our insular possessions, Alaska, and through the Panama Canal in the coast-to-coast trade—necessitated the construction and operation of ships capable of engaging in any trade of all of the seven seas, then the menace of American maritime revival became too acute for further postponement of the defeat of that effort. Circumstances seemed to lend themselves to the defeat of that effort. President Wilson discovered, and publicly declared, that our coastwise carrying was a "monopoly." It has been so declared by free traders in and out of Congress for two or three years, ever since opposition developed to the repeal of the law that relieved vessels in our coast-to-coast trade from the payment of Panama Canal tolls.

If a demand for American-built ocean-going steamships continues long enough, even if such a demand is confined to American ships for use only in our coastwise carrying, it must be apparent that in time the supply would be of so extensive a character as to bring about methods of construction, economies, and efficiency in American shipyards that would enable American builders to compete successfully with foreign shipbuilders. In such an event it would not be long before the trident of Neptune, said to be the "scepter of the world," would be lodged in American hands. No free trader on earth wants that to happen, least of all our foreign maritime rivals.

The way to kill off such a menace for good and all is to kill off American shipbuilding. That destroyed, the danger is past. Now, therefore, while it costs substantially more—I mean, of course, in normal times—to build ships in this country than it costs to build them in other countries, now is the appointed time to admit to our coastwise carrying foreign-built ships owned by American citizens or corporations. As to American corporate ownership of foreign-built ships, it can be accomplished in this easy way without disturbing in the least real foreign ownership: A foreign steamship line may be sold to an American corporation, the foreign owners receiving as pay the stock of the American corporation beyond the few nominal shares needed for the few American directors (dummies) required to conform to the requirements of law. An American corporation then owns the ships, which are entitled to employment in our domestic carrying, but actual ownership still remains abroad.

Of course, the moment that foreign-built ships are admitted to our coastwise carrying no one will order ships at substantially higher cost from American builders. If our builders should first succeed in reducing cost of shipbuilding to the foreign level such an enactment would be less of a menace, but menace enough, nevertheless.

One word more on this point. Of course no one now alive is responsible for the act of 1817 reserving our domestic carrying for American-built vessels. President Wilson would undoubtedly find, if he should investigate the antecedents of that act, that it was then regarded and accepted "as good Democratic doctrine"; that is to say, the "monopoly" he has discovered in our coastwise carrying is of Democratic creation. If it is a "monopoly," when participation in it is open to 100,000,000 American citizens, it is a law-created monopoly, and no one is permitted to participate in our coastwise carrying who does not have his vessel built in American shipyards. Vice versa, any American citizen who has a vessel built in an American shipyard may run her in the coastwise trade of the United States. But for the purposes of our foreign maritime rivals and to satisfy the economic fanaticism of American free traders it is decreed that American maritime interests must be strangled aborning.

As to putting the Government into the merchant shipping business. It may build, buy, and charter merchant vessels, and such vessels may engage in any American trade. This bill was decreed because of the failure of the free-ship bill of August 18, 1914. Out of a carefully estimated American ownership of 2,500,000 gross tons of vessels under foreign flags but slightly more than 600,000 tons have come under American registry, although the free-ship law not only admitted foreign-built vessels owned by American citizens and corporations to American registry for foreign carrying, but every law, rule, and regulation growing out of our Steamboat-Inspection Service, designed only to safeguard life and property under the American flag, has been suspended in respect to these naturalized foreign-built ships, and their alien masters and officers are permitted to command and officer them. Besides, these vessels and their cargoes are insurable under our Federal war-risk insurance act.

When the war ends, it has been the expressed view of representatives of the administration, many of these naturalized foreign-built ships will revert to foreign registries, foreseeing which the administration Government-ownership bill has been foisted upon an unsuspecting and indifferent people, the political purpose of which is to throw dust in the eyes of the American people by making them "see" and therefore believe that the Democratic administration has solved a problem that has vexed the souls of American legislators for over half a century.

In the 10 years preceding Democratic control of Congress every minority report made by Democratic members of congressional committees dealing with bills designed to build up American shipping in foreign trade favored the old policy of discriminating duties—every report. On February 26, 1910, when the Democrats were in the minority, Representative Underwood made a great speech on the floor of the House, strongly opposing subsidies and ardently advocating a return to "the policies of the fathers," to the policy adopted by the first Congress under the present Constitution, a policy framed and enacted by the men who had participated in framing and having adopted the Constitution which we rejoice to live under—a policy based upon "the constitutional regulation of commerce," which in recent years Democratic national platforms have invoked for the rehabilitation of our shipping in foreign carrying. As argument in behalf of this early American policy of discriminating duties, Democrats were able to "point with pride" to the fact that from 1789 until 1861, a period wholly antedating Republican participation in governmental affairs, American ships carried an average—mark this, an average—of 80 per cent of the entire imports and exports of the United States, and during 61 of these 72 years the early American policy of discriminating duties was in full or partial effect.

It is worth emphasizing that for nearly three-quarters of a century four-fifths of the foreign carrying trade of the United States was conducted in American bottoms, ships built in the United States, wholly owned by American citizens, commanded, officered, and manned by American citizens. And this was under a policy that merely increased the customs duty on imports in foreign vessels over the amount of the duty imposed on imports in American vessels. It took nothing from the National Treasury. On the contrary, it was a revenue getter, in that to the extent that imports came to us in foreign vessels the national revenues were increased.

When Senator UNDERWOOD was chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives he inserted in his tariff bill, with the full approval of every Democratic member, a provision reducing the duty 5 per cent on all imports in American vessels. From the moment the tariff bill saw the light of day the 5 per cent discount section was bitterly and consistently opposed by Secretary of the Treasury McADOO, who during the past couple of years has crossed and recrossed the American Continent lamenting upon the decline of an American merchant marine and demanding, for the Nation's protection and welfare, the immediate creation of a naval auxiliary merchant marine. Before the bill was a month old Secretary McADOO was writing to the State Department for an opinion as to the meaning of this section, and although he failed to have it stricken out in the House, he succeeded in the Senate; but Mr. UNDERWOOD had it restored in conference, and it was enacted along with the rest of the bill.

What then? Failing to persuade Mr. UNDERWOOD to have an act passed repealing the 5 per cent discount section, Secretary McADOO obtained an "opinion" from our then Attorney General, Mr. McREYNOLDS, to the effect that the section was unenforceable. Twice since that time the courts have declared the section is enforceable, but Secretary of the Treasury McADOO, the man who wants a naval auxiliary American merchant marine, and who is charged with the duty of enforcing a law designed to give us an American naval auxiliary merchant marine, refuses to enforce it.

And so Senator GALLINGER, of New Hampshire, has introduced a bill that would restore the old policy of discriminating duties in the right way, by increasing the duty on imports in foreign vessels, rather than reducing the duty on imports in American vessels, applicable to all imports, dutiable or undutiable; a bill that would increase the national revenue $165,000,000 the first year of its operation; that would at least partially restore protection, and thus prosperity, to our country; and, most of all, that would re-create an American merchant marine and maintain it in foreign carrying.

ALEXANDER R. SMITH.

NEW YORK, July 22.

Mr. JONES. I think, Mr. President, that is all.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Hollis	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Brady	Husting	O'Gorman	Smoot
Chilton	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Sterling
Clapp	Jones	Penrose	Stone
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Phelan	Swanson
Clarke, Ark.	La Follette	Ransdell	Thomas
Curtis	Lane	Shafroth	Tillman
Fletcher	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Townsend
Gallinger	Lewis	Sherman	Warren
Gronna	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Harding	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.	Works

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators have responded. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BRYAN, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, and Mr. UNDERWOOD answered to their names when called.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. TAGGART] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. BANKHEAD entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

[Mr. GALLINGER addressed the Senate. His speech is printed in the Senate proceedings of August 14, 1916.]

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President (Mr. NORRIS in the chair), the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE], the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], and the two Senators from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. HOLLIS]: I have taken the trouble to address all the Senators present on this occasion, because I should like, if I may, to convey to the American people some little suggestion of the intense interest of the majority, in particular, in a subject so important as the reestablishment of the American merchant marine.

Mr. President, I can believe that if a measure is to be passed by this body under the lash of the Chief Executive to afford an added claim for a political campaign, there ought at least to be a pretended interest in the measure, whether or not the arguments offered from this side of the Chamber are worthy of a hearing.

No nation in all history has achieved a high place in commerce which was not a maritime nation, and no people has ever become a maritime people that has not been a shipbuilding people. This Nation, in the beginning, when there were men of daring and determination and virility, who had the making of a nation before them, who had not yet accumulated their "pile," as we sometimes say, who were determined to make the New World Republic a power among the nations of the world and a becoming participant in trade, had no difficulty in establishing a merchant marine, though they were the offspring of the marine power of the time, and as a colony had been kept down, without any encouraging development. I am not sure but that the fact that the mother country kept the Colonies apart from trade had much to do with the conflict for American independence. Yet here we are to-day, after more than half a century of retrogression in American shipping, so far as overseas transportation is concerned, contemplating a new departure, admittedly under the party lash; and yet so interesting and so intensely important a problem is met in this body with an indifference that would shock the American people if they could only see it as one does who sits in this body.

Mr. President, I am not expressing a grief that is personal to myself about the inattention that is given to the discussion. I do not know but that some Members of this body have the impression that the public is not concerned. I have a conviction that the Members of Congress from the Middle West have opposed the development of a merchant marine, as has been outlined by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], through a misunderstanding of public interest. I shall venture to relate to the half dozen Senators who are good enough to listen a little experience of my own, demonstrating public interest in this question.

In 1903, some two years after the death of the late William McKinley, I was interested in a campaign in Ohio wherein Mr. Hanna, the late Senator from my State, was the most prominent candidate in the campaign. He had been the personal friend and the associate of William McKinley, and it was perfectly natural to my mind that this great man, in going before the people, interested in the policies that McKinley had so long espoused, should have made frequent and extended allusion to McKinley in his campaign. To my political instincts, however, that was a mistake; and inasmuch as I was traveling with the distinguished candidate at that time, I said to him, "Two years after the death of William McKinley ought to relieve him from being a part of this campaign, and I think you are making a mistake to use his name so frequently." With characteristic frankness Mr. Hanna said, "Well, what are you going to talk about if you can not talk about the tariff question and this great apostle whom we all loved so much?" I said, "Senator, I want you to try an experiment in Ohio. You are familiar with the merchant-marine question." I think he was joint sponsor for the Hanna-Frye bill. I am not sure about that. I knew, however, that he was familiar with the question. I said, "Our people in Ohio are just as much interested in ocean shipping as the people on the seacoast. You discuss this question that has been interesting American statesmen for so many years, and tell the people of Ohio the plain truth about it, and you will find a responsive interest."

The next engagement of our speaking aggregation was in a country district where mainly farmers were assembled on the county fairground, and Mr. Hanna, with characteristic energy and that marked understanding which he possessed in relation to any subject in which he was interested, started out and made a speech of 45 minutes devoted exclusively to the American merchant marine; and I never saw an audience whose attention was more riveted, an audience that made more willing response. So keen and wise and discriminating a politician as Mr. Mark Hanna never omitted in a subsequent speech in that campaign a discussion of the American merchant marine; and I have the conviction that if that great man had lived, he would have lent his energies and his influence to the establishment, through legislative action, of a measure upbuilding our American merchant marine.

I have only alluded to this, Mr. President, to show the popular interest in this question; and yet it is true that statesmen from the Middle West, frightened by the cry of "subsidy," which has been shouted from the other side of this Chamber from the time when memory runneth not to the contrary, have yielded, lest their people imagine that they were doing something for the promotion of special and favored interests. I venture to assert at this point, Mr. President, what to my mind is to-day the greatest need in American popular government. I do not expect to find them in any one party, and I am not making a partisan observation; but I tell you, Senators, in the American Republic to-day we need a few men in public life more concerned in exalting than in exploiting the American people. We need a few men in legislative halls and executive offices who are more concerned about doing things for the public good than they are for winning popularity.

I have been very much interested in the study of some of the makers of the American Republic; and the men who have a high place in history are the men who oftentimes throttled a popular notion and offered in its stead something that should contribute to the public good. Not every popular notion is a dependable one; many are ephemeral; and, in my judgment, the most serious thing in our popular government to-day is the frequent appeal to the prejudiced vote of the great mass and the insincerity which lies back of it.

I will not say that the party in power is not sincere in this proposition to establish Federal shipping. I am a little reluctant, Mr. President, even to discuss the matter since I know that it is a decree of the party caucus. The action of this body, as was the action of the Commerce Committee, is decreed by Executive order, and I have no disposition to add extended observations merely to make a record or to contribute to political literature. Congress is doing far too much of the latter every week. Sometimes the Senate seems to me more a factory for turning out political falderal than a forum of statesmanlike debate. I do not assume that the abuse is wholly one-sided, though I do admit the greater capacity of the majority for grinding out a worthless grist which ought never to go to the type-setting machines in the Government Printing Office. If we could somehow let the public understand the cost of words to the Public Treasury, I believe that public would demand a reform; but I do not mean to urge so impossible a thing just now—merely deplore the practice, because I feel the uselessness of utterance when addressing myself to a bill the fate of which is foreordained by a mandate of political exigency.

The keenest disappointment that I have known in the Senate came of the handling of this bill by the Committee on Commerce.

I do not pretend to have been a student of the subject of merchant marine, but I had expected a full and revealing and informing committee discussion in which I might, as a member, participate. The making of a maritime nation, or rather with us the restoration of a maritime power, seems to be of such surpassing importance that the most careful and conscientious study ought to be imperative. Instead, this body, without committee consideration, has a makeshift, a political consolation prize, a mere excuse for the political claim of constructive accomplishment, which offers Government invasion of the only marine fields in which we now excel, to confuse and harass, if not to destroy, and giving no assurance of accomplishment in the transoceanic field when we are anxious to restore our prestige.

The water commerce of the Great Lakes system and our coastwise shipping have kept pace with every step of our marvelous development. There is not a well-established claim to added shipping which is not developing normally and naturally under the impetus which makes for the triumphs of private industry, and Government protection is all that was ever asked, and Government capital and interference are the distinct things which are neither needed nor desired.

The Democratic Party clearly purposes to go before the country proclaiming its solution of the shipping problem, though no member of the majority feels a confidence in the proposed means of solution, and nobody familiar with our water commerce believes in the efficacy of the measure which is to be given enforced passage.

The upbuilding of a merchant marine is a slow process. It required two centuries to establish British eminence on the seas, and drastic methods and the confessed abandonment of all British ideas of free trade, and the real American achievement will require vastly more than fifty millions from the Federal Treasury and a new Federal department—it will require protection and fostering, no matter what form the governmental aid assumes.

As I said a moment ago, no nation in all history has excelled in maritime achievements which was not first eminent in the shipbuilding industry. This bill entirely overlooks this important fact, only grudgingly takes note of shipbuilding possibilities, and proposes to procure our ships from the constructing yards, directly or indirectly, of competing nations. The creative policy, the effective policy, the truly American policy requires American-built ships for the American merchant marine.

Mr. President, if this measure were American enough, even though it enters more deeply into the field of Federal ownership, if this bill were American enough to propose Federally built American ships, I am not sure but that I would consent to vote in favor of its passage. But the bill is not even American in that direction.

The European war brought us to a new realization of our insufficiency in transoceanic shipping and emphasized the folly of Congress in failing to adopt an upbuilding policy when we began to rebuild the American Navy. Whether it was the influence of the lobby of competing nations, who could well afford to conspire against the development of the shipping of this producing nation, or whether it was the feigned horror of subsidy or subvention against which the Democratic Party had so loudly inveighed, whether it was the slumbering pride of those who prefer to trade cheaply than produce profitably and helpfully to all the people, the failure to develop the merchant marine did not make a deep impression on the popular mind until war conditions revealed our weakness.

Opportunity came to conquer markets in peaceful pursuits as opportunity has come to no other great nation since the world began, but we were unfitted to avail ourselves of beckoning opportunity. But with need magnified the party in power seeks to make amends, not by any normal process, not by logical methods, not by the consistent encouragement of private industry, which has made us what we are, but the miracle method of government ownership is invoked, which can accomplish nothing during the abnormal conditions of war and is sure to rend our coastwise and Great Lakes achievement in the interference that will come with peace.

The plan not only adds to the paternalistic socialism which is the menacing development of the present Congress and its directing head, but it is the most indefensible business proposition ever made by a party with an avowed hostility to business success. It is too late to seek shipping facilities to meet war conditions. The making of a merchant marine is an undertaking for the next decade and the next generation of Americans. It is a slow and cumulative undertaking. No sane business man would enter a prohibitive market to even start to buy for a future generation. That may be the Democratic idea—the administration's conception of business sagacity—but it will not win the plaudits of the American people. A party that makes a profession of assailing high prices ought not multiply war-time rewards. I want to subscribe to an upbuilding process, not a bull market overbilled with coin from the Federal Treasury.

There are Democrats who do not lack knowledge of one method to build up American shipping in foreign trade, but they lack courage to apply knowledge to the problem. The records of Congress during the past 15 years amply demonstrate the method that Democrats who have looked into the problem would undertake to solve it. The policy which such Democrats believe in has found concrete expression in innumerable bills introduced in Congress by Democrats. Reasons for that policy have found concrete, clear-cut, and persuasive argument in support of it in minority reports filed by Democrats who, as members of congressional committees, have given study and thought to the subject. The policy advocated by Democrats who have studied the shipping problem is as different from the one they are now about to establish, under the lash of the administration, as night is different from day. Democrats who realize the real requirements of an American merchant marine, and one effective way to meet the requirements, have thrown their own judgment to the winds and have accepted the dictum of the administration, no member of which has any genuine knowledge of the subject, but which has, nevertheless, formulated a policy—if it can be dignified by such a term—unheard of, untried, and so utterly objectionable as to force its reluctant advocates to place a limit of five years after the present war upon its operation. In other words, the one supposedly constructive phase of the administration program—the Government purchase, sale, or lease of ships on terms that make for advantage but which is not special favor or privilege or other offensive term, because it is new and very indirect—is to be provided and heralded to the people, and it is written in the law that the failure will be revealed within five years. But the shipping board is to be permanent. Let us hope its cost will be justified in a measure of helpfulness, though born as a twin to this new child of Government ownership.

Although this shipping board is directed to investigate the subject of the condition and needs of an American merchant marine, and to recommend such laws as will lead to the creation and maintenance of such a marine, the board is to be hobbled for a period of five years, at least, with a fixed policy that is the result neither of investigation nor study. Running only for five years, however, this policy is naturally unsubstantial and evanescent. It is, on its face, merely an expedient, and an uncommonly weak one at that.

The price of ships is measured by their dead-weight carrying capacity. Averaging up the ships their dead-weight capacity is about 25 per cent greater than their gross tonnage. About 7,000,000 gross tons of ships are engaged in our foreign carrying, 2,000,000 tons being under the American flag. The dead-weight carrying capacity of the foreign tonnage to be displaced by American ships would be about 6,125,000. At the minimum of prevailing prices this would cost $125 a dead-weight ton, probably nearer $150 and possibly $200, with the Government in the field bidding up the tonnage it may purchase. At the minimum of prevailing prices this would cost the Government $812,500,000; at the probable prices it would cost the Government $975,000,000; and at the possible maximum rates of $200 per dead-weight ton the cost would be $1,300,000,000 for enough ships to enable us to do our own foreign carrying.

But the Government proposes to step into the market, a market in such an extraordinary condition as ours is in, with its $50,000,000—an extreme limit of $50,000,000—which is to be spent for the construction, purchase, lease, or charter of ships—money enough, possibly, to purchase 5 per cent of the tonnage needed, although perhaps no more than enough to purchase 3 per cent. How sublimely ridiculous! How colossally grotesque! And yet Democrats propose to point with pride to such an achievement. It is to be a part, and a very large part, too, of the "constructive" achievements of the administration, for campaign offering.

A few months ago the National City Bank, of New York City, organized a subsidiary company, known as the International American Corporation, with a capital of $50,000,000, and presumably to engage in the purchase of ships, since the activities of the new corporation seem to have been confined, at least largely, to investments in ships. Of course, some little attention was paid to a company of this magnitude, but scarcely more than to cause mere passing attention. What effect, however, the Government coming into the field will have upon this new corporation, and especially as to whether or not it will restrain the new corporation from further investments in American shipping pending more precise knowledge of the Government's plans in the premises, remains to be seen. It would not seem, however, as though companies, corporations, firms, and individuals would heavily invest in American ships until they know the character of the competition they will have to meet as established by the Government.

Right there is one of the most serious phases of this matter. The uncertainty of the extent to which the Government will proceed, the effects of its competition, which seem to have no limitation, or in any direction—in foreign or domestic carrying—all of these moot but important questions will remain in abeyance until the Government has shown its hand. Pitifully small as fifty millions are in this undertaking, it makes a formidable competitor, and the party which votes fifty millions may vote five hundred millions, if kept in power.

Of course, there is a possibility that some corporation may be formed, if one is not already formed, whose relations to the new Federal shipping board, when that board is appointed, will be closer and more intimate than the relations of other corporations or firms or individuals, and such a corporation, managed by men astute in the buying and selling, and the building and selling, and the chartering and leasing of ships, might be a very useful adjunct to the Federal shipping board—a semi-official company, as it were, through which "the people in the business," if alive, would quickly find it to their advantage to operate, if it had any occasion at all to do business with the Federal shipping board. There are unlimited opportunities for ramifications and connections, more or less close, of this kind, and favoritism may become a new "pal" of the party in power.

Had it been safe to do so and had the purchase of the ships of belligerent nations been possible at reasonable prices, there might have been some justification of Government financial aid in their acquirement to meet urgent and immediate needs. But such purchase has been forbidden, wisely, I think, in order to make the bill even tolerable to many Members of the reluctant majority of this body. Moreover, the bill as amended does not permit the purchase of ships now engaged in our trade. And, of the ships which may be required, none may fall below a standard of 75 per cent of its original efficiency. Thus circumscribed and hedged about, the Federal shipping board is to go forth and spend its $50,000,000.

But this is the least of its weaknesses or evils, since the fifty millions may soon be spent and soon be forgotten, the fifty millions and the ships it buys as well. But the bill is so amended as to admit to our coastwise carrying any foreign-built ship the Government may build, buy, lease, or charter. It may use its fifty millions, possibly, to buy and sell, and to buy and sell over and over again, enough ships to destroy the American-built ships which, since the foundation of our Government, alone are permitted to engage in our coastwise carrying. Until now, under a law enacted in 1817, no ship could engage in our coastwise carrying that was not built in the United States. In order to engage in our coastwise carrying our laws have for almost a century required the building of the ships in the United States, and even before that the discrimination by law established against foreign ships engaging in our coastwise carrying were so drastic as to keep them out of it completely. Never have we allowed foreign ships to do our coastwise carrying, and it is an American policy to rejoice the American heart.

Have the provisions of this very remarkable bill been examined by Senators, and with the care that they merit? I wonder. Take section 5, for example. Note the very sweeping character of its phrasing—

That the board, with the approval of the President, is authorized to have constructed and equipped in American shipyards and navy yards or elsewhere, giving preference, other things being equal, to domestic yards—

Regarding this I shall have more to say later—or to purchase—

It is right here that I desire to engage the thoughtful attention of Senators—

lease, or charter vessels suitable, as far as the commercial requirements of the marine trade of the United States may permit, for use as naval auxiliaries or Army transports, or for other naval or military purposes

Senators will notice, I am sure, that it is not even necessary that the Government shall purchase the foreign-built vessels that it may desire; it need but lease or charter them from their foreign owners. Mark you, the foreign ownership may continue, but the vessels may come under the control of the United States for use only during the period of their lease or charter. And yet, what do we find? Read section 7. I quote it for the convenience of Senators.

That the board, upon terms and conditions prescribed by it and approved by the President, may charter, lease, or sell to any person, a citizen of the United States, any vessel so purchased—

Again, I beg the critical attention of Senators—constructed, or transferred.

Does not this mean that a leased or a chartered foreign vessel may be re-leased or rechartered to an American citizen by the Federal shipping board? It seems so to me. On that assumption, what may be done with the foreign vessel that is first leased or chartered by our Federal shipping board and by it re-leased or rechartered to an American citizen? Mind you, this is still a foreign vessel, so far as ownership is concerned. What may be done with her? Section 9 says:

That any vessel purchased—

Mark you, "any vessel"— chartered, or leased from the board may be registered or enrolled and licensed, or both registered and enrolled and licensed, as a vessel of the United States, and entitled to the benefits and privileges appertaining thereto.

So that there shall be no doubt as to what those privileges are, the section goes on to say. I quote:

Provided, That foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry or enrollment and license under this act, and vessels owned, chartered, or leased by any corporation in which the United States is a stockholder, and vessels sold, leased, or chartered to any person a citizen of the United States, as provided in this act, may engage in the coastwise trade of the United States.

Doubtless our registry, our enrollment and license regulations will have to be so amended that a leased or a chartered foreign vessel may be registered or enrolled and licensed as a vessel of the United States, and the definition of what a vessel of the United States is, as heretofore understood and provided, will have to be changed, also, so that a vessel of the United States, under this provision, may be a foreign vessel, owned by foreign people, a vessel merely under lease or charter to our Federal shipping board, and by it merely released or rechartered to an American citizen. Have we come to that, in our inordinate zeal to allow foreign vessels to enter our coastwise trade? A fine merchant marine we shall have, with foreign-owned vessels carrying documents issued by the United States, designating them as registered or enrolled and licensed vessels of the United States.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HARDING. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator is dealing with a very important feature of the bill and arguing that these ships ought not to be operated in the coastwise trade. I wish to put this question to the Senator. First, the possibilities of acquiring ships by purchase or charter or lease are remote. All the nations now at war could not if they would (besides all of them have passed laws prohibiting the transfer of any of their ships) sell or transfer any ships to this board.

That will exclude the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia, France, Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Italy. It excludes three-fourths of all the shipping of the world from any possible chance of being considered by this board; that is, the board must put all those to one side.

Then in the next place we are building ships to-day in our yards as cheaply as they can be built anywhere. That, I think, is pretty well established. The time when it would cost 40 or 50 per cent more to build a ship in the United States than in the Belfast or other foreign yards has passed. We are now actually building ships for foreign owners in our yards.

Those things being considered, will not the Senator be satisfied that the possibilities of putting into the coastwise trade any ships that do not come up to the requirements of the law as it has existed since 1817, are exceedingly remote? That is to say, under this bill, the ships admitted to coastwise trade will practically exclusively be those built in American yards, owned by American citizens, flying our flag and having American registry. Those ships have always been admitted to our coastwise trade. Are not the opportunities of acquiring ships by this board too limited to excite any alarm that ships other than those which have in all the years past been qualified to engage in our coastwise trade will be admitted to that trade?

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I am delighted to answer the Senator from Florida. Even if the assumption which he has made were true, I should dislike to think that the protection and the upbuilding of our coastwise trade was to be protected by the foreign nations of the earth. I would a little rather subscribe to a policy wherein American interests and the American regulation of the sale and transfer of ships shall apply to our coastwise shipping.

Further, if the statement which the Senator from Florida makes, namely, that we can now build in American shipyards as cheaply as abroad be true, then this bill lacks the soul of Americanism when it does not provide specifically that ships must be built in American shipyards. However, Mr. President, since the question has been raised, I will say that I doubt very much if we can build in American shipyards as cheaply as they can build abroad. I have understood that the late John Roach, who was a distinguished American shipbuilder, until the Democratic Party broke his proud spirit, said that under the development of the shipbuilding industry in this country we had reached a point where we could build a passenger-carrying vessel within about 10 per cent added cost over and above the English shipbuilder; but I understand we have never been able to come so closely to the foreign cost of production in cargo-carrying ships. If we had arrived at that stage there would be little use, I can believe, for any sort of legislative encouragement to the upbuilding of an American merchant marine; but the American trouble has been, all along, that we were unable to build in competition with foreign shipyards.

Mr. President, that is the whole trouble; that is the fundamental difference between those who sit on the other side of the Chamber and those who sit on this side of the Chamber. Nobody has at any time disputed the difference in the cost of labor abroad and in this country. The trouble with the majority in this Chamber is that they are not willing, or have not been willing up until this time, to make a recognition of the difference of cost and to continue the Republican provision which makes up that difference to the American employer in the form of American protection. I would continue that protection.

Mr. FLETCHER. Without going into a discussion of the tariff, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if he will not admit that our contention has been really that the duties contended for by Senators on the other side of the Chamber have been in most instances from two to three to five times higher than was necessary, in order to cover the total labor cost in the production of the article?

Mr. HARDING. No, Mr. President, I will not admit that; but even if I did admit it, I should still be for the duties. Since the Senator from Florida has raised the question, however, and if it is not too much of a trespass on the time of this body, as assembled here, I desire to say that I want to be known as a real protectionist. I would put the tariff high enough on any article which can be produced in the United States of America to guarantee the establishment of that industry here. Then I would trust to the competition between Americans to hold the level of prices. That is the kind of protectionist I mean to be.

But, Mr. President, I am more seriously concerned just now about the entry of the foreign ship. I admit, as the Senator from Florida suggests, the unlikelihood of the immediate acquisition of foreign vessels; but, Mr. President, I would not open the way for the entry of a single foreign-built vessel to the coastwise commerce of the United States.

It is related that a few years ago an eminent American shipowner of Baltimore, Md., and confessedly holding rather intimate relations with the Hamburg-American Line of steamships, approached our Government to find if there was a lawful way in which the German Hamburg-American Line could invest some of its capital in vessels built in the United States to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States. My recollection is that no way could be devised under the laws of the United States as they are to-day that would make such an innovation possible. But to-morrow it would seem that such an innovation would be possible if the war should end; or next week, or next month, or next year, or whenever the war does end, this thing would be possible. Not only would it be possible for the money of the Hamburg-American Line to be invested in ships built in the United States to engage in our coastwise trade, but German-built and German-owned ships could freely engage in that trade under the astutely drawn provisions of this bill.

This bill, as it came from the House, still held a touch of Americanism in protecting our coastwise trade. It prohibited foreign-built vessels admitted to our registry or enrollment from engaging in our coastwise trade, except in a limited extent in trade with Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, but the Senate committee report, dictated in a Democratic caucus—no; I should say "conference"—says:

Your committee being of the opinion that vessels owned in whole or in part, directly or indirectly, by the United States, as provided in this act—

Here, again, I beg the especial attention of Senators—and vessels sold, leased, or chartered to any person a citizen of the United States, as provided in this act, should be permitted, without hampering restrictions, to engage in either the foreign or coastwise trade of the United States, believes that this section should be so amended as to accomplish this purpose, and the amendments proposed to this section are with this view.

I may say, and with truth and with emphasis, that the "hampering restrictions" would, indeed, be removed.

There are richer plums—far richer plums—awaiting investors in foreign ships for our coastwise carrying, awaiting some investors in foreign ships for our coastwise carrying, than ever were dreamed of in the philosophy of buying belligerent ships. The bill was conceived, or seemingly conceived, as a scheme for helping out in our foreign carrying under circumstances and conditions unheard of, unprecedented. At the time it was originally proposed there was a semblance of reason for it, as a temporary expedient, but that reason has long since disappeared with the advent afloat of every ton of shipping, the whole world over, that is capable of bearing cargoes, all except the interned merchant ships of belligerent nations, which are no more available now, or under this bill, than they have been at any time of this war.

There never was need of additional ships in our coastwise carrying. There is no need, no great need, of additional ships in our coastwise carrying, even now, that American shipyards can not construct. American capital has always furnished enough American-built ships for all the needs of our coastwise carrying. Perhaps, owing to the unprecedented demand for tonnage in our foreign carrying, some of the ships have been taken from coastwise and put into foreign carrying, but not enough to seriously cripple our coastwise carrying, a condition that will quickly right itself with the termination of the war.

But our coastwise carrying has become a very important carrying. Ocean-going ships are necessary for it. The stretches of our coast are long, and ships must proceed out on the oceans for hundreds—yes; for thousands—of miles to accommodate all of our coastwise carrying, which includes our trade with Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, as well as that along the Atlantic, the Gulf, and the Pacific coasts, and between these coasts, and upon the Great Lakes. The type of ship that this tremendous trade has necessitated is analogous to that required for foreign carrying, ships adapted to ocean navigation. If the people of the United States are to be permitted to go on uninterruptedly in the building of ocean-going ships for its coastwise carrying, the time is sure to come when the United States will reach out for the near-by foreign carrying, then for the more distant foreign carrying, and finally for any foreign carrying with American-built ships. The same protection and same encouragement which other great nations bestow will develop a merchant marine to meet our highest expectations.

This bill, it seems to me, the first ostensible object of which is to build up our foreign shipping, and which must fail of that object, is to be made the vehicle of the eventual overthrow of the whole American coastwise carrying, in which we are now supreme. So true to destructive policies is Democracy that when it starts out on a constructive pathway at the first opportunity it abandons construction and furtively diverges toward a destructive policy, its true aim.

The purpose to allow foreign vessels to enter into our coastwise carrying is not intended to help any American interest. It can not manifestly have any other purpose than to aid foreigners at the expense of American shipowners and American shipbuilders. The real effect is to destroy American coastwise shipping and, as an incident of such a purpose, eventually to destroy American shipbuilding. Whether that be its purpose or not, that is what will be accomplished. It proposes to allow, for the first time in our history, the use of foreign-built ships in our coastwise carrying, and this includes our carrying on the Great Lakes, where we have built up a phenomenal American merchant marine, a merchant marine that holds aglow the "unsalted seas" of the far interior and annually bears a rich commerce of over 100,000,000 tons, chiefly of raw materials and foodstuffs.

Just now, to be sure, the demand for ships on the Great Lakes is extraordinary, due to the equally extraordinary demand for iron ore and for wheat and flour, a demand that is more foreign, even, than American, and which owners of ships on the Great Lakes are straining themselves to the uttermost to meet. For this extraordinary and temporary condition the Government could purchase and use no ships that would modify the demands for tonnage on the Great Lakes. American shipowners on the Great Lakes are growing rich, just as our shipowners on the coast are growing rich, out of the demands created more largely by the war. But it is intended to destroy our coastwise shipping, which has benefited least by the extraordinary requirements for ships, by ruining the lines that have faithfully performed the services they were organized to perform, and by ruining American shipbuilders who, for the first time within the memory of any Democrat living, are also making money. Reason enough for destroying them.

The dislike of our coastwise shipping—our wholly American coastwise shipping—first began to manifest itself contemporaneously with the demand for the repeal of the provision that gave free passage to ships through the Panama Canal that were engaged in American coastwise carrying. A Democratic House of Representatives, a Republican Senate, and a Republican President had jointly participated in the passage of a law that gave free passage through the Panama Canal to ships engaging in coastwise carrying—a concession that necessarily, under our navigation laws, was limited wholly to American vessels, a law, by the way, that as a candidate for the presidency Mr. Wilson saw fit to commend, but which, as President of the United States he decreed the repeal of and accomplished the repeal of, although the platform upon which he was elected declared unreservedly in favor of exemption of tolls for vessels in our coastwise carrying trade.

If any Senator is curious about public sentiment on this question, is curious to learn the opinion of the people on legislation favorable to American shipping and this violation of the American ideal, let him go with me to the stump. I know that American sentiment holds an American interoceanic canal to be the fit instrumentality for the effective encouragement of an American merchant marine.

American owners of ships in coastwise carrying dared to oppose the repeal of this law, and because of that they incurred the ill-will of the President, who forthwith discovered, and publicly announced, that our coastwise carrying is a "monopoly," because it is limited to American-built ships. From that time until now there has been a "growing demand" for the destruction of this law-created "monopoly," and bill after bill has been introduced in Congress providing for the destruction of this alleged "monopoly" through the admission of foreign-built ships to competition with American-built ships in coastwise carrying, a scheme the entering wedge of which we find the very worst feature of this administration shipping bill. It matters not what we may be told of the restraint that will be practiced by the Federal shipping board in the purchase of foreign-built ships. The principle is here established that the Government may buy foreign-built ships and that they may be used in the coastwise trade, and there is no limit beyond the five-year period during which the Federal shipping board may not buy and then sell, and buy again and sell again, ad libitum, enough foreign-built ships to duplicate every American-built vessel now engaged in our coastwise carrying and in our carrying between domestic ports on the Great Lakes. This is the extreme of what the bill sanctions, and we have no assurance that that extreme will not be reached, especially by an administration that regards American-built coastwise ships as a part of an obnoxious "monopoly."

We are told that the Government must not be restricted in the use to which it may put any ship it may purchase, wherever that ship may be built. If it buys foreign-built ships, it may put those ships in the domestic carrying on the coasts or on the Great Lakes of the United States. And those to whom the Government may sell or lease such foreign-built ships, they, too, may put them into any trade they see fit, foreign, coastwise, or Great Lakes. But if an individual American citizen, or an American firm or an American corporation, buys a foreign-built ship, he is barred, under the most severe penalties, from putting her into the carrying of either of the coasts or the Great Lakes. Why is it that the Government is to be entitled to privileges that are to be denied to private American citizens, firms, and corporations? Why is the Government favored with the widest latitude in which it may place its foreign-built ships and private citizens restricted?

If the Federal shipping board is satisfied that the service rendered by a line of American-built steamships engaged in transportation on our coasts or on the Great Lakes is not a sufficient service, or charging reasonable rates, or not doing anything that the Federal shipping board thinks it should do, it may buy cheaper foreign-built ships and sell them to a rival company, and allow that rival company to enter into a ruinous and destructive competition with the company that has invested its money in ships built in the United States, as required under the laws that have prevailed for almost a century.

I sometimes think that the Democratic Party is turning from a denunciation of the policy of subsidy and going into a policy of conspiracy.

Everybody knows that in normal times it costs more to build ships in American shipyards than it costs to build them in foreign shipyards, and that, therefore, conditions are not "equal," but that, on the contrary, they are so unequal, largely because of the much higher rates of wages paid to the workmen in American shipyards, that merchant ships can not be built in the United States on terms of equality—price being the guide as to equality—with ships built in foreign countries. If the foreign price of any article is, or it seems to be, only a little bit lower than the American price, Democrats have always shown a pronounced preference for the cheaper foreign article, and they are eager always to allow the cheaper foreign article to displace the dearer American article in the American market. The prejudice against the American-built ship is too strong, and the prejudice against the American shipbuilder is too general, and the suspicion of everything American when offered in competition with anything foreign is too pronounced among our Democratic brethren for them to do anything else than to declare that other things are unequal, and purchase the ship "elsewhere" than in the United States.

Among the Gulf ports of the United States there has for some years been a pronounced and a growing prejudice against American-built steamships. Under a law passed in 1817 only an American-built ship may engage in the domestic carrying of the United States. Companies desirous, therefore, of engaging in domestic carrying have been compelled for 99 years to have their ships built in the United States, where they have been compelled to pay higher prices for them than if they had been built in foreign countries. If you were to ask the American owners of ships built in the United States and used in the coastwise trade of the United States how much more their ships cost them than if they had been built in foreign countries they would answer all the way from 33 to 100 per cent more. Our coastwise carrying being a protected carrying, foreign-built ships heretofore being excluded from that carrying, the steamship lines operating in our coast carrying have had ships of a much higher quality built for their protected domestic carrying than they would have had built if they had been subjected to the ruinous competition of foreign-built ships. Because of this important fact, American owners of American-built ships would be unusually vulnerable to the competition of lines of foreign-built ships, if the Federal shipping board in its wisdom should declare itself dissatisfied with the service rendered by the American-built ships of the existing steamship line, and purchase much cheaper foreign-built ships and sell them to a new corporation that would just start out and destroy the existing corporation. It will be a proud day for the United States when American shipowners are to be penalized by the Government for having ships built in the United States by American labor and the company ruined by ships built in foreign countries by foreign labor. And yet all of this is what the pending bill contemplates shall be within the power of the Federal shipping board.

Read section 7, which declares:

That the board, upon terms and conditions prescribed by it and approved by the President, may charter, lease, or sell to any person, a citizen of the United States, any vessel so purchased, constructed, or transferred.

There are no particularly qualifying provisions to that brief section. The board may prescribe the terms and conditions of charter, lease, or sale, and so long as the President perfunctorily approves, the charter or lease or sale goes through. Instead of an American investor in ships consulting with an American shipbuilder as to the kind and cost of the ship he desires, he will search out the markets of the world for the type and size ship that best suits his requirements, have the Federal shipping board accommodately buy it for him, and then sell it to him, or lease, to engage in any trade. Why not? That is the reason for the creation of the Federal shipping board. If it performs the functions it is appointed to perform, such a thing as I have described is just what it will be called upon to do. And who will have a ship built in the United States at a price higher than he can have it built in a foreign country? Or who will buy an American-built ship when he can purchase a foreign-built ship more cheaply and put her in any trade—on the coasts or Great Lakes of the United States?

If you are in doubt about this, read section 9 of the bill, which provides:

That any vessel purchased, chartered, or leased from the board may be registered or enrolled and licensed, or both registered and enrolled and licensed—

The words "enrolled and licensed" mean that she may acquire documents that will give her the privilege of engaging in domestic carrying, as distinct from registered, which document would confine her to foreign carrying solely—as a vessel of the United States and entitled to the benefits and privileges appertaining thereto: Provided, That foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry or enrollment and license under this act, and vessels owned, chartered, or leased by any corporation in which the United States is a stockholder, and vessels sold, leased, or chartered to any person a citizen of the United States, as provided in this act, may engage in the coastwise trade of the United States.

No misunderstanding about that. It is clear-cut, plain, and unmistakable. This discriminates against nearly 200 vessels of foreign build, aggregating something more than 600,000 gross tons, which have been brought under the registry of the United States, under the provisions of the act of August 19, 1914, and the proclamation issued by the President of the United States in accordance with that act. These foreign-built vessels are confined to foreign carrying—they are barred from coastwise carrying. Will their owners be satisfied to keep under the American flag a couple of hundred of foreign-built ships that are barred from privileges that are freely granted to newly purchased foreign-built ships, so long as they are purchased by the Federal shipping board?

Will not the owners of this 600,000 gross tons, and more, of foreign-built ships that during the past two years have been admitted to American register demand that they be granted every privilege that may be enjoyed by the owner of a foreign-built ship purchased by the Government? Is the fact that an American has, in good faith, acquired a foreign-built ship, and brought her under the American flag, say, to-day going to bar him from using her in the coastwise trade—a trade in which a foreign-built ship, purchased, say, to-morrow by the Federal shipping board, may engage? Does the Government of the United States think that it is so much superior as a sovereign than are the plain citizens of the United States—that it, the Government, may be privileged to do what the private citizens, firms, and corporations may not do?

Hard as it is going to be for private citizens to compete with the Government in the running of merchant ships in foreign and in coastwise trade, will the people of the United States sanction the enjoyment of privileges by foreign-built ships purchased by the Government that will be denied to foreign-built ships already bought, or that may be hereafter bought, by private citizens?

Now, then, let us get down to the serious meaning of all of this. Does it mean that there is to be a wholesale admission of several hundred foreign-built ships to the coastwise carrying of the United States, several hundred foreign-built ships that Americans have brought under the American flag during the past two years? Or does it mean that these several hundred foreign-built, American-owned ships are to be branded as the goats and the newly-bought foreign-built ships—the foreign-built ships that are purchased by the Federal shipping board, and by that board sold to private citizens—are to be the sheep?

Are we to have classes, at last, in the United States, and are they to be created by Democrats? Is the party of the plain people by this bill to create a class of Americans who are to be preferred and favored over other Americans? Either that or the wholesale admission to the coastwise carrying of the United States of a couple of hundred foreign-built ships purchased by American citizens during the past two years and brought under American registry. Are you prepared now to give the right of coast carrying to several hundred foreign-built ships that during the past two years have come under American registry? If not, do you dare to refuse to those ships the right to engage in the coastwise carrying of the United States, while granting that right to any number of foreign-built ships your newly created Federal shipping board may buy? Can you defend—can you successfully defend—before the fair-minded American people so unjust, so unfair, so indefensible a distinction as this bill proposes?

And after you have cleared your minds—and your consciences—of what is just, and fair, and equitable, and defensible in respect to the American owners of foreign-built ships admitted to American registry for foreign trade alone during the past two years, what will you decide is fair, and just, and equitable, and defensible to American owners of American-built ships built for and now engaged in the domestic carrying of the United States? Will you be able to reconcile your minds—and your consciences—to the wholesale immediate and irreparable destruction in the value of these American-built ships, which will be inevitable if you do the equitable, just, and defensible thing by the couple of hundred foreign-built ships that have been admitted to our flag only for foreign trade during the past two years?

Until now you have said to any and everybody who desired to engage in our coastwise trade, "You are welcome, but you must have your ships built in the United States. It does not matter, even if they do cost more to build than ships can be built for in foreign countries, because we do not allow any ships built in foreign countries to engage in our coastwise carrying. You are subject only to the competition of other American-built ships. So come along."

Having said that for a period of 99 long and successive and successful years to every American citizen who desired to engage in our coastwise carrying, having said that to the hundreds of American owners of American-built ships now engaged in our coastwise carrying, are you going to cut the value of their ships in two or reduce them one-third of their value, by a wholesale admission of cheaper-built, foreign-built vessels to competition with them in the trade for which they were built and in which they are operating, depending upon the good faith of the Government to see that no injustice is done to them? Are you going to subject law-abiding American citizens, just because they happen to be the innocent but lawful owners of American-built ships in our coast carrying, to the ruinous competition of several hundred foreign-built ships over night, as it were, or "like a bolt from the blue"?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HARDING. I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator's description of this revolutionary change in our policy with respect to our coastwise shipping and the prohibition of foreign ships taking part in it leads me to ask him if this question was ever discussed at all in the committee. As it is so vastly important to our entire shipbuilding industry I should like to know whether this question has ever come up and been discussed in the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not the Senator from New York was present when I opened my remarks, but I stated at that time that this bill never had been given any detailed consideration in the Committee on Commerce; that as a member of that committee I had hoped to acquaint myself with this subject, but I know nothing more than the fact that here is a bill adopted by a Democratic caucus and reported by the Democratic majority of the Committee on Commerce without this question ever having been raised.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is very interesting.

Mr. HARDING. I should like the Senate to understand this thing a little more clearly. The United States does not want to go into the business of buying and running merchant ships if it can persuade American citizens to do so. It proposes, therefore, to popularize the purchase and operation of ships by private American citizens by first buying or leasing or chartering or building ships and then offering them to private American citizens, either for purchase or lease or charter, the private American citizens to run these ships, either in foreign or domestic carrying. The United States, through its Federal shipping board, stands or proposes to stand as a sort of go-between between the builders of ships or the present owners of ships on the one hand and would-be American purchasers of ships on the other hand. If the United States shipping board knows that it has a customer for a ship or a fleet of ships to be built or already built, built in the United States or in some foreign country, the shipping board will have the ships built or it will buy them, if it may lawfully do so under the restricting clauses of the bill, and sell them to Americans—the private American citizens—who have a business in which to place them, either a foreign business or a domestic business. Thus certain citizens are to be favored in purchasing or leasing or chartering vessels from the Federal shipping board in the use of such vessels in a manner that is denied to private purchasers, lessees, or charterers of similar vessels—American citizens transacting the ordinary business of buying, leasing, or chartering vessels without the interposition of the Federal shipping board. The conditions under which ships may be purchased, leased, or chartered from the Federal shipping board are to be so much more favorable than the conditions under which such transactions may be consummated privately that the private business will be destroyed or so handicapped as practically to amount to ruination. That is the sort of an intermediary the Government proposes to establish—a sort of a royal road to the purchase, charter, or lease of ships under the hand and seal of the Federal shipping board, equal or fair competition with which is denied to private parties now engaged in this business in the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDING. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. This matter of encroachment upon the coastwise shipping of the country interests me very much. I have tried to be a student of this question, and I know, as the Senator from Ohio knows and all Senators know, that the law excluding from our coastwise trade the ships of foreign countries has been on the statute books for 99 years. It is barely possible that before my advent into public life—which was some time ago—there may have been an effort to change that law; but I know of no effort that was made until the 17th day of August, 1914, when the matter came directly before the Senate on a proposition to open the coastwise trade to foreign vessels. We had a vote on the proposition, and it was defeated by a vote of 40 to 20; and I feel sure that the owners of American ships and those who are contributing their money to the construction of American ships until this bill came before the Senate have felt that they were secure against the encroachment of foreign ships in the coastwise trade.

Mr. HARDING. The Senator from New Hampshire is quite right. A protective and upbuilding policy that has been essentially unassailed for 99 years ought to be accepted as the determined policy of the country.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDING. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator's commentaries on the possibility of the exercise of favoritism in connection with the subleasing or subchartering or second sale, so to speak, of these ships acquired by the Federal board, leads me to ask him if he has ever thought of the possibility of such favoritism operating through the corporation which the board is authorized to organize under the laws of the District of Columbia, the capital stock of which any citizen is permitted to purchase? And has it occurred to the Senator from Ohio that a minority stockholder—as a private citizen must be in that corporation, according to the terms of the bill—might find himself in an advantageous position to secure from the corporation of which he is a bona fide and legitimate stockholder the use of ships under subleases?

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I think I touched upon the very subject which the Senator from New York raises in a previous portion of the remarks I am reading. I certainly made reference to the possibilities for extraordinary development on the part of a favored investor in the shipping corporation authorized under the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDING. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Ohio did touch upon it, but it seemed to me that he rather minimized the mischief that might be wrought under it. I think he suggested that the capacity of the corporation for disturbance was limited to the expenditure of $50,000,000. I suggest to him that it is not so limited. The corporation or series of corporations to be organized under the laws of the District of Columbia may have a capital of $99,999,999.99. That is the possibility under the provision to which I have referred.

Mr. HARDING. That is quite true.

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, imagine a corporation with a paid-up capital of practically $100,000,000. The corporation can purchase, charter, lease, or otherwise dispose of all the ships which a capital of $100,000,000 will permit; that is to say, it can use all the credit which a corporation of that sort, backed by the Government, can secure. There would be no legal liability on the part of the Government beyond the $50,000,000, but every sensible man who cares to deal with the corporation will know that the moral obligation of the Government is behind it and must make good whatever indebtedness it incurs. Now, I can easily see how that corporation could become the owner, not of $50,000,000 worth of ships, but the owner immediately of $500,000,000 worth of ships or a billion dollars' worth of ships, dependent entirely upon the extent of its credit.

Mr. HARDING. The Senator from Iowa is quite right; and it requires no imaginative capacity to understand how a corporation in close intimacy with the shipping board could acquire, as he says, under charter, no less than hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of ships, because the board has the authority to use the credit of the Government and acquire ships and lease them and place them in the hands of subsidiary corporations. There are limitless possibilities. It would be worth some one's while to go into a more detailed statement of the possible things which can be worked out by the scheming management of such a governmental partnership.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I interrupt the Senator just once more?

Mr. HARDING. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Under a former bill, as I understood it, the corporation could only purchase from the board, but in this bill the corporation can purchase from anybody. It is not required to secure its ships from the shipping board; it can go anywhere in any market and purchase ships to the extent of its credit.

Mr. HARDING. I think that is quite true, but I think wider possibilities are in favor of the operation of a shipping board which may itself purchase and then charter to the subsidiary corporation. Of course, it will be said, which is appropriate to this very thing, that the Federal shipping board will establish rules and regulations, approved by the President, regulating the transaction of the business of buying, building, chartering, or leasing ships—rules and regulations so drawn as to deal fairly as between American citizens and to deal justly with existing owners of ships. Maybe so; maybe not so. It will be an extremely difficult business to establish in a manner that will not permit of injustices and wrongs; and, even if the rules and regulations are as seemingly fair as can be drawn, the ingenuity of man has ever proved equal to securing the weather gauge, especially if it has the advice and counsel of shrewd attorneys. Charges of unfairness, of injustices, of inequalities, of raw deals, of the reverse of square deals, will be made, justly or unjustly, but so plausibly as to create doubt as to the rectitude and honesty of the board, however honest and fair it tries to be. A premium, and a rich premium, will be placed on one class of citizens getting the better of another class of citizens—fair enough, perhaps, in private transactions, but damnable when participated in by the Government.

A veritable Pandora's box is to be opened up through this bill, and no man can tell what will come out of that box to the discredit of the Government, the injury of honest citizens, and the humiliation of the people. It is an uncharted sea of trouble that the Government is about to venture forth upon, and however skillful its pilots, disaster threatens its progress constantly, hidden rocks, unknown reefs, unseen dangers, threatening from every direction.

We have heard fair words that it is not the intention of the Government to enter upon any competition with existing American lines—but all of those good intentions, however praiseworthy, have undoubtedly been found impracticable, and they have been whistled down the wind. On the contrary, and especially in our domestic carrying, the threat is distinctly held over the unfortunate companies, the unfortunate stockholders in the companies, now engaged in our coastwise business that the critical eye of the Government ever is upon them, watching, alertly, for evidence of things that will justify, that plausibly may justify, the establishment of ruinous competition against them.

The lessons of the war have taught the other nations of the world, belligerents as well as neutrals, that the nation is a wise nation which possesses a merchant marine of its own; and if it is a home-built merchant marine, all the better; and if it is commanded, officered, and manned by its own nationals, all the better yet. That is one of the great lessons of this great European war. Nations now possessing a merchant marine of their own forbid the sale of their merchant ships to aliens. Why is this? Because the possession of a merchant marine of its own is a priceless possession. If we could but learn the lesson of self-dependence, which is the only true independence! But no, we must reach out for the foreign-built ship. And why? Because it is cheaper than we can build ourselves—that is all. Not efficiency, but cheapness is the new standard, and we must go abroad for the cheaper ship, and deny ourselves the construction of the better ship. We must forego the building of our ships in home shipyards, because the labor in our shipyards is so much better paid than the labor is paid in any other shipyards on earth. This whole drive for foreign-built ships is in order to get around, to circumvent, the building of ships in the United States—rather than to allow highly paid American labor to build our ships for us, we must employ the cheaper labor of foreign countries. In the last analysis, our whole mongering with foreign-built ships is merely to deprive American labor of the chance to build merchant ships. Study it to a conclusion, and there is where you are sure to land. You will ruin our shipyards through the extensions of the policy to be inaugurated by this bill that will incessantly be demanded, that will have their inspiration in foreign countries, in foreign shipyards, and in the minds of foreign shipowners, who look longingly and covetously upon the "rich pickings" of the United States.

We shall drive our shipbuilders out of business, out of the business of building merchant ships for ocean navigation. Gradually we are driving them out of the building of our warships by building them in Government shipyards—a policy that is being steadily broadened, the object of which when accomplished will be the building of all of our warships in Government shipyards at the highest prices known—but we will build our merchant ships in foreign shipyards at the cheapest prices known. We shall cease to train men in the arts and sciences of designing and building merchant ships; we shall become wholly dependent upon foreign shipbuilders for the building of ocean-going ships; and we shall never realize the danger of this un-American course until a time arrives—which is sure to arrive—when our dependence upon foreign shipbuilders will be found to be an unstable, an unreliable dependence. But then it may be too late for us to retrieve ourselves.

If we would but declare for American-built merchant ships and none other for the American flag, either in foreign or domestic trade, then we would be upon firm and safe ground. Then we would build up a colossal industry in this country that would make us strong where now we are weak—where the tendencies of this bill will make us still weaker—upon the seas. But the craze for cheapness, which has superseded efficiency, is to be a guiding principle.

As men are turned out of our shipyards and forced into other trades they may realize what the policy here inaugurated has done for them. As yet they do not see. They are blind. But, let me repeat in all seriousness, this whole trend, the whole objective of all this legislation, is to deprive labor in American shipyards of the employment to which it is entitled in the building up of a real, a true, American merchant marine both for our foreign and for our domestic carrying.

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate longer than I had wished already. I had a very interesting experience a year ago last February. I took a trip to the Hawaiian Islands. On the return from the islands I was traveling on an American coastwise ship, the steamship Sierra, of the Oceanic Line. I grew into an acquaintance with the captain, Capt. Hudlett, I think was his name, who had been an American skipper from his early boyhood, when he went out from the coast of Massachusetts a mere lad of 14 to climb the mast. One evening, as we were about midway between the islands and the harbor of San Francisco, while chatting at the table in the smoking room, a petty officer brought to the captain a wireless message.

A smile spread over his face, and he handed it to me. The captain said: "Here is a message from my son. He is master on a sister ship, southwesterly bound, and sends me a message of greeting. He is just passing 20 miles away." I thought for a moment of the sentimental side, which was beautiful, and then I read his message. It conveyed the greetings of a son to his father, and after he had expressed his filial affection he turned to business, and he said: "We have a cargo of 2,600 bags of English mail."

That did not mean very much to me, but it was so unusual a thing that I made inquiry. Whereupon the old captain said: "The British Government is sending its urgent mail to Australia by way of the Atlantic, across the American continent, and by our line to the island colonies. This cargo of 2,600 bags pays this ship $2 per bag, or $5,200, for this one shipment from San Francisco to Sydney, Australia. That," said Capt. Hudlett, "is more than four times as much for carrying British mail as we receive for carrying the mail of the United States of the same amount. If our Government would pay our ships the liberal compensation for carrying the mails that we secure without difficulty from the British Government, we could double the service of our line across the Pacific and find it a profitable investment."

Mr. President, that to me was a very interesting revelation. I have been interested in this merchant-marine proposition because of the conviction long since acquired that no great nation ever influenced the world until it became a factor in its commerce. The ambassadors of old were the barterers of trade who opened the way to the development of civilization and the widening of education and the refinements of life.

It has seemed to me what this American Nation should do, the richest Nation on the face of the earth, excelling in production, limitless in its material resources, outranking, to my mind, every other nation in genius, and second to very few in industry, should be first in shipping. I may say, in passing, that this boasted American people has second place in individual industry to the Empire of Japan and the Republic of China. But we are second in industry to no one else. We are first in efficiency to all but one. We have these limitless resources and heretofore we have had the courage of an American policy. I thought that some time there would come a Congress big enough and broad enough to rise above the petty bickerings of so-called favoritism and return to the method or methods that gave this country a great merchant marine.

I have myself been doubtful about but not hostile to the policy of discriminating duties. I only know from the history of the American merchant marine and the story of the upbuilding of the British merchant marine that subsidies and subventions are essential to modern victory, and without which every other nation on earth has failed in maritime achievement.

I do not know, Mr. President and Senators, that I want to confess literally to being a standpatter. I do not know just what a standpatter is in public life. I do in some places. But if one who sometimes elects to go back to an old and efficient method and retain it is a standpatter, then I am going to choose to be one.

I know that the early Americans excelled in the development of an American merchant marine. I know the old American policy of subsidy and subvention in 1855 was a successful one in meeting the oncoming competition and upbuilding of the British merchant marine, and I stand ready to-day and to-morrow and next year and every year during my term of public service to go back to the fostering plan.

I wonder sometimes if our American life is not just a little disturbed by this everlasting seeking after something different. Have you ever stopped to think about it? I am a newspaper man by occupation, and I know the fondness of the men of the press for something different, for a story that has the stamp of novelty or something that is new. You will find the same thing in the magazines. The magazine writer who secures a ready acceptance of his manuscript is one who can offer something new. It is the very nature of human beings, the promotion of the new thing is profitable. It is the old story of the farmer wanting to live in town and the citizen in the city wanting a farm. We are always seeking after something different, and it sometimes leads us astray.

I do not mean to preach the doctrine of paralyzing contentment, but I do mean to say now that one of the disturbing phases of American progress has been the constant desire to forsake the proven thing and try something new. We forsook the subsidy plan; we forsook the discriminating duty; and we destroyed the transoceanic American carrier. I am old-fashioned enough to be willing to go back to it. I should like to vote that way. I have stood here to-day objecting to the pending bill which is to be passed by the caucus dictum of the majority because, in the first place, it will not put a single ship, in my judgment, in the transoceanic trade, and it does put foreign-built ships into the American coastwise trade in which the Americans, at least, under the protective policy, have developed the best merchant marine in the world.

Mr. President, I know that this measure is going to pass. I have not deluded myself with the impression that I have changed anybody's mind on this question, nor have I introduced into the Record all that I might want to say on this subject if I were talking for political purposes alone, but I have done one thing which some day I hope to recall to the attention of this body, and that is, that I have stood here and uttered a warning to-day that the provisions of this bill will admit of the utter disruption and destruction of the American coastwise shipping, which is the one thing in which we Americans have excelled for the last 99 years, and which is one great essential to the successful handling of American domestic commerce.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, I was very much surprised to read in the Washington Post of this morning what purports to be a speech delivered by Mr. Justice Hughes, the candidate of the Republican Party for President. I do not know that he is correctly quoted, but what I say will be based on the assumption that he has been. This article, among other things, states that Mr. Hughes, in a speech delivered at Fargo, N. Dak., on August 10, said:

"The river and harbor bill, known to the people as the pork-barrel bill," Mr. Hughes said, "is largely moneys wasted, as there is no expert examination to determine what expenditures are needed."

"On the contrary, it very largely depends on who are the influential men representing particular districts, and what appropriations are obtained in this district and that district for this man and that man."

"That is a matter of logrolling. It brings the blush of shame to the cheeks of every American. It ought to be stopped. If I am elected President, to the best of my ability I propose to stop it."

Mr. Hughes declared the pork-barrel bill of 1914 was "talked to death by Senator Burton, a fine Republican," and that the 1915 bill was reduced materially because of the opposition of Republicans and some conscientious Democrats.

"This year, just the other day," the nominee continued, "Congress passed a rivers and harbors bill of some $42,000,000. I confess I don't know why such a measure should receive approval. We have heard a great deal lately of the power of Executive leadership. It has been powerfully exerted. Why can it not be exerted to save the public purse from being looted in the interest of these ridiculous appropriations?"

Mr. President and Senators, if that statement correctly quotes the remarks of Candidate Hughes, I desire to say that I never saw compressed into so small a space a greater number of real misstatements of fact. Why, the idea, Mr. President and Senators, that river and harbor appropriations are made without any "expert examination to determine what expenditures are needed" is ridiculous.

I can not conceive how Mr. Hughes made that statement—a man who has occupied for so many years such a high position as he has, and who is supposed to have kept up with public affairs during his long public career. He must know, it is his duty to know, the facts when he makes a statement of that kind; and certainly anyone who has the least knowledge of the methods of Congress in making appropriations for rivers and harbors, must admit that there are no appropriations of any character more carefully safeguarded than are those for rivers and harbors.

What is the process, Mr. President? It is well known to you all, but I wish to repeat it briefly, in the hope that some of the newspapers which have given so much prominence to the statements of this candidate for the presidency, will give a little notice to my explanation of these charges.

When it is proposed to make an improvement on any river or harbor in this country, the first step is to secure an act of Congress ordering that a survey be made. The Chief of Engineers then sends that order to the local engineer of the place nearest to the spot where the project is to be prosecuted. The local engineer, who is generally a man with the rank of captain or major in the United States Army—a graduate of West Point—makes a preliminary reconnaissance of the project, finds out in a preliminary way everything that he can in regard to it, and reports his findings to the division engineer, who is an officer with the rank of colonel.

The division engineer looks over the report, ascertains anything he can independently in regard to it, and then submits his findings and comments to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors—a body of seven engineers sitting in the city of Washington—a body composed of seven men belonging to the Engineer Corps of the Army, with the rank of major and colonel, some of them being lieutenant colonels. This board, composed of as able men as there are in the Army, examines the report made by the local engineer and the division engineer. They send their findings to the Chief of Engineers; and not until the Chief of Engineers approves the findings made by this Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors is an order issued for the field survey—the final survey.

If the Chief of Engineers disapproves of the findings, the matter stops. If the Chief of Engineers approves the findings, thinking that it is a worthy project, or probably worthy and one that ought to be surveyed, he sends an order to the local engineer to make an elaborate survey. That is done by him. He goes into the field with his regular corps of engineers, and makes a field survey—a physical survey—of the proposed river or harbor or canal or whatever the waterway may be. He ascertains every fact in connection with it, its cost, the present commerce on the waterway, the prospective commerce, the effect it will have on commerce when completed. In fact, everything that in any way bears upon the subject, he ascertains and sends to the division engineer, with his recommendation as to its merit or demerit. The division engineer then sends this report with his findings and his views to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, the same board which I have described.

That board goes into a full and complete examination of the reports. It frequently calls for additional testimony; it notifies interested parties that hearings will be held on a certain day in regard to the matter. The parties in interest appear before it, either advocating or opposing the project; and after the most careful examination a report is sent by this Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to the Chief of Engineers, who then sends it to Congress with his favorable or unfavorable report.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

Mr. RANDELL. Pardon me one moment. And, Mr. President, not until that project has run the gantlet of these 10 engineers does it have legislative status before the American Congress; not until then is it considered to be before us at all. I now yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I was going to ask the Senator if in connection with the report and the hearings on a given project, first, the engineer and, subsequently, the board, do not consider also the commercial possibilities involved as to whether the project would be commercially justified and also go into the question of the cost of the project?

Mr. RANDELL. Unquestionably they do. They find out all the facts relating to the cost of the project, the commerce on the stream, both present and prospective, the effect of the improvement upon freight rates, and everything else that will give Congress an intelligent idea of the project.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. RANDELL. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether or not I understood the Senator correctly, and I will ask him if I understood him to say that no project was appropriated for unless it had been approved by the Army engineers?

Mr. RANDELL. I did not say that absolutely. I said a project was not considered to have a legislative status unless it had been approved by the Army engineers; and I will add that in some very exceptional cases projects have been acted upon without such approval. We had one or two very small items in the last river and harbor bill, carrying very small sums, which did not receive the approval of the Army engineers, but more than 98 per cent of the projects in that bill did have the approval of the engineers. The general proposition was stated correctly by me that a project has not legislative status before Congress until it has run the gantlet of survey and examination and received the approval of the Engineer Corps.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I know that the practice is always to have a survey, but I also know that appropriations have been made for projects which the Army Engineer Board have condemned. I also know, Mr. President, that appropriations have been made, taking the commerce of the river into consideration, which cost the Government at least $25 or $30 for every ton of freight transported. No individual and no corporation would ever put one dollar into a project of that kind. It is simply a waste of money.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if he will not enumerate some of those projects? He says he knows of them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in order that we may have a number of them—I do not want to intimate that there is only one—and in order to have the figures exact as to what they cost per ton of freight carried, I will send for the list and will see that it is put in the Record following the Senator's remarks.

Mr. RANDELL. I should be very glad if the Senator would put the list in right now and let me know now what the projects are to which he has reference, so that Senators may be informed as to what they are. I am very familiar with this matter, and I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I know I am not mistaken; and I will see that the list goes into the Record.

Mr. RANDELL. I should be very glad if the Senator would put it in the Record.

Now, Mr. President, how can it be said that there is no investigation made of river and harbor projects when this course of examination and survey and investigation to which I have referred is required by law, and is followed in nearly every instance?

Let me read to you exactly what the statute is on that subject. I quote now from the report of the National Waterways Commission, of which former Senator Burton, of Ohio, was chairman. The other members of that commission were Senators J. H. GALLINGER, S. H. PILES, WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH, F. M. SIMMONS, JAMES P. CLARKE, and William Lorimer, and Representatives D. S. Alexander, Frederick C. Stevens, Irving P. Wanger, STEPHEN M. SPARKMAN, and JOHN A. MOON. It would be difficult to have obtained a much abler commission than that. On page 77 of the final report of that commission I find these words, to which I hope the Senator from Utah will listen:

The commission regards the present law, providing for preliminary steps before the adoption of projects for improvement, as well adapted to secure the best results.

That was the statement of some of the colleagues and former colleagues of the Senator from Utah. That utterance was not made especially by Democrats, by men who were trying to make any misstatement, but it was the utterance of that great commission. The report continues:

Under existing statutes it is required that when the improvement of a river or harbor is advocated, before any plan is adopted there should be legislation by Congress in the form of a concurrent resolution or other measure which shall direct that an investigation of the improvement be made.

How does that tally with the statement of the Republican candidate for President?

This investigation contemplates two successive steps—first, a preliminary examination; second, a detailed survey—both of which are made by the Engineer Corps of the United States Army and are reviewed by an organization known as a "board of review," created by the river and harbor act of 1902—

And created when that "fine Republican," ex-Senator Burton, was chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives—with the object of securing uniformity in recommendations before projects are adopted and with the thought of bringing to bear upon the proposed improvements under investigation a more elaborate and careful consideration. If on the first, or preliminary, examination the report is unfavorable, no further action is taken without the further order of Congress. The law on this subject is contained in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1909.

The provision in the act referred to follows the quotation I have just made, and I will ask permission to insert it in my remarks without reading.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The statute referred to is as follows:

In all cases a preliminary examination of the river, harbor, or other proposed improvement mentioned shall first be made, and a report as to the advisability of its improvement shall be submitted, unless a survey or estimate is herein expressly directed. If upon such preliminary examination the proposed improvement is not deemed advisable, no further action shall be taken thereon without the further direction of Congress; but in case the report shall be favorable to such proposed improvement, or that a survey and estimate should be made to determine the advisability of improvement, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to cause surveys to be made, and the cost and advisability to be reported to Congress. Such examinations and surveys shall be reviewed by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, as provided in section 3 of the river and harbor act of March 2, 1907: Provided, That every report submitted to Congress in pursuance of this section, in addition to full information regarding the present and prospective commercial importance of the project covered by the report, and the benefit to commerce likely to result from any proposed plan of improvement, shall contain also such data as it may be practicable to secure regarding (first) the establishment of terminal and transfer facilities, (second) the development and utilization of water power for industrial and commercial purposes, and (third) such other subjects as may be properly connected with such project: Provided further, That in the investigation and study of these questions consideration shall be given only to their bearing upon the improvement of navigation and to the possibility and desirability of their being coordinated in a logical and proper manner with improvements for navigation to lessen the cost of such improvements and to compensate the Government for expenditures made in the interest of navigation: And provided further, That the investigation and study of these questions as provided herein may, upon review by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors when called for as now provided by law, be extended to any work of improvement now under way and to any locality the examination and survey of which has heretofore been or may hereafter be authorized by Congress.

MR. RANDELL. Continuing the quotation from the report of the National Waterways Commission, they say:

Under the foregoing plan, if the final report is favorable, it is considered that a basis exists for the making of an appropriation for the proposed improvements. The recommendations of the engineer officers are not necessarily final, though since the passage of the law the rule has been adhered to as a fixed policy that no project should be undertaken by the Government or appropriated for which does not have the recommendations of the board of review and the Chief of Engineers.

Yet this candidate of the Republican Party for President says that these great expenditures are made without any investigation; and here is a man, whom he lauded in that same speech as a "fine Republican," stating in his report of four years ago that no project should be undertaken by the Government or appropriated for which does not have the recommendation of the board of review and Chief of Engineers.

Where did Mr. Candidate Hughes get his information on this subject, I should like to know? He did not get it from the law. He did not get it from the facts in regard to the river and harbor bill signed a few days ago. Let me give you a few facts in regard to that bill.

I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of War, addressed to the President of the United States, dated July 24, 1916, in which he says:

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I return to you herewith the river and harbor bill, which I have gone over with great care and upon which I hand you a report made by the Chief of Engineers with certain attached memoranda. The net result of this examination is to show that in this bill, carrying $42,886,085, $611,200, or about 1½ per cent, is, in the judgment of the Engineer Department of the War Department, regarded as economically indefensible, although in the case of some of these expenditures the improvements are probably not primarily for navigation purposes.

I concur in the view expressed by Gen. Black that the direct loss to the United States as a result of suspension of work, were this bill not to receive your approval, would be greater than the amount appropriated for improvements of a doubtful value; that is to say, upon all the great river and harbor projects of the country, if work were suspended, there would be loss due to the breaking up of existing organizations, the care of idle plants, etc., which would be very serious. Should this bill receive your approval, the department would have so much work on its hands that it would probably be obliged to delay some portion of it, and, of course, in selecting that to be delayed, the work of doubtful economic importance would be postponed, so that the entire $611,200 marked as questionable would probably not be expended in any event.

Respectfully submitted.

NEWTON D. BAKER.

Accompanying that letter of the Secretary of War is a letter addressed to him from Gen. William M. Black, Chief of Engineers, from which I read:

JULY 24, 1916.

From: The Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

To: The Secretary of War.

Subject: Report on pending river and harbor bill.

1. In compliance with your verbal instructions, the following report on the pending river and harbor bill is submitted:

2. For the past 8 or 10 years Congress has, in general, followed the policy of adopting no new projects except such as were favorably recommended by the Chief of Engineers. The recommendations of the Chief of Engineers are, in each case, based upon a careful examination and survey to determine the nature and cost of the improvement to be undertaken and a full study of the probable benefits to be derived. The study is such as would be made by a careful business firm to determine whether it would undertake a new business venture.

I hope these words of the Chief of Engineers are being listened to by those Senators who have any doubt as to the painstaking care which precedes all appropriations for rivers and harbors.

The study is made by the district officer and reviewed by the division engineer and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors before being acted on by the Chief of Engineers.

3. Prior to the time mentioned above, Congress adopted many projects which had not been subjected to such a careful study and which were not recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

The time referred to above was 8 or 10 years ago. Prior to that time, he says, Congress adopted projects which had not been recommended.

As a rule it is certain of these projects which have been subject to recent attacks. To determine whether the attacks were justified a proviso was inserted in the river and harbor act approved March 4, 1915, directing a reexamination of all existing river and harbor improvements to determine which, if any, of them should be modified or abandoned. The results to date of this reexamination are set forth in brief in memorandum No. 1 herewith. Owing to lack of time the reports on these recommendations could not, with few exceptions, be made available for the consideration of Congress in connection with the pending river and harbor bill.

4. An examination of the bill shows that it contains certain items which were not included in the annual estimates of the Engineer Department, or which were included for a less amount than the bill provides. Memorandum No. 2, inclosed, cites these items in detail, and shows that, without exception, the added items and the increased amounts were introduced into the bill on recommendation of the Chief of Engineers based upon facts that came to light after the annual estimates had been submitted. There are also many items for which a less amount is provided than called for by the annual estimates. No discussion of them is deemed necessary.

5. Memorandum No. 3, inclosed, gives a list of all the items in the bill which may be classed as of doubtful value to the interests of navigation when subjected to the tests usually applied by the department. A final analysis shows that, of the total $42,886,085 carried by the bill, $611,200 (about 1½ per cent) is not economically defensible in the judgment of the Engineer Department for navigation purposes, however meritorious it may be for other purposes.

6. To conclude, the items in the bill which can be justly condemned are few and the amount provided for them is small, as compared to the loss to the commercial interests of the country that would result from the failure to enact a river and harbor bill. Moreover, the direct loss to the United States as a result of suspension of work and care of idle plant pertaining to improvements of unquestioned merit would, as shown by the experience of 1914—

The experience brought about when this "fine Republican," Senator Burton, filibustered a river and harbor bill to death—in less than three months amount to more than is provided for the doubtful items.

7. It is recommended, therefore, that the bill be approved by the President.

W. M. BLACK,

Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

This letter is dated July 24, 1916.

Mr. President, the Chief of Engineers of the Army—a man with the rank of brigadier general, one of the honor men of West Point, a man who will retire with a pension for life at the age of 64—sends that report to the Secretary of War; and in it he says that only $611,000—only 1½ per cent of the forty-two million eight hundred and odd thousand dollars carried by that bill—is even of questionable merit; and yet the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] said a few days ago, when discussing that bill, that he was certain that 33½ per cent of the items in it were utterly worthless, or words to that effect. I forget his exact words.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it was more than that.

Mr. RANDELL. Probably it was more. I should like to have the Senator's present opinion. I do not doubt that he is much wiser on river and harbor matters than the Chief of Engineers of the Army.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. RANDELL. I shall be delighted to have the Senator do so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A great many of these contracts go through a period of years, and the appropriation in each year's bill is to pay for contracts that have been made in the past. How many of the contracts under this bill that is being criticized were made under Republican administrations and how many of them were made under the present administration?

Mr. RANDELL. When the Senator says "contracts" I do not know that I can tell him, but if he asks me what projects were undertaken—and I think that is what he means—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is what I mean; not contracts, but when the project was begun and undertaken.

Mr. RANDELL. In the river and harbor bill signed a few days ago there were 280 items. Most of those items have been on the books for years, and 210 of them were in the "perfect" bill passed by Theodore E. Burton in 1907—the bill which he himself says was the most perfect piece of river and harbor legislation ever enacted.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Eighty per cent.

Mr. RANDELL. Nearly all of them—more than 80 per cent—have been on the books for years and years, projects undertaken under a Republican régime, and necessary for us to carry forward now in order to preserve the commerce of the country.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There were 280 items in the bill?

Mr. RANDELL. As I understand; yes, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And 210 of them were included in the bill that was passed by Senator Burton when chairman of the committee in 1907?

Mr. RANDELL. Yes, and more. More than 210 came over from the Republican régime; but I am speaking about 210 of them having been in the great piece of legislation which the Senator from Alabama doubtless heard Senator Burton describe with gusto so often, that piece of legislation which was never excelled by anything done by the American Congress, according to Mr. Burton, and which was passed just before the close of his term in the House in 1907, which carried about $86,000,000; and 210 of these items were in that bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How many more items were there, outside of the 210? Can the Senator inform me?

Mr. RANDELL. I can not inform the Senator as to that, but a small number of them. We took on very few new items, and let me tell the Senator why. The Committee on Commerce in 1914 prepared a very fine river and harbor bill and attempted to pass it. It was filibustered to death by Senator Burton and several other Senators on the other side of the Chamber who aided him—largely by him. That bill included a number of very necessary new projects, in one of which my friend the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] was intensely interested—the project at New London, which was most worthy and was included in the last bill.

This New London project, along with a number of other very meritorious projects, died a natural death when the bill of 1914 was filibustered to death, and we were obliged to accept a $20,000,000 lump-sum appropriation. The same thing happened with the bill of 1915. That also had a number of worthy new projects which we sought to include in the bill, but it, too, was talked to death by Senator Burton and some of his associates. It was finally passed as a lump-sum appropriation of $25,000,000.

The Senator from Alabama understands, I know, because he is well posted on all subjects, that when there is a lump-sum appropriation you can not spend anything on a new project. You can only expend money on existing projects—projects that have been previously adopted by Congress. The object of the lump-sum appropriation is to maintain the status quo and to keep those works going on to some extent.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, as I understand the Senator, up to the bill that was passed this year all of the appropriations that have been expended by this administration have been these lump-sum appropriations, and the only expenditures made by this administration were to carry out projects adopted under Republican administrations?

Mr. RANDELL. That is absolutely true, and we took on not more than 14 new projects in the bill signed a few days ago. So that practically all of the items in this bill are those which were in course of improvement under Republican administrations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. All except about 14?

Mr. RANDELL. All except 14.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How much of an expenditure is entailed by the 14 new projects provided for in this bill?

Mr. RANDELL. I can not tell the Senator exactly. I think it is between two and three million dollars. There was one in which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] was interested. I believe that was $170,000. There was one of $220,000, if I mistake not, at San Diego, Cal. There was another: one at Los Angeles of $500,000, and there was one at the mouth of the Mississippi—not a new project, but it was for carrying on some work rendered necessary by the awful storm of two or three years ago—that amounted to $400,000. The total of the new projects was $2,633,675.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The total amount of this appropriation was $44,000,000?

Mr. RANDELL. $42,886,085.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And in the neighborhood of $40,000,000 of that was expended on projects that had been adopted by Republican administrations?

Mr. RANDELL. That is true. That is entirely true, and I thank the Senator for his suggestion with regard to that.

As to the matter of extravagance, referred to in these remarks of the Republican candidate for President, I should like to show here, right in this connection, that during the régime of President Taft there was expended for rivers and harbors in 1911, $49,380,541; in 1912, $30,883,419; in 1913, $41,250,620; and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, the appropriations having been made under Mr. Taft, $51,118,889; a total of $172,642,469 for river and harbor work during the four years of Mr. Taft, an average of $43,160,617 a year.

During the three years of President Wilson's administration there were expended the following sums: In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, $26,988,500; the next year, $33,982,000; and for the current year, $42,886,085, a total for the three years of Mr. Wilson's administration of $103,856,585, or an average for the three years of $34,618,861, as against an average under Mr. Taft for the previous four years of $43,160,617.

In other words, the Republicans were spending money a great deal faster than it has been spent under this administration, though I am frank to say that if the two bills for 1914 and 1915—which were wise and good bills—had not been filibustered to death by the man who for 10 years was chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, we probably would have spent in proportion under this administration about the same that was spent under Mr. Taft.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, the practical proposition is that all the money that has been spent in the last 20 years on river and harbor work has been spent on projects that have been adopted by the Republican Party?

Mr. RANDELL. That is entirely true. No money, let me say, has been spent on projects adopted by the Democratic Party, because we were not in power. We did not have a chance. The first bill we ever had a chance to pass which took in any new projects whatsoever was the bill signed a few days ago, and, as the Senator knows, nothing has been spent under that bill yet.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Hughes's criticism of the river and harbor bill, then, is merely an indictment of the Republican Party.

Mr. RANDELL. Unquestionably; nothing but an indictment of it.

I should like to read just a few words from the gentleman who seems to be Mr. Hughes's mentor, Mr. Burton. Mr. Theodore E. Burton was chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives, and many a time have you, Senator UNDERWOOD, heard him say on the floor of the House that he dared anybody to knock a river and harbor button off his shoulder; that he would not stand for it at all. He was the most pugnacious man in those days that I ever saw in regard to river and harbor appropriations, and their great champion. I gloried in him then because in my humble way I was doing what I could in the same line.

Shortly after Mr. Burton ceased to be a Member of the House of Representatives he made an address before the National Rivers and Harbors Congress in this city, in December, 1900, which appears on page 106 of the record of that meeting. He said:

My friends, the president of this congress will say to you that we have known no North, no South, no East, no West in the years we have been together.

I may say truthfully this statement is correct, for I had the honor of being the president of that congress. It was true that we never knew partisanship in the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives during the 10 years of Theodore Burton's chairmanship. I will pay that tribute; it is a deserved one, and I am glad to do so.

We have taken up projects according to the measure of their merit, and I can vouch that members of the committee in many instances have leaned over backward where their own localities were involved, and have given closer attention to projects in other places. * * * You have had to meet the idea that there is a pork barrel somewhere.

Please listen to this sentence—a pork barrel somewhere. Whenever there is a man of superficial information on this subject—

I wonder if Candidate Hughes has "superficial information on this subject." This is Theodore Burton talking now; not RANSDELL, but Burton:

Whenever there is a man of superficial information on this subject or one who has had some project that has been turned down—

I imagine that would fit some folks who have criticized the bill during the present session of Congress—and I could name them if I wanted to—because of some project that had been turned down—and turned down hard, because it had to be turned down, that man begins to talk about the pork barrel. There has been no line of appropriations made by this Government more carefully guarded than appropriations for rivers and harbors.

I hope the Senator from Utah is listening. This was Theodore Burton who said that there were no more carefully guarded appropriations by this Government than appropriations for rivers and harbors.

I challenge anyone to cite an instance where that bill has ever been made up to gratify certain localities or to advance the interests of some Member of Congress in the House or Senate.

Yet Candidate Hughes says there was "logrolling" on this bill, and the supposition is that former candidate Burton was his mentor, because we all know that until Mr. Burton became a candidate for the Presidency of the United States he was a good friend of river and harbor appropriations, and it was only when the presidential bee began buzzing in his bonnet and he came to this side of the Capitol that he started to fight river and harbor appropriations. He is not the only man who had that bee buzzing in his bonnet who has been fighting river and harbor appropriations for the past few years. All who are within the sound of my voice know that we could name five or six others who had the same bee buzzing in their bonnets.

Now, whom are we to believe? Will we believe the former great chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, the man who made a study of this subject for years, the man who was familiar with every detail of it, the man who was speaking at a time not suspicious, when he had no ax to grind, when he had no votes to seek—will we believe Theodore Burton, talking in 1909, when he says:

I challenge anyone to cite an instance where that bill has ever been made up to gratify certain localities or to advance the interests of some Member of Congress in the House or Senate.

Will we believe him when he said that, or will we believe Candidate Hughes, who is trying to get votes now by maligning river and harbor appropriations?

Mr. Burton said this also:

There has been no logrolling, no pork barrel, no regard for individual prospects or anything of the sort; no regard for any particular locality in the country.

That is what he said, and, Senators, he spoke the truth. I appeal to the splendid man, now listening to me, who for years and years has been on the Commerce Committee of the Senate. I appeal to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] who has been a member of that committee for a long time. Have you ever known of any logrolling in favor of a river and harbor bill? If you have, I ask you to please get up here and let us know. Have we not been fair in making those appropriations? I should like to have a reply, Senator, if you will give it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I might be misunderstood if I failed to respond to the call made by the Senator from Louisiana. I will therefore say, without hesitation, that any imputation against the fidelity and impartiality of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate is nothing but a cheap slander, it matters not whether it comes from a presidential candidate or from a disappointed aspirant for office.

I say that the Committee on Commerce of the Senate has been as faithful and as just and as impartial as any tribunal that ever considered a public question. In my long service on that committee I have never heard a suggestion made by one member of the committee to another that he should vote for a project in consideration of some one voting for a project of his. Every member of that committee would scorn a suggestion of that sort. I do not believe that a vote has ever been cast in that committee except in a conscientious way and in the interest of the public service.

Mr. RANSDELL. I thank the Senator for that statement. He has told the absolute truth. I thank Heaven there is also present another Senator who was for I do not know how many years, certainly for 15 or 20 before he came to the Senate, on the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House. I ask Senator BANKHEAD if he will tell us whether he knows of this logrolling? Senator BANKHEAD, I know you do not like to talk, but please let us have your impression about that. Senator BANKHEAD did not know I was going to call on him; neither did I. Senator, I hope you will tell us what you know about this slanderous charge.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, it hardly seems necessary, it appears to me, that Senators should be refuting a charge like that coming from a presidential candidate. It is true that I served upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the House for a number of years, and I have served upon the Committee on Commerce of the Senate.

I have never heard a charge made by anybody, except some cheap politician perhaps, that there has been any improper conduct or anything done in that committee that was not proper or right and in the interest of the general public. I have never seen in that committee in the House or in the Senate any evidence whatever of sectional feeling. Questions of that kind never entered into the consideration of measures before the committee. I will say this with perfect candor and frankness; and if it is worth anything, I am glad to have said it.

Mr. RANSDELL. I thank the Senator for that candid statement. Now, Mr. President—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I see the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] in his seat. He is a member of that committee. I think he ought to be put upon the stand.

Mr. RANSDELL. I would be delighted to have the Senator from Connecticut give me his experience.

Mr. WEEKS. I was going to ask the Senator from Louisiana if he intended to call on any Republican Senators to testify.

Mr. RANSDELL. If there are any members of the committee on the floor I would be delighted. Do you see Senator NELSON, or some member of the committee? Senator NELSON has been on the committee for years. I would be delighted to call on him. I would like to have the experience of the Senator from Massachusetts. How much logrolling have you known, Senator WEEKS?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the granting of a certificate of character to each other ought to be confined to the Democratic membership.

Mr. RANSDELL. I beg pardon.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I hope the Senator will confine the operation of granting certificates of character to his own side of the Chamber.

Mr. RANSDELL. I would be delighted to have Republican testimony. I glanced over there but did not see a single man who had been on either the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House or the Commerce Committee of the Senate. If I had, I would have called on him. I would like to hear from the Senator from Florida. I would be delighted if you would give me your testimonial in this matter, Senator FLETCHER. You have been on the Commerce Committee for many, many years. Is this a truthful or a slanderous statement?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I can not be said to have been on the committee for many, many years. I have been on the Commerce Committee since I came to the Senate, but that has not been so many years. However, I felt great interest in the question of river and harbor improvement before I ever came to the Senate. I made a considerable study of it, particularly with reference to the authority and power of Congress in dealing with the question. I have never seen anything in the Senate, in the Commerce Committee or elsewhere, which indicated to me that the committee or Congress was disposed to waste public money in reference to these improvements. The committee and the Senate, so far as I have ever been able to observe, realized that under the Constitution the care and maintenance of these great public highways devolved upon the Federal Government. In the case of Gibbons against Ogden the proposition was pretty well settled that the navigable streams of the country are subject to Federal control. If they are subject to Federal control, then the Federal Government ought to improve them in the interest of navigation where the improvement is needed, where the commerce would justify that improvement.

That is the spirit I have observed back of these appropriations. In pursuance of the obligation resting upon the committee and upon the Senate, under that power and that authority and that duty, they have acted on these river and harbor bills. I have never observed that it was a question you vote for me and I will vote for you, you tickle me and I will tickle you, a question of logrolling, or anything of that sort.

It has seemed to me that the system which has been adopted, which the Senator from Louisiana has so clearly outlined here, requiring that the projects shall be passed upon by the district engineer, the division engineer, the Board of Engineers, and the Chief of Engineers, and shall be transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of War, is about the safest and best system that we could adopt. I have been unable to study out or devise any safer or sounder or better plan than we have now in operation. It may be that it is possible to do so; I do not know; but it seems to me that these appropriations are safeguarded with more care and under a better system than any other appropriation I know of made by Congress.

Mr. RANDELL. I was going to ask the Senator if he knew of any other appropriations safeguarded half as carefully as those for rivers and harbors?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not.

Mr. RANDELL. Does any one else want to say anything? This seems to be an experience meeting.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] obtained quite a large appropriation in the last river and harbor bill, in fact, one of the few new projects that were incorporated in the bill. I know he would gladly testify that there was no logrolling connected with the securing of that item. I should like to ask for his testimonial on that question.

Mr. RANDELL. I would be very glad to hear from the Senator from Connecticut if he wishes to say anything. If he does not, I do not care to press him.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will say that the exceedingly moderate amount that was awarded to my State in that bill was more than deserved. Not half enough was given to my State, and a part of what was given by the Senate was thrown out, I believe, in conference. I will say, also, that if a large number of the items had been as much justified as that one for my State the bill would have been a greatly better bill than it was.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the Chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. RANDELL. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. HARDING. Do I understand that this is to be an experience meeting?

Mr. RANDELL. It can be turned into that. If the Senator wishes to say something I will be glad to yield to him.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I have no desire to inject some unkindly remark in this debate, but since this is a testimonial of the old-fashioned Methodist kind, I may say the first conversation I heard in the Commerce Committee, without reciting names, which would hardly be courteous, the conversation ran very much like this: "That is all the Senator asks; he ought to have that." And "he has not asked for anything except this; we ought to give it to him." "Yes; he is asking about $150,000, but that is all he asks; I think he ought to have it." That is my first experience.

Mr. RANDELL. I should like to ask the Senator if these were not thoroughly reasonable requests backed up by favorable reports from the United States engineers?

Mr. HARDING. I will not dispute that statement, if the Senator please; but it struck me as the most genial kind of logrolling I had heard in a long while.

Mr. RANDELL. You may call it logrolling, but I can not see any logrolling in it when the project was a worthy one, approved by the engineers, and the Senator was making only one request. Bear in mind there are projects pending before Congress calling for appropriations to the amount of over $300,000,000, and that we can not spend it all at once. I remember, if I mistake not, that that remark was made about the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. He came there and submitted with great force a most worthy project. There was not a more worthy project in America than the one he presented. We would have given it unquestionably but for the fact that this Democratic administration was trying to hold down appropriations, trying to be economical, trying not to have any new projects on the bill; and when Senator BRANDEGEE stated his case so strongly, I think the very conversation occurred which is alluded to by the Senator from Ohio; and if that project for New London is not a worthy one, if it is not going to pay two or three times to the American people in the saving of freight, in building up a great harbor, for every dollar expended by the Government, then I do not know anything about commercial propositions.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will say to the Senator the grievance I had was that they had adopted a rule by which they were excluding meritorious projects because they were new and were including undeserving projects because they had been in the bill before.

Mr. RANDELL. And had been put in the bill, I may say, by the Republican Congress in past years.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think both parties really are responsible in the past for a great many bad things that have gone in.

Mr. RANDELL. I do not believe that any were really bad, but the Senator's party was responsible for most of them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have my doubt about that.

Mr. RANDELL. I do not want to hold Senator Burton responsible for the great Ohio River project. That I think was started in 1875 and it ran along in the most desultory and unbusinesslike way until 1910, and during 10 years of this time Mr. Burton had been chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. In 1910, at the end of 35 years, they had not finished a fourth of it. And yet Mr. Burton had been the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee for 10 years. Not until 1910 was that project taken on in a businesslike way by Col. De Alva Stanwood Alexander, of New York, the then chairman, when we adopted it and said it was a good project; that we ought to have 9 feet of water from Pittsburgh to Cairo; that there was a great commerce on the river, and though it would cost $63,000,000, it was worth it; and it was a shame that Congress had neglected that great river for so long. It was a shame, Mr. President and Senators, that we had not taken it up in a businesslike way before 1910.

I do not charge Mr. Burton with responsibility for that. I place it where it belongs, with Mr. Alexander, of New York, who was also a Republican and one of the best acts of his career was the adoption of the 9-foot project for the Ohio. I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I think I owe it to my distinguished predecessor to say that his sins bore so heavily upon him that he became penitent and has had a complete change of heart.

Mr. RANDELL. Yes; when he got the presidential bee buzzing in his bonnet he got a change of heart like some other people; several got a change of heart, and Senator Burton got it good.

I tell you, Senators, it is very strange when a man will say what Senator Burton said in 1909, and then take the position he has recently assumed. The present Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] did not hear it, and I am not going to read it again; but I am going to ask him to read my speech, and I am going to ask him to read the speech which Senator Burton made before the Rivers and Harbors Congress in December, 1909. That was only a few years ago. What caused his change of heart? Has there been any change in the system? He was 10 years chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. We followed then the system which we follow now; we have not changed in one jot or one tittle. Has he changed his heart since 1912? In 1909 he was made chairman of the National Waterways Commission. I hold in my hand the final report of that commission made in 1912. I have given the membership of that commission. Several eminent Senators, now in this body, were members of it; several eminent Members of the House were members of it. The duty imposed upon that commission by statute was to investigate the questions pertaining to water transportation and the improvement of waterways and to make recommendations to Congress. Senator Burton was the chairman. Here is one of the recommendations which he made. He says, on page 58, in the final report of that commission:

The commission would advise that without a careful and unbiased examination of proposed improvements of the nature now required by statute no project should be adopted by Congress.

On the previous page he had told us how that was done by the engineers, as I have outlined. He had published the statute in full. Going on, he says:

Numerous propositions have been made for the creation of a board of public works, or other body, which shall decide upon the feasibility and desirability of propositions for expenditures on rivers and harbors. The commission—is unwilling to recommend a change of this kind, and points to the fact that the past recommendations of the Engineer Corps have been carefully prepared and with a degree of expert knowledge and comprehension of the commercial needs of the country, which could not well be supplied by any other body or organization.

That is, in the National Waterways Commission—

When did this man suffer the change of heart? He sent in that report in 1912. Have we made any change in the legislation since then? If so, will not the Senator from Ohio point out the change that caused the change of heart on the part of Senator Burton?

The advantages which attach to the Engineer Corps are obvious. The members are in the permanent service of the Government, and are free from those influences which would inevitably be brought to bear upon men in civil life.

The Senator from Ohio doubtless knows how we select the men in the Engineer Corps. They are the 10 honor men of West Point; they are appointed from all over the United States; they are the truest democracy of our land when they enter that academy. They go out with the honors of the academy upon them, for none but the honor men are placed in the Engineer Corps.

At the age of 64 they are retired with a pension for life. They rarely ever are assigned to localities where they have any interest, and they are never allowed to stay more than three years in one place. If there be an independent body of men, a disinterested body, I say to the Senate that it is the Engineer Corps of the Army. It would be impossible to devise any plan that would give greater safeguards and balances to any system of making appropriations than is furnished by the reports of these 10 engineers—first, the local engineer; second, the division engineer; third, the seven engineers of the Board for Rivers and Harbors; and, fourth, the Chief of Engineers—10 in all.

Those engineers now engaged in the work are carefully trained in the planning and execution of these improvements, and have special qualifications for judging the feasibility and the cost of proposed river and harbor projects. They also have a good general knowledge of the probable commercial results which would accrue, though on this point their opinions have not been regarded as conclusive.

That is, conclusive on the commercial aspects.

In this connection the commission would call attention to the necessity for an increase in the membership of the Engineer Corps.

Mr. President, that is what Senator Burton and his commission said about this Engineer Corps. I do not see how it can be possible to devise a better system.

On the 14th of September, 1914, I made a few remarks in the Senate on the pending river and harbor bill, and I wish very briefly to quote from that speech, because it is apropos of the questions now before us, and I hope Senators will give me a patient hearing.

I then spoke as follows:

Mr. RANDELL. Let me make the statement and then I will yield to the Senator. Only the honor men—I understand it to be the 10 honor men—of West Point are eligible to entrance into the Engineer Corps. For years, in fact, from our earliest history, our river and harbor work has been in charge of the Engineer Corps of the Army. They have expended $791,843,740 on river and harbor work. Did any of it stick to their hands? None, so far as I know, except possibly in the one case of Capt. Carter at Savannah. Can any branch of our Government show a more honorable record than that of the Engineer Corps of the Army, who, during the long years of our national life have expended on these great works nearly $800,000,000 with but one single solitary scandal in their ranks? Can even our judiciary show such a record as that? Have we not had a great many impeachments among our judges? Have we not had scandals in every branch of our national life? Have we not occasionally been compelled to expel men from the Senate and the House? Beyond question, yes; and these faithful, able public servants—the Engineer Corps of our Army—have expended nearly $800,000,000 on river and harbor works with but one single, solitary scandal!

In a moment I will yield to the Senator from Ohio. Some of the best names in our history belong to the Engineer Corps. Meade and Lee, who fought at Gettysburg against each other, were members of the Engineer Corps. They were the leaders of 40 members of that corps who attained commanding rank in the War between the States. Some of the greatest generals on both sides were engineer officers. I might mention Joe Johnston, McPherson, Beauregard, and Wright, and many others whose names are emblazoned on the pages of our Nation's history. Coming nearer to the present time, where did Goethals, the builder of the Panama Canal, and his able lieutenants—Sibert, Gallard, and Hodges—get the training and experience which enabled them successfully to construct the greatest engineering feat of all the ages? They got it, Mr. President and Senators, in the river and harbor works with which they were associated before being assigned to duty on the Panama Canal. They were on these river and harbor works, scattered all over this country, and there they got the wonderful training, the great experience, the marvelous executive ability necessary to make a success of this great project.

Would any American intimate for an instant that Goethals would have favored a project in which there was "graft" and "pork"?

And yet, Senators, Col. Goethals, as he then was, or Gen. Goethals, as he now is, was employed on river and harbor work in different parts of the country for years before he went to Panama.

I should like to see the man who would make that suggestion about Goethals or Sibert, or Gallard, or Hodges. Yet these men were connected with various and sundry river and harbor projects. These men, let me repeat, learned how to build the Panama Canal on river and harbor works. The supposition that these canal builders or a majority of the 10 engineers of the corps who act on each project would yield to improper influence is preposterous. They have done the best they could. They have followed out the system laid down for them. I believe it is a good system, and I will show in a few moments that it has the approval of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Burton], to whom I now yield.

Mr. President, the statement of the Republican candidate for President of the United States is that no investigations are made. Well, I should like to know, if there are no investigations, what these three big books which I hold in my hand [exhibiting] are. These books constitute the report of the engineers on the river and harbor projects of this country for just one year. Here [exhibiting] are the volumes, and I hope Senators will look at them. They are entitled "Report of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army for 1915, Parts 1, 2, and 3." Now, where did they get the information to make the reports contained in these three big volumes if they did not make investigations, if they did not make studies, if they did not make surveys? Ah, where did the Republican candidate for President get such incorrect information, or rather misinformation?

Mr. President, there is a big project now interesting many people in the middle section of our country, namely, the project for the improvement of the Missouri River. The former Senator from Ohio, Mr. Burton, was very much opposed to that project, and was responsible for an order requiring an additional survey of it. That survey was made in the most elaborate manner. After the local engineer had investigated it in detail and had reported to the division engineer, a great board of engineers, composed of many of the ablest officers in the Engineer Corps, went to the locality and made an examination of the project. I hold in my hand the report of that board. It contains 303 pages, and is Senate Document No. 463, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session. If anyone thinks there was no investigation of the Missouri River before that board reported on the project, I wish he would examine this report. This is no star-chamber document, either; it is a Senate document; it is a document which all Senators can get and which all are expected to get, and which is published for the use of the Senate. It contains page after page of testimony taken in regard to that project. It contains a discussion of the engineering features, of the commercial features, and of the thousand and one things connected with that great project for improving the Missouri River from Kansas City to its mouth, and the report, after a most elaborate study, is favorable in the extreme.

Now, do you mean to tell me that these great engineers did not state the truth; that they did not find the facts; that they did not make a real examination? Ah, Senators, no one can believe any such thing as that.

All this talk about "pork" is absolutely false and unreasonable. I want to ask every Senator within the sound of my voice to tell me whether there is any "pork" in the projects in his neighborhood. I pause for an answer. Do you know of any pork, Mr. Senator, in the projects undertaken in the neighborhood where you live? The "pork" is always in the State of some one else, in the district of some one else, away off yonder somewhere; it is never where you live. If any Senator can cite me an instance of "pork" in his own locality in connection with a river or harbor improvement, I should like to have him do so. I pause for an answer. [A pause.]

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Louisiana ought also to pause to notice that from the crowded Republican side, with every seat occupied at this important hour, and the equally crowded Democratic side, with every seat occupied, there is no response in opposition to his query, and no one making accusations along the line of the previous indictment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I did not quite hear what the Senator said, but if I caught his words—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. RANDELL. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. If I caught the words of the Senator from Illinois, he said that every seat on the Republican side was occupied and that every seat on the Democratic side was occupied.

Mr. LEWIS. I said the able Senator from Louisiana would probably observe how every seat on the Republican side and every seat on the Democratic side was occupied during this particularly important discussion, involving so much to the interest and welfare of our country.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator would have been nearly right if instead of "occupied" he had said "unoccupied."

Mr. LEWIS. The observation made, I am sure, carried its meaning to the able Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, I do not wish to hold the Senate very much longer, but I can not refrain from saying just a few words about a certain phase of river and harbor legislation that has impressed me very forcibly. I do not know how the Republican candidate for President feels about it, but I know how the critics of the last river and harbor bill felt about the appropriations for harbors. There was not a single criticism here. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING], whom I see in his seat, said that he would gladly give $50,000,000 in the river and harbor bill for harbors. Of course plenty of people would give all that the harbors need. I would do so.

I never have failed to vote for a harbor improvement; but that harbors are railroad terminals; harbors are where the railroad runs up alongside of the ship and discharges freight into the ship, and where the ship goes up alongside of the railroad and transfers its cargo to the railroad. That is what a harbor is; and the railroads of this land are just as friendly as they can be to harbors. I do not know whether that is at all responsible for the friendship of some Senators for them. I am simply stating a fact, that a harbor is a part and parcel—and a necessary part and parcel—of the railroad system. How, in the name of common sense, could the great railroads operate which carry the enormous quantities of grain from the West and iron and its manufactures from the Middle and Western States to New York, to Boston, to Philadelphia, to Baltimore, and to Norfolk, for shipment to the markets of the world, unless there were deep harbors at those places, so that ships drawing 35 feet of water and more could come right up alongside of the railroad? How could the big railroads which run to my section, to the city of New Orleans, to the city of Galveston, to the city of Mobile, and to the city of Jacksonville, do business unless they had big ships to which to transfer their freight? And how could the ships do business properly and economically unless there were deep water so that they could run up right alongside the railroads?

Ah, my friends, there never has been any opposition to harbors, and I am glad of it. I believe in harbors, but I also believe in waterways which are not adjuncts to and complements of railroads, but which are competitors of railroads. I believe in waterways which are rivals of railroads, which carry freight in competition with railroads, and which cheapen transportation to the American people. I believe in such waterways. I believe in the improvement of the rivers of this country. I believe in the improvement of the rivers and canals and connecting channels of this country. I believe in all that, as well as in the harbors. Some people here do not seem to believe in anything that means competition with railroads. Cooperation with railroads, yes; but no competition. Millions for harbors that are going to cooperate with railroads, but not a cent for rivers which are going to compete with railroads and put the transportation rates down, which are going to be better to regulate railroad rates than any interstate commission ever devised by man, and a thousand per cent better than any State railroad commission ever devised by man.

Ah, Senators, give me competition on the unmonopolized and unmonopolizable waterways of this land and I will show you cheap freights. Give me a place where there is no competition by water, where there is one railroad doing the business, and I will show you high rates; I do not care how many State railroad commissions you may have nor how many Interstate Commerce Commissions you may have.

Let me cite you one little case in my own State: The town of Ponchatoula, La., is 49 miles from New Orleans on the line of the Illinois Central Railway. The freight charge on sugar in carload lots from New Orleans to Ponchatoula is 17 cents per hundred pounds to go 49 miles. That same railroad then rushes on and on to the city of Cairo, Ill., 566 miles away, and the freight on sugar in carload lots to Cairo, 566 miles distant, is 17 cents per hundred pounds. Seventeen cents to go to Ponchatoula, an interior country town, away off from watercourses, where there is no possible competition by water, and 17 cents per hundred pounds to carry the same sugar 566 miles to Cairo, which is on the Mississippi River and the Ohio.

That is an actual instance, and, Senators, I could cite you hundreds of them; and yet there are men now within the sound of my voice who would destroy all water improvement, who are unwilling to have even the great Mississippi and the great Ohio and the great Missouri Rivers improved, well knowing that when improved they are going to be the greatest possible freight regulators and the greatest possible freight carriers.

Why do we not do it? Echo answers, "Why?" I do not know; but I know that the French are a mighty wise people, and I know they have a proverb which says, "Cherchez la femme"—"Find the woman." Who is the "woman" in all this opposition to the improvement of rivers and harbors? Who are the parties interested in preventing the development of rivals to railroads, if it be not the railroads themselves? They are going to be the beneficiaries if you do not improve these waterways.

If you kill the Ohio, the Mississippi, the Missouri, the Tennessee, the Cumberland, the Arkansas, the Red, the Brazos, the Trinity, the Black Warrior, the James, the Hudson, and the Columbia—all of these rivers—destroy them for commerce, who will be the beneficiary? Will it be the American people? Oh, no. Will it be the people who have to pay the money used in improving these rivers? Oh, no. It will be the railroads, which will then be able to charge much higher freights than they can charge now, because you can not successfully regulate them by your Interstate Commerce Commission. We have tried it and tried it and tried it, and so far we have failed. I for one want to keep on trying, and I hope the Senators who are so opposed to improvements for rivers and harbors will assist in regulating the railroads in the charges that they make to the people of this country.

One might just as well deny the accuracy of the multiplication table as to deny that the actual cost of moving freight by water is less than the cost of moving it by rail. Tables derived from actual experiments, which may be found in any engineer's handbook, show that on a fairly level road and at a speed of about 3 miles an hour a horse can pull about 2 tons; on a level railway it can pull about 15 tons; and on a canal, in a boat adapted to the depth and width of the channel, it can pull about 90 tons.

In another case the experiments were directed to ascertaining the amount of labor that a horse of average strength is capable of performing permanently without injury at different speeds on canal, railroad, and turnpike. It was found that at a speed of 2½ miles per hour it could work 11½ hours a day, and the useful effect, based upon the number of tons drawn 1 mile, was 14 by turnpike, 115 on a railroad, and 520 on a canal.

It is thus seen that, as compared with haulage by water, from 4 to 6 times the energy is required in hauling goods by rail and 30 to 50 times more force is expended in hauling it by road, which is true, of course, whether the motive power be a horse or an engine.

This statement, of course, refers only to the actual movement of freight. It is undoubtedly true that cases can be found where, because of lack of terminal facilities, the cost of loading and unloading is so high that the advantage due to the lower cost of movement is largely or entirely lost.

It should also be pointed out that the cost of transportation by water decreases very rapidly with increased width and depth of the channel available and with the increased size of boats thus rendered possible. It is this principle which underlies the enormous increase in the size of lake and ocean steamers in recent years and the enlargements of inland waterways which have been carried out by European governments. It is said that within reasonable limits the capacity of a navigable channel, it being understood that there must always be a proper relation between the width and the depth, increases as the cube of the depth; that is to say, a channel 10 feet deep is not simply twice as good as one 5 feet deep, but eight times as good, while a channel 15 feet deep would not be three times but nine times as efficient.

While it is undoubtedly true that movement by water is far cheaper than movement by rail, it is equally true that in the absence of protection by law railways can crush out water competition and destroy boat lines.

If you could put a railway alongside of a waterway, serving the same points and having no connection with any other railway, there is no question that the waterway would be able to successfully compete with the railway not only in the carriage of bulky commodities but in the carriage of a large part of the total traffic; but when a waterway is in competition with a railway at every point, while the railway is in competition with the waterway at only a few points, the railway can readily afford to put its rates so low at the points where it competes with the waterway as to drive the boats into bankruptcy, because the railway can charge rates sufficiently high on the much greater portion of its lines not subject to water competition to far more than recoup itself for the losses incurred in meeting such competition. This is exactly what has been done in the United States, and under existing law the railways are still free to make and do make rates low enough at water competitive points to make it difficult, if not impossible, to run boat lines profitably.

As soon as railway systems attained a large development in Europe traffic fell off on the waterways, and as the competition became more intense disappeared entirely on some of them. After a time, however, it was found, first, that railways alone could not handle all the traffic that needed to be carried; and, second, that the needs of industry could be met only by rates which were below the cost of railway operation.

Mr. Frank H. Mason, former United States consul general at Berlin, says:

"German statesmanship was among the first to foresee that the time would come when railways having reached their maximum extension and efficiency there would remain a vast surplus of coarse raw materials—coal, ores, timber, stone, and crude metals—which could be economically carried long distances only by water transportation, and that in a fully developed national system the proper rôle of railroads would be to carry passengers and the higher classes of merchandise manufactured from the raw staples that the waterways had brought to their doors."

In the report on the waterways of France, Germany, Belgium, and Holland, made by the distinguished engineer, W. H. Lindley, to the British Royal Commission on Canals and Waterways (see commission's report, vol. 6, p. 57), it is said:

"On the introduction of railways Germany passed through the same experience as other countries. For a long period the waterways lost their importance for the development of the traffic of the country."

"Renewed attention began to be paid to this means of transport about the middle of the seventies: Firstly, because water carriage offered great advantages for many purposes of transport and for many specially situated centers of industrial activity and consumption; secondly, because the opinion gained more and more ground that the railways would be unable to cope with the great development of the traffic of the country, requiring the transport of goods in bulk; thirdly, because these goods could be transported more economically and cheaply by water; and, lastly, because the construction of both systems of carriage would tend to create and assure more favorable conditions for the development of the country.

"This movement led to a progressive development in the character and importance of the works for improving the conditions on the navigable waterways, and to a gradual but very considerable increase of the expenditure thereon."

After naming a number of the more important new works, Mr. Lindley adds:

"Parallel with these new works the existing works were improved as regards alignment, depth and width of channel, and size of locks. The object was to increase the carrying power of existing waterways from the estuaries of the rivers and from industrial areas to the large towns or districts forming centers of consumption, and by the construction of new lines to give cheap means of transport to important parts of the Empire for their requirements and for their products."

In Document No. 19, National Waterways Commission, Mr. A. M. Thackara, United States consul general at Berlin, says:

"Germany is fully alive to the fact that transportation facilities are the very foundation of the industrial prosperity of any country and appreciates the advantage of a complete and unified system of internal transport, both by land and water."

The largest amount of railway mileage in the world under one general control is found in Germany, and the largest mileage actually under one administrative head is the combined Prussian-Hessian railway system. A much larger share of the total revenue of the Prussian Government is derived from the operation of its railways than from any other source, and yet we find Prussia spending hundreds of millions of dollars on the construction of waterways which come into direct competition with the State-owned railways.

In the report of Consul General Thackara above referred to, page 65, it is said:

"Prussia is expending vast sums annually in improving and developing her waterways and thus virtually helping the competitors of her railway systems. The policy, however, is a far-sighted one, as land is reclaimed by drainage, fields are protected against floods and rendered fertile by irrigation, enhancing their taxable value, and thus increasing the revenues from taxation. The industries are encouraged by enabling industrial plants to be erected on what otherwise would be unavailable sites, with cheap water transport for raw materials and good rail connection for the distribution of the finished products, thus increasing the traffic on the railways. The welfare of the people as a whole is fostered and the vitality of the nation improved."

On pages 64 and 65 of the report already mentioned Consul General Thackara says:

"While there is active competition between the German railroads and waterways, the relations are friendly. * * * There is no legislation regulating the relations between rail and inland waterway systems of transportation; neither is there any governmental restriction on the lowering of their rates in competition with water rates."

Railway rates in Germany, however, are made by a governmental board, and, as has already been pointed out, this board acts under the general policy of the Government, which recognizes the fact that both railways and waterways are essential if industry and commerce are to reach their highest possible development.

J. Ellis Barker, in his book entitled "Modern Germany; Her Political and Economic Problems," page 420, says:

"If it were not for the existence of the German waterways, the German industries would certainly not be in the flourishing condition in which they are now. * * * Certain valuable products and by-products of the German mines and ironworks and the more bulky products of the chemical industries of Germany can, according to Maj. Kurs, who is a leading authority on inland navigation in Germany, only be sold in Germany and abroad owing to the cheapness of transport by water, and in many cases the profit is cut so fine that an increase of the freight charges by about one-fiftieth of a penny per ton-mile would inevitably kill important industries, which it seems are at present killing the industries of countries competing with Germany. Thus, Germany's industrial success is no doubt due to a very large extent to the immense assistance which she receives from her waterways."

On pages 429 and 430 he adds:

"A few years ago a statement was published, according to which the two Provinces of Rhenish Prussia and Westphalia, which cover but 15 per cent of the German territory, and which possess 29 per cent of the population of Germany, consumed no less than 71 per cent of the coal used in that country; they produced 81 per cent of the iron and 86 per cent of the steel made in Germany and they kept 83 per cent of the German spindles running. * * * If we inquire why this district, which by nature is so little favored compared with Great Britain, where harbors, excellent coal, iron, and manufacturing towns are found in the closest proximity, is the most strenuous, the most successful, and the most dangerous competitor to those British industries which are so greatly favored by nature, we find that the industrial success of the Rhenish-Westphalia district would have been impossible had it not been for the cheap carriage of goods afforded by the Rhine."

In the 30 years from 1875 to 1905 the traffic on the waterways of Germany increased from 1,798,000,000 to 9,300,000,000 ton-miles, or 417 per cent.

During the same time the traffic on the German railways increased from 6,758,000,000 to 27,652,000,000 ton-miles, or 309 per cent.

In the meantime the railway mileage had been considerably more than doubled, while the waterway mileage had increased but little, although the waterways had been enlarged and made more efficient.

The importance of water transportation in Germany is shown by the fact that at several of the largest inland cities the receipts and shipments by water are practically as large as those by rail. Since 1885 the waterways focusing at Berlin, which are practically all canals, have carried from 40 to 50 per cent of the total receipts and shipments, it being only in recent years that the receipts by rail have exceeded those by water. (Paul Goehs, Berlin als Binnenschiffahrts-Platz. In Staats- und Social-Wissenschaft Forschungen Heft, 147, 1910, p. 111.) Quoted in final report of the National Waterways Commission, page 481.

At the ocean ports of Germany the receipts and shipments by river are much larger than those by rail. For instance, in Hamburg, in 1908, the receipts by rail were 3,357,477 tons; the shipments, 1,879,246; a total of 5,236,723 tons.

In the same year the receipts by river were 3,082,776 tons, and the shipments by river were 5,522,724 tons, a total of 8,605,500 tons.

There is a similar condition of facts at Amsterdam and Rotterdam, which, while they are located in Holland, depend largely on the Rhine and other German waterways for their exports and imports. At Rotterdam from two-thirds to four-fifths of the entire commerce is interchanged between ocean steamers and canal and river barges without touching a dock at all.

During the debate on the last river and harbor bill the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] criticized the building of canals to connect great bodies of navigable water along the Atlantic Coast, asking why the ocean should not be used, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] said: "We have got to an age where the American people, at least, are on wheels; and you can not supplant the automobile and the railway car with anything like an antiquated canal boat or anything else that you can develop on our rivers. * * * Nobody would tolerate nowadays a freight shipment by a canal boat."

It is a curious coincidence that just at the time these utterances were being made in the Senate of the United States a number of firms in Philadelphia were putting the finishing touches on a line of steam canal boats to run between that city and New York, going by way of the Delaware River and the Delaware and Raritan Canal. This canal was completed in 1838 and can be used only by boats with a draft of about 7 feet and a width of 23 feet. It is a type of canal that nobody would think of building to-day. It should be noted that the Pennsylvania Railroad has four tracks in its main line from Philadelphia to New York, and one or two tracks in the parallel line running from Camden across the river from Philadelphia on the easterly side of the river. The Baltimore & Ohio road has at least two tracks—I think there are three—and there are other lines a trifle longer, but still useful and actually used for freight service between the two cities.

In addition there is a splendid channel in the Delaware River, and boats of every size, from tugs to great ocean-going steamers, can go down the river from Philadelphia and by the ocean to New York.

With all these facilities at their command these firms in Philadelphia and Camden found it to their interest to put on a line, which began service during the last week in May, consisting at first of four steam canal-boats of 125 tons capacity each, to which two more have since been added.

In many instances water transportation is sought because it is cheaper than transportation by rail, but in this case the "Blue B Line," as it is called, has adopted the classification and the tariff of the railroads entire. Everything that is carried is carried exactly at the same rate that the railroads charge. The point is that it takes anywhere from 3 to 10 days to get goods from one city to the other by rail, while by the barge line, running through an out-of-date canal, goods leaving either city at 4 o'clock in the afternoon are delivered in the other before noon on the following day. Among the firms backing the new enterprise are Miller Bros. Lock Co., Henry Disston & Sons (Inc.), the great saw manufacturers, and the Victor Talking Machine Co., no one of which can properly be characterized as "nobody."

In spite of the difficulties in the way of operation through the Erie Canal, because of the construction of the new barge canal, a line called the "Follette Line" is operating between New York and Buffalo, as it certainly did last year, and I think for some time previously, connecting with lake steamers, which make a through route to Cleveland and Detroit. The State of New York is spending more than $150,000,000 on the new barge canal, and the prospect for any return upon the investment is poor, indeed, if "nobody" will accept a shipment of goods in a canal boat. My judgment is that the new canal when finished will develop a great traffic to the immense advantage, not only of the State and city of New York, but to the State represented by the Senator from Ohio, and all the States bordering upon the Great Lakes. Furthermore, no one is trying to "supplant" either railroads or motor trucks—we want to supplement them.

The Senator from Ohio also said that "this wonderful land of ours is developed by railroads beyond any other nation on the face of the earth." * * * My recollection is that we have in this country five times the mileage, in proportion to population, that Europe has with its many government-owned railroads.

The Statistical Abstract of the United States states that the German Empire has 5.9 miles of railway per 10,000 inhabitants, while the United States has 25.6 miles, but that is not the only thing to be considered, for the same authority shows that the United States has 63.3 miles of railway per thousand square miles of territory, while the German Empire has almost exactly three times as much, or 189.3 miles.

In 1912, the last year for which complete statistics are available, the German Empire had 37,584 miles of railway, while the United States had 246,776 miles, or more than six times as much. It is a striking fact that on less than one-sixth of the mileage the German railways handled nearly as many tons of freight and nearly 740,000,000 more passengers than were handled on the railways of the United States, and the gross revenue per mile of line operated in that year was $11,534 in this country and $22,348 in Germany.

The claim has been made that freight rates per ton per mile are much higher in Germany than in the United States, but that is only apparently and not actually true. Ton-mile rates decrease with length of haul, and the most southerly point in Bavaria is only about as far from Hamburg as Pittsburgh is from New York. All freight hauls in Germany are short hauls compared to the great distances in the United States. In the next place, very much of the business which is carried by express companies in this country is carried by freight in Germany, some of it at double the regular rates, and some special fast service even at four times the regular rates, and these high rates for special service are all included when the German ton-mile rate is made up.

In 1905 the Prussian Government sent two commissioners, named Hoff and Schwabach, to this country to make a special study of our railroads, and, after an elaborate analysis of the relative services rendered by the railroads in the two countries, they said that for that year a true statement of the average freight rates would be 14.4 mills per ton-mile on the railroads of the United States and 9.5 mills per ton-mile on the railroads of Prussia.

Along with the constant boast that the average freight rate per ton per mile is lower in the United States than in Germany is the equally constant statement that our rates are too low and the railroads need more money. It is my judgment that if the United States should develop its waterways to the same extent that those of Germany have been developed we would find the same thing result, for the net returns on the German railroads, which are almost everywhere in direct competition with waterways, are very much larger than the net returns in this country. If the net returns from the German railroads from the time they were taken over by the States had been applied to paying the debt incurred in their purchase, that debt would long ago have been completely extinguished, leaving the whole magnificent railway system of the German Empire, with all its equipment, as an absolutely net asset. It is interesting to note, too, that if we take the German railways and waterways together, including all cost of operation and maintenance and interest on cost of construction, the net revenue makes a percentage considerably larger than has ever been paid by the railroads of the United States. In 1905 the combined railroads and waterways of Prussia earned more than 7 per cent net on cost of construction and maintenance. During the same year 37.16 per cent of American railway stocks paid no dividends and the remainder paid only 5.78 per cent—only 3.63 per cent on stock as a whole.

In the case of the barge line from Philadelphia to New York the end sought was not the cheapening of transportation, but prompt delivery of freight. Some time ago I called attention to the new line established by the Inland Navigation Co. between St. Louis and New Orleans, which is carrying almost entirely high-class freight and is delivering it not only in less time but for less money than is charged by the railroads between the same points.

A few days ago the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] made eloquent pleas for industrial preparedness in order that we might meet the competition for foreign trade that is expected when the present war in Europe comes to an end. The extraordinary rise in ocean freight rates since the war began has given a striking illustration of the way in which cost of transportation limits trade. On things which the warring nations could not get along without the high freight rates have been paid, but from American consuls in all parts of the world have come statements showing, first, the difficulty in getting goods carried at all; and, second, the impossibility of selling goods in the districts where they are stationed, because of the enormous increase in price due to high freight rates.

Many men have been killed, and it seems certain that many more will be killed before hostilities come to an end, but many men who are crippled will not be prevented from carrying on their skilled vocations, many others will have power to train and direct new workers, and one of the greatest revelations of the war has been the extent to which women can be employed in industries which were formerly given over to men, and the rapidity with which they develop skill for carrying on even the most delicate operations. No one who remembers the tremendous outburst of commercial activity which followed the close of the War between the States can expect anything else but a similar result in the nations of Europe now at war. The United States in 1865 had still a large portion of the continent to conquer and domestic trade absorbed practically all of our energies. To the nations in Europe the regaining of the foreign commerce lost during the war is absolutely vital to their future existence, and we shall find that they will take advantage of every possible method to decrease the cost of production and the cost of distribution, both of which necessarily enter into the final selling price.

Under these circumstances there is no question that the wonderful transportation system of road, rail, and river which has been so extensively developed already will be used with the highest possible efficiency. The statesmen of Europe are already looking forward—if, indeed, they have ever stopped looking forward—to the conditions which they must meet when the war has closed; and it is a startling commentary on the different viewpoints of the statesmen in the two continents that we find the comparatively small disturbance of business which was produced in the United States at the outbreak of the war, and the expenditures proposed to be made on the Army and Navy in this country—which, while large in themselves, are utterly insignificant compared to the enormous expenditures now being made by the countries in Europe at war—given as reasons why we should stop the expenditure of money on the rivers and harbors of the United States, while in France and Germany, fighting for their very lives, they are not only maintaining and operating the waterways they already have but are actually building more.

We can never reach the completest development of all our resources unless we have available the cheapest possible transportation; and one might as well deny the correctness of the multiplication table as to deny that a completely improved and thoroughly equipped waterway can furnish transportation more cheaply than any other method known to man. There are enormous resources in the United States which will never be developed until they have water transportation available, because they can not stand the cost of transportation, either by road or by rail. And there is food for serious thought in the fact that during every one of the 20 years ending with 1913 the foreign commerce of Germany, a country much smaller than the United States, with less wealth, much less population, and vastly inferior resources, exceeded the foreign commerce of the United States by hundreds of millions of dollars, and the excess was steadily growing greater as the years went by.

In a country the farthest point of which from a great seaport is only as far as Pittsburgh is from New York the far-seeing statesmen of Germany have thought it wise to develop an intricate network of connecting waterways in order that cheap transportation should enable the development of the resources of every part of the Empire. In this country practically the whole interior of the continent is to-day dependent upon rail transportation, and the failure to develop our waterways will not only limit the total amount of foreign trade which we can secure in competition with nations better supplied with transportation facilities but will have a tendency to concentrate all manufacturing for export at points on or near the seacoast to the detriment of the interior of the country.

It is a curious fact that the State of Iowa is the only one of the States of the Union which showed an actual decrease in population at the last census; and, as I view it, if the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], who has so persistently fought appropriations for rivers and harbors, would study the situation carefully he would see that the future industrial development of his State will be vitally affected by the improvement and use, or the failure to improve and use, the waterways which run from the borders of his State to the waters of the seas.

On May 29 Senator KENYON said (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 10102):

"We are making appropriations for streams not over 1 foot in depth."

This is not a fair statement of the facts. It is true that some of the streams being appropriated for are not over 1 foot in depth during the low-water period, which in some instances lasts for four or five months, but those same streams have a fair navigable depth for seven to eight months of the year, and for that length of time are valuable commerce bearers for shallow-draft boats. These streams, as a rule, have a fairly good boating stage in the springtime, when the farmers are preparing for their crops, hauling fertilizer and spring supplies, and so forth, and in the fall when the crops are being marketed.

In considering this question let us remember that the Great Lakes, which have the most marvelous commerce on earth—fully 80,000,000 tons a year passing the Sault Ste. Marie and the Detroit Rivers—are closed by ice for about four months of every year, so that the ice on these waters is comparable to the stage of low water on some of the smaller streams which are criticized because of shallow depth for a few months of the dry season.

"You are about to vote from the Treasury in a time of great national stress and strain at least $20,000,000 in unjustifiable projects. You have had an opportunity to correct them; you would not even correct the worst of them."

Let us examine this statement in regard to $20,000,000 in unjustifiable projects and see how much truth there is in it.

Consideration of that bill—or, more properly speaking, the filibuster on it—lasted three weeks, and serious attempts were made to strike from the bill only seven items:

The Brazos River.....	$200,000
The Trinity River.....	250,000
Elk and Little Elk Rivers.....	8,500
Nanticoke River.....	5,000
Ouachita River.....	240,000
Arkansas River.....	234,700
Intercoastal Canal—Norfolk to Beaufort.....	800,000

A total of..... 1,738,200

These seven projects were fully discussed and were retained in the bill by aye-and-nay votes, after being thoroughly explained and understood by the Senate.

A bluff was made at several projects, but no discussion thereon was had, and no record vote taken thereon, as follows:

Ohio River.....	$5,000,000
Missouri River.....	1,350,000

A total of..... 6,350,000

The evils or bad features of these projects, aggregating $6,350,000, if any exists, were not pointed out, hence the projects were not defended in detail, though many champions were ready to explain them and prove their worthiness in every respect had any serious attempt been made to strike them from the bill, as was done in the cases of the seven projects above named, where record votes were taken.

In addition to the above-named projects, aggregating $8,228,200, sundry items were objected to by Senator SMOOT in a general manner, but no vote was asked thereon, and the specific bad features of which were not pointed out, to wit:

Sarasota Bay.....	$2,500
Saint Petersburg Harbor.....	14,500
Hillsboro Bay.....	325,000
Apalachicola Bay.....	10,000
Saint Johns River.....	332,000
Virginia Waterway.....	1,000
Meherrin River.....	2,500
Fishing Creek.....	1,000
Bay River.....	1,000
Swift Creek.....	1,000
Cape Fear (above Wilmington).....	83,000
Cape Fear (below Wilmington).....	135,000
Flint River.....	60,000
James River.....	190,000
Rehoboth Bay.....	50,000

A total of..... 1,108,500

Which added to the $8,228,200 above gives a total of projects referred to by name as being devoid of merit of $9,336,700.

In addition, there was criticism of an item of $25,000 for the Red River between Fulton and the mouth of the Washita River, of $10,000 for a Government pier at the harbor of Lewes, Del., and of $25,000 for a harbor at Arcadia, in Michigan. Adding these items it gives us a grand total of $9,396,700.

Not even the wildest critics of this bill dared to say anything against the Ohio River, which carried a commerce in 1914 of 9,530,309 tons, valued at over $93,000,000, although the existing project for a 9-foot depth is not half finished, and the river is in a most unsatisfactory condition. We can surely deduct the Ohio, therefore, and that leaves $4,396,700 worth of so-called "unjustifiable" projects. I shall not discuss them all in detail, but shall mention four or five as an illustration of how wild the criticism of this bill has been.

For Hillsboro Bay the bill carries $325,000. Its commerce in 1914 was 1,318,749 tons, valued at $33,812,025. The term "unjustifiable" can certainly not be applied to such a commerce as that.

St. Johns River: Appropriation, $332,000; commerce in 1914 was 1,408,040 tons, valued at $52,707,535. That certainly looks "unjustifiable," does it not?

Cape Fear River, above and below Wilmington: Appropriation, $218,000; commerce in 1914 was 960,024 tons, valued at $31,506,417. How the term "unjustifiable" can be applied to this splendid commerce I can not see.

James River: Appropriation, $190,000; commerce in 1914 was 452,950 tons, valued at $32,813,455. That may be "unjustifiable," but it seems like a pretty good commerce to me.

Project.	Appropriation.	Commerce.	Value.
		Tons.
Apalachicola Bay.....	$10,000	129,775	$1,714,822
Bay River.....	1,000	16,017	376,983
Swift Creek.....	1,000	27,781	197,030
Meherrin River.....	2,500	20,056	1,550,025
Elk and Little Elk River.....	8,500	44,111	164,882
Nanticoke River.....	5,000	167,007	8,548,708
Coosa River.....	30,000	46,339	1,642,987
Santee, Wateree, and Congaree.....	55,000	61,719	1,629,910
Altamaha, Oconee, and Ocmulgee.....	78,000	169,611	4,890,000

The Brazos, the Trinity, and the Ouachita Rivers are being improved by means of locks and dams, and the work is in such an unfinished condition as to be of practically no value, and until completed very little commerce can be expected to develop, as the condition of these rivers is very bad for many months of each year. On the Ouachita there is a considerable commerce, which amounted to 70,619 tons in 1915, valued at $3,074,465, although the project is less than one-half finished.

On the Missouri River a promising business is developing through a boat line recently established at Kansas City, operating on the river from that city to St. Louis, which gives through bills of lading and provides for all terminal charges, transfer of freight from boat to rail, and vice versa.

A fair examination and criticism of every one of these projects, the only ones subjected to criticism during the three weeks' discussion of this bill, will show that there is merit in every one of them, and, while perhaps it might be advisable to discontinue work on several, it is very questionable whether the term "unjustifiable" can be applied to a single one of them. Certainly not to three-fourths of them in number and more than three-fourths in the amount being expended thereon.

Bear in mind that these criticized projects aggregate only $9,396,700, which is very different from the $20,000,000 "unjustifiable" projects referred to by Senator KENYON. To say the least, the critical Senator from Iowa was indulging in violent flights of fancy.

But it is so easy to criticize, so easy to pull down, and so hard to build up. If the Senator had devoted one-tenth of the time consumed by him in trying to destroy this bill in an earnest, sincere effort to find some better system, some wiser method of making appropriations for the absolutely necessary improvements of the Nation's waterways, it would have been so much better, and he might have accomplished something. A little boy with a sharp hatchet could in five minutes destroy the wonderful painting of the Battle of Lake Erie, which is the pride of our Capitol, but it would require years of labor of a great painter to reproduce it, and perhaps we could never find an artist to give us back that wonderful picture.

The present system of improving rivers and harbors may not be as perfect as could be devised, but it has been in existence for a long time; it was the system used by the Republicans during their 16 years of continuous power, and was brought to what they conceived to be a high stage of perfection by the ex-Senator from Ohio, Mr. Burton, when he was chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House. No material changes have been made in that system since the act of 1907, which Mr. Burton characterized as the most perfect piece of river and harbor legislation ever passed. The last three rivers and harbors bills—those of 1914, 1915, and the current year—were framed along exactly the same lines as during the Burton régime, and the recent act, as reported to the Senate by the Commerce Committee, carried 280 items, of which 210 items were carried in the act of 1907. In other words, the pending bill provides for a continuation of prosecution of work on 210 projects out of a total of 280 that have been under way for many years that were inherited by the present Democratic administration from their Republican predecessors. Many of these projects were left in such an unfinished condition that it was absolutely necessary to continue work thereon, while others required annual appropriations for maintenance.

There were very sharp criticisms of the river and harbor bills of 1914 and 1915, and, as a result of prolonged filibusters, it became necessary to adopt lump-sum appropriations, a method unsatisfactory to everyone, which merely provided for existing projects, but no new ones whatsoever, and did not permit of the businesslike, vigorous prosecution to completion of many important works then under way. During these debates there was no suggestion of any better method, and every one of the critics admitted the necessity of doing a certain amount of river and harbor work.

The critics of the present bill admitted that. The Kenyon-Sherman substitute proposed a lump-sum appropriation of $20,000,000, thereby admitting that the work must go on at least to the extent of $20,000,000, but confined and limited to old projects already under way, and without any discretion being vested in the engineers to take up new projects, many of which perhaps are more meritorious than the old ones.

I might understand the opponents of this measure if they had suggested a lump sum of $20,000,000, or $25,000,000, or $30,000,000, as they did suggest, if those sums were to have been placed in the hands of the Engineer Corps with full discretion to expend same on the waterways of this Nation, regardless of whether the projects had ever been adopted by Congress or not, and with full power and discretion to use same in any manner and for any projects, new or old, that seemed best to the Engineer Corps. Such a suggestion would at least have presented something new. Of course I should have opposed it, for I believe it is the province of Congress to decide whether or not a project should be adopted and money spent thereon, but our critics could offer no suggestion except a lump sum, tied hard and fast to old projects—the offspring of 16 years of Republicanism. They seemed to show a little interest in the progeny of their party in just wanting these old projects looked after, but wanting absolutely nothing done for new ones.

The Democratic Party tried to provide for a number of new and meritorious projects in the bills of 1914 and 1915, which were filibustered to death by Republican opposition. In the bill of this year, as it left the House, only one new project was carried, because the exigencies of the Treasury were considered so great that it was deemed not advisable to begin any new work at this time. The Senate committee added several new projects of great merit, which, in my opinion, strengthened the bill very materially, and two or three others were added during the debates on the bill.

On the whole, the measure is an excellent one. While there may be some defects in it, I know of nothing serious. I am convinced it is as free from error as any river and harbor bill ever enacted. I believe the system as good as can be devised, and it is certainly most unfortunate that so much prejudice has been aroused against a measure fraught with such great benefits.

I also ask to put in, as a part of my remarks, an article which I prepared for the American Academy of Political and Social Science. It was published in the Annals of that academy for March of this year. You perhaps are all familiar with this magazine. It is a very prominent one, published in Pennsylvania. The article is entitled "The high cost of the pork barrel." It is very apropos, and it is not long. I ask to insert that.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE HIGH COST OF THE PORK BARREL.

[By JOSEPH E. RANDELL, United States Senator from Louisiana.]

The term "pork barrel" has been so freely used in the press and various public addresses that it is well to understand its meaning before attempting to discuss it. In its general acceptance "pork," as applied to congressional legislation, means an appropriation by Congress for an unworthy purpose, that is not for the public good and useful to the Nation, but is for the private benefit of the Congressman who secures it, or for one or more of his constituents. The term conveys the idea that certain classes of legislation, such as pensions, public buildings, rivers and harbors, and some other bills, if not wholly reprehensible contain many improper items for objects which should have no place in acts of Congress. These bills are made to appear similar to the parable of the sower who got the cockle mixed with his wheat. Their wise provisions, which help the public and promote the general welfare, constitute the wheat and the selfish, unjust, and unwise items are the cockle, or "pork."

It has been observed that critics of "pork" always find it in other Congressmen's projects, never in their own. The appropriations for rivers, public buildings, and pensions in the district of Congressman A, the critic, are all right, in his opinion, and are without the slightest scent of "pork"; that smell exudes only from sums to be expended in the district of Congressman B. What a difference it makes whose ox is gored. In the press it is usually found that the severest critics of "pork"—especially river and harbor "pork," and more especially river "pork," since we seldom hear of harbor "pork"—are those publications closely allied to certain railroads which oppose river improvements because they fear water competition. The French say, "Cherchez la femme"—"find the woman." I have no doubt that when we "find the woman" in the case of most of these publicists, who see so many motives in the eyes of so-called "pork-barrel" Congressmen, it would not require glasses to discover railroad beams in their eyes.

SENATOR BURTON DENOUNCES CHARGE OF "PORK BARREL."

Ex-Senator Burton, of Ohio, who for 10 years was chairman of the Rivers and Harbor Committee of the House of Representatives, said before the convention of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress in December, 1909 (see convention proceedings, p. 106):

"My friends, the president of this congress will say to you that we have known no North, no South, no East, no West in the years we have been together. We have taken up projects according to the measure of their merit, and I can vouch that members of the committee in many instances have leaned over backward where their own localities were involved and have given closer attention to projects in other places. * * * You have had to meet the idea that there is a pork barrel somewhere. Whenever there is a man of superficial information on this subject or one who has had some project that has been turned down hard because it had to be turned down, that man begins to talk about the pork barrel. There has been no line of appropriations made by this Government more carefully guarded than appropriations for rivers and harbors. * * * I challenge anyone to cite an instance where that bill has ever been made up to gratify certain localities or to advance the interests of some Member of Congress in the House or Senate. * * * There has been no logrolling, no pork barrel, no regard for individual prospects or anything of the sort, no regard for any particular locality in the country."

What can I add to these words? Mr. Burton surely knew all about river and harbor legislation, and he had no motive to misrepresent facts.

As river and harbor legislation is the greatest sufferer from pork-barrel slanders, I will take that up first, and later give some attention to public buildings and pensions.

SLANDERS.

It is said of one of the famous French atheists, who despised Christianity with the utmost venom, that he told his followers, "Lie, lie, lie; some of your lies will stick." I sometimes wonder if this method is not taught by the enemies of river and harbor legislation, for it is hard to conceive otherwise how such baseless fabrications have been repeated again and again, until many well-disposed but ignorant people believe them to be true.

I have quoted above what ex-Senator Burton says about river and harbor "pork" and his indignant statement that "there has been no logrolling, no pork barrel, no regard for individual prospects, or anything of the sort, no regard for any particular locality in the country" in the preparation of river and harbor bills.

I was for 12 years a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives, and for the past 3 years have been on the Commerce Committee of the Senate, which has charge of river and harbor legislation. Moreover, this subject has been a hobby with me, and I have studied it closely and from every angle for the past 15 years; hence, I ought to be a fairly competent witness. Every word uttered by Senator Burton is true. The committees of Congress did their utmost to enact laws in regard to rivers and harbors that were fair, just, and beneficial to the public at large, regardless of individual Congressmen, or private interests. I do not pretend to say that no mistakes were made, for to "err is human," but I insist, for reasons that I will explain later, that fewer errors were made in the preparation and passage of river and harbor bills than in any class of legislation enacted by Congress. I deny with all the force of my being that there was any real "pork" in the river and harbor bills passed by Congress during the past 15 years, and defy anyone to prove the contrary. I know that appropriations for certain projects have been criticized and held up to scorn and ridicule, but it is so easy to make an assertion, and so hard to disprove a slander. We are prone to believe everything evil we hear. The rules of legal evidence say that he who asserts must prove, but how much proof does the ordinary man require to convince him that a plausible story about some man's dishonesty or some woman's lapse from virtue is true?

The charge of "pork" in river and harbor legislation in effect is that the prominent people who advocated the project, the United States engineers who recommended it, and the Members of Congress—especially the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and the Senate Committee on Commerce—are grafters; that they have looted the Treasury; that they have put their hands in a barrel and pulled money or "pork" which belonged to the public and used it for corrupt purposes.

If we analyze this charge, it appears unreasonable on its face. If we were to grant that the local people who urge the project on Congress because of selfish interest—for their communities, not for themselves personally—are corrupt, and that their influence with their own Senators and Representatives could induce these officials to favor the project, then surely the 10 United States engineers who must give it their approval before it has any standing before Congress have no motive for promoting a vicious project; and the congressional committees charged with the duty of studying and reporting on it to their colleagues in both Houses can have no reason or incentive for favoring a project which is bad and unworthy, as it does not affect them or their people.

SPLENDID SAFEGUARDS FOR WATERWAY APPROPRIATIONS.

No bills that come before Congress are better safeguarded than those making appropriations for waterways, and it is almost impossible to put through an unworthy project. Following is a brief statement of the steps preceding the adoption of a project; whether it be one of great general importance costing millions, or some obscure river or inlet of only local interest, the process is the same.

A bill is introduced in the House or Senate asking a survey of the proposed project, and, if thought worthy on prima facie showing, the survey is included in the next river and harbor bill. The Chief of Engineers then directs the United States engineer in charge of the locality, usually an officer with the rank of captain or major, to make a preliminary examination and report, showing feasibility, prospective cost and benefits, and every ascertainable fact. This report goes first to the colonel in charge of the division, then to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, composed of seven United States engineers of high rank, and finally to the Chief of Engineers. If the local engineer reports adversely, that usually settles it, and the matter is dropped, though occasionally he is overruled by his superiors. If the local engineer finds the project apparently worthy, he so reports, and his opinion, after most careful consideration by his superiors, is affirmed or disapproved.

Should the Chief of Engineers, in the light of all the facts and suggestions of the local engineer, the division engineer, and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, conclude that the project is worthy of an actual survey, it is ordered referred back to the local engineer. A survey party is then placed in the field and an elaborate survey is made to ascertain every fact bearing upon the project, including cost, commerce present and prospective, and everything helpful to Congress in reaching a final conclusion upon its merits and demerits. This survey usually requires several months, and, in the very important projects, one or more years, and no reasonable expense is spared to get all the facts. The report then goes to the division engineer, who attaches his views and forwards it to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors.

This board has offices in the city of Washington, and in addition to a careful review of the reports of the local and division engineers, it gives hearings, pro and con, to interested persons. Moreover, if the project is a costly one the board frequently examines it in person, as it did recently when the entire membership of seven colonels investigated the Missouri River below Kansas City. The findings of this board, accompanied by reports, evidence, maps, etc., then go to the Chief of Engineers, who renders a final decision, which is transmitted through the Secretary of War to Congress, and the whole record is published as a public document for all the world to see. And if the project is not regarded as worthy either by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors or the Chief of Engineers, it is not considered as having legislative status. In other words, Congress will not appropriate for waterway projects unless approved as above indicated, except in very rare cases, when the amount involved is quite small and Congress has conducted an independent investigation for itself.

Bear in mind that the United States engineers are the honor men of West Point, the pick and flower of the American Army; that many of the ablest and best men of our Republic, including the builders of the Panama Canal, have been United States engineers; that they have disbursed over three-fourths of a billion dollars on waterways with only one scandal—that at Savannah; that they hold office for life; that they are not interested personally in the localities where they serve for three or four years and then leave, never to return in most cases; that not only one engineer, but ten, must investigate and report in writing for publication upon a waterway project before Congress will consider it.

How would it be possible for anything smelling of "pork" or graft to run such a gantlet? The charge of "pork" in connection with river and harbor legislation is preposterous. It is made by enemies of waterway legislation who have no regard for truth.

River and harbor bills are not pork-barrel bills, but commerce builders.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS TEACH PATRIOTISM.

Appropriations for public buildings to be used by Congress and by the departments of the Government at Washington and for use as customhouses, courts, post offices, etc., throughout the Republic, have been sharply criticized, and the cry of "pork" frequently leveled at them. Perhaps a few of these buildings were not really needed and too great expense may have been incurred in constructing some of them. The scope of this article does not permit a detailed discussion, but let me suggest that all these buildings, without a single exception, were for the use and benefit of the general public and could not, except in the most indirect way, be of any advantage to private persons, though the Congressman who secured them received the plaudits of his constituents and in some instances obtained political rewards. These expenditures were all investments and the Government owns the buildings and other property in evidence thereof. Some were wise and returned large interest on their cost; others were not so good, but in the main they have turned out as well as average real estate investments.

As an instance of how substantially our Government usually builds, let me relate a personal experience at the city of San Francisco. Mrs. Ransdell and I visited its ruins a few months after the great earthquake and fire. We traveled for miles through a scene of awful desolation, with masses of every imaginable building material which fire could not consume scattered and twisted and gnarled in the most inextricable confusion. The splendid city hall, erected at a cost of $7,000,000 was completely destroyed. The only structures which withstood the shock of quake and fire were the United States post office and customhouse. They were somewhat injured, but business was being conducted in them, and everything near them was in ruins. I could not have believed this had I not seen it myself.

Let me emphasize one feature connected with public buildings that is often overlooked, and that is their great value as teachers of patriotism. In many interior towns, where the population is about four thousand and upward, public buildings are used for the local post office and Federal court. These buildings in the smaller places rarely cost over $50,000, but they are built in the best style of architecture and of the very best material. It is the most notable structure in the town and is the observed and admired of all observers. To look at it makes one proud he is an American citizen. The United States flag is always flying over it—an emblem of our National Union, power, and glory; our right to free speech and free conscience, and all that makes a government loved and honored by its people. In some localities the Stars and Stripes are seldom seen except on the staff of a public building, where they sing a continuous anthem in honor of our country and teach patriotism 365 days in every year.

Surely river and harbor and public building legislation is not fairly open to the charge of "pork," but the same can not be said of our pension bill.

THE PENSION ABUSES.

A discussion of the abuses of our pension system is a delicate and difficult matter. Patriotism is a virtue which is implanted deep in the American heart, and a leading attribute of patriotism is gratitude to those who have shed their blood in their country's defense—who heard and answered her appeal in time of direst need. No one, and certainly not I, would deprive any soldier who was disabled in the service of his country of a pension. Every dependent widow of a soldier who was killed or disabled while fighting for his native land should be pensioned. What I shall say is aimed not at our pension system, but at its abuses—abuses which have made the title "pensioner" appear more like a term of dishonor than a badge of glory.

Since the beginning of our Government we have expended $5,025,193,970 for pensions—a sum more than six times as great as all river and harbor appropriations during the same period, and two-thirds more than all Navy expenditures during that time. Of this colossal sum, all but $96,000,000, or $4,928,748,525, has been distributed since 1865.

A brief study of our annual pension appropriations is illuminating. After the Civil War our pension disbursements naturally increased as more and more names were placed on the rolls. In 1874 they had reached $30,000,000, and then the decline began; but then also began the period of artificial pension legislation of questionable propriety. Up to 1878 pensions were paid only to disabled soldiers and their dependents, but in 1879 Congress passed a law granting full arrears to all persons entitled to pensions, and our expenditures leaped, in two years, $20,000,000—from $37,000,000 in 1878 to $57,000,000 in 1880. This increase was so great that Congress then passed an amendment providing that the claim for arrears must have been filed prior to 1880. Through the payment of arrears our pension appropriations soared, and in 1888 had reached $82,000,000. In that year the limitation as to the time of filing a claim for arrears so far as widows were concerned was removed, and this opened the door to all kinds of fraud. The tempting prize of thousands of dollars of arrears was too much for numbers of "widows," many of whom were negroes, and there can be no doubt that many persons were beneficiaries of the Government's bounty who were not entitled to it.

AN ERA OF EXTRAVAGANCE.

Under the influence of this legislation and of "Corporal" Tanner, a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, who became pension commissioner at that time, and who is credited with the statement "God help the Treasury surplus when I get at it," our pension bill grew in two years to $109,000,000. In 1890 an act was passed pensioning every soldier who had served not less than 90 days in the Civil War, and was so disabled that he could not earn a living by manual labor, but the disability need not have arisen from war service, provided it was not caused by vicious habits. The act also pensioned widows of soldiers who had married before 1890, and provided that they need not prove that the soldier's death was due to causes brought on by the war. The result was that our pension disbursements skyrocketed $52,000,000 in three years, and reached $161,000,000 in 1893. The strong stand of President Cleveland checked this waste of public funds for a while, and the efforts of the Commissioner of Pensions under him, Mr. William Lochren, unearthed enormous frauds. Mr. Lochren dropped 2,266 names from the pension rolls, and reduced the ratings in 3,343 cases. Pension disbursements, under his administration and without any change in the law, fell from $161,000,000 to $143,000,000 in a single year.

To show how graft of all kinds had permeated our pension system, let me point out that in 1899 Commissioner of Pensions H. Clay Evans, after investigation, disqualified 24,662 of the registered pension attorneys, leaving only 18,431 to practice before the bureau.

It is impossible, however, to go into particulars. In 1907, 1908, and 1912 further pension legislation was passed, and now we have practically a service pension, as every veteran over 62 years of age, even though not disabled, is entitled to a pension. The War between the States is a memory of 50 years ago. Five years after the war, in 1870, there were 198,000 pensioners on the rolls; in 1915, half a century after the declaration of peace, there were 748,147 persons receiving Government aid, of whom 691,606 are Civil War pensioners. In 1870 our pension bill was $29,000,000; in 1915, it was $166,000,000; and bills have recently been introduced providing for larger and more pensions.

OUR PENSION DISBURSEMENTS LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Our pension disbursements in 1913 were $176,714,000—five times as much as France, seven times as much as Germany, ten times as much as Great Britain, and twenty-three times as much as Austria-Hungary. These four great European powers combined spent for pensions that year only $84,000,000, or less than one-half as much as the United States.

Let me repeat that every soldier who was disabled or whose health was impaired during the war, and his dependents after his death, should have a pension, but no one is entitled to Government aid simply because he enlisted for 90 days, even though he had never seen a battle field and had suffered no injuries whatsoever.

Now, what is the method of obtaining a pension? Let us assume that a man claims to have been disabled during the war and desires a pension. He files an application with the Pension Bureau, and if the War Department can give no information as to his disabilities he is requested to furnish evidence. This evidence is purely of an ex parte character, and consists of affidavits filed by the soldier, from comrades, officers in his regiment, etc., alleging that they knew personally of his injury. This was a fruitful source of fraud, especially some years ago. There was a natural tendency among the old soldiers to reciprocate with each other on the principle, "If I swear to his 'disability,' he will swear to mine." And every doubt is solved in favor of the old soldier.

SOME STRIKING ILLUSTRATIONS.

Two instances of "disability" will be instructive.

Mr. Charles D. Long, while serving actively as judge of the Supreme Court of Michigan, was drawing $72 per month for "total and permanent helplessness," though this pension was reduced in 1893 to $50 per month.

Gen. John C. Black in 1878 was pensioned at the rate of $100 per month by special act of Congress on the ground that he was "a physical wreck, maimed and diseased, incapable of any effort, and much of the time confined to his bed." Since then this "physical wreck" was Commissioner of Pensions for four years, served one term in Congress, and later was chairman of the Civil Service Commission for nine years, during all of which time he continued to draw his pension of $1,200 per year in addition to his salary of $5,000 as commissioner, $5,000 as Representative, and $4,500 as chairman of the Civil Service Commission. These are but two striking cases, though a great many similar ones could be cited.

THE MIGHTY PENSION GRIP.

Surely, if there is "pork" in any congressional legislation, it is in our pension bills. So skillfully distributed has been this form of Government bounty, and so closely akin to love of country is gratitude to the worthy veteran, that men's voices have been stifled when they should have been raised in protest against the abuses of our pension system. So-called "reformers" who attack river and harbor legislation dare not turn the searchlight of publicity upon the evils that have crept into our pension disbursements; they dare not call attention to the real "pork barrel," the pension bill, because many pensions, and more liberal pensions, are very near and dear to the 748,000 recipients of the Government's favor, and their relatives and friends, who are powerful at the polls.

Some idea of the importance of pension gratuities as purely financial propositions appears from the fact that in 1915 the amount paid in pensions to citizens of Ohio was $15,666,000; Pennsylvania, $15,275,000; New York, $13,791,000; Illinois, $11,409,000; Indiana, $10,096,000; Iowa, $5,621,000; and Wisconsin, $3,995,000. Let us compare this Ohio fifteen and a half million pension crop, which never has a bad year and costs its beneficiaries nothing, with the Louisiana sugar crop, worth about twenty to twenty-five millions gross per annum, which is very expensive to produce and is frequently the victim of bad seasons and adverse legislation. Is it any wonder that Members of Congress from Ohio are pension enthusiasts?

THE SPECIAL PENSION BILL EVIL.

But the story is not yet told. Our pension laws are liberal, very liberal: in fact, they practically give a service pension, and every surviving Civil War veteran is believed to be on the rolls. Liberal as are these laws, they do not include all who desire pensions, and covering these cases, special bills are introduced giving a pension to, or increasing the pension of, some individual. Sometimes the bill is to correct the military record of a deserter, and grant him an honorable discharge so that he may draw a pension under the existing law. Since 1861 Congress has allowed 47,398 pensions by means of special acts. Of these, 21,648, with an annual value of $6,640,722, are still on the pension roll. The Sixty-third Congress passed 5,061 private pension bills at an annual cost to the Government of $1,526,598.

These acts give pensions or increase of pensions to those who can not qualify under existing most liberal laws, because of lack of evidence as to service, desertion from the ranks, not sufficient "disability," or for some other reason. Some of these bills may be worthy, but an immense number of them are not. No safeguards are thrown around pension legislation; no investigation is made prior to the introduction of the bill, and its consideration by the pension committees of Congress must necessarily be brief and cursory, when we recall that 5,061 bills of this character were passed last Congress, and, of course, this is only part of the number introduced and investigated by the committees. It is a physical impossibility to give each of these special bills a calm, judicial investigation in order to ascertain the real facts. They are of necessity put through in a hurry.

An examination of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that among the chief offenders in the introduction of these special pension bills are some of those "reformers" who have recently been so blatantly denouncing river and harbor appropriations. In one instance, three-fourths of all the bills introduced during the Sixty-third Congress by a Member who was very bitter in his criticism of river and harbor "pork" were special pension bills.

PENSION EXTRAVAGANCE SHOULD STOP.

Our Civil War pension laws are written upon our statute books, and probably the greater part of the disbursements caused by them have already been made. Let us hope so at least. These legislative mistakes are part of our history. We can not correct them, but we can and should prevent the enactment of similar legislation in regard to wars since the Civil War. There are now 28,912 Spanish War pensioners on our rolls, and they received last year $3,851,701. This is entirely legitimate, for it is only proper that the Republic should pension those who were disabled in its service and their dependents, and the dependents of those killed in its service, but we must beware of entering upon a career of artificial legislation for these veterans, such as characterized the period after the Civil War.

PENSIONS CONFER ONLY PRIVATE BENEFIT.

Let us remember that the $5,025,193,970 paid for pensions have been mere expenditures; money which we have had to pay out and from which no dividends have ever been derived. These vast sums have been all outgo and no income. Pension bills are in their nature private bills. They give money to private individuals, and no one is directly benefited by a pension except the party receiving it.

On the contrary, bills for public buildings and rivers and harbors are public bills—they disburse money for public purposes and the public gets the benefit. The Government, like a vast business corporation, must have houses in which to conduct its affairs. It must build or rent offices, post offices, courthouses, customhouses, etc., and these structures, for which in all $363,967,276 has been appropriated, are the property of the Government—they belong to and benefit all the people, and not any particular individual. They are public assets, and in most cases have earned fair interest on their cost.

SPLENDID WATERWAY INVESTMENTS.

The $800,000,000 appropriated for waterways since the American Revolution are investments which have yielded, and will continue to yield, in their great aids to transportation perpetual dividends to the American people. For the stupendous sum of more than $5,000,000,000 lavished on pensions we have nothing, absolutely nothing, of tangible public benefit to show. That money is gone, and gone forever. For our river and harbor expenditures, however, we have, and posterity will have for all time, our splendid improved harbors, great marts of trade, where giant ships dock at their wharves; our Great Lakes, vast inland seas, where a hundred million has been spent, and which carry the largest and cheapest volume of water-borne freight on earth; and our rivers, like the Ohio and the Black Warrior, heretofore almost unnavigable, but now being improved by locks and dams and made great arteries of commerce. These are permanent public works which help to make our country the richest and best on the face of the earth. Improved waterways are freight carriers and rate regulators; they are commerce builders; they are creators of prosperity. There are only three cities in the United States of over 150,000 population, and none reach 250,000, which are not on navigable water. Practically every metropolis of ancient and modern times, was located on a navigable stream or the ocean. Improved waterways make quick, convenient, and economical transportation, and such transportation of products is essential to national prosperity.

To summarize, I am convinced that charges of pork barrel, as applied to rivers and harbors and public buildings, are in the main unjust and slanderous; but I can not say the same about pensions. And not only has pension legislation been enormously expensive in actual outlay of money, but I fear its advocates have done much to demoralize American politics and to lower the high standard in which Congress should be held. The cost of the pension pork barrel has been very high.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the hit bird generally flutters; and evidently Gov. Hughes, in every speech that he has so far made on his campaign tour, has hit some Democratic bird, for we see them fluttering in the Senate every day, and we hear of their fluttering in the House. I hope the same practice will continue in the future that has been happening in the Senate in the last few days. We have had an exhibition on the floor of the Senate for the last three days, or I might say ever since Gov. Hughes entered on his campaign, that is most refreshing; and it certainly must show the American people that what Gov. Hughes is saying is hurting our Democratic brethren, or they would not undertake to answer his speeches as they have. I have felt sorry for those assuming to be critics.

But that is not what I rose for, Mr. President. I promised the Senator that I would call attention to some of the rivers that I referred to in asking him a question for which he so kindly yielded to me. In a speech made by me on May 20 of this year I called attention to the estimated cost to the Government for improving waterways to float actual commerce on a few projects that were provided for in the rivers and harbors appropriation bill. Of course, in that estimate that I referred to I did not include logs, for there is no need of classifying logs as commerce. If there is water enough for a log to float in, it will run down the river without any river improvement or without loading it on a boat. But I will admit, Mr. President, that there have been appropriations made in the river and harbor bills where there was no water in the so-called river or creek.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to ask the Senator to name one of them. I deny that statement absolutely.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the time now—

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask the Senator if he will not yield to me for a question.

Mr. SMOOT. No; Mr. President, I refuse to yield to an interruption in any such spirit as the Senator manifests at this time.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator name one of those streams?

Mr. SMOOT. I refuse to yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah refuses to yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator can not do it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that I can do it, as I did do when the rivers and harbors bill was under consideration.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish he would. He can not do it.

Mr. SMOOT. On the Ohio River the freight carried, taking the appropriations that have been made for the river and figuring 4 per cent interest on the same, cost the Government of the United States $5 a ton. Of course that means excluding the soft coal. In the case of the lower Mississippi it cost the Government $35 a ton; the Arkansas, nearly $20 a ton; on the Hennepin Canal, $36.75 a ton; on the Missouri, a little over $40 a ton; Muscle Shoals, $41 a ton; the Aransas Pass Canal, $80 a ton; the Brazos, $80 a ton; the Red River, $96 a ton; the proposed Muscle Shoals project, $96 a ton; and the Big Sandy-Kentucky project, $350 a ton.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator how he makes that calculation?

Mr. SMOOT. I take the appropriations that have been made for these rivers—

Mr. FLETCHER. For all time?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, certainly; just the same as anybody else would make an investment in a business. It is for all that the Government has expended.

Mr. FLETCHER. And then count the commerce for the last year?

Mr. SMOOT. I count the commerce for the last year, of course, because the commerce next year will be appropriated for the same as for this year. In fact, Mr. President, the commerce upon the rivers complained of has declined; in the case of some of them it has declined 50 per cent within the last four years. This is one reason why former Senator Burton changed his mind on such projects.

Mr. FLETCHER. And in the Senator's calculation he has not taken into consideration the commerce for all the years since the project was started?

Mr. SMOOT. Every year there has been an appropriation, and I have taken into consideration the commerce of each year with the appropriation that has been made; and I know that the Senator from Florida or the Senator from Louisiana would never put their money into such propositions as these. That is why this bill is called a pork-barrel bill. I believe in the improvement of the rivers and harbors of this country—I mean, the actual harbors and the actual rivers—and I have stated here numbers of times that I would prefer to see the appropriations increased rather than decreased upon such projects.

The Senator had a testimony meeting here this afternoon and called upon certain Senators to testify. Let us have the testimony now, Mr. President, of a Democrat, Mr. MCCLINTIC, of Oklahoma, and see what he says in relation to the bill to which the Senator has referred:

There has been spent over $800,000,000 on rivers and harbors throughout the United States, and it is pretty generally agreed that one-third of this amount has been wasted. Recently there was published an interesting article entitled "Fetching the Gulf to Dallas," which shows that more than $1,952,287 have been expended upon this project up to June 30, 1913. The article follows:

"An interesting exhibit in the 1914 catalogue of folios is the Trinity River in Texas. The plan is to make Dallas, 512 miles (by water) from the river's mouth, a seaport. The politicians and misguided business men behind the project propose to drown the deep baritone of bullfrogs on the Trinity's banks with the roar of steamboat whistles in midstream. But it is likely the frogs will be croaking for many years to come. The Trinity is being 'improved' by canalization—by open channel work and a system of locks and dams—in order to secure a 6-foot stage from Dallas to its mouth. In 1902 Congress appropriated $125,000 to start the work, and to June 30, 1913, $1,952,287 was appropriated for the job. It is estimated that $581,622 more will be required to complete the project. The present bill carries $155,000. Last year only 60,677 tons of freight were carried on the Trinity, and 44,863 tons of that was saw logs and cordwood."

Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate now to continue and read the balance of this article in regard to the Brazos and Old Washington and Waco, and so forth, but I want to call attention to the Beaufort Canal, which has an insignificant commerce. It receives a million dollars in the 1916 river and harbor appropriation bill. Millions are being squandered on this North Carolina scheme. Attention was called to it in the Senate. Did it do any good? None whatever—none whatever.

The Tennessee River carries $944,000 for another canalization scheme, which benefits no one but water-power owners, contractors, and dredgers. All the actual waterway commerce amounts to less than 2 per cent of that handled at Ashtabula, Ohio, and yet we have spent $11,000,000 on this wasteful scheme.

In the 1916 bill is $710,000 for the Cumberland River, which floats only about 50,000 tons of actual commerce annually, or about 1 per cent of that handled by the little harbor of Ashland, in my own State. Nearly $6,000,000 of Government money has been spent on the Cumberland in order to get that result.

The Arkansas, Ouachita, and Red Rivers receive about $1,000,000 in the 1916 bill, in addition to over $8,000,000 already spent by the Government. All the actual commerce on these three rivers combined does not amount to one-half of 1 per cent of that handled by either of the Chicago or Milwaukee Harbors.

The Trinity gets $250,000 and the Brazos $390,000 in this bill, or $640,000 for two streams that do not furnish a half-dozen trainloads of actual freight the year around. And we have spent nearly $4,000,000 developing a commerce that costs over $80 per ton to float on these dry rivers.

June 25, 1914, ex-Senator Burton made this statement:

There should be a careful reexamination of each of these waterways.

Speaking of the then river and harbor bill—and a policy adopted which squares with present conditions. The following are illustrations: On the Red River below Fulton, covering a distance of 475.4 miles, there was in the year 1912 a total tonnage of 44,967 tons. Of this amount, 42,640 tons were saw logs, of which the average haul was 131 miles, and lumber 1,100 tons. Of the balance of the freight, including lumber, amounting to 2,327 tons, part was carried 45 and part 80 miles. The total amount appropriated to date for this stream is $2,765,377. There was no appropriation in the pending bill as it came from the House, but by a proposed Senate amendment $100,000 has been inserted. The expense per ton to the United States Government for carrying this freight, including the lumber, can be approximately obtained if an allowance of 4 per cent is made on the amount appropriated to date and the prospective appropriation in the pending bill is added. This interest on the investment would amount to $110,735.08, and adding the $100,000 appropriated would make a total of $210,735.08. The cost per ton would be $4.68, or if the saw logs are excluded the cost per ton would be $90.56 and the cost per ton-mile $1.53.

Mr. President, there is no Republican Senator who objects to proper appropriations for rivers and harbors, and far be it from me from ever objecting to an appropriation for a river or harbor anywhere in the United States the improvement of which will be a benefit to the people of the United States.

The Senator can not point to me as being one who is interested in the river and harbor appropriation bill on account of appropriations that go to my own State. Utah has never had a dollar in a river and harbor bill, and never will have; yet, as far as I am concerned, I would be just as liberal as any other Senator possibly could be on projects that are worthy of improvement and development.

I tell the Senator now that there is never going to be another river and harbor appropriation bill made up as they have been in the past. They will not be constructed as they have been in the past. There will not be the trading that there has been in the past. There will never be the "I tickle you if you tickle me" as there has been in the past. There will not be the pork in them that there has been in the past. We only lacked one vote of defeating this last river and harbor appropriation bill in the Senate of the United States. I believe, Mr. President, as much as I believe that I am alive, that there never will be another river and harbor bill of the kind and character that passed at this session of Congress.

I do not say, Mr. President, that similar measures have not passed before. The policy was commenced years and years ago.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator how many navigable streams there are in the State of Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, none at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask for information.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course there are none, and I did not refer to it with any idea or with the intention of asking for an appropriation.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator mentioned that he never asked for an appropriation for Utah and seemed to imply that there was some virtue in it; and I wished to know if there were any such projects in his State.

Mr. SMOOT. I referred to it as a fact, that if I was in a position to approve of a project and advocate an appropriation with all my heart it would not be with the hope that I should also secure an appropriation that would go into my State. That is what I referred to, and I referred to it for no other reason.

I say, Mr. President, there are projects condemned by the Board of Engineers that have been appropriated for. Do we not remember one project in the last bill for which the engineers had not made an estimate? I objected to agreeing to the amendment that was offered to the bill in the Senate. It was requested that it should go over, but we found before that item was reached for a second consideration there was a favorable report from the engineers. Had conditions changed? Was there more water or less water between the date that it was asked to go over and the date that the report was made? It is just such things as these that we object to and that throw suspicion upon some of the reports that have been made.

I think Gov. Hughes has done what he ought to have done. He has served the interests of the American people by calling attention to the vicious practice of padding river and harbor bills.

Mr. President, I see it is time to conclude; but I want it distinctly understood that what I have said has not been inspired in any way by the speech made by the Senator from Louisiana, nor is it to be considered at all as an answer to his address. I do not care how often he or other Senators on the other side may attack the remarks made by Gov. Hughes. I think every time it is done it strengthens him. It shows, Mr. President, that what he is saying is hurting somebody.

I know the Senator from Louisiana has been interested in river and harbor bills. I know he has studied the question for years. I know his State is interested in the great Mississippi River. Mr. President, I have not referred to that river this afternoon in the few remarks I have made; but I know the Senator, if he had to put up the money for the Mississippi River, as a business proposition, judging by the commerce carried by that river, never would expend the amount which the Government is appropriating for it.

I should like, Mr. President, to support a project that would solve the problem of the Mississippi River overflows; but I do not believe that problem is going to be solved by the levee system. I believe that the waters have got to be controlled before they reach the river; that the floods have got to be prevented from flowing all at once into the river. I believe that some means will have to be devised for controlling the floods which arise when the hot sun begins to melt the ice and the snow along hundreds of streams which pour their contents at one time into the Mississippi River.

Mr. President, what I have said has been said because the Senator asked me to refer to some of the rivers the commerce on which was out of all proportion to the amount of investment the Government has made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 1351. An act providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and water holes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States, for rendering the same more readily accessible, and for the establishment of and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same;

S. 5466. An act to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry and desert-land entry, and to amend an act entitled "An act to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry," approved October 1, 1890;

S. 5976. An act to amend an act approved May 29, 1908, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the Baltimore & Washington Transit Co., of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia," approved June 8, 1896;

H. R. 14299. An act to amend section 33 of an act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911;

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 528).

Mr. SWANSON. I submit the conference report on House bill 15947, the naval appropriation bill, and ask that it be printed in the Record.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Virginia if there is a complete agreement?

Mr. SWANSON. There was not.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not a complete agreement?

Mr. SWANSON. There are several very important matters still in disagreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will lie on the table and be printed.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15947) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 7, 8, 9, 21, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 34, 35, 37, 38, 39, 44, 48, 63, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 134, 173, 176, 177, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 194, 195, 196, 197, 204, 206, 245, and 250.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 25, 26, 32, 33, 36, 42, 43, 45, 46, 50, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 64, 67, 70, 74, 78, 79, 81, 86, 87, 88, 91, 92, 101, 103, 104, 106, 107, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 167, 169, 170, 171, 172, 175, 178, 179, 180, 181, 192, 193, 199, 207, 208, 209, 228, 236, 239, 242, 243, 244, 246, 247, 248, and 249, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the first word of said amendment and in lieu thereof insert "Hereafter an"; and at the end of said amendment change the period to a semicolon and add the following: "and hereafter an officer of the line of the Navy or Marine Corps may be detailed as assistant to the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, who shall, under similar conditions, perform the duties of the Judge Advocate General"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Hereafter such amount may be expended annually for pay of drafting, technical, and inspection force from the several lump-sum appropriations in which specific authority for such expenditure is given, as the Secretary of the Navy may deem necessary within the limitation of appropriation provided for such service in said lump-sum appropriations at such rates of compensation as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe; and the Secretary of the Navy shall each year, in the annual estimates, report to Congress the number of persons so employed, their duties, and the amount paid to each."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of said amendment, after the word "the" and before the word "employment," insert "temporary"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Page 24 of the engrossed Senate amendments strike out all of lines 6 to 15, inclusive, and in lieu thereof insert the following: "All officers now in the Dental Corps (including the officers appointed for temporary service) appointed under the provisions of the act of August 22, 1912, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes,' and all officers now in active service appointed under the provisions of the act of March 4, 1913, who were eligible for appointment to the Dental Corps under the provisions of said act, shall be appointed dental surgeons in the Dental Corps without further examination and without regard to the age qualifications herein prescribed"; page 25 of the engrossed Senate amendments, lines 15 and 16, strike out the words "(except as may be necessary to adapt the said provisions to the Navy)"; page 26 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 3, strike out the words "Navy Medical Reserve Corps and the," and in lines 4, 5, 6, and 7, strike out the words "respectively in the Navy Medical Reserve Corps as established under the provisions of the act of August 22, 1912, and"; page 26 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 10, strike out the word "they" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "officers of the Medical Reserve Corps and officers of the Dental Reserve Corps"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out everything after the caption and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Hereafter the total number of commissioned officers of the active list of the line of the Navy, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be 4 per cent of the total authorized enlisted strength of the active list, exclusive of the Hospital Corps, prisoners undergoing sentence of discharge, enlisted men detailed for duty with the Naval Militia, and the Flying Corps: Provided, That the total number of commissioned line officers on the active list at any one time, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be distributed in the proportion of 1 of the grade of rear admiral to 4 in the grade of captain, to 7 in the grade of commander, to 14 in the grade of lieutenant commander, to 32½ in the grade of lieutenant, to 41½ in the grades of lieutenant (junior grade) and ensign, inclusive: Provided further, That lieutenants (junior grade) shall have had not less than three years' service in that grade before being eligible for promotion to the grade of lieutenant.

"The total authorized number of commissioned officers of the active list of the following staff corps, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be based on percentages of the total number of commissioned officers of the active list of the line of the Navy as follows:

"Pay Corps, 12 per cent; Construction Corps, 5 per cent; Corps of Civil Engineers, 2 per cent; and that the total authorized number of commissioned officers of the Medical Corps shall be sixty-five one hundredths of 1 per cent of the total authorized number of the officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, including midshipmen, Hospital Corps, prisoners undergoing sentence of discharge, enlisted men detailed for duty with the Naval Militia, and the Flying Corps. Officers of the lower grades of the Medical Corps, Pay Corps, Construction Corps, and Corps of Civil Engineers shall be advanced in rank up to and including the rank of lieutenant commander with the officers of the line with whom or next after whom they take precedence under existing law: Provided, That all assistant surgeons shall from date of their original appointment take rank and precedence with lieutenants (junior grade): Provided further, That to determine the authorized number of officers in the various grades and ranks of the line and of the staff corps as herein provided, computations shall be made by the Secretary of the Navy semi-annually, as of July 1 and January 1 of each year, and the resulting numbers in the various grades and ranks, as so computed, shall be held and considered for all purposes as the authorized number of officers in such various grades and ranks and shall not be varied between such dates.

"The total number of commissioned officers of the active list of the following mentioned staff corps at any one time, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be distributed in the various grades of the respective corps as follows:

"Medical Corps: One-half medical directors with the rank of rear admiral to 4 medical directors with the rank of captain, to 8 medical inspectors with the rank of commander, to 87½ in the grades below medical inspector: Provided, That hereafter appointees to the grade of assistant surgeon shall be between the ages of 21 and 32 at the time of appointment.

"Pay Corps: One-half pay directors with the rank of rear admiral to 4 pay directors with the rank of captain, to 8 pay inspectors with the rank of commander, to 87½ in the grades below pay inspector.

"Construction Corps: One-half naval constructors with the rank of rear admiral to 8½ naval constructors with the rank of captain, to 14 naval constructors with the rank of commander, to 77 naval constructors and assistant naval constructors with rank below commander: Provided, That vacancies in the Construction Corps shall be filled in the manner now prescribed by law, at such annual rate as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe: Provided further, That hereafter ensigns of not less than one year's service as such shall be eligible for transfer to the Construction Corps.

"Corps of Civil Engineers: One-half civil engineers with the rank of rear admiral to 5½ civil engineers with the rank of captain, to 14 civil engineers with the rank of commander, to 80 civil engineers and assistant civil engineers with the rank below commander.

"Hereafter no further appointments shall be made to the Corps of Professors of Mathematics, and that corps shall cease to exist upon the death, resignation, or dismissal of the officers now carried in that corps on the active and retired lists of the Navy.

"When there is an odd number of officers in the grade or rank of rear admiral in the line or in each corps, the lower division thereof shall include the excess in number, except where there is but one.

"Whenever a final fraction occurs in computing the authorized number of any corps, grade or rank in the naval service, the nearest whole number shall be regarded as the authorized number: Provided, That at least one officer shall be allowed in each grade or rank.

"For the purpose of determining the authorized number of officers in any grade or rank of the line or of the staff corps, there shall be excluded from consideration those officers carried by law as additional numbers, including staff officers heretofore permanently commissioned with the rank of rear admiral, and nothing contained herein shall be held to reduce below that heretofore authorized by law the number of officers in any grade or rank in the staff corps.

"Hereafter pay and allowances of officers in the upper half of the grade or rank of rear admiral, including the staff corps and including staff officers heretofore permanently commissioned with the rank of rear admiral, shall be that now allowed by law for the first nine rear admirals, and the pay and allowances of officers in the lower half of the grade or rank of rear admiral, including the staff corps, shall be that now allowed by law for the second nine rear admirals: Provided, That officers shall take rank in each staff corps according to the dates of commission in the several grades, excepting in cases where they have gained or lost numbers.

"Hereafter chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief machinists, chief carpenters, chief sailmakers, chief pharmacists, and chief pay clerks, on the active list with creditable records, shall, after six years from date of commission, receive the pay and allowances that are now or may hereafter be allowed a lieutenant (junior grade), United States Navy: Provided, That chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief machinists, chief carpenters, chief sailmakers, chief pharmacists, and chief pay clerks, on the active list with creditable records, shall, after 12 years from date of commission, receive the pay and allowances that are now or may hereafter be allowed a lieutenant, United States Navy.

"Warrant officers shall receive the same allowances of heat and light as are now or may hereafter be allowed an ensign, United States Navy.

"Warrant officers shall be allowed such leave of absence, with full pay, as is now or may hereafter be allowed other officers of the United States Navy.

"Hereafter all promotions to the grades of commander, captain, and rear admiral of the line of the Navy, including the promotion of those captains, commanders, and lieutenant commanders who are, or may be, carried on the Navy list as additional to the numbers of such grades, shall be by selection only from the next lower respective grade upon the recommendation of a board of naval officers as herein provided.

"The board shall consist of nine rear admirals on the active list of the line of the Navy not restricted by law to the performance of shore duty only and shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy and convened during the month of December of each year and as soon after the first day of the month as practicable.

"Each member of said board shall swear, or affirm, that he will, without prejudice or partiality, and having in view solely the special fitness of officers and the efficiency of the naval service, perform the duties imposed upon him as herein provided.

"The board shall be furnished by the Secretary of the Navy with the number of vacancies in the grades of rear admiral, captain, and commander, to be filled during the following calendar year, including the vacancies existing at the time of the convening of the board and those that will occur by operation of law from the date of convening until the end of the next calendar year, and with the names of all officers who are eligible for consideration for selection as herein authorized together with the record of each officer: Provided, That any officer eligible for consideration for selection shall have the right to forward through official channels at any time not later than 10 days after the convening of said board, a written communication inviting attention to any matter of record in the Navy Department concerning himself which he deems important in the consideration of his case: Provided, That such communication shall not contain any reflection upon the character, conduct, or motives of or criticism of any officer: Provided further, That no captains, commanders, or lieutenant commanders, who shall have had not less than four years' service in the grade in which he is serving on November 30 of the year of the convening of the board, shall be eligible for consideration by the board: Provided further, That the recommendation of the board in the case of officers of the former Engineer Corps who are restricted by law to the performance of shore duty only and in that of officers who may hereafter be assigned to engineering duty only, shall be based upon their comparative fitness for the duties prescribed for them by law. Upon promotion they shall be carried as additional numbers in grade.

"The board shall recommend for promotion a number of officers in each grade equal to the number of vacancies to be filled in the next higher grade during the following calendar year: Provided, That no officer shall be recommended for promotion unless he shall have received the recommendation of not less than six members of said board: Provided further, That the increase in the number of captains herein authorized shall be made at the rate of not more than 10 captains in any one year.

"The report of the board shall be in writing signed by all of the members and shall certify that the board has carefully considered the case of every officer eligible for consideration under the provisions of this law, and that in the opinion of at least six of the members, the officers therein recommended are the best fitted of all those under consideration to assume the duties of the next higher grade, except that the recommendation of the board in the case of officers of the former Engineer Corps who are restricted by law to the performance of shore duty only, and in that of officers who may hereafter be assigned to engineering duty only, shall be based upon their comparative fitness for the duties prescribed for them by law.

"The report of the board shall be submitted to the President for approval or disapproval. In case any officer or officers recommended by the board are not acceptable to the President, the board shall be informed of the name of such officer or officers, and shall recommend a number of officers equal to the number of those found not acceptable to the President and if necessary shall be reconvened for this purpose. When the report of the board shall have been approved by the President, the officers recommended therein shall be deemed eligible for selection and if promoted, shall take rank with one another in accordance with their seniority in the grade from which promoted: Provided, That any officers so selected shall prior to promotion be subject in all respects to the examinations prescribed by law for officers promoted by seniority, and in case of failure to pass the required professional examination such officer shall thereafter be ineligible for selection and promotion. And should any such officer fail to pass the required physical examination he shall not be considered, in the event of retirement, entitled to the rank of the next higher grade.

"On and after June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and twenty, no captain, commander, or lieutenant commander shall be promoted unless he has had not less than two years' actual sea service on sea-going ships in the grade in which serving or who is more than fifty-six, fifty, or forty-five years of age, respectively: Provided, That the qualifications of sea service shall not apply to officers restricted to the performance of engineering duty only: Provided further, That captains, commanders, and lieutenant commanders who become ineligible for promotion on account of age shall be retired on a percentage of pay equal to two and one-half per centum of their shore-duty pay for each year of service: Provided further, That the total retired pay shall not exceed seventy-five per centum of the shore-duty pay they were entitled to receive while on the active list.

"Except as herein otherwise provided, hereafter the age for retirement of all officers of the Navy shall be sixty-four years instead of sixty-two years as now prescribed by law.

"Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to reduce the rank, pay or allowances of any officer of the Navy or Marine Corps as now provided by law."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the word "commander"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment change the period to a comma and add the following: "less expenses of internment"; and the Senate agree to the same.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On August 9, 1916:

S. 3069. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved March 4, 1915.

On August 11, 1916:

S. 2500. An act authorizing the adjustment of rights of settlers on a part of the Navajo Indian Reservation in the State of Arizona; and

S. 4594. An act to validate certain declarations of intention to become citizens of the United States.

LAWS OF THE PHILIPPINES (S. DOC. NO. 529).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Philippines and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 22 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith a set of the laws enacted by the Third Philippine Legislature during its fourth session, from October 16, 1915, to February 4, 1916, inclusive, and its special session, from February 14 to 24, 1916, inclusive, together with certain laws enacted by the Philippine Commission. These acts and resolutions have not previously been transmitted to Congress and none of them has been printed in the United States.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1916.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate adjourn until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., Friday, August 11, 1916) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, August 12, 1916, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, August 11, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. George S. Duncan, D. D., of the Hermon Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Father of all, in Thee we live, move, and have our being, from Thee cometh down every good and perfect gift. Give us great grace as we engage in the manifold duties of this day. May every one of these Thy servants be guided by Thy divine spirit, so that all deliberations may be in harmony with Thy holy will, and so for the highest and best good of our beloved land. May we ever realize that righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people. Grant all these mercies, with the forgiveness of all our sins, which we ask in the name of Jesus Christ, Thy Son and our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, August 9, was read and approved.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. About what?

Mr. ANDERSON. About the present so-called prosperity in the country.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the present prosperity. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. The so-called prosperity.

The SPEAKER. On the present so-called prosperity, the gentleman calls it. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. About what?

Mr. KETTNER. About the administration in general, and the legislative program of the last two years.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD about the administration, and about legislation generally. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the Mexican situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the Mexican situation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL TUESDAY NEXT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I did not have an opportunity to confer with the gentleman before the House met. I think perhaps we can finish the Private Calendar to-day; but if we do not, I think we might possibly meet to-morrow long enough to go ahead with it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] has reported into the House a Senate bill authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls, and when that bill comes up for consideration he has a lot of amendments to offer on behalf of Members of the House. He informs me that there are plenty of these cannon, and that he is very anxious to be able to leave Washington soon, and that he would like very much to pass this bill before he goes away. I wondered if it would not be practicable to have a short session to-morrow.

Mr. KITCHIN. Suppose I make this suggestion: Tuesday when we meet we will take up the conference report on the naval appropriation bill. We will finish that in two or three hours, and in the balance of that day we might consider the gentleman's bill.

Mr. MANN. I think likely we will have other things Tuesday.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not anticipate anything else.

Mr. MANN. I hope nobody will think that I am unduly anxious to have the House meet to-morrow, but I like to accommodate the Members. I thought we might have a session to consider that bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Why not pass it to-day?

Mr. MANN. I do not think there will be time. Will not the gentleman let his request go until later in the day, when we can tell better? Of course, whatever the gentleman wants is satisfactory to me.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then let us adjourn until Tuesday and fix some time to pass that bill—take it up Tuesday after the naval bill.

Mr. MANN. I have stated the situation to the gentleman. I am not going to object.

Mr. KITCHIN. Suppose I couple with this the request that after the naval conference report is disposed of on Tuesday we take up the Private Calendar for unobjected bills?

Mr. MANN. I do not want to bother with the Private Calendar on Tuesday, when we have up an important bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will make the request. If necessary, I will change it afterward.

The SPEAKER. What is the request?

Mr. KITCHIN. The request is that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DAMS ACROSS ST. CROIX RIVER, ME.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I request the Speaker to lay before the House the bill (S. 5202) to authorize the maintenance and operation of dams across the St. Croix River at Baileyville and Grand Falls, Me., there being an identical House bill reported by the House committee and on the calendar.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 5202) to authorize the maintenance and operation of dams across the St. Croix River at Baileyville and Grand Falls, Me.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the St. Croix Water Power Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Maine, and its associate, the Spragues Falls Manufacturing Co. (Ltd.), a corporation organized under the laws of the Dominion of Canada, acting under the provisions of their respective charters, and through a misapprehension of, and without complying with, the existing laws governing the construction of dams across navigable waters, have constructed two dams for power-development purposes across the St. Croix River, a boundary stream between the United States and Canada, one of said dams being located at Baileyville and one at Grand Falls, in the State of Maine; and Whereas the dams as built do not injuriously affect the navigation of the St. Croix River, but provide ample facilities therefor, and the said companies desire to comply with the law and obtain the authority of Congress for the said constructions: Now therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the maintenance, use, and operation by the St. Croix Water Power Co. of the State of Maine, and the Spragues Falls Manufacturing Co. (Ltd.), of the Dominion of Canada, of the two dams built by the said companies, jointly, across the St. Croix River at Baileyville and Grand Falls, Me., and the said dams are hereby declared to be lawful structures: Provided, That the construction, maintenance, and operation of the said dams, and the diversion thereby of the waters of said river, shall have received the approval of the International Joint Commission, so far as such approval may be required under the provisions of the boundary-waters treaty between the United States and Great Britain ratified May 5, 1910, and proclaimed by the President of the United States May 13, 1910: And provided also, That the plans and locations of said dams shall receive the approval of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War.

Sec. 2. That the dams herein authorized, and their maintenance and operation, shall be subject to and in accordance with all the pertinent provisions of the laws of the United States now in force, or which may hereafter be enacted by Congress to regulate and govern the construction of dams across navigable waters.

Sec. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ADAMSON. I move to strike out the preamble.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia moves to strike out the preamble.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, the corresponding House bill (H. R. 13718) was ordered to lie on the table.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. This is private-claims day.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to pass over, without reading the titles, bills down to and including No. 166 on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to pass over without prejudice bills from 23 to 166, inclusive, on the Private Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNELLY. Reserving the right to object, I think there are some bills that have waited a long while. I have an interest in one that I would like to have considered, and I would not like to agree to that request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNELLY. I object.

CERTAIN CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES OF THE ENGINEER DEPARTMENT.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5079) for the relief of certain civilian employees of the Engineer Department at Large, United States Army.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 15522) to establish a national park service, and for other purposes, had agreed to the conference asked for by the House and had appointed Mr. MYERS, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. SMOOR as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 13984. An act granting to the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, a right of way through the United States military reservation at Fort Mifflin, Pa.; and

H. J. Res. 247. Joint resolution extending the provisions of the act approved June 16, 1898.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 12712. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 129. Joint resolution extending until October 15, 1918, the effective date of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bill (H. R. 15048) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bill (S. 6372) to authorize the counties of Baldwin and Mobile, Ala., their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Spanish River at or near the junction of Raft and Spanish Rivers.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bill (H. R. 15494) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the President had, on August 7, 1916, approved and signed bills of the following titles:

S. 5645. An act for the establishment of Noyes, in the State of Minnesota, as a port of entry and delivery for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise;

S. 6242. An act authorizing the counties of Nassau, Fla., and Charlton, Ga., to construct a bridge across the St. Marys River between Florida and Georgia; and

S. 6375. An act to authorize the changing of the name of the steamship Aroline.

OSCAR FROMMEL & BRO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2241) for the relief of Oscar Frommel & Bro.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will call the next bill.

DOMMICK TAHENY AND JOHN W. MORTIMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6167) for the relief of Dommick Taheny and John W. Mortimer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to pass the bill over without prejudice.

Mr. CONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, may I now withdraw the objection that I made to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. CONNELLY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to pass over without prejudice bills on the Private Calendar from No. 23 to No. 166, both inclusive. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EVERETT H. CORSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1358) for the relief of Everett H. Corson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LINTHICUM). Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask to have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Everett H. Corson, an employee of the Department of the Interior, General Land Office, the sum of $2,000, as full compensation for permanent injuries and damages received by the said Corson in an accident caused by a runaway, without any contributory negligence and while in the discharge of his official duties, on the 23 day of August, 1906; and an amount sufficient to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,237."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to pass over without prejudice the bills from Calendar No. 169 to Calendar No. 196, both inclusive.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to pass over without prejudice the bills from Calendar No. 169 to Calendar No. 196, both inclusive. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SARAH E. ELLIOTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3238) for the relief of Sarah E. Elliott.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask to have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,073, to be paid to Sarah E. Elliott, to compensate her for the death of her husband, James K. P. Elliott, accidentally killed on April 10, 1901, while in the discharge of his duty in the service of the Government of the United States in the Mare Island Navy Yard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CLARA KANE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R. 6406, granting the sum of $480 to Clara Kane, dependent parent, by reason of the death of William A. Yenser, late civil employee, killed as the result of an accident at Philadelphia Navy Yard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I object.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to pass over without prejudice the bills from Calendar No. 213 to Calendar No. 290, both inclusive.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to pass over without prejudice the bills from Calendar No. 213 to Calendar No. 290, both inclusive. Is there objection?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if it is his intention to object to these bills if they are called? Of course, if it is, there is no necessity to take up the time of the House in calling them.

Mr. MANN. I intend to object to them if called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

CHARLES E. KNICKERBOCKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R. 11843, for the relief of Charles E. Knickerbocker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to pass over without prejudice the bills from Calendar No. 294 to Calendar No. 305, both inclusive.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to pass over without prejudice the bills from Calendar No. 294 to Calendar No. 305. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he will permit me to ask unanimous consent to strike from the calendar Calendar No. 300, as that has been taken care of in a later report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no reason why that could not be done without getting unanimous consent.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will withdraw the objection and put it as an independent request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire where the call began this morning?

Mr. MANN. It began at the head of the calendar.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How many bills have been passed over by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All with the exception of two which have been passed and two objected to, down to Calendar No. 305. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House resolution 252, Private Calendar No. 300, be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent that House resolution No. 252 be laid on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

N. FERRO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1568) for the relief of N. Ferro.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to N. Ferro, Italian consular agent, of Gulfport, Miss., the sum of $872.96, to reimburse the Italian bark Fenice for expense incurred in repairing damages caused by collision with the United States barge No. 15.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF IOWA TRIBE OF INDIANS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4253) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and report to Congress on claims of the Iowa Tribe of Indians against the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LOYAL SHAWNEE AND ABSENTEE SHAWNEE INDIANS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1098) to adjust and settle the claims of the loyal Shawnee and loyal Absentee Shawnee Tribe of Indians, and report the same to Congress.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CLAIMS OF PONCA TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1094) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and report to Congress claims of the Ponca Tribe of Indians against the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

COWLITZ TRIBE OF INDIANS IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2458) authorizing the Cowlitz Tribe of Indians residing in the State of Washington to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOHN L. MOON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3539) for the relief of John L. Moon.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some information on the subject. I had not time to look this up. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what are the facts, as I have not had time to read the report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is one of those cases where we have had it discussed several times, I will say to the gentleman. A man arrested a post-office burglar—I will not say he arrested him, but he tried to arrest him—and the burglar was killed. If he had arrested him he would have received a reward of $200. There was absolute proof in the case that the burglar who was killed was really the burglar, because he had in his pocket things pertaining to the post office.

Mr. COX. The burglar was killed in resisting arrest; is that the fact?

Mr. MANN. Yes; and he had in his pocket things which were stolen from the post office.

Mr. COX. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. He not only had stamps but he had money.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John L. Moon, of Opelika, Lee County, Ala., the sum of $200, as a reward for services rendered in the apprehension of criminals in the burglary of the United States post office at Auburn, Ala.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ALMA PROVOST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14784) for the relief of Alma Provost.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask to have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of funds in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, to compensate Alma Provost, of Martin, S. Dak., for permanent bodily injuries sustained by her on the 1st day of February, 1915, at the Government Indian school at Rapid City, S. Dak., while engaged in work required of her under the direction of persons in charge of said school.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$540."

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would like to hear some explanation of this bill, as to how this injury occurred.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I will say to the gentleman this woman was employed as a laundress and she had her hand caught between some rollers and was very badly injured, so much so that the fingers of the hand had to be amputated. Mr. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Department of the Interior, says she is wholly incapacitated from performing work either as a seamstress or as a housekeeper. She was very competent in both lines of work before the injury.

Mr. CULLOP. What was her age?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I do not know, but it is stated that she has three children dependent upon her. The Secretary recommended that she be paid some $2,000, but the committee, in pursuance of its policy adopted in reference to such cases, cut it down to one year's salary, $540.

Mr. CULLOP. Was this injury the result of her own negligence or was it an accident that she could not avoid? How did it occur?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. It is true she failed to stop the machinery she was operating before making some adjustment, and it may be she was guilty in some small degree of contributory negligence, but notwithstanding that fact all the facts were brought before the Secretary, and, as I have just stated, he recommended the payment of $2,000.

Mr. CULLOP. Was she a new employee or some one who had been accustomed to working on these machines?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I do not know how long she had been employed there, but I can say to the gentleman we only allowed one year's salary, in pursuance to the policy laid down by the committee.

Mr. CULLOP. Of course, if this was the result of her own negligence she ought not to be allowed anything.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. The machinery was not properly guarded so she might be protected against injury, so there was some negligence on the part of the Government.

Mr. CULLOP. The Government failed to guard the machinery as required by law?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. That is so stated, I guess.

Mr. CULLOP. I can not object under those circumstances.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

S. E. BENNETT.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11745) for the relief of S. E. Bennett.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $133.60 to S. E. Bennett, veterinary inspector, to reimburse him for expenditures made by him under the direction of the chief clerk of the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman for some information as to why this expenditure was made on the part of these gentlemen.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, replying to the inquiry of the gentleman from Indiana, I will say that my colleague on the subcommittee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FLYNN] reported this bill, but I am more or less familiar with the facts from my recollection of the case. The claimant was an inspector in the foot-and-mouth epidemic last year in Illinois, and he was authorized to expend not to exceed $60 a month in expenses. The Secretary of Agriculture in a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Claims on April 8, 1916, says that this bill to the amount of $84.30, namely, for the two out of the three months, was all right, but he had not the papers which would show him at that time whether the third month's expenses, $49.30, were to be paid. But the gentleman from New York [Mr. FLYNN], my colleague, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McDERMOTT], who introduced the bill, found that the sum for the third month, namely, $49.30, was all right. So the bill was reported for the full amount as asked. It is recommended by the department.

Mr. CULLOP. The committee has determined after ascertaining the facts that the money was actually expended?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOP. If it was used for the purpose of exterminating the foot-and-mouth disease I shall certainly make no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will not let this bill go through here. My fundamental objection is that the departments all have lawyers, all of them have law clerks, and they are supposed to know what the law is. They all know what the appropriation is and the purpose for which the appropriation was made. Now, then, in violation of the law, surrounded by as good a legal authority as they are able to get, they spend more than the law allows, and then come to Congress and seek reimbursement.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is slightly in error. Mr. COX. I base my statement upon the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says that they spent more than the law allows. That is not the situation. Here is a case where, owing to the foot-and-mouth disease, the inspectors had to remain on duty a large share of the time from 5 o'clock in the morning until 11 o'clock at night. They were not permitted to go home. They were required to stay at the stockyards. They made application to the department for permission to expend not to exceed $60 a month for expenses. As a matter of fact, they had to sleep in the stockyards, or right in connection with the stockyards, and had to buy their meals there. The department erroneously issued an order authorizing them to incur these expenses.

Mr. COX. That is exactly my criticism.

Mr. MANN. That is all right. The department erroneously issued an order. They stayed there. They are not asking, by the way, for additional pay on account of overtime, like a great many others are. I do not know Dr. Bennett. He is not in the service now. But he was required to do the work, and the department made him the allowance, and he spent the money. He probably would not have spent the money and have done the work if they had not made the allowance, because he could not be required to stay on duty there from 5 o'clock in the morning until 11 at night at his own expense.

Now, the department may be blamed for making the erroneous order, but I would like to suggest to my friend from Indiana, after all, that we often pass a law and we do not know what it means. The Senate passes it and does not know what it means, and the department has examined it and does not know what it means, and, in fact, no one can find out until the Comptroller of the Treasury—

Mr. COX. Passes upon it.

Mr. MANN. Determines what it means, no matter what it was intended to mean.

Mr. COX. The gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. MANN. It may not be according to the intent, but he settles it.

Mr. COX. He has the last say about it.

Mr. MANN. And I do not think we ought to punish a poor employee of the Government.

Mr. COX. I do not want to punish anybody, but I think we ought to set an example.

Mr. CULLOP. Here is an extraordinary circumstance which the department did not foresee or contemplate when this law was passed. It was a serious situation for the country, the most serious situation in that regard that I have ever seen, and these men ought not to have been limited where it was necessary to make expenditure to any regulation that was holding them down to a small amount.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Has my colleague read the report on this bill?

Mr. CULLOP. No; but I have taken the statement of the gentleman who seems to have reported the bill. Now, here was a serious situation that required immediate action, constant action, and if these claims are not to be allowed, if that situation were to arise again, men would hesitate about using all the means available. I do not think that zealous action should be discouraged in a case of this kind.

Mr. COX. There is always a way to know the road on which you are traveling before you enter upon your journey, and that is to get a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOSEPH MANNING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12145) for the relief of Joseph Manning.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to have that bill reported, reserving the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Joseph Manning, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, as full compensation for permanent injuries received by the said Manning, occasioned by the falling of a file case at room No. 141, office of the Civil Service Commission, Federal Building, Boston, Mass., while performing his duties as an employee of the United States Government, the accident occurring May 26, 1906.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this matter, or the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MILLER], a question. This, I see, is a personal-injury case. Will the gentleman detail the circumstances under which this personal injury occurred?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will be very glad to. This man was employed in the custodian service in Boston, and in the performance of his duties he was up on top of some file cases doing some work, and the file cases crashed to the floor and injured him very badly.

I will say to the gentleman further that this is another case where the injured employee was not covered by the compensation act of 1908, and the committee, in following out their policy, has allowed him one year's salary, or one year's wages.

Mr. CULLOP. What were the circumstances? Did he know of the condition and arrangement of the file cases? I want to find out whether or not there was contributory negligence.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. He was cleaning the wall of the room, and the file cases extended almost to the ceiling, and he was up there in the performance of his duties when this file case tumbled over. The proper Government officials for whom this man was working have approved the claim.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, this man was on top of the file case, and, according to the report, most of the file cases had the top attached to the body, but this particular one was not arranged in that way, and it tumbled over.

Mr. CULLOP. What age was he?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I do not know his age.

Mr. CULLOP. Did he make an examination of these file cases before he took his position on them to do his work?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. This had been going on for some time, I will say to the gentleman, and he had been going about on top of the other cases, which were attached. But this one was loose and unattached, and it fell over. He had a right to suppose, I imagine, after traveling over a lot of them, that they were all fastened, as they should have been.

Mr. CULLOP. So far as is stated, this man made no examination as to the safety of the place in which he was working, and no investigation, and it is manifest if he had a suit in court he could not recover without first having investigated and satisfied himself as to the condition of the place in which he was working. I do not like to object to a personal-injury case, but clearly it seems to me that this man, unless something further is shown in the case, would fail to recover damages if he were in court.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Is it not a proposition of law that a man has a right to assume that he has a safe place to work in?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; but that does not excuse him from investigation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Does it not follow as a matter of course that if a man is working on a scaffolding which is shown to be secure, and proceeds on a continuation of that scaffolding that is not secure, he has a right to assume that it is secure?

Mr. CULLOP. He is still required to use his senses to determine whether or not the place is safe.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I would say that the evidence shows that this man had finished his work and they handed him a ladder to get down from the cases, and in receiving the ladder he stepped onto one of these cases and overbalanced the case, and it fell. I think the bill is a worthy one and it ought to pass.

Mr. CULLOP. Of course, if the man was injured through no fault of his own he would have the right to recover, but if he was careless he would not have. I shall not object.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, purely for the privilege of getting the floor for a few minutes, I want to say a word with reference to personal-injury cases where the Government or its servants have done the injury.

I have had on this calendar for a long time two cases, undisputed as to the facts, that have been thoroughly investigated by the military authorities. Medical officers of the Army examined and for a while treated the victims of this accident, due to the carelessness of military servants of the Government. Three women, residing in the city of San Antonio, were driving to their residences in the afternoon along a quiet street when a battery of artillery swung into it from another street and ran over their carriage and destroyed it and very seriously hurt the occupants, Mrs. Lena Garagnon and Mrs. Frederickson and her daughter.

They expended a good deal of money for medical treatment. They were taken to the military hospital at first and subsequently treated in other hospitals. One of them, Mrs. Garagnon, has spent more than $3,000 in an effort to get over the injury caused by this battery of the United States Army. She was treated in San Antonio, and then went to Chicago, where she was treated by, I think, Dr. Murphy in a hospital in that city. My recollection is that she has spent between $3,000 and $3,500. The woman is injured for life. She goes on crutches. One of her legs is practically destroyed. She will never be well. I have seen her, and while I pretend to no knowledge of medicine, and while I have great faith in the skill of physicians, almost to reconstruct the human body nowadays, I can see, as anyone can, that it will never be possible for this woman to recover from the injury done to her. She still suffers from it and still undergoes treatment. The committee was impressed with the justice of the claim and think that she should be compensated for the carriage which was run over and destroyed by the battery and that they should be compensated moderately for the personal injuries, and that the amount they have paid out for medical attention be repaid to them. I have endeavored to keep an eye on this bill, and have been on hand usually when such matters were under consideration, trying to press the claim of my constituents. I see the House to-day is passing a few bills to compensate people for personal injuries. I have failed to see why a man who was hurt by the fall of a file case somewhere in Boston is any more entitled to consideration than are these unfortunate women. The only difference I can see is that the man seems to have been in the service of the Government at the time. But that makes the injury no greater. It makes the loss of time and expense no greater. This poor woman has been ruined. She had a business which she was conducting, but which she had to give up. Her carriage was destroyed. Her horse was so badly crippled that it had to be killed. The other woman and her daughter were less seriously injured.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What objection is made to a claim of that kind?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think the chief objection is that it would be a precedent that might in the future cost the Government money for other accidents. That is the only objection that I know of. These are the simple facts. The medical officers of the Army stated that the amount originally asked for in the bill was reasonable, and that in their judgment it should be paid. I know the bill can not go through to-day, but I want to say this much for my constituents, and I want it to be known that bills are being passed that in my judgment make no superior claim on the Treasury.

Mr. CULLOP. From the statement that the gentleman from Texas has made, if there was a defendant whom he could sue in court, he would have a good case for a recovery, and in such a case as that the House ought to make the allowance.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman suggest the Court of Claims?

Mr. CULLOP. I think the House ought to allow the claim—

Mr. SLAYDEN. There is no disputing the facts.

Mr. CULLOP. And if the House does not allow it, I should, if the bill were mine, apply to have the case referred to the Court of Claims, where the damage could be ascertained and reported to the House, so that the House might pass the bill, because from the statement the gentleman has made, he has made out a good case.

Mr. SLAYDEN. No one disputes the facts.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Did the Committee on Claims report this favorably?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Unanimously?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not know about that. I rather think it was.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. My recollection is that the report was unanimous. I am not quite positive about that. I know it was favorably reported.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It looks to me like a simple act of justice to pay a claim of that kind, and I can not see how the payment of a just claim should establish a bad precedent.

Mr. SLAYDEN. This poor woman has actually paid out between $3,000 and $4,000 for medical treatment and can not get a cent of it back.

Mr. MANN. I objected when these bills—two of them—were up before. I would be perfectly willing at any time to argue the matter to the House and take a chance on beating the bill. There is no merit in it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The committee differs from the gentleman, and the medical officers of the War Department who had charge of the case differ from the gentleman, on the merits of the bills.

Mr. MANN. I am not discussing the merits of the bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Have I not stated the facts as set out in the testimony?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is always very careful about stating facts. I do not think he has stated all the facts, though.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have not had time. I would be very glad to have every fact investigated. The great fact is that they were run over by this battery and their carriage destroyed and this personal injury was inflicted, and the people crippled, and they have paid out the money for medical services.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, will the gentleman from Texas indicate to the House any fact of importance that he has not stated?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I can not think of any that I have omitted. I will give the gentleman the testimony. I know I can not get the bill considered to-day. It is objected to. I will be very glad to have the gentleman from Wisconsin read and consider the testimony.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill before the House, H. R. 12145, for the relief of Joseph Manning?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FRANCESCA G. MONTELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14046) for the relief of Mrs. Francesca G. Montell.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

JOSEPH C. AKIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2743) for the relief of the widow of Joseph C. Akin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

WILLIAM W. DANENHOWER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was House Resolution 270, referring the bill (H. R. 16473) for the relief of William W. Danenhower to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the objection.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, this bill is similar to the one that I asked to have laid on the table a few moments ago, and in view of the fact that the bill will have to be changed materially, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be recommended to the Committee on Claims so that it may be attended to in that way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent that the bill referred to be recommended to the Committee on Claims. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THOMAS G. ALLEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13354) to compensate Thomas G. Allen for injuries received while employed in the General Land Office of the United States, and making an appropriation therefor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

ESTATES OF JOHN FRAZER AND ZEPHANIAH KINGSLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7733) to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction to hear and adjudicate the claims of the estate of John Frazer, deceased, and of the estate of Zephaniah Kingsley, deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

WOMAN'S BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS, REFORMED CHURCH OF AMERICA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11563) for the relief of the Woman's Board of Domestic Missions, Reformed Church of America.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I know the gentleman from Illinois is quite familiar with this bill, but this has had so much consideration that I will ask the gentleman to reserve his objection for a moment until I can make a short statement.

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the objection if the gentleman wants to take up the time.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not, other than to say that I think this claim ought to be settled. It has been reported on favorably by the War Department, by the Indian Department, by the Interior Department, by the local military authorities, by both of the Indian Committees unanimously, in both this Congress and the last Congress. These ladies actually expended the money, and Congress, changing its course in handling those Indian prisoners of war, who were kept prisoners of war for 25 years, rendered nugatory and worthless the $13,000 of expenditure on the part of these women. I have not and ought not to have any more interest in it than any other Member of the House, and I do not have, other than the fact that the military reservation on which these prisoners were kept was in my district, and that I had a little something to do with the removal of them and the giving of freedom to them. These ladies making up this board are always going to feel that a grave injustice has been heaped upon them if they do not get the relief, and I would like to make this one last appeal to the gentleman from Illinois. The reports are all printed here from all of the departments, and even the military authorities are using these buildings.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] that I have a large amount of information in addition to what is contained in the report, both from Army officers and various others. The statement has been frequently made, directly or indirectly, that the Army is making use of these buildings.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, that is so.

Mr. MANN. A few Army officers or privates are renting these buildings from this association—privately renting them. Does the gentleman contend that if somebody out here has a building and somebody in the Army rents it that the Army is making use of it?

Mr. FERRIS. I never heard of that before. How much rent are they getting for it?

Mr. MANN. I do not know; but I have the written statement from the Army officers on the subject, and that is the only way they are being occupied.

Mr. FERRIS. What does that prove?

Mr. MANN. It proves that the Army is not using them. The United States Army has reported that they have no use for the buildings.

Mr. FERRIS. How long since officers of the Army began to rent buildings from their own pockets? Is not that a new situation?

Mr. MANN. I do not think these are commissioned officers. They are renting them for their families. They have telegrams from the commanding officer saying that they are occupied by certain officers.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me ask the gentleman a question. When, in the name of high heaven, is a claim like this ever going to get consideration? It is subject to a point of order on an appropriation bill. We can not pass it or get consideration of it other than by unanimous consent, and if the gentleman objects, when can these ladies ever have their rights established? It is estimated for and has been put in the Indian appropriation bill and has been knocked out by a point of order, usually made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and now it is reported again favorably by both committees, and it has to go to the Private Calendar. We never get a chance to consider a bill on the Private Calendar except by unanimous consent. I would like to know when a meritorious claim can ever be considered in this House other than by unanimous consent?

Mr. MANN. Meritorious claims do not have any difficulty in this House.

Mr. FERRIS. I disagree with my friend from Illinois on that. They have the toughest sort of sledding in this House. We see signs of this truth here every day. This claim is just and ought to be paid.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ARTHUR HUBESTY TURNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8277) to reinstate Arthur Hubesty Turner as a second lieutenant in the United States Marine Corps.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, there is urgent need in the Marine Corps for additional officers of military training and technical education. This young man will qualify splendidly in those particulars. The department wants him reinstated. They need him and others of his kind, and it will not cost this Government one dollar for his education. He did not resign for any selfish financial reason. He had a good substantial military reason for tendering his resignation and he now wants to be reinstated. The committee unanimously favors this bill. The department approves it and I hope the gentleman will not press his objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LIEUT. RICHARD PHILIP McCULLOUGH, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4890) for the relief of Lieut. Richard Philip McCullough, United States Navy.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

I. C. JOHNSON, JR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9095) for the relief of I. C. Johnson, jr.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ASST. PAYMASTER JOHN D. P. HODAPP, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15016) for the relief of Asst. Paymaster John D. P. Hodapp, United States Navy.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for the moment?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the right to object. I thought the gentleman wanted to be heard. If not, I shall object.

Mr. DIXON. Very well.

SUNDRY BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5672) for the relief of sundry building and loan associations.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want some information on this bill. The report is not very voluminous on it. What is proposed to be done? Let the bill be read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there is no use in reading this bill through. I reserve the right to object for a moment. I presume the items of this bill ought to be allowed to pay back a lot of building and loan associations for internal-revenue taxes. The Senate passed a bill covering a certain number and the House committee has amended it with a lot more. Everybody ought to stand on the same basis. There is no reason that a building and loan association represented here by Mr. Smith should get its money and the building and loan association represented by Mr. Jones does not get it, where the circumstances are the same. The Treasury Department informs me that this bill does not cover nearly all the cases that are on all fours, and I am not going to start in, if I can help it, with the idea that if the Government has taken $10 from a building and loan association it has got to hunt up Members of Congress in order to get it back from the Government. Let them all come on the same footing. Therefore, I object.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I was about to make the same objection which the gentleman from Illinois made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

GERTIE FOSS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14572) for the relief of Gertie Foss.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 to Gertie Foss, widow of Olaf Foss, late gunner in the Revenue-Cutter Service, who was injured while in the discharge of his official duty on October 8, 1913, and later died on November 11, 1913, as the result of such injuries.

The committee amendment was read as follows:

Line 5, strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,170."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF W. H. MILLS, DECEASED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9968) for the relief of the legal representatives of W. H. Mills, deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representatives of W. H. Mills, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,700, as full compensation for labor expended and materials used by said W. H. Mills in 1889 in partially repairing the Humboldt Bay, Cal., life-saving station under contract with the Government.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$2,700" and insert "$2,275."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MRS. H. O'NEILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14695) for the relief of Mrs. H. O'Neill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mrs. H. O'Neill, of Brooklyn, N. Y., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, she being the heir at law of Ambrose O'Neill, late an employee of the Isthmian Canal Commission, the sum of $175, or an amount equal to six weeks' wages of said Ambrose O'Neill, at the rate of pay he was receiving at the time of his death, the same being in lieu of six weeks' vacation with pay to which said Ambrose O'Neill was entitled but had not received at the time of his death.

The committee amendments were read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after "O'Neill," insert the word "widow."

Line 5, after the word "of" strike out "Brooklyn, N. Y., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, she being the heir at law of."

Page 1, line 8, after the word "commission," insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, this bill seems to have gone by without objection. I would like to ask a question of some one who is in charge of the bill. Is the only basis of this bill the fact that this man was entitled to a month's vacation and did not get it and this is his salary for that time?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is it exactly.

Mr. MANN. If he had lived six weeks longer and not worked, he could have gotten the money.

Mr. BORLAND. Was his death occasioned in any way by the fact—

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, no.

Mr. BORLAND. Is not this an extraordinary act for the widow of an employee to ask for the pay for a vacation which the employee did not get in his lifetime?

Mr. EDMONDS. It may be, but as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says, if he had lived six weeks longer he would have gotten the vacation, likely, and the committee felt that he was entitled to that sum for that length of time.

Mr. BORLAND. Is that a very common occurrence throughout the country?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think since I have been on the committee there has been a case like this before, and I hope there will not be another one.

Mr. BORLAND. I hope there will not be one again. It seems extravagant to pay the widow of a man his salary for a vacation that he did not get. There is no claim here for personal injury or loss of his health.

Mr. EDMONDS. He died from an accident that was no fault of the Government. And he was entitled to six weeks' vacation at the time of his death, and the committee thought it would be well to compensate him for it.

Mr. MANN. There may be some question about it. Under the Panama Canal construction, we advertised and promised and made an agreement to give the employees a certain amount of vacation with leave to return to the States under certain conditions and pay them while they were absent on their vacation. This man had earned his vacation of six weeks. He was entitled to take it and be away for six weeks and draw his pay during that time. He went away, but did not remain on earth. If he had remained physically on earth he would have gotten the allowance, but as his spirit flew to the other world he did not get the money; and it is proposed to give it to his widow. I do not know whether this is a bad precedent or not. No doubt, morally it is not. He was entitled to the money and his widow would be. Whether somebody in the Government here would insist hereafter every time that some one died in the Government service who was entitled to 30 days' leave of absence during the year, and died after the 1st of July, they be paid for 15 days' leave of absence, I do not know.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, is it too late for objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is well aware that a good many men at the Canal Zone, entitled to six weeks' vacation, did not take it; and latterly it got to be that the commissioners rather insisted on their taking it on account of their health. But no suggestion has ever been made before that a failure to take a vacation would be any kind of a claim in law or equity. It was giving them a privilege that it was willing they should take advantage of. This is the most extraordinary thing I ever heard of. I am very anxious that men who are injured in the Government service or deprived of property by some unwarranted action of the Government should be compensated under a private claim bill. But I wish they could come under the common-law jurisdiction and not come to Congress. This kind of claim humiliates a man who makes claim against the Government on behalf of those who are entitled to their claims.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, is it too late to object to the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is too late.

Mr. FERRIS. I would have objected if I had had a chance.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the situation I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over and remain on the calendar without prejudice.

Mr. TAGGART. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman object to that request?

Mr. TAGGART. The bill is on its passage, is it not?

Mr. MANN. Yes; but it will not be passed to-day.

Mr. TAGGART. I do not know how serious it is, but I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

CATHERINE A. FOX.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15109) for the relief of Catherine A. Fox.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum equal to one year's salary of the late John F. Fox, to be paid to his widow, Catherine A. Fox, the said John F. Fox having been killed while in the performance of his duty as a post-office clerk at New York City.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Line 4, after the word "appropriated," strike out the words "a sum equal to" and insert the words "the sum of $1,300 being."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF DAVID H. FISH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16003) for the relief of the heirs of David H. Fish, deceased.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DIXON] knows, this is a claim of $106.82, and I am not sure but that it ought to be paid. But it is one of a series of claims which amount to $31,000, all in identically the same circumstances and covered by the same report to Congress. I do not think we ought to start in to pay these claims if they are to be paid in separate bills of $100 each.

Mr. DIXON. The committee investigated this item, and reported that this amount was due to the heirs of this man, and recommended that it should be paid. I appreciate the fact that there are others in the same situation, but no bills have been introduced in their cases, and I do not know why a meritorious bill should be defeated for that reason.

Mr. MANN. This is a series of old claims—I do not know how old they are. I think they were started, some of them, while I was taking milk from my mother.

Mr. DIXON. It was back in 1863 or 1864.

Mr. MANN. Yes; a long time ago. In 1910 there was an adverse report made in the Senate on these bills. There have been various reports at different times.

Mr. DIXON. There was a later report, was there not, favorable to the bill?

Mr. MANN. I say there was an adverse report. I am not sure that it covered this particular claim, but I have collected all the reports. There is a whole raft of them here.

Mr. DIXON. I hope the gentleman will not object to this bill.

Mr. MANN. I am going to object. I am calling it to the attention of the gentleman, so that if these claims ought to be paid there ought to be a general bill covering them, and the committee should determine whether it is going to recommend the payment of all these claims, amounting to $31,000.

If this bill passes, the gentleman probably does not know what will take place, but I do. If this bill passes one of the claim agents here in Washington would at once pick it up and get the names and addresses of all these claimants—and there are a great many of them—and write a letter to each one of them and say that they had an old claim, and so forth, and he thought it could be collected, and would collect it for 50 per cent. Now, I am not willing, if we owe this money to these people, to have a claim agent get 50 per cent of it, but that is what would happen.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. If it is an omnibus bill, as the gentleman suggests, will they not do that anyhow?

Mr. MANN. No. If it is an omnibus bill they can not expect to receive money for getting a claim allowed when it is already allowed on an omnibus bill; and we will take care on the omnibus bill to see that they shall not get it.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. The gentleman admits that it is a meritorious bill?

Mr. MANN. I do not say it is not meritorious, but the others are equally meritorious.

Mr. DIXON. Does the gentleman think this bill should be objected to at this time, after all the committees having this matter in charge have reported favorably upon it?

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, these matters have been floating around the Capitol for 50 years or more, and none of these claims has ever been paid. I do not assume that there is a great deal of merit in them, because if there had been much merit in them they would have been paid long ago.

Mr. DIXON. A bill exactly like this passed this House among this list of claims, and the gentleman made no objection to that.

Mr. MANN. Well, I might miss something once in a while. I admit that I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CHARLES M. WAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14754) for the relief of Charles M. Way.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Subsequently,

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar 331 (H. R. 14754), for the relief of Charles M. Way, which is a bill allowing a soldier his travel pay. The department has sent in a statement to the effect that he should be paid. The amount involved is only $80.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar No. 331.

Mr. MANN. Would it still be subject to objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would still be subject to objection. Is there objection to returning to the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $82.24 to Charles M. Way, of Fallon, Nev., late private in Company K, Eleventh Regiment United States Volunteer Cavalry, found and held to be due him by the Auditor for the War Department, for travel pay between San Francisco, Cal., and Brookings, S. Dak., a distance of 2,056 miles, at the rate of 4 cents per mile.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I would like to state to the House and to the gentleman who objected that a bill similar to this in every respect, namely, a bill for the relief of Charles L. Moore, was favorably reported by the Committee on Claims and passed on one of the claims days in June. It was because of the fact that a bill similar in every respect to this particular bill had been reported and had passed the House that the committee felt inclined to report the bill introduced by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS]. I do not know whether the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] knows that, but I think the fact ought to be called to his attention.

Mr. MANN. I know that, and I know some other things. That is the trouble about it. This man received his discharge from an organization in the Philippine Islands and received a travel allowance from Manila, P. I., to Brookings, S. Dak. He got his travel pay. He did not go there. He reenlisted and then got another discharge, and he wants now to get his travel pay again to South Dakota, although he never went there and has no intention of going there. He does not live there. I think he has had quite sufficient for all that he is morally entitled to. He is not legally entitled to this and has to depend on the equities. I can not see any equity in paying a man his travel pay twice from the Orient to Brookings, S. Dak., when he never intends to travel there.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. The gentleman knows very well that all discharged soldiers do not go right back to where they enlisted. This allowance is a part of their pay.

Mr. MANN. I am talking about the particular merits of this individual case.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. This is identically on all fours with the bill we passed in June.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

JAMES A. CHAMBERLAIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13106) for the relief of the trustee and parties who are now or who may hereafter become interested in the estate of James A. Chamberlain under the terms of his will.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS] objects.

CHARLES A. CAREY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13754) for the relief of Charles A. Carey.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next one.

IDA TURNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14978) for the relief of Ida Turner.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Ida Turner, widow of Arthur F. Turner, late a guard at the United States penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., who, while in the discharge of his duties as guard, was stabbed to death by a prisoner.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, line 5, by striking out "$5,000" and inserting "$840," and, in line 6, by striking out the word "Arthur" and inserting the word "Andrew."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

D. H. CARPENTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12135) to reimburse D. H. Carpenter, postmaster at Seddon, Ala., for money and stamps stolen and repaid by him to the Post Office Department.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to D. H. Carpenter, Seddon, Ala., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $45.72, the amount of money and postage stamps stolen from the post office at Seddon, Ala., on the night of —, 1913, while he was postmaster at Seddon, and which money and stamps belonged to the said post office, and which said sum he was required to repay, and did repay, to the Post Office Department of the United States.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 6, by striking out "$45.72" and inserting "$44.13," and, on page 1, line 8, by striking out the word "night" and inserting the word "nights"; and in the same line, after the word "of," insert "May 21 and August 9," and, on line 9, page 1, strike out the word "thirteen" and insert the word "fourteen."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the revenue bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the revenue bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HELVERING. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the good-roads bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on good roads. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by inserting a speech delivered at Greensboro, N. C., by Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON on July 29.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by printing a speech of Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON delivered at Greensboro, N. C. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FRANCIS PATRICK REGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4931) authorizing the President to reinstate Francis Patrick Regan as a second lieutenant in the United States Army.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

ANNIE E. WHITE AND HEIRS OF PATRICK WHITE, DECEASED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1579) for the relief of Annie E. White and the heirs of Patrick White, deceased.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

THOMAS P. DARR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2544) for the relief of Thomas P. Darr.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I reserve the right to object. According to this report, I do not think there is any merit in this claim. If the author of the report is on the floor I would like to have him give me some information.

Mr. MANN. We passed this bill in the last House, after some discussion.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The report of the Post Office Department contains all the facts. The service was performed, but there was delay in returning the contract because of the mis-carriage of the letter which contained it.

Mr. MANN. I think the bill was discussed quite fully in the last House, and it passed then.

Mr. COX. How was the delay brought about? Who was to blame for it?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It may have been the Post Office Department. The service was performed in the mountain country of Idaho, where the mail is not always regular. The letter returning the contract miscarried in some way. The claimant received no advantage by the contract not being received by the department. He went ahead and performed the service before the contract reached him and for some time after it was returned. This bill is only to pay him for the interval covering the time between the acceptance of his bid until the contract was relet. The service was performed satisfactorily for which payment has not been made.

Mr. COX. How much time intervened?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. About six months.

Mr. COX. It has been some time since I read this report.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The report contains all the facts.

Mr. COX. It says here:

Difference between cost of temporary service from Aug. 13 to Dec. 2, 1907, of $1,077, and the rate of pay under the bid, $477.36	$599.64
Difference between rate of pay of Harvey Dixon of $2,400 and that of Mr. Darr of $1,582.61 per annum for remainder of contract term, from Dec. 2, 1907, to June 30, 1910	2,114.16
From which should be subtracted credit for service actually performed from Feb. 1 to Aug. 7, 1907, at the rate of $1,575 per annum, and from Aug. 8 to 12, 1907, at the rate of $1,582.61	$30.37
Making the liability	1,883.43

When he got this contract, was it an increase over the first contract?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I am not clear in regard to that. The fact is that the bill was thoroughly discussed at the last session and passed—

Mr. COX. That does not spell anything to me, because I was not present at the time, and I know nothing about what was said.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the reason this man was not paid was simply because he failed to execute a contract and have that contract filed with the department. It is stated by the contractor, which statement is corroborated by the postmaster, that this contract was executed and mailed to the department, but for some reason the contract was lost and never did reach the department, and under the law he could not be paid.

Mr. COX. That is my understanding.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. He could not be paid for services during the time that the contract was not in existence. He was not at fault, however. He did what he could. He executed a contract, and he put it in the mails and sent it to the Post Office Department. It became lost, and during that time he was performing the service thinking that he had a right to do so.

Mr. COX. How much time does that cover?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. From February 1, to August 12, 1907.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. It seems that the department failed to call upon him again for the contract.

Mr. COX. That is for 10 months.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Only six months and a fraction.

Mr. COX. If I get the point in dispute it is this: The carrier carried the mail without having the contract, and under the law he could not be compensated for that length of time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. That is true, but he thought he had a contract.

Mr. COX. But he did not have one.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. He had executed his part of the contract.

Mr. COX. It takes two people to make a contract. He may have in good faith thought he had, but in reality he did not have a contract.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. The gentleman understands that these papers are sent to the contractor and he is to execute them and then return them.

Mr. COX. And he returns them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. COX. Then it was not a contract until it reached its destination and was accepted by the Post Office Department.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. If the gentleman wants to hold him to a strict legal construction, but this man was working there under the direction of the postmaster, he was an employee of the Federal Government, and he continued to perform this service, having done all that he could do, and having a right to believe that the contract had been received, for he was never notified to the contrary.

Mr. COX. Until the department called upon him again for his contract

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. But the department allowed him to perform this service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Thomas P. Darr the sum of $830.37 on account of service rendered as mail carrier from Gooding, Idaho, to Corral, Idaho, during the spring and summer of 1907, this amount to be accepted by said Thomas P. Darr as full compensation for service rendered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PROMOTION OF OFFICER ON RETIRED LIST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 147) authorizing the promotion of an officer on the retired list of the army who served in the Civil War.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, the matter contained in this bill has been taken care of in the Military Appropriation bill. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RICHARD DAELEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 809) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to accept the application for land entry of Richard Daeley.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection? I shall be glad if he will state what it is.

Mr. MANN. I will reserve it. The objection is that there is no merit in the bill.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Has the gentleman read the letter of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. MANN. I have read it very carefully and have annotated it.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. It would seem to me from the reading of that letter and the letter of Senator McCUMBER that the bill had decided merit.

Mr. MANN. I could not see it.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The tract is a very small one, less than two acres, and there is nothing in the Record or elsewhere to show that it has any particular value except to this particular man. It is not like giving a man a very valuable piece of land.

Mr. MANN. The tract has an acre and a half in it. The man wants to get it from the Government for nothing. If it is not of any value he ought not to be bothering Congress to try and pass a special bill about it, and if it is of any value he ought to be willing to comply with the law in reference to getting it, in my opinion.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The reason that he wants this particular tract is that he put valuable improvements upon it. He did this after the officials of the United States land office had accepted his filing. The officials thought it was proper for him to enter the land and he was warranted in trusting them. Had he known what his rights were before putting the improvements upon it he would have looked for other land. The reason he comes to Congress now is that he finds that he has put valuable improvements on a very small tract, which will have little value if removed, and it would seem as though the Government ought to save him from loss. The loss was occasioned by the mistake or ignorance of United States officers. It can be made right by the passage of this bill, which does not call for a cent of money and simply permits the entryman to prove up upon a tract of less than two acres, which is of practically no value outside of the buildings placed upon it by the entryman. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will soften his heart.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

FREDERICK CHATEAU.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5318) for the relief of Kate Chateau.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Frederick Chateau, deceased, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been in the military service of the United States as a private of Company H, Ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, from the 22d day of April, 1861, to the 14th day of August, 1861, and to have been discharged honorably as such on the latter date: Provided, That no back pay, back pension, or other back allowance shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. This bill is entitled, "A bill for the relief of Kate Chateau," but her name is not mentioned anywhere in the bill. She is the widow of a soldier, and it seems an odd circumstance to me to put a title on a bill to which the body of the bill does not refer in any way. I want to know if the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] remembers—he did not report this bill—whether where we pass a bill to give a soldier a pensionable status, we do not still entitle it as a bill for his relief?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. When we get to that point I am going to move to amend the title.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the title by striking out in the title the word "Kate" and inserting the word "Frederick."

The amendment was agreed to.

GERTRUDE BECHERER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3296) for the relief of Gertrude Becherer.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Gertrude Becherer, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 in compensation for the loss of her husband, Henry Becherer, entered on the pay roll at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., as Henry Becker, who came to his death on September 15, 1910, while in the employ of the United States Government and as a result of such employment.

The committee amendment was read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$1,502.40."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE H. MORROW.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8849) to reimburse George H. Morrow.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ANNA C. PARRETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10173) for the relief of Anna C. Parrett.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Anna C. Parrett, mother of Ralph G. Dussell, who lost his life by accidental drowning on July 13, 1915, while in the employ of the Biological Survey, the sum of $900, the same being the amount of the annual salary which the said Ralph G. Dussell was receiving from the department at the time of his death, and the sum of $900 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "Parrett," insert the word "dependent."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

F. M. BARFIELD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14826) for the relief of F. M. Barfield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to F. M. Barfield the sum of $64.88 to reimburse him for the loss of postal funds lost through burglary of the post office at Pinehurst, Ga., on July 19, 1909.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LOSSES IN WRECK OF "TAHOMA."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8625) to reimburse the officers and enlisted men of the Revenue-Cutter Service and Public Health Service for losses sustained in the wreck of the revenue cutter Tahoma.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

OFFICERS AND CREW OF LIGHTHOUSE TENDER "ARMERIA."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16090) for the relief of the officers and crew of the lighthouse tender Armeria.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOSEPH F. MITCHELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16519) for the relief of Joseph F. Mitchell.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of or to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Joseph F. Mitchell, of Newark, S. Dak., the sum of $560.02, being the value of checks, money orders, stamps, and money taken from his custody as postmaster at Newark, S. Dak., by burglars on August 13, 1915.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all the matter just read and insert in lieu thereof the following: That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Joseph F. Mitchell, postmaster at Newark, S. Dak., in the sum of $551.06, being the value of postage stamps taken from his custody as postmaster.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES T. PETTY, ETC.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9760) for the relief of James T. Petty, Charles W. Church, and others, executors of Charles B. Church, deceased; Jesse B. Wilson and George T. Dearing.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

H. B. ROGERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8844) for the relief of H. B. Rogers.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the title of H. B. Rogers in and to the southeast quarter section 28, township 12 north, range 12 east, Columbia County, Wis., be, and the same is hereby, quieted and confirmed, and the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to issue a patent therefor to the said H. B. Rogers.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out, on page 1, lines 3 to 8, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent conveying all the right, title, and interest of the United States to the southeast quarter section 28, township 12 north, range 12 east, Columbia County, Wis., to H. B. Rogers upon the payment by him to the United States of the sum of $1.25 per acre.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HALVOR NILSEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11860) for the relief of Halvor Nilsen.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue a patent to Halvor Nilsen, of Wababica, Minn., for the northwest quarter of northwest quarter section 24, township 161 north, range 32 west, fifth principal meridian, Minnesota, regardless of the fact that said Halvor Nilsen commuted a former homestead entry under the provisions of section 2301, Revised Statutes, subsequently to the date of the act of June 5, 1900 (31 Stats., p. 267): Provided, That said Halvor Nilsen make satisfactory proof of his compliance with the homestead law and pay any amounts due under the entry for the land herein described.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH DAVIS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill S. 3617, an act for the relief of Elizabeth Davis.

The title was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

PROPERTY OF THE DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, the next bill, I understand, has been passed by some prior action of the House. I ask that the present bill (S. 5172) be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the bill be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. MANN. Let us see what the status of it is. This is a Senate bill that is on the calendar. I think we passed an identical bill—

Mr. CULLOP. We passed the identical bill.

Mr. MANN. Then, the gentleman does not want to lay it on the table.

Mr. CULLOP. I ask that it be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. MANN. It is a mere error on the part of the clerk who makes up the calendar.

Mr. CULLOP. I ask that it be stricken from the calendar, then.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not have to ask the House to do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks that the bill be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. MANN. The bill can not be stricken from the calendar. We passed it. We have no control of the bill.

Mr. CULLOP. I will ask whether it was this bill or the House bill that was passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it was the Senate bill which was passed.

Mr. MANN. This is the bill we passed. If we passed it again, we would do so irregularly. The Clerk will take it from the calendar now.

JOSEPH C. AKIN.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House return to Calendar No. 316.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 316. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the same.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2743) for the relief of the widow of Joseph C. Akin.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief statement.

Mr. MANN. This is subject to objection yet.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I want to make a brief statement in relation to this bill. It is for the relief of the widow of Joseph C. Akin. Akin was summoned by the United States marshal of Utah to assist him in arresting an Indian charged with the murder of a Mexican. Akin was acting in the line of duty as a deputy United States marshal when he was shot and killed by the Ute or Piute Indians. Akin was a good citizen, and he was performing an act of good citizenship, and there never was any more just claim than this bill for the relief of his widow.

Mr. MANN. Let me make a little suggestion to the gentleman from Colorado. I do not know whether he has read the report or not. Probably he is familiar with it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; I have read the report of the committee.

Mr. MANN. If he has read the report, then it must have occurred to him that in the report there is nothing to show that Joseph Akin was a deputy marshal, nothing to show that he was killed, and the Attorney General has no information upon the subject. Now, when a report comes in here 14 pages long, in fine print, to pay money on the theory that he was killed as a deputy marshal, and nothing to show that he was a deputy marshal, and nothing to show that he was killed, no positive evidence to show the Attorney General anything about it, the gentleman must not expect to pass that bill by unanimous consent.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There was amply sufficient data before the Claims Committee to satisfy the committee that Joseph Akin was killed. There can be no question about his identity, or his appointment, or his service, or his death. He was not a regular deputy marshal under an annual salary. He was summoned on this occasion to go down there and help arrest this Ute Indian, Tsenegat.

Mr. MANN. I suppose we ought to take the gentleman's statement for that, and probably would, and yet you can not determine those things very well on the floor of the House. Here is a long report, consisting of 14 pages of fine print, and nothing in it to indicate that the man was a deputy United States marshal. The Attorney General knows nothing about it. Of course, we are entitled to some official information—

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There is no doubt about that. But I think the committee report contains that information. The committee had more information than is in their report, I think.

Mr. MANN (continuing). When we pay on the ground that an employee of the Government is killed in the service.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Was the claim made on the ground that he was a deputy marshal or simply as a part of a posse comitatus?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. As I understand it, he was summoned and appointed temporarily by the United States marshal of Utah as a deputy marshal to act as a member of the posse to go and arrest that Indian.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is there anything in the report to show that he was summoned as a member of the posse?

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman gets entirely crisscross on this in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin, let me read to him from the bill:

Joseph Akin, who, while in the discharge of his duty as a deputy United States marshal, was killed—

And so forth. Do not tell the gentleman that he was not a deputy marshal—

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. He was not one of the regular deputy United States marshals of Utah or Colorado either. He was only appointed and acting as such in that case.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what he was. There is nothing in the report to indicate anything about it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. But he was summoned as a deputy to come out and help arrest these Indians.

The report, by telegram, of Lorenzo D. Creel, special agent scattered bands of Indians in Utah, made to Cato Sells, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, on page 8 of this report, shows that Akin was a deputy marshal and how he was killed, as follows:

MOAB, UTAH, February 22, 1915.

SELLS, Commissioner, Washington, D. C.:

Bluff reports posse captured three more Indians and scattered the others. Now waiting orders. Marshal en route Grayson to Bluff. Attorney Cook en route Thompsons to Moab. Have sent relay team to meet marshal. Wires self and Cook hurry to Bluff, bringing all irons available. Moab. Grand County sheriff assisting me arranging relay Moab to Bluff, 120 miles. Much deep snow between; mud deep, other than snow. Probably horseback only means practicable. Kin Akin, deputy, Cortez, Colo., killed. Will keep office advised if line working. Otherwise no means communication. Marshal reports Indians en route around Bluff. Keeping wire cut. Am confident marshal controls situation. San Juan County inhabitants reported panic-stricken. Marshal has 75 frontier range mounted men from outside settlements addition to Bluff men.

CREEL, Special Agent.

The Secretary of the Interior reported upon this bill as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 23, 1916.

Hon. E. W. POE,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. POE: I have your letter of February 8, inclosing for report, etc., copy of bill (H. R. 2743) for the relief of the widow of Joseph C. Akin.

The death of Mr. Akin occurred on or about February 21, 1915, in connection with the efforts of the United States marshal for Utah to arrest a Ute Indian named Everett Hatch, or Tsenegat, who was wanted on a charge of murder alleged to have been committed on or about March 30, 1914. While the records and the direct correspondence relative to the employment, service, and death of Mr. Akin would be in the files of the Department of Justice or its field offices, there are inclosed herewith copies of a number of letters and telegrams bearing on the case selected from the Indian Office file of the whole case, which contains many papers, letters, etc., which are not believed to have sufficient value in the consideration of this claim to warrant copying them or burdening the file with them.

The Attorney General will probably be in a better position to make a direct recommendation on this bill, as Mr. Akin was in the employ of his department.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Could not the gentleman make his bill perfectly good by striking out that reference to the man being a deputy marshal?

Mr. MANN. That is the only ground upon which they are asking pay.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But suppose the bill contained this language: "Duly summoned as a part of a posse comitatus"?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the gentleman from Illinois objects to the consideration of the bill only on the ground of an insufficient report, I will endeavor to secure a more elaborate report. I think the committee has all the information necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to call his attention to the report of the United States Attorney General, also, upon this bill, which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 7, 1916.

Hon. E. W. POU,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: The department is in receipt of your letter of February 24, 1916, inclosing a copy of H. R. 2743, introduced by Congressman TAYLOR, of Colorado, for the relief of Mrs. Joseph C. Akin, whose husband was killed while acting as deputy United States marshal in attempting to arrest a Piute Indian charged with murder.

This matter has been given very careful consideration, but as to the passage of legislation of this character, involving purely a question of policy, I do not feel that I should make any recommendation to Congress in regard thereto.

Concerning your request for all papers, or copies of same, on file in this department relating to this claim, you are advised that an examination of the files of this department does not disclose any papers in addition to correspondence heretofore had with Congressman TAYLOR, who introduced the bill, and a letter which was written to Senator THOMAS, of Colorado, on January 3, 1916, acknowledging his letter of December 27, 1915, and advising him that the only relief, if any, that can be obtained is through congressional action.

Respectfully,

T. W. GREGORY, Attorney General.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It refers to him as a deputy. He was a member of a posse duly summoned.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. He was regularly deputized by the United States marshal for the arrest of that Indian and was killed by the Indians while he was in the performance of his duty assisting the marshal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objected to the bill, and this colloquy is entirely out of order.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I was asking the gentleman from Illinois if he would withhold his objection until I called attention to these facts that are shown in this report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOHN P. SUTTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16719) for the relief of John P. Sutton.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws John P. Sutton, who enlisted in Company H, Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry, on the 27th day of March, 1866, under the name of Gilbert Sutton, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment under his true name of John P. Sutton.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

KATE CANNIFF.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 798) for the relief of Kate Canniff.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOHN E. KEYS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1963) for the relief of John E. Keys.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 to John E. Keys, for injuries received during the construction of the Corbett Tunnel on the Shoshone reclamation project in Wyoming.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out, on page 1, line 5, "$2,000" and insert "$602."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MIKE G. WOMACK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3533) for the relief of Mike G. Womack.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mike G. Womack, the sum of $1,000, in full compensation for injuries received by him on July 28, 1914, while in the performance of his duties as an employee of the United States Government in connection with the construction of roads within the Crater Lake National Park, in the State of Oregon.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 1, line 6, strike out "$1,000" and insert "$657.30."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES L. SCHROEDER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15797) for the relief of Charles L. Schroeder.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

HORACE M. BLUNT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5020) for the reimbursement of Horace M. Blunt for the loss of a horse while hired by the United States Geological Survey.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ROBERT T. LEGGE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2205) for the relief of Robert T. Legge.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next one.

JOHN BRODIE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12240) for the relief of John Brodie.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Brodie, of San Francisco, Cal., the sum of $1,000, on account of personal injuries received by him through the explosion of a box of percussion caps while loading the United States Army transport Sherman, in San Francisco Harbor, on the 22d day of September, 1899: Provided, That no sum of money due or to become due to the said John Brodie under this act shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable process whatever, but shall inure to the benefit of the said John Brodie.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CLINE). The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES DIAMOND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2210) for the relief of James Diamond for horse lost while hired by the United States Forest Service.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

CERTAIN CLAIMS OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 305) referring the bill (H. R. 12204) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and adjust certain claims of the city of New York to the Court of Claims.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

JAMES DIAMOND.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, would not the gentleman withhold his objection in the case of Calendar 362, James Diamond, H. R. 2210?

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to reserve objection. The man lost his horse and has been paid once for it. How many times does he want to be paid for it?

Mr. RAKER. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the report and the recommendation of the department.

Mr. MANN. I have read it. I do not care to take up further time with it unless the gentleman has something more than is in the report.

Mr. RAKER. Of course, the Forest Service took the money out of their own hands and paid this man, and they should be paid back the amount of the claim.

Mr. MANN. This man had a horse and rented it to people in Government service. They lost it. They paid him for it, cold cash. Now, here is a bill to pay him again; not to pay the people who paid him the money, but to pay the man again for the horse.

Mr. RAKER. The Government service did not pay him.

Mr. MANN. I only know what is stated.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The record is that one of the men in charge made good to him, with the understanding that if he got the money he would pay him. He made his claim to the Forest Service, and the record is on file, and the Forest Service did not pay, simply because the accident occurred before the act was passed allowing the Forest Service to pay these claims.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman deny that the man was paid?

Mr. RAKER. In the record it is shown that one of the men in the service made good to him, with the understanding that he would be repaid.

Mr. MANN. Made good to him. Mr. Tompkins paid him for the horse. Is not that correct?

Mr. RAKER. That is what I say.

Mr. MANN. Now, you have got a bill to pay him again. Is not that correct?

Mr. RAKER. No; this man ought to be paid by the Government, so that he can return the money to Mr. Tompkins.

Mr. MANN. Let us see. Mr. Diamond was the owner of a horse. Mr. Tompkins had it and lost it. The gentleman admits that Mr. Tompkins paid Mr. Diamond for the horse.

Mr. RAKER. That is what the department reports.

Mr. MANN. And here is a bill that proposes to pay Mr. Diamond again for the horse. Is not that right?

Mr. RAKER. By the Government.

Mr. MANN. No; but is not that correct? The gentleman says, "By the Government." Is it not proposed to pay him a second time, when he has been paid once?

Mr. RAKER. No; it is understood that he is to return the money—

Mr. MANN. Now, the gentleman is assuming that Mr. Diamond, out of the goodness of his heart, may pay this money to

Mr. Tompkins, but I do not know anything about that and nobody else does.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Whom is the horse on?

Mr. MANN. The horse is on the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. I just want to make a clear statement. This man Tompkins, who was in charge, paid the owner of the horse so as to avoid any difficulty, as I gather from the record. Diamond is entitled to his claim from the Government. The Government found in favor of his claim, but said that the loss of the horse occurred before the act permitted the Forest Service to pay. I am perfectly willing to amend this bill so as to allow the money to be paid to Tompkins.

Mr. POU. The Government had the horse?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. POU. And it never paid for it?

Mr. RAKER. That is it exactly. If the gentleman from Illinois will give me his attention, I am perfectly willing to amend the bill so that upon the payment to Diamond the money shall go to Tompkins, who furnished the money to him. I see I can not get the attention of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman has my attention. He proposes to amend the bill in a way which is out of order. There is no evidence to show that the Government has any liability in this case at all. The evidence is that a man in the Government service who rented the horse admitted that he was in fault and paid for the horse. Now the gentleman wants us to pay for it a second time.

Mr. RAKER. No; here is the record on this matter:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, February 18, 1916.

Hon. E. W. POU,

Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. POU: Referring to your request of January 5 for a report upon the bill (H. R. 2210) for the relief of James Diamond with the records in the case and the department's opinion as to the merits of the claim, I have the honor to submit, in accordance with your request, copies of the record in this case. From the record it is shown that on May 2, 1914, Mr. Diamond signed a release of all claims against H. J. Tompkins for the value of the horse hired from Diamond which was accidentally killed while used by Tompkins on official business of the Forest Service. While passing along a dangerous trail late in the evening the ground caved, causing the horse to fall over a high cliff; Tompkins, however, was not injured through the accident.

As is further shown by the record, the payment of this money could not be made from the funds appropriated for this department. The loss of the animal occurred prior to the passage of the provision in the act of March 4, 1913, which authorized payments for losses of this character. The only reason for withholding payment was because the loss antedated the act. In order to avoid suit the money was paid out of personal funds. Since there was no negligence on the part of the forest officer this department would approve amending the bill and its title so as to authorize payment to H. J. Tompkins, a citizen of San Francisco, to reimburse him for moneys paid for the horse hired by him which was killed while used on official business in the work of the Forest Service.

Very truly, yours,

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing there to say that they would have paid it if they had had the authority.

Mr. RAKER. The letter of the Secretary of Agriculture further says:

The only reason for withholding payment was because the loss antedated the act.

Mr. MANN. Yes; they made no examination of the facts. They did not know anything about it.

Mr. RAKER. The department had the full record.

Mr. MANN. Neither do I know anything about it, and neither does the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. I had the record. It was sent to the committee, but they did not print it. The department themselves said that the man was entitled to it, and I hope the gentleman will let the bill come up, so that we may amend it if the gentleman thinks it ought to contain that provision.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CLINE). Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

CERTAIN CLAIMS OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 305) referring the bill (H. R. 12204) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and adjust certain claims of the city of New York to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

JOSEPH A. PRAT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13788) for the relief of Joseph A. Prat.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Joseph A. Prat, of New Orleans, La., out of the money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $445.89, being the amount of stamps, stamp books, and stamp rolls stolen from said Prat while chief stamp clerk at the New Orleans post office in the month of February, 1915, and thus lost by him without fault on his part, and which amount was thereafter by him paid to the Government out of his own funds.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN P. FITZGERALD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1378) to amend the military record of John P. Fitzgerald.

The clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

WILLIAM HAROLD KEHOE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 6279) for the relief of William Harold Kehoe.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill authorizing the placing upon the retired list, with the rank of second lieutenant of Infantry of the Army, of William Harold Kehoe. He was appointed to the Military Academy and served there two years. While there, in the regular course of his duties, he was kicked in the head by a horse and was confined to the hospital for some time. Shortly after coming out of the hospital he contracted tuberculosis and is now suffering from that disease. It is hoped and believed that he may make a complete recovery, in which event he is desirous of continuing his service as an officer in the United States Army. Mr. Kehoe made an unusually creditable record as a cadet, and the action here asked to be taken is in line with two previous cases in which similar action was had. It is believed that the Government can well afford to put this boy in a position where he may be of usefulness to the Government in case of his recovery. In the absence of his recovery, the expense incident to the pay that he would receive as a retired second lieutenant would not be sufficiently great to entail a burden upon the Government, and this would seem to be an equitable thing to do in the interest of the boy.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, a man who goes through West Point and becomes a second lieutenant in the Army on his graduation, if anything happens to him thereafter which renders him unavailable for active service, goes on the retired list at three-quarters pay. While he is a cadet at West Point, although he is theoretically in the military service of the United States, he receives a certain compensation from the Government to take care of his expenses, but if he falls physically or mentally he does not go on the retired list.

There have been one or two cases passed where we have provided that these cadets go on the retired list. It has seemed to me that when a Member of Congress gave especial reference to some one in his district and had him educated at West Point at public expense, picking him out as against the other boys who had to pay their own expenses at college, that there was no special reason why, if that boy failed either mentally or physically, we should take care of him after that. This bill has passed the Senate, and since it has passed the Senate one or two other bills of the same character have been introduced. This boy contracted tuberculosis at West Point, and while the report undertakes to connect that with a fall or a kick from a horse, anybody who is familiar with tuberculosis knows that that probably had nothing to do with it; but he did contract tuberculosis. I believe he is at the Fort Bayard Military Tuberculosis Sanatorium. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] I think is in error in thinking that if this boy is put upon the retired list and recovers his health that will put him in the active service.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not mean that that would of itself, but it would be very much easier for him to get back into the service.

Mr. MANN. I would say that it would be just as difficult to get off the retired list into the service in the way of promotion as it is to get in from private life. However, I shall vote against the bill, though I am perfectly willing that the House, even with the membership that is here, shall determine its policy in reference to such matters, as to whether we shall put boys who physically fail at West Point permanently upon the retired list by special act of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall have to object. There have been a number of cases similar to this before Congress. I am perfectly willing to abide by the judgment of the House when the judgment of the House can be taken in the ordinary way in cases of this kind, but I am not willing to have the bill passed by unanimous consent as it would be now, because there would be no opportunity for discussion of the matter.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I have no desire to in any way prevent the House from discussing the matter. The facts are very simple.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that where we are considering legislation by unanimous consent, it is impossible or impracticable, at least, I will say to my friend, to go into a discussion of questions of policy. This is my view in regard to these matters.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit right there, I would not ask it of the House if it were setting a new precedent. The bill was not introduced by me. It was introduced by my colleague [Mr. FIELDS]. The boy is the son of a former Member of this House with whom the gentleman from Wyoming served. The bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. FIELDS]. I know personally of the facts and the report shows two cases that are identical, where action was taken by Congress, and it did not seem to me to be unreasonable to ask that the matter be brought up in this way. If it were a brand new case, and had never been done, I would agree with the gentleman's position, and if there was any dispute as to the facts—

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to my friend that I am somewhat familiar with the case, and there are certain features of it—and consideration for those interested in the matter—that appeal to me very strongly. I regret that I shall have to object to the bill upon that account.

Mr. SHERLEY. I hope the gentleman will confine himself to a vote against the bill and let the House determine the matter.

Mr. MONDELL. The trouble is that when we allow a bill to be taken up by unanimous consent under these circumstances, there never is, and in the nature of things there can not be, a full discussion of and expression of opinion on the policy involved. My opinion is that until a man has regularly entered into the service of the Government as a soldier or a sailor—has taken up military life and assumed, finally, all its obligations—the Government is under no responsibility to care for him.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will appreciate that under the law service in the academy is service in the Army, and it has been so determined.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that we have, I think, made the mistake of recognizing service in the Military Academy—and, I presume, in the Naval Academy—as service in computing length of service and pay. I think it is a mistake, and I thought it was a mistake at the time.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the gentleman knows it was never so intended by Congress, but that is the construction the Supreme Court has put upon it. Nobody ever dreamed of it for 40 years after the legislation was enacted.

Mr. MONDELL. I am glad to be enlightened by the gentleman from Illinois as to just how it happened to come about. My recollection is that we recognized it by legislation some little time ago.

Mr. MANN. Not originally. We stopped it by legislation some little time ago.

Mr. MONDELL. And then repealed the legislation whereby we stopped it.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether we repealed it; I do not think so, although I am not sure about that. The first retirement act went into effect in the thirties, and in the seventies or eighties the Supreme Court determined that service in the academies covered longevity pay.

Mr. MONDELL. I recall the conditions now to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. SHERLEY. I hope the gentleman will feel disposed to let the House vote on the matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming objects.

J. RICARDO DE BORJA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was H. J. Res. 265, authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point Mr. J. Ricardo de Borja, a citizen of Ecuador.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to permit Mr. J. Ricardo de Borja, a citizen of Ecuador, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and that the said J. Ricardo de Borja shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the course in the various departments of instruction, and that the said J. Ricardo de Borja shall not be admitted to the academy until he shall have passed the mental and physical examinations prescribed for candidates from the United States, and that he shall be immediately withdrawn if deficient in studies or conduct, and so recommended by the academic board: And provided further, That in the case of the said J. Ricardo de Borja the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that this is a Senate amendment on the Army bill. Does any gentleman here know?

Mr. McKENZIE. That is my recollection, that it is taken care of on the military appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over on the calendar, and if it was not taken care of we can probably get it up by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

S. S. YODER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11288) for the relief of S. S. Yoder.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to S. S. Yoder the sum of $1,000, which said sum was deposited with the proper authorities as a guaranty that the Washington, Spa Springs & Gretna Railroad would be constructed in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved February 18, 1907, and which provisions have been complied with.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated" and insert the words "the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will that accomplish the purpose all right?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is the judgment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. WOODS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10007) for the relief of William H. Woods.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $152.21 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the possession of the United States belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indian Tribes not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse William H. Woods for expenses incurred by him as assistant tribal attorney of the Chickasaw Indians between the date of December 31, 1913, and May 4, 1914, inclusive.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

NATHANIEL MONROE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1781) for the relief of Nathaniel Monroe.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Nathaniel Monroe, who was a private of Company B, First Regiment East Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 1st day of May, 18'3: Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or pension shall accrue to him prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS BAKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15718) for the relief of Thomas Baker.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let us have the bill reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Thomas Baker, who enlisted in the Army on the 14th day of May, 1861, serving as a private of Company G, Thirtieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, until the 21st day of September, 1861, and who later enlisted in the Twenty-second Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry on the 7th day of December, 1863, serving as a private until the 18th day of May, 1865, when he was honorably discharged, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the Army service of the United States on the 21st day of September, 1861: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue or be payable by virtue of this act, and that the pensionable status herein granted shall date from the approval of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JACOB B. MOORE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14679) for the relief of Jacob B. Moore.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let us have the bill reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $242.60 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in possession of the United States belonging to the Chickasaw Tribe of Indians not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse Jacob B. Moore, of Ardmore, Okla., for probate expenses incurred and paid by him in the performance of his duty as attorney for the Chickasaws under a contract between him and Douglas H. Johnston, governor of the Chickasaw Nation, approved by the President of the United States December 1, 1913.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "$242.60" and insert "$392.60."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some explanation of the bill and the amendment.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Well, the purpose of this bill is to pay to Jacob B. Moore—

Mr. MANN. It is to take money out of the Treasury, I know that.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma (continuing). A probate attorney, who contracted with the governor of the Chickasaw Nation to look after the probate affairs of the Chickasaw Indians. The governor, in drawing up the contract, was not an expert on departmental rules and regulations, and used language that did not include his office expenses, stenographer's expenses, telephone expenses, and some other expenses of this probate attorney. That contract existed for several months, and afterwards another contract was made which did include them, and the comptroller, perhaps correctly, refused to pay out this amount, which was intended to have been included in the original contract.

Mr. MANN. Well, now, let us see. We just passed a bill just like it, as far as that part is concerned, and I did not object to it, but I know I had a good deal of doubt about it. They made a contract with a man to do legal services. Now the man comes in and wants to be paid for his telephone services, rent of his desk—

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; rent of his office.

Mr. MANN. Oh, he probably only had a desk.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; he had an office.

Mr. MANN. Well, he had an office all the time, did he?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. He had an office.

Mr. MANN. Where is his office; was it in his hat? He did not change his office, did he?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Oh, yes; he did. He added to it.

Mr. MANN. He could pay the rent for himself. Did he have two offices?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. As I recall, he had two—or two rooms—and when he was appointed probate attorney he added another.

Mr. MANN. Oh, a third room; yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. And when he was in practice for himself, if the gentleman will permit me, he had his own business to look after. When he became probate attorney he ceased to take any other business—

Mr. MANN. I guess he did not cease to take other business—

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. How much pay did he get?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Two thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. MANN. He was not a very great lawyer if he did not take any other business.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. He was a good young lawyer.

Mr. MANN. I do not think he claims he did not take any other business. However, he is now claiming for the stenographer's fees, and office, telephone, and rent, and has sent the gentleman a bill—the gentleman has introduced it, to cover those expenses, $242.60—and when the bill is reported they report to give him $150 more. And I had the curiosity to go quite carefully into it and find out why they gave him $150 more. And I am not quite fully satisfied with my information; but, so far as I can find out, it is for stenographer's service after his contract expired.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No.

Mr. MANN. That is what the report says.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Then the report is in error.

Mr. MANN. That might happen. He had a contract which expired on June 30, 1914. That is what the report says.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Now, perhaps I understand what the gentleman means.

Mr. MANN. That was a contract that did not mention stenographer's services, though probably about to do so. It expired on June 30, 1914, and he sent the bill covering those expenses down to the end of June 30, 1914, and then he gets the committee to allow him $150 for stenographer's services for July, August, and September, 1914, after his contract had expired.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think I can explain it to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will need to in order to get the bill passed.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. This gentleman, Mr. Jacob B. Moore, submitted this matter to me and advised me that I would find an itemized statement of the account filed in the Indian Bureau, where it had been rejected by the comptroller. It seems that when I first received this account the allowance for stenographer was omitted, and on this I introduced the bill. The bill as introduced was sent to Mr. Moore, and Mr. Moore advised me it was $150 short; that I would find the other account in the archives of the Indian Bureau, which I did. When I found that bill and presented it to the committee, the committee amended the bill at my suggestion to include the $150, which is certainly as just an account as the other.

Mr. MANN. Let us get at facts in these cases. The contract which this attorney had expired June 30, 1914, did it not?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not remember the date. If the gentleman says so, I will assume that that is correct.

Mr. MANN. That is my note on it, and that is my recollection of it, and that is his statement of it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Then it must be correct.

Mr. MANN. And on June 30 the man was ill. If he paid out money to a stenographer while he was ill, I do not know what the stenographic services were for. He was not at his office; I do not know why the Government should pay him. He had no contract with the Government then.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object—

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The stenographer's fees, if they were paid, were for the stenographer's actual services. Whether they were for the time this probate attorney was sick, I do not know. But, even if they were, there had to be some one in the office to look after these matters for the Indians, and his stenographer did quite a good deal of his correspondence, and things of that kind, even in Mr. Moore's absence in the field, so I assume he continued to do so while he was sick.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that his contract was not running at that time.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. His contract has been running right along—perhaps not this contract, but a new contract was made at the expiration of the old one, to run right along until he resigned, for the reason that he was not able to pursue this office and neglect other business at the salary he was being paid.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what other contract he had, but here is the statement of Douglas H. Johnston, who made the contract for the Indians, to be found on top of page 6 of the report. This is the contract:

That the said party of the first part, as governor of the Chickasaw Nation, and in behalf of said nation, and acting under the authority vested in him as such governor and in accordance with section 26 of the act of Congress approved April 26, 1906, hereby contracts with, retains, and employs the party of the second part, whose employment shall date from approval of this contract and continue until June 30, 1914, subject to the approval of the President of the United States, as provided by section 28 of the act of Congress of April 26, 1906, hereinabove referred to.

I do not know what other contracts he may have, but here is the contract upon which this report is based, which ended June 30, 1914. I can not see any reason why we should pay stenographers' fees after June 30, 1914, based on that contract, and that is the only evidence that there is before us.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman call my attention to the statement where it is set out that the stenographer's fees were for a time after?

Mr. MANN. On page 5 of the report, where it says:

That the following expenses, to wit:
Stenographer service for July, 1914.....	$50
Stenographer service for August, 1914.....	50
Stenographer service for September, 1914.....	50

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. This man Moore has been in the employ of the Indian Bureau ever since his contract was first made.

Mr. MANN. That may all be. He has been in luck, then.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Until about 60 days ago, when he resigned. He has used this stenographer. He has been a splendid probate attorney, and the gentleman will find that he really has done good work in protecting the Indians.

Mr. MANN. I have been an attorney myself, before coming to Congress, and frequently have been employed, sometimes on an annual salary, by this concern or that; but I never did, as far as I am concerned, send a bill to any of the people who had retained me, either for office rent, stenographic service, or telephone service. I paid that as one of the office expenses; but it may be that this gentleman ought not to. I can see no reason why we should pay him for July, August, and September, based upon a contract which expired June 30. Now, he makes his own statement. I have read his statement. If he is a good attorney, he ought to make a statement that would show the reason for the money coming to him.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. He is a good attorney, and he may not have had all these records before him.

Mr. MANN. He had the contract before him.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Perhaps he did not know that it would come under the scrutiny of the gentleman's eye.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps he thought it would not come under the scrutiny of anybody.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. This is the same kind of bill that was passed a few minutes ago, and it is the same rate of compensation that is allowed to all probate attorneys.

Mr. MANN. None of them has gotten it. They could not get it under this kind of a contract.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Perhaps I have not made myself quite clear. This probate attorney served before the time we had a specific law for the probate attorneys. He served under a contract permissible under the old act. It was necessary to have them, and there was no law for their payment, so he made a contract with the chief of the Chickasaw Nation. The contract was approved by the President. Now, as the gentleman will recall, some two or three years ago we passed a law providing for probate attorneys, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appoint them without the necessity of going into contracts, and this probate attorney has served under that law since that time. Prior to that time he served under a contract with the chief of the tribe. I hope that the gentleman will let this go through. This is a very just and deserving claim.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman does not seem to get the point. Here is a man who makes his own statement. I have read it in the Record, signed by J. B. Moore. He says: "These are expenses incurred while I was employed as assistant tribal attorney under contract with Gov. Johnson, dated November 17, 1913." That is clear. Then I read the contract, which is also in the Record of that date. It says that the contract expired June 30, 1914. Then I find that the items of expense occurred after June 30, 1914. An attorney who does not know any better how to get up his case than that is not much of an attorney.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Perhaps he made a mistake about that, as we all do occasionally.

Mr. MANN. Of course I am not responsible for his mistakes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman is a deserving man, and he has done more work perhaps than any other probate attorney among the Five Civilized Tribes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the child-labor bill, including some remarks by Raymond Robins.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the child-labor bill, including some remarks by Raymond Robins. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the farm-loan act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the farm-loan act. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JOHN DOWD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15725), to confirm the entry of John Dowd.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LINTHICUM). Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute for this bill S. 6013, which is on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to substitute the bill S. 6013 for this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Is the Senate bill there?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. They are identical except for the transposition of one word to correct the phraseology.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to issue United States Government patent on the homestead entry of John Dowd, known as Boise 06054, for the following-described land:

Lot 5 of section 34, township 3 north, range 4 west, and lots 2 and 3 and southeast quarter of northwest quarter, section 3, township 2 north, range 4 west, Boise meridian, Boise land district, Idaho, containing 147.86 acres: Provided, That the said John Dowd or his transferee shall pay to the United States Government the commutation price of $184.83.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the House bill of similar tenor will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerk will report the next bill.

WILLIAM H. INGLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16744) to validate the homestead entry of William H. Ingle for certain land in Colorado.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have Senate bill 6331 taken from the Speaker's table and considered in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That homestead entry 014316, Sterling series, made by William H. Ingle for the southeast quarter of section 5, township 1 north, range 49 west, sixth principal meridian, Colorado, be, and it is hereby, validated and permitted to remain intact, in the same manner as though said Ingle had not, in the year 1873, made a homestead entry for 160 acres and perfected title thereto.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I wish the Clerk would report the first line after the enacting clause again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the first line after the enacting clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 3: That homestead entry 014316.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the House bill will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ADELAIDE L. GIBBS, WIDOW OF ROBERT M. GIBBS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16116) for the relief of the widow of Robert M. Gibbs.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JAMES H. C. MANN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8970) for the relief of James H. C. Mann.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws James H. C. Mann shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as private of Company D, Seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, on the 19th day of November, 1862.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FRED E. JACKSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4517) for the relief of Fred E. Jackson.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman withhold the objection?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. This bill was reported by my colleague [Mr. SWIFT]. It was introduced by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS], who went thoroughly over the matter with the committee, and, although there is no out-and-out recommendation from the department, the facts as presented to the committee by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS], supported by affidavits, seem to make a sufficiently strong case for the bill to be reported by the committee. When it first came up before the committee I opposed it—

Mr. MANN. Suppose the accident had happened in 1842 or 1792. Does the gentleman think the bill ought to be reported?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I do not think that enters into the merits of the case.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think it does. It is something that happened in 1892. It is 24 years old. Now, of course, it is pretty hard to know just what to do. The gentleman would not answer the question that I put to him. Suppose it had happened in 1792.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I do not think that has any bearing on the merits.

Mr. MANN. I think it has, and I am not willing to go back 24 years on these claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

ANDREW M. DUNLOP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2204) for the relief of Andrew M. Dunlop.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

J. B. PATTERSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14345) to reimburse J. B. Patterson, postmaster of Lacon, Morgan County, Ala., for certain postage stamps stolen.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

HEIRS OF ALBERT SIDNEY JOHNSTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5441) for the relief of the heirs of Albert Sidney Johnston.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

MRS. JENNIE BUTTNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13820) for the relief of Mrs. Jennie Buttner.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Jennie Buttner, widow of the late Morris S. Buttner, out of funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,380, as compensation to her for the loss of her husband, who, on the 27th day of February, 1916, died of typhus fever contracted while in discharge of his official duties as mounted inspector of the United States Immigration Service.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MILWAUKEE BRIDGE CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14571) for the relief of the Milwaukee Bridge Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Milwaukee Bridge Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., a corporation of the State of Wisconsin, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $640, the same being the amount of liquidated damages deducted from the contract price for failure to complete within the stipulated time the work of constructing and erecting lock gates at Hurricane Shoals, Trinity River, Tex., under contract dated December 22, 1915, between the Milwaukee Bridge Co. and the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 1, strike out "fifteen" and insert "thirteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ESTATE OF JAMES A. CHAMBERLAIN.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar No. 332 (H. R. 13106), for the relief of the trustee and parties who are now or may hereafter become interested in the estate of James A. Chamberlain under the terms of his will.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar No. 332. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem, in favor of the trustee and parties who are now or may hereafter become interested in the estate of James A. Chamberlain, of Boston, Mass., under the terms of his will, the following United States 6 per cent coupon bonds, issued under the act of March 3, 1865 (consols of 1865), namely: Bond No. 56743, for $100, included in the fifty-third call; bond No. 17626, for $500, included in the forty-ninth call; bond No. 83794, for $1,000, included in the fifty-third call, with interest from July 1, 1871, to the dates on which said bonds ceased to bear interest, said bonds and interest coupons attached, dated January 1, 1872, and subsequently, which are outstanding, having been lost by the said Chamberlain on or about January 5, 1872: Provided, That all the parties in interest shall first file in the Treasury a bond in a penal sum equal to double the amount of principal of said bonds and the interest accrued thereon, with good and sufficient securities, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, with condition to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the redemption of said bonds and the payment of the accrued interest thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "to," strike out the words "redeem, in favor of the trustee and parties who are now or may hereafter become interested in the estate of James A. Chamberlain, of Boston, Mass., under the terms of his will," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "pay to Ferdinand M. Holmes, trust officer of the Old Colony Trust Co., Boston, Mass., which institution is trustee of the estate of James A. Chamberlain, the sum of $1,000, which sum is for the redemption of."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, in line 10, in the committee amendment, after the figures "$1,000," to insert the following language:

out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to insert after the figures "$1,000" in the committee amendment the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 16, after the word "that," strike out the word "all," and after the word "the" strike out the word "parties" and insert the word "party."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the committee is a little in error about this. This is a case where bonds have been lost. They belong to the trust officer, Ferdinand M. Holmes, and the provision that we always put in is that the parties who get the money on account of these lost bonds shall furnish a bond, and the committee in this case has made it read "that the party in interest shall first file in the Treasury a bond." I think the bill should provide that Ferdinand M. Holmes shall file a bond. If we propose to pay Mr. Holmes there is no reason why the Treasury Department should ascertain who the party in interest is. I suppose that the real party in interest is some one else, but we should provide that the man to whom we furnish the money shall furnish the bond.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to accepting an amendment to that effect, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. MANN. Then we should strike out the word "all," which is one of the committee amendments, in line 16, and the word "parties," but I do not want to insert the word "party" in place of it. I therefore ask unanimous consent to amend line 16, page 2, so that it shall read: "Provided, That Ferdinand M. Holmes shall first file."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to amend line 16, page 2, so that it shall read: "Provided, That Ferdinand M. Holmes shall first file," in lieu of the committee amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 19, after the word "sufficient," strike out the word "securities" and insert the word "surety."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendments as modified by the gentleman from Illinois.

The committee amendments as modified were agreed to.

The bill as amendment was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BARKENTINE "MABEL I. MEYERS."

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11129) for the relief of the owners of the barkentine Mabel I. Meyers and her master and crew, and for the relief of the owners of cargo of molasses late on board said barkentine, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment. The Senate amendment reads as follows:

At the end of section 1 insert the words: "Provided, That no award or judgment shall be made for prospective profits."

Senator WEEKS has called me up and is very anxious to get this matter considered. I therefore make this request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11129, with a Senate amendment thereto. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, before the request is granted I ask that the bill be read.

Mr. MANN. This is a House bill with a Senate amendment. It has already passed the House.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Phillips shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a corporal in Company B, Sixteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, on the 20th day of October, 1863: Provided, That no pension, bounty, or allowance shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN BERRIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1867) granting an honorable discharge to John Berrin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John Berrin, late of Company F, Thirtieth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from said organization, and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to grant him a certificate of honorable discharge.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers John Berrin, who was a private of Company F, Thirtieth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 12th day of March, 1865: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowance shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GILLET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by printing a statement issued by the officers of the National Civil Service Reform League, consisting largely of correspondence with officers of the league and the Civil Service Commission.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CARL VROOMAN.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] asks permission to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, on the 9th day of August my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN], in discussing the report of the conferees on the Army bill, referring to the Mexican situation, said:

I was very much surprised to read—I think in the morning paper—a statement said to have been made by Mr. Carl Vrooman, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, who, the article stated, was to be in charge of the speakers' bureau at the Democratic headquarters in Chicago, giving as the reason why we had not intervened in Mexico that there were 400,000 Japanese in Mexico, and that we were afraid to get into war—

And so forth.

I am requested and authorized by the distinguished Assistant Secretary of Agriculture to say that he does not expect to take charge of the speakers' bureau in Chicago during the national campaign, nor to be in any way connected with the headquarters of the national committee in Chicago or elsewhere. He expects to stay here during this campaign—at his post of duty—discharging the duties of the high office he now holds. I am requested by Mr. Vrooman to say that at no time has he ever said, under any circumstances, that there were 400,000 Japanese in Mexico, or any number of Japanese in Mexico, and that the statement attributed to him in some paper to which my colleague from Illinois referred in his remarks on the floor on day before yesterday he never made, and the statement is entirely without any foundation in fact.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I referred to the statement the other day on newspaper authority. I have no doubt it was erroneous as to Mr. Vrooman. But where is Mr. Vrooman to-day? Is he over here in the department?

Mr. RAINEY. I do not know where he is to-day, but I know where he was yesterday.

Mr. MANN. Is he over in the department to-day?

Mr. RAINEY. At this hour yesterday he was in his office. I have not been at the department to-day. I do not know where he is to-day.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says he is not going to make any political speeches.

Mr. RAINEY. I did not say that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said he was going to stay here at his post of duty. He can not do both. I did not interrupt the gentleman, by the way.

Mr. RAINEY. I expect the gentleman, Mr. Vrooman, will make political speeches, as my colleague from Illinois will.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the post of duty of the gentleman's colleague will be in making political speeches, and Mr. Vrooman's post of duty is to be in Washington, in the Department of Agriculture. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I would not have said anything about that if my colleague had not said that Mr. Vrooman stated to him that he was going to be here at his post of duty all this campaign. He will not be. He is a good talker. He will be out in the campaign, and that is the most service, probably, he can render to the country. I do not think he can render much there, although he is a fine gentleman. But why was not Mr. Vrooman candid with my colleague from Illinois and tell who did make this statement that was attributed to Mr. Vrooman? Does he not know?

Mr. RAINEY. He did not make it, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Oh, his brother made it, and his brother is higher up in politics than he is.

Mr. RAINEY. Oh, his brother is a Republican and has always been.

Mr. MANN. His brother is a Democratic politician, if newspaper statements are to be taken for truth. They are not always to be so taken. Undoubtedly Mr. Carl Vrooman knew, and if he did not tell my colleague, he was not very frank about it. He knew who made the statement.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. The statement that I denied on behalf of Mr. Vrooman was that he made the statement my colleague attributed to him day before yesterday. Now my colleague admits that it was a newspaper statement to which he referred.

Mr. MANN. I said then that it was a newspaper statement, as my colleague would say if he wanted to be at all fair. I said the other day I did not think he had made the statement.

Mr. RAINEY. You said so then, and you say so now, in order to be fair, that it was a newspaper statement; but you say now that you know there is no truth in it, and no foundation for it, and you did not say so then.

Mr. MANN. I do not know now that there is no truth in it and no foundation for it.

Mr. RAINEY. It is so hard to follow the gentleman that I will not attempt to do it.

Mr. MANN. It is a good deal easier to follow me than it is to follow the gyrations of my colleague.

Mr. RAINEY. But you will find that during this campaign Mr. Vrooman will not be connected with any headquarters of any national committee.

Mr. MANN. I was told a moment ago that he is out making a campaign speech to-day. Just while my colleague is telling us that Mr. Vrooman says with virtuous indignation, "I shall always be at my post of duty during this campaign," he is out making a speech now.

Mr. RAINEY. If he is making a campaign speech to-day he is making a good one, and in a most excellent cause, we think, and I hope he will keep it up.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLOAN. I noted what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] said about the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture being in Washington yesterday. If that is true, I regret it very much, because for the last two weeks the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Carl Vrooman, has been billed to deliver a political speech to-day in my district at Stuart, where also my colleague [Mr. REAVIS] and possibly Mr. WALSH will meet him and discuss the national issues of the day. If Mr. Vrooman has been unable to be present and to deliver the political speech to which my people had their ears attuned, to be delivered on this day of grace, August 11, 1916, I very much regret it.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on Private Calendar No. 405, which has passed the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on Private Calendar No. 405. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JOHN P. CHESLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8945) for the relief of John P. Chesley.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers John P. Chesley, who was a private in Company G, Thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 12th day of January, 1863: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowances shall be held and considered as accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BENJAMIN R. BUFFINGTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5182) requiring the Secretary of War to issue an honorable discharge to Benjamin R. Buffington.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

WILLIAM W. FINEREN.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar No. 257 (H. R. 2601), a bill for the relief of William W. Fineren.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar No. 257. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this is a case of personal injury where a man has in effect already been paid the amount that he would have received under the general compensation law if that had covered his case. Now, where a man has been paid once under the compensation law, we have invariably refused to pay him a second time, and I do not think the gentleman from Florida, one of the oldest and most distinguished Members of this House, going out of the House much to the regret of all the Members in it [applause], should ask us to set a bad precedent that may cost the Government untold hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman where the evidence is that he has been paid at all? If so, I certainly should not press the claim again.

Mr. MANN. He was given leave of absence with pay. On page 3 of the report in the last Congress occurs this statement:

As all his absences on account of the injury have been on the status of leave with pay, either sick leave or annual leave, he has already in this way received the full measure of compensation which the compensation act would have given him—

And so forth. Now, unless we have some general policy, we are lost. In recent years we have as a new thing adopted the policy of paying by special act for the personal injuries where the general law did not cover them, and paying the same amount that the man would have received if his case had been covered by the general law. Of course that is only a year's salary. It is not large. It is no compensation to a man who loses an eye or a leg or an arm, or who gets crushed in the ribs, or mashed up, to be paid a year's salary. Nothing can compensate him, as far as that is concerned. But unless it has some policy, a legislative body is lost. Now, we pass the general compensation law which only covered certain classes of employment that were supposed to be hazardous. Since then we have adopted the policy that if a man was actually injured in some class of employment which was not considered hazardous, the proof of his injury was sufficient proof that it was hazardous, and we have paid him the same amount that we would have paid him if he had been covered by the general law. We adopted the general law so we would not have special cases. If we start in now and every time a man is allowed some amount under the general law, pass a special bill to pay him more, we shall be lost, and the Government Treasury will be depleted. I do not see how we can allow such things.

I objected to every one of these bills coming up allowing a second compensation.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object until he has heard the statement I desire to make. I want to repeat again that there has been no compensation whatever paid to this man for the injury received by him. The gentleman's claim that he has received such compensation is, as I understand it, based upon the fact that while he was on leave, and on sick leave at that most of the time, undergoing surgical operations in an effort to obtain relief from the troubles this injury caused, his salary went on. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, this is not compensation. Mr. Fineren was at the time, April, 1905, in the employ of the Government as a junior engineer in the Engineer Corps of the Army. He had gone under orders from his superior to Guilford Courthouse battle ground, North Carolina, where he had been sent by the department to superintend the erection of two monuments, one to Gen. Francis Nash, the other to Gen. William Davidson, both distinguished officers in the Revolutionary War. While engaged in that work, and while standing on a scaffold about 20 feet from the ground, a large stone fell, without any negligence on his part, and broke the scaffold, throwing Mr. Fineren to the ground. On falling a piece of the scaffold struck him in the head, causing a fracture of the skull. At the same time he received other serious and permanent injuries, from which he has suffered ever since and from which he will continue to suffer as long as he lives. It was found that the fractured part of the skull was pressing on his brain, and an operation was had by trepanning in an effort to relieve him, but without success. From this skull fracture and a further injury to his spine epilepsy resulted, and this his doctors think incurable. In all he has undergone some three or four surgical operations in efforts to relieve the trouble growing out of those injuries, and each time, of course, he was off on leave, with his salary going on.

The War Department generously, as it should have, permitted his pay to continue. Now, that is the compensation my friend has in mind, for Mr. Fineren has received no other. During all these years—that is, from 1905 until now—Mr. Fineren has been absent only 140 days. At least that was the case when the reports on this bill were made. He was absent only 49 days at the time of the original injury, when he went back to his work. He had a family to support and he no doubt felt that he could not afford to be away longer from his work. As a matter of fact, he ought to have taken a longer time, which the department would no doubt have granted him if he had requested it. Everyone, from the Secretary of War down, the Chief of Engineers, the Judge Advocate General, and several others who have passed upon this matter have all agreed that this bill should be passed. I introduced the bill for $5,000, and some of the officials have said that the entire amount ought to be allowed. The committee saw proper, however, to recommend the payment to this unfortunate man an amount equal to only one year's salary. I have heard read and noted the passage of several bills here to-day without objection from anyone, and I risk nothing in saying that none had any more merit than this one. Indeed, I will say that if there is a meritorious bill before this House among those designed to compensate for personal injuries, this is one of the very best, and I hope that in the interest of fairness and justice the gentleman will not object to its consideration.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if this man had not already received compensation for a year's pay, I would be in favor of passing the bill and giving him compensation, but he has already received compensation amounting to a year's pay, as stated by the War Department in several reports made to Congress.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have not found that he has received any compensation except in the way of salary.

Mr. MANN. For instance, after narrating the fact, stating that the man had received one year's pay, Maj. Ladue, of the Corps of Engineers, says:

But this appears to be a case where the measure of relief established by the compensation act is entirely inadequate.

Gen. Crowder, the Judge Advocate General, practically says the same thing, and because this man is an officer of the War Department they have been inclined to waive the rule in his case, but we can not waive the rule in one case and enforce it in the next.

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; here is what the Judge Advocate General says. I read from the last paragraph of his report:

Mr. Fineren has not lost any pay on account of the accident, and has been absent, including both annual and sick leave, only 140 days in over 8 years for medical treatment of his injuries; he has been able to continue, though with much physical suffering and mental anxiety, in the employment of the Government and to perform certain duties quite satisfactorily. He has, therefore, continued on a status of pay during the entire period in question.

Now, it has been three years since this report was made and he has been at work all of the time when not sick. He is doing the best he can to perform his duties, and the reports show that even in his present condition he is faithful and in a degree efficient. Yet at any time when at work or going along the street he may be stricken with an epileptic convulsion, as is often the case with him. He may thus be incapacitated at any moment from performing his duties, but nevertheless when able he goes on with his work, receiving no compensation except his salary, and will receive nothing to compensate him for this injury unless this bill passes. I repeat that if there is a bill on this calendar that ought to receive favorable consideration it is this one.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I do not know how much compensation he may have received, except the statement of his superior officer that he has received a year's compensation.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is the way he has received it. They did not cut off his salary when he was sick in the hospital, and in no other way has he received anything.

Mr. MANN. What is the difference how he received it if he got a year's pay allowed while not working for the Government?

Mr. SPARKMAN. But it was not a year's pay; he was only paid for 140 days in all when he was not at work, 49 days when first injured and 91 days afterwards and down to July, 1914, when the last report was made. He may have been sick since, but there is nothing to show.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am not mistaken. I am sure I am correct. He never has been paid a cent except his monthly salary.

Mr. MANN. I read to the gentleman before—possibly he does not believe the report—where Maj. Ladue, of the Corps of Engineers, upon whose statement the whole claim is based, said:

As all his absences on account of the injury have been on the status of leave with pay—either sick leave or annual leave—he has already in this way received the full measure of compensation which the compensation act would have given him.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is exactly what I said—in that way that is by way of monthly salary. Here is what Maj. Ladue says:

Since his reemployment in this district he has been absent 91 working days for treatment of injuries due to the accident, of which 54 days have been charged as sick leave and 37 days as annual leave. None of these absences since his employment in this district have been without pay.

If the injury had occurred after the passage of the compensation act of May 30, 1908, and if Mr. Fineren's case had been held to come within the provisions of the act, he would have been entitled to full pay at the rate he was receiving at the time of the accident for any period of disability resulting therefrom, not exceeding one year. As all his absences on account of the injury have been on the status of leave with pay—either sick leave or annual leave—he has already in this way received the full measure of compensation which the compensation act would have given him, except for the loss of such annual leave as he might otherwise have had if it had not been used for the purpose of securing treatment for his injury.

Now, that is the way he has been paid, and it is the only compensation he has received. I quote paragraphs 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the report of Gen. E. H. Crowder, Judge Advocate General, dated July 9, 1914, which sufficiently, I think, sets forth the whole matter. This part of the report is as follows:

2. It appears from the papers in reference that Junior Engineer William W. Fineren was employed as acting inspector on contract work at $115 per month in the United States Engineer office, Wilmington, N. C., when on August 11, 1905, he was very seriously and permanently injured by falling from a scaffold at the monument to Gen. Francis Nash, which was being built by J. E. Nowlan, contractor, in the Guilford battle field, near Greensboro, N. C. While he was standing on the scaffold a stone which was being hoisted into place fell, breaking the plank on which he was standing and causing him to fall some 19 feet, bruising his legs and hips and cutting an ugly scalp wound on the back of his head and breaking his skull. These injuries have resulted in three surgical operations. The first operation, in June, 1913, consisted in puncturing his spinal cord and testing the extract therefrom, which disease caused by the injury four expert brain surgeons decided incurable; the second, on August 13, 1913, was on intestinal operation to remove an obstruction caused by cohesion and inflammation, the result of an external blow received several years previous; and the third operation, on January 5, 1914, was to open his skull and remove a bony growth. From his accompanying statement it appears that these operations and other medical treatment from the date of the accident in 1905 to June 22, 1914, cost Mr. Fineren $1,049.45.

3. The district engineer officer of Wilmington, N. C., in the third indorsement hereon, dated June 13, 1914, reports that Fineren was employed from February 20, 1904, to January 14, 1907, when he was furloughed without pay to accept a similar position in the Tampa (Fla.) engineer office; that on account of his injuries he was absent 49 days with pay, from August 12 to September 30, 1905; that he had some defect in his eyesight when first employed—one eye being worse than the other—and wore powerful glasses to overcome it, and that his sight became noticeably worse after the accident; that at the time of the accident he was receiving $115 per month, and that at the time he left the Wilmington district, two years after the date of the accident, it was not known that the effects of his injury were permanent.

4. The district engineer officer at Jacksonville, Fla., where Fineren is now employed, in the fifth indorsement hereon, dated June 16, 1914, reports that since Mr. Fineren's employment in his district, from January, 1907, he has been absent 91 working days for treatment of injuries due to the accident, of which 54 days have been charged as sick leave and 37 days as annual leave; that none of the absences since January, 1907, have been without pay; and added that—

“Without having actually lost pay as a result of the accident, Mr. Fineren has been put to considerable expense for necessary medical and surgical treatment, besides the permanent injury to his faculties, the constant discomfort and intermittent suffering and ever-present anxiety as to the future that he has suffered and is still suffering. He is an efficient and conscientious employee, deserving of all reasonable considerations, and, in my opinion, it would be a just and generous act on the part of the United States to grant him a measure of special relief as contemplated by this bill.”

“Mr. Fineren's accident has not actually disabled him from the performance of his duties, though it has permanently affected both sight and hearing and has produced other permanent ill effects, and permanent disability from the performance of duty, or even death, may ultimately result.”

The Chief of Engineers in the sixth indorsement hereon, dated July 3, 1914, states that the measure of relief to be accorded Mr. Fineren will have to be decided on its merits, and in view of the circumstances of the case he does not regard the amount of $5,000 proposed in the bill as an excessive one, and recommends its passage.

5. In the sense that the injury to Mr. Fineren occurred while in the performance of his official duty and was not due to negligence or misconduct on his part, and that the injury continued more than 15 days, the claim is a meritorious one; but as the accident occurred prior to the passage of the workmen's compensation act of May 30, 1908, which in effect is not retroactive, and as he was not employed as an artisan or laborer as is required by that act, his case does not fall within the provisions of said law.

The relief contemplated by the present bill exceeds that allowed for permanent injuries covered by the compensation act, supra, which act this office has frequently advised should be accepted as the means of determining, at the time it was passed, the proper amount to be paid injured employees.

6. Mr. Fineren has not lost any pay on account of the accident and has been absent, including both annual and sick leave, only 140 days in over 8 years for medical treatment of his injuries; he has been able to continue, though with much physical suffering and mental anxiety, in the employment of the Government and to perform certain duties quite satisfactorily. He has, therefore, continued on a status of pay during the entire period in question. However, as recommended by the Chief of Engineers, I think that so serious an injury as in this case, which results in a partial and possibly total loss of sight, an incurable disease to the spine, and causes partial deafness, might well be compensated by an amount greater than that allowed by said act, and in view of the large cost to Fineren for surgical operations and medical treatment I am of the opinion that, notwithstanding his continuous employment and in accordance with its practice in cases of serious injuries of this character, the department should recommend the passage of a bill carrying a sum for his relief equal to the maximum amount allowed by the statute; that is, one year's pay at the rate he was receiving at the time of the accident.

E. H. CROWDER,
Judge Advocate General.

In this report it is distinctly said that on account of his injuries he—Mr. Fineren—was furloughed at different times—first, when the injury occurred, for 49 days; second, 54 days on sick leave; and, third, 37 days on annual leave. During all these times he was paid his salary, as he should have been and as is customary under similar circumstances. That is the compensation to which Maj. LaDue refers, and is the only compensation he has received. Certainly the gentleman upon reflection will not consider that as a proper part of any compensation he should receive for such an injury. But, as an offset even to that, it is shown in the report that Mr. Fineren has paid out of his pocket the sum of $1,049.45 for treatment and other necessary expenses incident to his injuries received at the time stated.

It would be cruel, in my judgment, to charge Mr. Fineren up now with the amount received for the times he was furloughed on pay, as just stated. According to the report of Maj. Stickle, under whom Mr. Fineren was working at the time of the injury, he was receiving $115 a month, or about $3.85 a day. This for 140 days would amount to $539, while as against that he has paid out, as a result of these injuries, $1,049.45 for doctors' and surgeons' bills and other expenses. But, as I have said, the amount allowed him when he was furloughed with pay, 37 days on annual and the balance of the time on sick leave, should not be charged up against him.

While he is now doing his work fairly well, he is liable at any time to become a physical wreck, and with himself and family a charge upon somebody. Some of the officers have held that he should receive the full amount of $5,000 provided in the bill I have introduced.

We passed a bill through the House the other day under the terms of which, according to my recollection, if it had been made retroactive, would have given him a larger sum than this bill as amended provides. Hence I say he should receive that amount at least, and that if there is any measure here that has merit this is among the number.

Before concluding I wish to thank my friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], for his very kind personal remarks regarding my term of service here, and my early retirement from this body, as also the House for the generous manner in which those remarks were received, both of which I can assure him and other Members here I appreciate more than I have words to express.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to object.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the gentleman permit the bill to go over without prejudice?

Mr. MANN. It goes over without prejudice anyhow.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill H. R. 11745, being Calendar No. 313 on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent to return to No. 313 on the Private Calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

S. E. BENNETT.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11745) for the relief of S. E. Bennett.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the bill to which I objected awhile ago?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Yes; this is the same bill we were discussing earlier this morning.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, there are several things in this little bill I am perfectly willing to concede—that Dr. Bennett was working under orders of the Secretary of Agriculture, that he did his duty well, and that he expended this money out of his pocket. I am willing to concede he ought to be reimbursed, but the ground on which I based my objection this morning was this: The department everlastingly, constantly, and continuously finds some sort of some kind of emergency in violation of law to authorize and direct its employees to do this and to do that. I have never objected to those bills on the Private Calendar before of that kind and of that nature, but from this day on it is going to take something besides the foot-and-mouth disease to get me to yield upon these objections. This is why we have got auditors to pass upon these accounts and see whether or not the account is right and to see whether they are made in pursuance of law, whether there is any power and authority in the law to allow them. That is why we have a comptroller to-day who is the last word upon these things, and if the department has any doubt of its power under the law to expend appropriations, it takes a very short period of time to let the comptroller determine that question and say whether or not it has authority. But without doing that in the first instance, relying upon the good nature and good will of Congress, it proceeds by letter and by telegram, no matter where the employee is, to send him out and put him at work, saying, "We will put your claim through Congress; we will get your allowance back." So I desire again to repeat, so far as I am concerned, I will be here unless I am sick, and it is going to take something besides an ordinary case of foot-and-mouth disease to get me to yield on claims of this kind, because I will not do it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Indiana has a great deal of common sense and I am very fond of his exercise of it. If this man in Chicago had been ordered down to Indiana—Chicago borders right on Indiana—he would have been allowed all this under the law and no question about it. If he had been an inspector down at Hammond, Ind., and if he had been ordered up to Chicago he would have been allowed this allowance and more without any question about it. Now, the circumstances being such if he was in Chicago and they wanted him to do this extra work, and very unusual circumstances, does not the gentleman think after all the Secretary of Agriculture was probably to be excused for putting him at work at once if the emergency work had to be done without stopping to think that Congress in its wisdom had provided that if you did the work in a town, Chicago being a big city, you could not be allowed anything extra, but if you stepped across the border line a few feet into another town you would be allowed more than that?

Mr. COX. But the hypothetical case the gentleman has made does not apply here.

Mr. MANN. I think it does.

Mr. COX. It does not apply here.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt they thought they had the power—

Mr. COX. That is the very criticism I am making, that most of the departments think they have that much power and when they come to look at it they find they do not have the power when it was easily within the power of the department to see in the first instance whether they had the power by submitting the question to the comptroller.

Mr. MANN. Well, it is not so easy to find out the opinion of the Comptroller of the Treasury—

Mr. COX. He has got to decide it; he can not postpone these things—

Mr. MANN. Frequently he does postpone, and in the meanwhile the foot-and-mouth disease would not stop.

Mr. COX. A word more. I have great confidence in the comptroller's office. I think it is one of the liveliest private-headed bureaus in all these departments, and in my judgment when it O. K.'s a bill it is usually right, but the trouble is Congress does not follow it.

When the comptroller decides an item against an employee or against any other person they will come to Congress and we will pass it. Now, I am not going to object at this time, but I do not believe that this claim has any merit in it at all, and what I am saying I am saying with the hope that some of the departments will see it, whether they take warning or not. I shall exercise my right on the floor of the House hereafter in objecting to bills of this kind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $133.60 to S. E. Bennett, veterinary inspector, to reimburse him for expenditures made by him under the direction of the chief clerk of the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

PENSIONS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill S. 6369, granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Fred Burnstead, late of Company A, Twenty-third Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Mary A. Johnson, widow of John Johnson, late of Company H, Twenty-fourth Regiment United States Infantry, and Troop K, Ninth Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said John Johnson until they reach the age of 16 years.

The name of Alan P. Wilson, late of Company I, Second Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary L. Munyon, widow of William F. Munyon, alias William Aneur, late of the United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Walter B. Hockett, late of Company M, Second Regiment Oregon Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Elizabeth Dunn Howe, widow of Walter Howe, late brigadier general United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Hepsie C. Holway, widow of Wesley O. Holway, late chaplain, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Joshua E. Howard, late of Company C, Second Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Anna Neff, widow of William L. Neff, late of Band Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Ione I. Bell, widow of William H. Bell, late of United States ship Yantic, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Hillary M. Wilder, late surgeon, First Regiment North Carolina Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of John O. McMahon, late of Company F, Thirty-third Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin H. Meadows, late of Company E, Second Regiment North Carolina Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Charles H. Dorman, late of Company A of Instruction, General Service, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jotham B. Jacobs, late of Troop H, Eighth Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

JAMES CAMPBELL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5386) for the relief of James Campbell.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws James Campbell, who enlisted in the name of John Conley on December 19, 1864, at New Haven, Conn., and who was assigned as a private in Company A, First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry, shall be held and considered to have served with that organization, and to have been honorably discharged on April 27, 1865, at Alexandria, Va.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, lines 9 and 10, strike out, after the word "discharged," "on April 27, 1865, at Alexandria, Va." and insert in lieu thereof "from the military service of the United States on June 10, 1865."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5427) referring certain claims against the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Court of Claims.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. CONNELLY rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CONNELLY] is recognized.

DR. E. V. HAILMAN.

Mr. CONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill No. 127 on the Private Calendar, H. R. 3145. This was a bill that was included in the omnibus objection this morning, and I hope, if I may be able to call the attention of the House to the matter, that I can induce the Members of the House to permit it to be passed.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have been over this matter very carefully. We had it up for discussion one day in the House and took some time on it. I shall object in the end. There is no merit in the bill.

Mr. CONNELLY. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CONNELLY. I think we had only a short discussion before, if the gentleman will pardon me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CONNELLY] asks unanimous consent to return to calendar No. 127, H. R. 3145, for the relief of Dr. E. V. Hailman. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CONNELLY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this bill, as I understand it, had its origin in an unfortunate occurrence out at Schurz, Nev. Dr. E. V. Hailman was superintendent of the Walker River Indian School. On account of his position he was called upon to attend an Indian child, and the child did not live. The grandfather became offended at the doctor and went down to the reservation and set the house afire in three places. When the doctor came out to put out the fire the Indian shot him with a 30-30 revolver through the shoulder and lungs. The doctor was taken to the hospital and spent several months there recovering.

He is a poor man. He asks nothing for his loss of time, nothing for his sufferings. He only asked that his hospital fees be paid. He is asking for nothing more than what would appear to be right. The supervisor of the Indian agency at Reno says the bill should be paid, the Secretary of the Interior says that it should be paid, the Indian Department here at Washington approves it, and the Committee on Claims of this House has indorsed and placed it upon the calendar. I believe the bill is right, is just, and is meritorious, and I hope that no one will object to the present consideration of the same.

Mr. MANN. Well, I discussed this once before very briefly. I think there is absolutely no merit in the bill whatever. I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes on the first day after the House meets next Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes on the first day the House meets after next Tuesday; of course, after the reading of the Journal and the clearing up of business on the Speaker's table. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I am going to object. We can not tell what the situation will be in a week from now. The gentleman can get his speech ready and deliver it at the first opportunity.

ALBERT T. HUSO.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 264, H. R. 1571, for the relief of Albert T. Huso.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 264. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, let the gentleman make his statement. This is a case, as I recall, where a postmaster had money stolen from him and did not lock the door of the safe in which the money was deposited. Is not that correct?

Mr. HAUGEN. No.

Mr. MANN. What are the facts?

Mr. HAUGEN. The post office at Joice, Iowa, was burglarized twice—on March 12 and October 2, 1913. In the first instance the combination was picked; in the second instance the door was completely blown off the safe. At the time of the first burglary the inner door of the safe had not been locked nor the combination of the safe changed since the safe had been purchased. In this respect the postmaster did not comply with all the regulations of the department. The gentleman knows that dynamite does not recognize or respect locks or combinations on inner doors—not even on the heavy outer doors. The fact is that small safes, such as are furnished or kept in small offices and in many instances in larger offices, offer little, if any, resistance to burglars, but are merely a safeguard against fire; therefore merchants, in order to save the safe from destruction, do not lock them, and even go so far as to place cards on the safes stating that they are not locked. So, whether or not the regulation requiring the locking of the inner door and changing the combination was complied with really matters but little; besides, a postmaster receiving only a few hundred dollars a year for his service as postmaster must do something else besides study the regulations of the department, and can not be expected to familiarize himself with all the requirements. It can not be expected that a postmaster furnishing an office, fuel, and light, with two or three hundred dollars annual compensation, shall study and familiarize himself with the numerous rules and regulations promulgated in a volume of upward to a thousand pages, as the Postal Laws and Regulations. Therefore Congress in many instances has—and properly so—excused technicalities, oversights, and neglect; and, in view of the policy pursued by Congress in the past, it seems just to grant the postmaster the relief sought in this instance.

I know Mr. Huso. He is a man of integrity and high standing in the community. It is a hardship for him to pay seven or eight hundred dollars after doing his duty and drawing a salary of only a few hundred dollars a year.

Mr. MANN. Let us see what the department says. Of course I do not know what the facts are outside of that. The letter of the Postmaster General, if it has relation to this burglary, says:

The evidence relative to the burglary of March 12, 1913, shows that the post office was forcibly entered by burglars, who apparently worked the combination of the safe therein, from which they took the postage stamps and money-order funds as claimed by the postmaster, but the postmaster had failed to lock the inner doors of his safe, and had not changed the combination since the safe came into his possession four or five years previously.

Then it says again:

The failure of the postmaster to lock the inner door and to change the combination of his safe was a violation of section 356 of the Postal Laws and Regulations of 1902 (sec. 361, P. L. and R., 1913), which reads in part as follows:

"4. Where stamps and funds are kept in iron safes with 'combination locks,' such safes must be carefully and completely locked at night or when the office is left without occupants for any considerable length of time. The common practice of closing safes with what is termed a 'day lock' or 'day combination' affords no protection against experienced burglars; and in case of loss resulting therefrom no credit will be allowed.

"5. Postmasters upon taking charge of their offices must change the combination on any safes therein; or where at any time a safe is procured, either new or second hand, the combination must be immediately changed; and the failure to make such change will be considered as prima facie evidence of contributory negligence on the part of the postmaster in any case where claim is made for credit for money or other property stolen from such safes, where they are opened without resort to violence."

"I asked the gentleman from Iowa if that was not the situation. I understood him to say that that was not the case.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, no. I stated the fact that they worked the combination of the outer door, but the inner door had not been locked.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, may I say a word on this, inasmuch as I reported the bill from the committee? There were two robberies, and the committee decided to credit the postmaster's accounts for the first one. The second one we decided not to allow for reasons that I will not go into here, as that question is not up. But it was shown by the evidence that the outer door of the safe was locked and the inner door was not locked; and although I can not say by whose authority I state it, it was told to me by the proper authority in the Post Office Department—and I think the gentleman from Iowa was also told—that this was one bill of a great class of bills that the department was not so opposed to, but they had been prompted to withhold recommendation to the passage of all these bills before the Committee on Claims.

If my recollection is correct, this bill is one of four bills involving credit for post-office robberies that have been reported from the committee this year. Three of them passed. The facts were not exactly the same, but there was better evidence in favor of these four than there is in favor of most of the claims for credit to postmasters for burglaries. We cut down the gentleman's bill and gave him credit for the first robbery only, and that was because it was shown that the outer door was locked and because of the attitude of the department, which I have only expressed informally on the floor, although their letter looks more or less like an objection from the department. That is why the committee decided to report this bill at this time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The lock on the inner door would not offer any resistance against burglars if the safe was anything like the ordinary safe. That was simply to keep the compartments separate during the daytime. You can unlock the inner part of the safe with a hammer if the safe was like the ones they usually have out there.

Mr. MANN. That would depend on who were the burglars. The gentleman may think it does not do any good to lock doors, yet I daresay they lock them, even in the gentleman's own house.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, yes; but if the outer door of the safe was forced, I would think the burglars who could do that would not have any difficulty in forcing the inner door.

Mr. MANN. The outer door was not forced. They just unlocked it. They had the combination.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I do not know that they had the combination. It is very easy to pick up the combination of one of these cheap safes.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether they had the combination in advance, but they had it when they opened the door.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There are a great many experienced burglars who can open these cheap safes by hearing the click of the combination.

Mr. MANN. Anybody who had a safe like that ought not to have any compensation.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the gentleman would seem to imply that possibly the postmaster had some knowledge of who opened the safe. I can state that I know the postmaster. He comes from a very good family and has the entire confidence of that community, and there is no excuse whatever for any such implication as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. MANN. I did not say that he did not belong to a good family. I do not know that that has any relevancy.

Mr. HAUGEN. The safe was opened twice. On one occasion it was blown open and on the other occasion the combination was worked. The question as to the postmaster's responsibility or knowledge in that respect was never raised, except that he did not fully comply with the regulation of the department.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman from Iowa knows that the committee have not allowed anything for the time the safe was blown open.

Mr. HAUGEN. No; but this is a compromise bill.

Mr. MANN. I am talking about the one that the committee have allowed.

Mr. HAUGEN. Here is what the Postmaster General has to say about it:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 26, 1916.

HON. EDWARD W. POU,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. POU: I am in receipt of your communication of January 17, with which you transmit a copy of bill (H. R. 1571) for the relief of Albert T. Huso, postmaster at Jolice, Iowa.

In response to your request for the facts in this case, I transmit herewith copies of two affidavits made by Postmaster Huso, and beg to inform you that Mr. Huso has filed in this department two claims for credit on account of Government funds and postage stamps lost by burglary. The first burglary occurred on March 12, 1913, and the alleged loss of Government property was postage stamps $364.25 and money-order funds $42.84. The second loss occurred on October 2, 1913, and amounted to $352.32 in postage stamps. Under date of January 30, 1915, both claims were disallowed.

The evidence relative to the burglary of March 12, 1913, shows that the post office was forcibly entered by burglars, who apparently worked the combination of the safe therein, from which they took the postage stamps and money-order funds as claimed by the postmaster, but the postmaster had failed to lock the inner doors of his safe, and had not changed the combination since the safe came into his possession four or five years previously.

Relative to the burglary of October 2, 1913, the evidence shows that burglars forcibly entered the post office and blew open the outer doors of the safe, from which they took the postage stamps as claimed by the postmaster. In this instance the inner door of the safe had not been locked.

The failure of the postmaster to lock the inner door and to change the combination of his safe was a violation of section 356 of the Postal Laws and Regulations of 1902 (sec. 361, P. L. and R., 1913), which reads, in part, as follows:

I think both should be allowed, but it is better to get half than to get nothing. The bill only gives him half of what I believe him entitled to and half of what has been granted to others. I see no reason why this man should be denied credit for this small sum which seems to be due him, but, in view of the apparent determined opposition to the passage of bills of this character, I appreciate what the committee has done in the matter.

In conclusion I desire to say that an affidavit on file by Mr. Huso, the postmaster, states that he had no knowledge regarding the regulation requiring him as postmaster to lock the inner door; also that the inspector who investigated the first robbery did not raise the question or inform him of the regulation requiring him to lock the inner door, and that the outer door was completely blown off and the inner door bent and warped by the force of the explosion, and even had the inner door been locked it would not have withstood the efforts of the robbers. Having full confidence in Mr. Huso's integrity and veracity, and having knowledge of his faithful service, I am sure the facts are as stated by him. Believing that he is entitled to the full amount, I regret that an amendment to include the amount of the second burglary is not in order under the rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read as proposed to be amended, as follows:

That Albert T. Huso, postmaster at Jolice, Worth County, Iowa, be, and he is hereby, relieved of the payment of $407.09, or any part thereof, the same being the amount of postage stamps and money-order funds held due from him to the United States Government for moneys and stamps stolen from the post office at Jolice, Iowa, on March 12, 1913, and the Postmaster General be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Albert T. Huso in the sum of $407.09.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ACTS OF THE PHILIPPINE LEGISLATURE (S. DOC. NO. 529).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 86 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith a set of the laws enacted by the Third Philippine Legislature during its fourth session, from October 16, 1915, to February 4, 1916, inclusive, and its special session, from February 14 to 24, 1916, inclusive, together with certain laws enacted by the Philippine Commission.

These acts and resolutions have not previously been transmitted to Congress and none of them has been printed in the United States.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1916.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. EAGAN was given leave of absence for one week, on account of a death in his family.

MONUMENT TO ROBERT MORRIS.

The SPEAKER. There is a bill (H. R. 17339) appropriating $50,000 for the erection of a monument to the memory of Robert Morris, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It ought to go to the Committee on the Library, and, without objection, that change of reference will be made.

There was no objection.

IVY L. MERRILL.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar No. 290, H. R. 11635, for the relief of Ivy L. Merrill, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to returning to it?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this is a personal injury case, where the bill asked for $10,000. The committee reported it recommending $1,100, but one year's compensation would be $500. I am perfectly willing to allow the amount that we allow in all other cases, one year's salary. I am not willing to allow any more than that.

Mr. FERRIS. I have agreed with the gentleman to reduce it to that amount.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to returning to this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Pottawatomie Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma not otherwise appropriated, to Ivy L. Merrill, a quarter-blood Pottawatomie Indian, of Pottawatomie County, Okla., the sum of $10,000, in full compensation for permanent and lasting injuries received, without negligence on her part, while in the employ of the United States Government as a civil-service employee at the Shawnee Indian School in Pottawatomie County, Okla.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$1,100."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the committee amendment by making the sum $500.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the committee amendment by striking out "$1,100" and inserting "$500."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Oklahoma inform the House how this woman was injured?

Mr. FERRIS. I will. This young lady is a quarter Indian blood. She was a cook at the Pottawatomie Indian School in Pottawatomie County, Okla. They had a big dinner bell that weighed 240 pounds hung on some sort of a pole or tower. She went out to ring the bell one icy, sleety morning, and as she pulled the rope—whether the groove was filled up with ice or not is not known—but this great bell fell down on her and broke three ribs, and she received numerous other internal injuries. The Indians down there all petitioned that she be paid for the injury. It comes out of their money. She is troubled with a floating kidney and other permanent injuries. One of the doctors who treated her is dead, but the other consulting physician corroborates the statement I have made. The Indian Office sent some of their clerks out there to make an examination, and they say that she had some complaints before that time. She insists that she had not, and she insists that, as a result of this injury, she has a floating kidney and permanent internal injuries; and, as this comes out of the Indians' money and takes nothing from the Treasury of the United States, I think everyone should be willing to have the bill passed. The petition is not printed here, but I think every member of the Indian tribe signed a petition, three years ago, asking that she be paid.

She ought to have a much larger sum paid to her, but this bill can only be considered by unanimous consent, and the gentleman from Illinois will not stand for any more than $500.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How is the sum of $500 arrived at?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has just stated. In order to get it up, this being the last chance this session, I have agreed with him about the matter.

Mr. MANN. The department recommended that not over $500 be allowed.

Mr. FERRIS. And they had some recommendations other than that a few years ago; but in this report they recommend that $500 is about all she should have. Personally I do not agree with them, but I have agreed that it should go in that way; it was that or nothing, and she has waited too long already. I have some information from her attorney with reference to the matter. I told him in a conversation last year what the situation was, and he said if she could not get any more than that before she actually died, he hoped that she would be able to get that much and be able to pay at least her doctor's bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am in favor of paying this woman, but I am wondering what the department would have recommended and what would have been paid if it had been the wife of one of the department officials who had pulled down a bell that weighed 250 pounds, put up under authority of the Government of the United States in such a manner that it could be pulled down?

Mr. FERRIS. I expect that they would recommend more. I only wish it could be more in this case, but I have tried for two or three years, and it is the best I can do.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not think there is any doubt about that.

Mr. MANN. Then let me tell the gentleman what the facts are as shown by the report of the superintendent.

A summary of her injuries appears to be as follows:

Temporary injury of shoulder, temporary injury of elbow, according to Dr. Byrum, bruises and contusions and the fracture of the eighth and ninth ribs. They further state that the evidence is clear that Mrs. Merrill was disabled or kept from her duties for a period not exceeding two weeks. I dare say that she was not as much injured as were some of the Republican and Democratic ball players on the ball field yesterday.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not say that.

Mr. MANN. I think that is true from a very careful examination of this, barring the two broken ribs.

Mr. FERRIS. Did the gentleman read the statement of both the girl and the doctors?

Mr. MANN. I read every line.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, then, the gentleman knows there is a marked difference in their testimony. The gentleman from Illinois is only presenting the Government's side of the case. It is fair to read and consider both sides.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HOOR OF MEETING TUESDAY.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next at 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Tuesday next. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Have we not already agreed to adjourn until Tuesday?

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. MANN. The request should be that when we meet on Tuesday it be at 11 o'clock.

Mr. RAINEY. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CARL VROOMAN.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago when I was correcting a statement made upon the floor of the House with reference to Mr. Vrooman by my colleague from Illinois, Mr. MANN, my colleague propounded the question, "Where is Mr. Vrooman to-day?" Not being possessed of any psychic powers, I was unable to answer, but I told him where he was yesterday, whereupon my colleague proceeded to inform the House that to-day Mr. Vrooman is absent from his office and from his post of duty and is making a political speech. My colleague having already placed in the RECORD so much misinformation in such a short space of time about Mr. Vrooman, I was not willing to accept his statement. I called Mr. Vrooman up on the telephone, and have just been talking to him. He is in his office and has been in his office all day long. He has not left it. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] also volunteered the statement that Mr. Vrooman was under engagement to-day or to-morrow to make a political speech in his congressional district in Nebraska. Mr. Vrooman advises me that he has no such engagement. If he is advertised to make a political speech out there he does not know anything about it. He states that he has refused invitations to go to Nebraska, and Mr. Vrooman also desires me to state—or he did not ask me to say it, but he told me and I will say it for him, inasmuch as my colleague is so much interested in what he does—that he has not made a single political speech this year. The addresses he has been delivering in the West have been addresses delivered before agricultural societies, and have been delivered in the discharge of the duties of his office. He does not propose to make any political speeches until the 28th day of August, at which time he commences to make political speeches in the State of Maine. He is entitled to 20 days' leave of absence this year which he has not taken, and he proposes to put in his vacation making political speeches.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I did not state that Mr. Vrooman was absent from the city. I stated that I was informed he was absent from the city. I did not know where he was, and I do not know it now, though I accept the statement of my colleague, of course. Going up to Maine to make political speeches? I noticed in the morning paper, by the way, that the Secretary of the Navy is going to spend his vacation on the Government boat Dolphin, up in Maine, making political speeches.

Now, I hope my colleague will get busy with the Secretary of the Navy and find out whether that statement is true or not.

I do not believe everything I see in the newspapers, but I would like to know whether the Secretary of the Navy is traveling on a Government gunboat at the expense of the Government, either for a vacation or for making political speeches. [Applause on the Republican side.] Get busy, find out, let us know.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to my colleague—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] asks for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to my colleague that he has filled this Record with such glaring misstatements of fact and has exhibited so much agility in escaping from the statements he has made that in this connection with reference to these Democratic officials making political speeches I do not propose to follow and investigate any more of the statements he has made. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I want to say that I hope every member of the Cabinet of the President will make political speeches [applause on the Democratic side]; if they do, they will make Democratic political speeches; and if they make that kind of speeches, they will be assisting in bringing about the return to power of the party which has done more in 3 years for this country than his party accomplished in 16 years, and more than his party ever will accomplish. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will take another minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks for another minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am unlike my colleague in one respect. My colleague never cares anything at all about the facts in making the statements which he makes upon the floor. I do. I was very careful when I made the first statement, in which I quoted from a paper. The statement I made to-day was made, as I stated then, upon information which came to me. I did not vouch for the truth in either case, but when I make a statement on this floor it is true. I do not make statements unless they are true. The statement I made the other day was true, that I read certain statements in the newspapers. The statement I made to-day was true, that I was informed. My statements are true. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. But the information upon which the gentleman bases them is absolutely false, and he makes no investigation in order to ascertain.

Mr. MANN. I do make investigation; my statements are not like the gentleman's statements—mostly false. [Applause on the Republican side.]

DONATIONS OF CONDEMNED CANNON AND CANNON BALLS.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 6625, Union Calendar 316. This is the omnibus cannon bill, and unless the amendments are passed within the next day or two so that the Senate can agree to them the cannon bill can not get through this session.

The SPEAKER. What is the number of the bill?

Mr. CALDWELL. Senate 6625, Union Calendar 316.

The SPEAKER. We have not got the engrossed copy. When did it come over here?

Mr. CALDWELL. It has been here since the 25th day of July.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the printed copy of the bill while we are sending for the engrossed copy of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know why the engrossed copy is not here. It is a reported bill, and it should be here. I have no objection to proceeding without the engrossed copy with the understanding we will not act on this until the engrossed copy gets here.

The SPEAKER. We have sent to the file clerk to get it.

Mr. MANN. It should be reported and in the files.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but it is not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask unanimous consent to return to 270, Private Calendar—

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Illinois has no objection to the reading of the printed copy. The Chair knows it is a bad practice.

Mr. MANN. I did not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. I ask to have the bill read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 6625) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to deliver—

To Alexander Hamilton Chapter, No. 7, Sons of the American Revolution, at Sheldon, Iowa, two brass or bronze cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States through the delivery of any of the foregoing condemned military equipment: Provided further, That each and every article of condemned military equipment covered by this act shall be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? We have the engrossed copy now. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONNELLY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. CONNELLY. To offer an amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman wait a minute?

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. CALDWELL. I was going to ask that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union so that we can offer some amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONNELLY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CONNELLY. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it up.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk amendments, offered by the various Members of the House, to which the committee has agreed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I sent to the Clerk's desk an amendment which the Clerk has not read. I would like to offer it as an amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL. It goes in with the committee amendments. There are also two more from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the additional amendments.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is to go to the Spanish War Veterans' camp at Racine, Wis. I offered the amendment, and it is down there on the desk.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I had an amendment which was not read by the Clerk.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I sent up an amendment also.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: At the end of the bill insert "To the city of Vernon, Tex., one brass cannon and a suitable outfit of cannon balls, to be placed at the foot of the Confederate Monument in the public square in said town."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, my amendment is at the desk. I handed it to the Clerk, and he put it with the others.

Mr. MANN. Then he probably read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: "To the Spanish-American War Veterans' Camp of Racine, Wis., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or field pieces, with carriages, with a suitable outfit of cannon balls, to be placed in Milton Honlick Camp Grounds."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CALDWELL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE EIGHT-HOUR DAY.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in view of the pending negotiations between the managers of the various railroads of the country and the representatives of the Brotherhoods of Railroad Employees relative to the employees' demand for an eight-hour day, and also the wide and varied expressions of opinion we find daily in the newspapers and other publications, I have felt called upon as one intensely interested in the organized labor movement and the welfare of the laboring masses to make a brief statement regarding the history of the eight-hour movement and its economic and social importance to the people of the country.

There is nothing new, Mr. Speaker, in the proposition for a general reduction of the hours of labor. It introduces no new principle into society; it disturbs no existing interests; it does not in any way disturb existing economic or social institutions. It merely asks that the toiler shall have more leisure; that the development of his social character may keep pace with his productive power and the comfort and culture of his home may be broadened and enjoyed.

It is not my purpose to present any new and novel arguments in behalf of the eight-hour day. The proposition has been thrashed over for the last 100 years by men more able than I; but it is my desire, Mr. Speaker, to arouse those who have previously viewed with cool indifference a matter which I consider of vital interest to the public; to enlighten, if possible, a great many who have, no doubt, been misled by the false and erroneous statements issued by the opponents of labor and to call attention to a few of the most outrageous crimes that have been committed on the people of the United States by the railroads of the country which should play an important part in the consideration and disposition of the present controversy.

As the years have gone by, the eight-hour philosophy which originated in the misery and weary toll of workers has become an accepted principle of society and industry. Employers have learned that the short-hour worker is a better, more productive, more valuable worker than the one who drudges long hours for low wages. The short-hour worker has more vitality, more ability, more resources to put into his work, and accomplishes more in a shorter period of time.

In the long struggle for better labor conditions it took a whole century of unceasing agitation and, at times, almost open warfare between capital and labor to establish one irrevocable fact, and that is whenever the conditions of an industry compel an operative to work too long hours for a wage insufficient to supply him with proper food and clothing to maintain his strength, and in insanitary surroundings, it is no less a menace to the worker than it is to society at large. It is as great a menace as an epidemic against which the resources of civilization are constantly warring, for such an industry can be carried on only at the expense of the physical and moral welfare of the worker.

Time will not permit an extended statement of the historical events of this movement for a shorter workday, which already fill volumes. Many are of the opinion that the movement in America is of recent growth, but as far back as 1806 we find an authenticated instance of organized shipbuilders and calkers from New York City, asking for a reduction from 14 to 10 hours a day. Unlike the movement in England then assuming headway, this was not a plea for women and children only, but a sturdy demand for themselves. Their employers were astounded at such a demand, and with solemn indignation the merchants of New York resolved that such a trade "combination has a direct tendency to put their business into other hands, or to seriously injure it by inducing shipowners to repair their vessels elsewhere rather than submit to the inconveniences, delays, and vexations to which they would be exposed when they can obtain labor only at such times and on such conditions as the folly and caprice of a few journeymen mechanics may dictate, who are now idle two or three of the most valuable hours of the day." Whereupon these patriotic merchants, who deemed the achievement of political liberty the term of social progress, determined to blacklist every member of the union audaciously asking for a reduction of the hours of labor from 14 to 10. Several years passed before marked success attended the sporadic efforts which followed. In Boston, May, 1832, the carpenters and calkers struck for 10 hours and lost, but in that and the year following the same trades were successful in New York and Philadelphia.

After this the movement for 10 hours became so general that in April, 1840, President Van Buren by proclamation established 10 hours as the normal workday in all navy yards and arsenals of the Government. This gave it such a standing that in the following year Gov. Fort, of New Jersey, recommended shortening the hours of daily labor in his message, seeing even then that "constant and unrelenting toil prevents intellectual improvement and leads to physical and moral debasement." Labor parties had already arisen in the eastern States in which this measure occupied a prominent plank. In the same year, 1841, the 10-hour system was introduced in Bath, Me., by a firm of boat builders, and most of the yards there followed the example.

From this time on the movement steadily gained headway in the large cities among skilled artisans, though not in the mills. On June 16, 1845, a large mass meeting, attended by 5,000 persons, was held in Pittsburgh, Pa., for the same purpose and led to similar action elsewhere. In the following October the first industrial convention in this country was convened at New York to organize concerted action toward the same end. Mass meetings and strikes for the 10-hour system now became very frequent, and in many cases were successful. The European uprising in 1848 naturally gave the movement greater impetus. From that time on Congress and legislatures were annually in receipt of petitions and memorials against the employment of women and children over 10 hours a day in factories, but then, as so many times later, they were buried in committees. But the system was gradually gaining ground, and the old 14-hour stretch found but few defenders. Little by little the hours had fallen to 12 and 11 where the 10-hour system had not yet been adopted.

Another industrial convention met at Chicago, June, 1850, to further solidify the growing demand. Such persistency was not without effect, and by 1853 11 hours became the general custom for artisans. In some places factories still ran for more hours, but by 1865 strikes had brought 11 hours as the general maximum in factories.

After the close of the Civil War the return of such large numbers to industrial pursuits again brought the question up and intensified the antagonism between industrialism and the spirit of militancy, which our late war did so much to revive and encourage. Hardly was the struggle of arms over and its veterans back to peaceful pursuits than the New England Ten Hour League was organized, which by the eloquent voice of Wendell Phillips and others proclaimed the new gospel. Owing to this agitation the State of Massachusetts in 1874 adopted the 10-hour law despite the combined opposition of mill owners and political economists. Although until recently Massachusetts stood alone in reducing factory labor to 10 hours, official investigation in 1881 shows that the Massachusetts factory laborer, working over 20 hours less per month than his fellows of adjoining States, received about two dollars and a half more wages in that time than they.

From this time on the struggles of the organized-labor movement for the adoption of a shorter workday are familiar to practically all of us. We have but to call to mind the very recent horrors of Ludlow, Colo., and the Michigan copper fields, where gunmen, armed automobiles, and machine guns were employed to slaughter the wives and children of those who dared stand firm in their demand for the enjoyment of at least a few of their God-given privileges, which for years had been denied them by the profit barons and money mongers, in order to realize the magnitude of the sufferings and sacrifices of the wealth producers of the country to free themselves from the shackles of industrial slavery. The building trades of the country many years since have established the eight-hour day to the satisfaction of not only the employee but the employer as well.

Astride with their struggles with their employers and the large corporations, the wageworkers, through organization, have bent their energies to secure relief and better working conditions through legislation. But this effort has also been a hard and weary one. Through the powerful influence of the big business interests and corruption legislators have been bribed to betray their trusts, courts have been bought, and executive officials influenced to delay and obstruct the successful operation of what laws have been enacted against their violators.

The first labor law of England was passed in 1802, and provided that the hours of labor of apprentices in cotton mills should be limited to 72 per week, and that they should not be employed on Sundays. This was followed by a long dreary struggle, which resulted in a law being passed in 1819 which placed the age limit at 9 years and placed all persons under 16 years within the provisions of the act of 1802.

In 1825 a new law was placed on the statute books (6 Geo. IV, ch. 63). The act of 1819 was violated by the mill owners, who retained the children three and four days a week during mealtime to clean machinery, which deprived them of exercise, of change of air, and compelled them to eat their food in mouthfuls while they were cleaning and when the air was full of dust and cotton flue. The new act prohibited any person under 16 from working more than 12 hours per day, exclusive of 1½ hours for mealtime. In 1831 an amendment was made to the law of 1825 which reduced the hours of labor to 11 and prohibited night work for all women and young persons under 21 years of age. In 1833 this law was extended to include woolen, worsted, silk, flax, as well as cotton mills, and reduced the working time of children to 8 hours a day.

In 1844 and 1846 bills were introduced in Parliament advocating a universal 10-hour day, but were defeated. However, in 1847, the reports of parliamentary committees having made a few converts by showing a marked improvement in the condition of labor by the enactment of previous laws, the 10-hour-day law was passed.

In 1867 occurred the next important step—the passage of an act providing that all blast furnaces, copper mills; iron, steel, and tinplate mills; iron, copper, and brass foundries; and factories in which machinery, metal articles, gutta-percha paper, glass, or tobacco were manufactured, and also printing establishments, were to be brought under the purview of the act of 1847. In 1874 the hours of labor were still further reduced to nine and one-half per day.

Since that time much has been accomplished in England in the way of labor legislation along the lines of trade-unions and workmen's compensation acts. At present in the textile industries there also exist provisions relative to children under 14 years of age who have not obtained a school certificate. Labor in mines is restricted to eight hours per day, to be counted from leaving the surface to the return to the surface. The hours of labor of certain classes of employees of railway companies, other than those employed on the clerical force in workshops, may, on representation to the board of trade, be investigated and regulated according to the results of the investigations.

As early as July 16, 1862 (12 Stat. L., p. 576), Congress provided that the hours of labor and the wages of employees in the navy yards of the United States should conform as nearly as consistent with the public interest with those of private establishments of a similar nature.

On June 25, 1868, Congress enacted:

That eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics now employed or who may hereafter be employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States; and that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

President Grant, by his proclamation of May 19, 1869, checked abuses which were perverting the generous object of this statute by declaring—

That from and after this date no reduction shall be made in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such laborers, workmen, and mechanics on account of any such reduction of hours of labor.

On May 11, 1872, President Grant issued a second proclamation referring to the former, and, among other things, said:

And whereas it is now represented to me that the act of Congress and the proclamation aforesaid have not been strictly observed by all officers of the Government having charge of such laborers, workmen, and mechanics: Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do again call attention to the aforesaid act, and direct all officers of the executive department of the Government having charge of the employment and pay of laborers, workmen, and mechanics, employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, to make no reduction in the wages paid for the Government, by the day, for such laborers, workmen, and mechanics on account of the reduction of the hours of labor.

On May 18, 1872, Congress further enacted a law providing—

That the proper accounting officers be, and hereby are, authorized and required, in the settlement of all accounts for the services of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States between the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work for all such workmen, laborers, and mechanics, and the 19th day of May, 1869, the day of the proclamation of the President concerning such pay, to settle and pay for the same without reduction on account of reduction of hours of labor by said act when it shall be made to appear that such was the sole cause of the reduction of wages, and a sufficient sum for said purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

On March 30, 1888, in the urgent deficiency bill, it was enacted as follows:

And the Public Printer is hereby directed to rigidly enforce the provisions of the eight-hour law in the department under his charge.

And by the act approved May 24, 1888, it was provided—

That hereafter eight hours shall constitute a day's work for letter carriers in cities or postal districts thereof, for which they shall receive the same pay as is now paid for a day's work of a greater number of hours. If any letter carrier is employed a greater number of hours than eight, he shall be paid extra for same in proportion to the salary now fixed by law.

The Department of Justice had held—

That the provisions of the act of June 25, 1868, were not applicable to mechanics, workmen, and laborers who are in the employ of a contractor with the United States. The act was not intended to extend to any others than the immediate employees of the Government.

In the case of the United States v. Martin (94 U. S., 404) the Supreme Court said, respecting the eight-hour law of 1868:

We regard the statute chiefly as in the nature of a direction from a principal to his agent that eight hours is deemed to be a proper length of time for a day's labor, and that his contract shall be based upon that theory. It is a matter between the principal and his agent, in which a third party has no interest. The proclamation of the President and the act of 1872 are in harmony with this view of the statute. We are of the opinion therefore that contracts fixing or giving a different length of time as the day's work are legal and binding upon the parties making them.

This decision recognized the legality of a longer workday in Government employment. The influence of the law and President Grant's proclamations upon public opinion was lessened.

The brevity and the indefiniteness of the eight-hour law of 1868 induced further legislation. Officers of the Government having charge of many employees did not administer the eight-hour law uniformly. Many of the ablest officials were friendly to this statute. Brig. Gen. Casey, Chief of Engineers, declared that he was strongly in favor of an eight-hour law; that it is an advantage to the country and to the laborer, and should be extended all over the country. Yet the employees of the engineers were paid a day's wages for eight hours of labor, but the law was not interpreted to limit the hours of employment in one day. Commander Folger, in charge of the Washington Navy Yard, reported that in an eight-hour workday, if observed, the quality of work produced would probably compensate for the reduced hours; yet he confessed that he did not understand that it was the policy of the Government to limit the hours of service in a Government day to eight hours and no more.

THE LABOR LAW OF 1892.

The following act, of August 1, 1892, was the result of discussions and committee investigations during three years prior to its enactment. Its main object was to prohibit contractors or subcontractors upon any of the public works of the United States or the District of Columbia from working more than eight hours upon any of the public works. In terms it was made unlawful for any officer, contractor, or subcontractor upon any of the public works to require or permit any laborer or mechanic to work more than eight hours in any calendar day.

This law, which was generally considered by all fair-minded men to be broad enough to cover practically all works of the Federal Government, was very greatly impaired by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Ellis v. United States (206 U. S., 246). This was an action brought against a dredging company for violation of the above-mentioned act by working its employees engaged in dredging under Government contract, for more than eight hours a day. The case was decided against the defendant in the lower courts, but on appeal to the Supreme Court, by a divided court, the men engaged in the dredge work were classified as seamen and, therefore, outside the purview of the law. The following is an extract from the opinion of Mr. Justice Holmes:

The three cases against the Eastern Dredging Co. were informations for employing certain men, alleged to be laborers or mechanics, more than eight hours a day upon what was alleged to be one of the public works of the United States, viz, Boston Harbor. * * * The offenses were admitted or proved subject to the questions that already have been considered, and to further questions whether the dredging was upon one of the public works and whether the persons employed were laborers or mechanics within the meaning of the act, with one or two lesser points that will not need to be discussed.

Both of the phrases to be construed admit a broad enough interpretation to cover these cases, but the question is whether that interpretation is reasonable and, in a penal statute, fair. Certainly they may be read in a narrower sense with at least equal ease. The statute says, "Laborers and mechanics * * * employed * * * upon any of the public works." It does not say, and no one supposes it to mean, "any public work." * * * The fact that the persons mentioned as employed upon them are laborers and mechanics, words admitted not to include seamen, points in the direction of structures and away from the sea; the very great difficulty, if not impossibility, of dredging in the ocean, if such a law is to govern it, is a reason for giving the defendants the benefit of the doubt. * * *

The words "laborers" and "mechanics" are admitted not to apply to seamen as that name is commonly used. Therefore it was contended but faintly that the masters of the tugs could not be employed more than eight hours. But the argument does not stop with the masters of tugs, or even with mates, engineers, and firemen of the same. The scows and floating dredges were vessels. They were within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States. Therefore all hands mentioned in the information were seamen within the definition in an earlier statute of the United States. They all require something of the training and are liable to be called upon for more or less of the service required of ordinary seamen. The reasons which exclude the latter from the statute apply, although perhaps in a less degree, to them. Whatever the nature of their work, it is incident to their employment on the dredges and scows as in the case of an engineer or coal shoveler on board ship. Without further elaboration of details we are of opinion that the persons employed by the defendant company were not laborers or mechanics and were not employed upon the public works of the United States within the meaning of the act. As in other cases where a broad distinction is admitted it ultimately becomes necessary to draw a line, and the determination of the precise place of that line in nice cases always seems somewhat technical, but still the line must be drawn.

This opinion, however, was not unanimous. The following is a part of the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Moody, in which Justice Harlan and Justice Day concurred:

It does not seem to be important that for some purposes the scows and dredges were vessels, or those employed upon them for some purposes are deemed seamen. The question here is, What were the men when they were engaged in the work of excavation? Were the men at that time employed as seamen, doing the work of seamen, or as laborers and mechanics doing the work of laborers and mechanics? I think they then were laborers and mechanics, and employed as such, and that their occupation is determined not by what they have been in the past, or by what their employers choose to call them, but by what they were doing when the Government invoked the law for their benefit. * * * Nor was their work in dredging incident to their employment on the dredges, but quite the reverse. They never would have been employed at all except for dredging. They never would have set foot on the dredge save to use it as a platform on which to do the work of laborers and mechanics; in the main, they actually did that work, and whatever they did which was of the nature of seamen's work was a mere incident to the fact that they labored upon a floating platform instead of upon the dry land. * * * When the intention of the legislature is reasonably clear, the courts have no duty except to carry it out. The rule for the construction of penal statutes is satisfied if the words are not enlarged beyond their natural meaning, and it does not require that they shall be restricted to less than that.

In order to correct this evil and to put the dredge workers within the operation of the eight-hour law, as was at first intended by Congress, I introduced a bill in the Sixty-second Congress, which became a law on March 3, 1913. In addition to this, the Sixty-second Congress passed what is known as the "general eight-hour law for contracts on public works," the provision in the Post Office appropriation bill requiring postal employees to work only eight hours, was made mandatory, and eight-hour clauses were also incorporated in the Army and naval appropriation acts for all work done under contracts with these departments.

In the Sixty-third Congress we passed an eight-hour law for women and child workers of the District of Columbia; an eight-hour law for employees under the Alaskan coal land act; and the eight-hour provision was retained in the Post Office appropriation bill in spite of determined opposition from the Post Office Department.

Thirty-one States of the Union, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico have eight-hour laws applicable to labor on public works and to State employees. These laws have been adopted within the last 25 years.

In Colorado a law was enacted in March, 1899, providing for eight hours in mines, smelters, and blast furnaces, but in the ensuing October the supreme court of the State unanimously decided it to be unconstitutional. On November 4, 1902, a constitutional amendment embodying the terms of this law, which had been approved by all the political parties, was submitted to the people under the referendum at the general election and adopted by a vote of 72,980 yeas and 26,266 nays. The General Assembly of Colorado at the close of its next session, from January 7 to April 6, 1903, adjourned without enacting an eight-hour law as directed by this constitutional amendment, but in 1905 it passed a law which in part resembles the organic act, but is inadequate, reflecting neither its letter nor spirit.

In Bulletin 76 of the United States Public Health Service, prepared under the direction of the Surgeon General by Dr. B. S. Warren and Edgar Sydenstricker of that bureau, the following observations are made:

In addition to industrial poisons and other insanitary conditions in places of work, there are certain conditions in modern industry which cause excessive fatigue. Among these may be mentioned long hours, the piecework system, and the increasing use of machine methods. Work performed by any of the body cells produces waste products and other changes in those cells. Up to a certain limit, work with the resulting cell changes, is beneficial and improves the physical condition; but when work is excessive, too prolonged, or too fast, the waste products begin to accumulate, the cells become exhausted, the physiologic changes fail to occur, and if not properly rested the cells are damaged.

It is becoming more and more recognized that fatigue is a health hazard in industry. This is evidenced by a series of court decisions in the last few years upholding the constitutionality of laws prohibiting excessive hours of work for women in industry. The basis of these decisions was the effects of long hours upon health. There is also a marked tendency on the part of employers to realize these effects and to adopt a shorter working day and on the part of labor unions to insist upon an eight-hour workday and a six-day week standard.

Under the caption "Hours of labor," the Commission on Industrial Relations in its final report stated:

As a result of investigation the following conclusions are justified:

1. The physical well-being, mental development, and recreational needs of every class of population demand that under normal circumstances the working day should not exceed eight hours.
2. A very large percentage of the workmen in manufactures, transportation, and mining work more than eight hours per day.
3. This is in marked contrast to the condition of those whose economic position enables them to define the length of their own working day.
4. Practical experience has shown that the reduction of working hours is in the interest not only of the worker and the community generally, but of the employer.
5. The regulation by legal enactment of working hours of adult workmen is not generally practicable nor desirable, except for public employees.

At the present stage of the discussion of reducing the hours of the workday it is no longer necessary to set out to prove the benefits to mankind gained everywhere in industrial life through cutting off all the hours of employment above 10. On the shelves of every public library in our cities are books and reports by the score telling of communities made more healthy, more sober, more happy, more enlightened by removing the burden of the intolerably excessive labor to which the workers generally were formerly driven. To lop off the two, three, and even four hours above eight was a long step toward substituting humanity for brutality. More than that, economically nothing was lost. At the end of the year the worker, on the average, yielded as much output at eight hours as at the longer day. He worked more days, he applied more muscle to his task, and he rose from an automaton drudge to an intelligent mechanic. It is also to be noted that every reduction in the hours of daily labor has been followed by new and better tools and devices by which the productivity of the workers working under an eight-hour day has been vastly increased over the former long-hour workday.

With the progressive intensity of application under modern methods and speeded-up machinery, workmen by daily experience know, and, with hardly an exception, the trained and careful investigators of working-class life employed by either the Government or sociological agencies are by diversified observation convinced, that 10 hours in an industrial pursuit strain the nerves and weaken the general physique of even strong men, the total result being a detriment to the race. With the recent necessarily changed modes of living, especially in large cities, the 10 hours at work mean more nearly 12 hours' absence from home, transit to and from the work place being included.

The laborer's strength diminishes gradually in the course of the day. The last hours count against him most. Bodily ailments then develop in his weak spots. The quality of his work then falls off. His aversion, born of weakness and exhaustion, then takes root toward the natural avocations of a healthy nature in the hours off from the daily grind. It is then that, with a certain percentage of the worn-out toilers, a craving for stimulant arises, foreshadowing the deplorable consequence of indulgence in drink. It is then that the workman is unfitted to take part during the evenings in the various duties of his life; hence he is the less worthy as a citizen, the less helpful to the constructive institutions of society, the less a watchful, patient, and competent father of a family.

The testimony as to what the wageworkers who enjoy the eight-hour day have done with the two hours now their own which once were given to the employer is to be seen in the number of callings in many parts of the country. One effect is beyond doubt. Their new-found time they have employed in such a way as to decrease the death rate, and hence obviously the lost time through illness, in their occupations. Every trade-union which pays a death benefit shows from its books a decrease in payments per thousand members since it has had the eight-hour day. In this fact alone the body of the argument for an eight-hour workday, on the score of health, is carried to the point of conviction. Men who are living longer than their predecessors at the same calling are obviously living better in all the implications of the word. They and their families are housed better, dressed better, fed better, educated better—in all respects, as a whole, are happier. This truth is to be seen in so many industries and communities, it is a truth that appeals so to common sense and ordinary observation, as well as to the conviction developed in us with experience, that man tends to elevate himself with opportunity, that to attempt to prove it by statistics and recapitulations of the inquiry were to misapply man's discriminating faculty.

In proposing an eight-hour day the first question to be settled is economic. It is whether the total output will warrant the possible lessening of effective toil. In other words, can society sustain itself and progress on eight hours' work? To this query the industrial wageworkers reply: There has been no diminution of output by reason of the reduction of hours of labor from 10 to 8; in not a few occupations the output has not varied from the results of 10 hours, the number of human workers remaining the same in proportion. Workers, with the aid of new machinery, within the period of the present generation have in nearly all occupations vastly increased product. Besides, the cessation of the two hours' work in his vocation has given the worker opportunity to add to his product in his avocations. His leisure hours, it may be said without paradox, have given him the time, opportunity, and pleasure of caring for his house, his garden, and his side ventures. The eight-hour day has given more, not less, of material things to the world. A whole continent, as is the case of Australia, may have the eight-hour day and mankind be the richer.

It is clear that the eight-hour day is not only a boon to the men, women, and children who toil—to humanity—but that through it, when it shall have become general, the present total production of society will be increased.

The foremost demand of the organized-labor movement is for a shorter workday. It is in the interest of labor; it must necessarily be in the interest of progress. The eight-hour day is the harbinger of more successful industry and commerce, its tendency is upward, and it will surely help to solve the greatest of all material problems of our lives on a peaceful and permanent plane.

Referring more specifically to the present eight-hour controversy between the railroads and their employees, as an abstract proposition I do not believe anyone disputes the desirability of an eight-hour day for railway-transportation employees. It is equally beyond controversy that the hours of work required of these classes of employees in certain branches of railroad service are excessive. For example, let us take the yard enginemen. They are paid on a 10-hour basis, but to receive that compensation they must put in an average of 14 hours each day, for the following reasons: It takes about an hour to prepare their engines and take them from the roundhouse to the yards before they begin work; that is, before their pay commences. They are on the job 11 hours, one hour being deducted for the noon hour, but in this hour they are required to oil their engines, tighten up bolts, and do other minor repairing to fit their engines for the remainder of the shift. After putting in the 11 hours they are then compelled to take their engine from the yard to the engine house and inspect the machinery and make their report, all of which takes another hour, but their pay has already stopped at the end of the 11 hours. This makes at least two hours and a half time actually engaged in the work of the company for which no pay is received. Adding to this a half hour for going to and returning from work each morning and evening, it easily totals 14 hours that these men must be away from their homes, for which they receive but 10 hours' pay. The same applies to the firemen, who are paid at the rate of $2.50 a day.

Employees in these branches of service have become the victims of what in railroad parlance is known as the "tonnage craze." The development of heavier freight loads and larger freight earnings per mile has been the goal of all railway operating officials. Engines of greater and greater tractive power have been installed, freight cars of constantly increasing capacity have been built, the number of cars in trains has been increased, roadbed has been strengthened, heavier rails laid, new bridges constructed, grades reduced, and curves eliminated, all for the purpose of getting heavier trains over the road with the object of reducing operating costs. Under this system of administration the fact that the hours on duty of engine and train crews in certain branches of the railroad service have become excessive is generally recognized and needs no elaborate statistical demonstration.

In order to make the request of the men appear to be unreasonably extravagant the railroads point to the fact that out of every dollar of revenue received 45 cents is paid for labor. This is an admission that railroad labor is not paid nearly as much as labor in other industries.

Ten of the leading industries selected from the United States Census reports show that the ratio of wages to the cost of production is 61.4 cents out of each dollar,

According to the Statistics of Railways, issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the year ending June 30, 1915, we find that the total compensation paid railway employees was $1,188,141,318, but this total includes also the enormous salaries paid the officials of the roads. We also find that the net profits of the roads amounted to $885,860,451, and after deducting from the amount paid to employees the millions of dollars paid in salaries to the officers of the roads and thousands of unproductive parasites on the roads, such as detectives, lobbyists, fixers, lawyers, and so forth, who do not add a dollar of revenue to the roads we find that for every dollar paid the employees in wages and salaries the railroad corporations paid themselves a dollar in profits. Thus the comparatively small number of persons who own the inert capital of the roads drew practically as much money from the gross earnings as did the million and a half men of skill and strength and muscle who operated the roads and made possible all the gross earnings of $3,000,000,000 annually.

The railroads are also attempting to make capital out of the fact that the railroad pay roll "now approaches $1,500,000,000 a year for the great army of nearly 1,800,000 men." These are enormous sums, it is true, but not so astounding when we consider the magnitude of the transportation business. The inspired "news" of the trust-controlled press have flourished in big type the supposedly enormous incomes of the railroad employees, but by taking the figures published by the railroads themselves it is very easy to see how misleading these statements are. That is, by taking the total amount paid in wages to the men and dividing it by the number of men, you will find that the average wage paid to the railway employee is about $800. After reading the "news" in the artful newspapers, one would think the wages of these so-called "aristocrats of labor" would be somewhere in the neighborhood of $1,500, but it appears not. The average is lower than the standard of living set by the experts for the typical family of three or four persons.

Another interesting phase of the earning capacity of the railroad employees is discussed by William Leavitt Stoddard in an article appearing in Pearson's Magazine for April, 1916, which is as follows:

As a matter of fact, although the actual totals spent in wages to the railroad labor have risen, the cost of labor has been going down. That is to say, each dollar spent in labor has brought in a greater return than ever before. This fact the railroads will dispute, so it is well to make it clear. It is one of the most striking facts in modern industry, for it applies to other fields of labor besides the transportation field. But in the transportation field alone this fact is particularly significant. For example:

It is the job of the railroads to haul goods. The volume of traffic is measured by the weight of the goods and the distance which they are carried. The traffic unit is, therefore, called ton-miles. Now, a very carefully study of 24 typical roads in western territory disclosed that it costs less to haul 1 ton 1 mile, so far as labor is concerned, than it did, say, 20 years ago. For instance, for each $1,000 paid to engineers and firemen on these lines in 1913 it was possible to handle 92 per cent more ton-miles than in 1890. * * * In a word, owing to bigger and better machinery and to other causes railroad labor is constantly creating more and more wealth. Put into another form, each 1,000 ton-miles cost the railroads in 1890, measured in terms of labor of engineers and firemen, almost exactly 65 cents, but in 1913 this had been reduced to 33 cents.

The importance of this increased productive efficiency of railroad labor can hardly be overestimated. Because their labor power, applied to greater machinery, is bringing in more money, while at the same time the proportionate share of labor to profits is decreasing, the men are justified in demanding higher wages. If they do not demand higher wages, they may fairly demand something which means, perhaps, more to them at this particular moment—shorter hours. Their labor power is costing the railroads less and less in proportion to the value which it creates.

Each of the contending forces in this controversy is at present appealing to the public and to the Government for sympathy with its cause. Let us examine carefully the complexion of these two great organizations, for what purpose they exist, and what they have heretofore accomplished that merits consideration.

On the one side we have the four great brotherhoods of railway employees—the engineers, the firemen and enginemen, the trainmen, and the conductors. Four great organizations of men banded together for the purpose of securing for themselves through united effort better working conditions and to render aid to those of their members who, through the hazards of their employment and misfortune, have been rendered physically unfit to care for themselves and their families. The benefits to the working people derived through organization have been so often concretely demonstrated that they need no further discussion by me at this time. Whatever benefits the masses of the people, the working people, must necessarily benefit society.

The transportation industry is one of the most hazardous occupations. However, no recognition of this hazard is reflected in the wages of the employees. The records of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen show that since its institution $18,189,167.75 has been paid for deaths and disabilities of its members. The conductors have paid out $18,000,000. The trainmen, $28,833,132, and the engineers, $33,348,267.44. In all these organizations have paid out in benefits to their members the sum of $98,370,567.19; or, taking these figures as a general average, each brotherhood pays in round numbers a million dollars a year for these purposes, the greater part of which is for deaths and disabilities caused by accidents on the railroads.

On the other side we have a combination of the most greedy plunderers and looters of the public in the commercial and industrial world, which consists of the directors of the various railroad corporations of the country, whose headquarters are in Wall Street, New York, and who are past masters in stock juggling and manipulating. They have not been satisfied with robbing the shippers and the public by extortionate freight and passenger rates, but have in turn looted the roads which they control and swindled their fellow directors and stockholders out of millions of dollars, all of which falls as an additional burden upon the public in the way of excessive rates to pay interest and dividends on billions of fictitious valuations, known as watered stock, and, perhaps, better known as counterfeit capital.

A very striking example of this railroad piracy is found in the case of the New York, New Haven & Hartford road, the details of which are no doubt still fresh in the minds of many of us, and which are very clearly set forth in the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission on its investigation of the financial transactions of the New Haven, as follows:

The subject matter of this inquiry relates to the financial operation of a railroad system which, on June 30, 1903, had a total capitalization of approximately $93,000,000, of which $79,000,000 was stock, and $14,000,000 bonds. In the 10 years from June, 1903, this capitalization was increased from $93,000,000 to $417,000,000, exclusive of stock premiums, or an increase of $324,000,000. Of this increase, approximately $120,000,000 was devoted to its railroad property and was expended for betterments and equipment. This leaves the sum of $204,000,000, which was expended for operations outside of its railroad sphere. Through the expenditure of this sum this railroad system has practically monopolized the freight and passenger business in five States of the Union. It has acquired a monopoly of competing steamship lines and trolley systems in the section it serves. The financial operations necessary for these acquisitions and the losses which have been entailed have been skillfully concealed by the juggling of money and securities from one subsidiary corporation to another.

Marked features and significant incidents in the loose, extravagant, and improvident administration of the finances of the New Haven as shown in this investigation are the Boston & Maine despoliment; the inquiry of the Westchester acquisition; the double price paid for the Rhode Island trolleys; the recklessness in the purchase of the Connecticut and Massachusetts trolleys at prices exorbitantly in excess of their market value; the unwarranted expenditure of large amounts in "educating public opinion"; the disposition, without knowledge of the directors, of hundreds of thousands of dollars for influencing public sentiment; the habitual payment of unitemized vouchers without any clear specification of details; the confusing interrelation of the principal company and its subsidiaries and consequent complication of accounts; the practice of financial legerdemain in issuing large blocks of New Haven stock for notes of the New England Navigation Co. and manipulating these securities back and forth; fictitious sales of New Haven stock to friendly parties, with the design of boosting the stock and unloading on the public at a high "market price"; the unlawful diversion of corporate funds to political organizations; the scattering of retainers to attorneys of five States, who rendered no itemized bills for services, and who conducted no litigation to which the railroad was a party; extensive use of a paid lobby in matters as to which the directors claim to have no information; the attempt to control utterances of the press by subsidizing reporters; payment of money and the profligate issue of free passes to legislators and their friends; the investment of $400,000 in the securities of a New England newspaper; the regular employment of political bosses in Rhode Island and other States, not for the purpose of having them perform any service, but to prevent them, as Mr. Mellen expressed it, from "becoming active on the other side"; the retention by John L. Billard of more than $2,700,000 in a transaction in which he represented the New Haven and into which he invested not a dollar; the inability of Oakleigh Thorne to account for $1,032,000 of funds of the New Haven entrusted to him in carrying out the Westchester proposition; the story of Mr. Mellen as to the distribution of $1,200,000 for corrupt purposes in bringing about amendments of the Westchester and Port Chester franchises; the domination of all the affairs of this railroad by Mr. Morgan and Mr. Mellen and the absolute subordination of other members of the board of directors to the will of these two; the unwarranted increase of the New Haven liabilities from $93,000,000 in 1903 to $417,000,000 in 1913; the increase in floating notes from nothing in 1903 to approximately $40,000,000 in 1913; the indefensible standard of business ethics and the absence of financial acumen displayed by eminent financiers in directing the destinies of this railroad in its attempt to establish a monopoly of the transportation of New England. A combination of all these has resulted in the present deplorable situation in which the affairs of this railroad are involved.

The case of the "West Chester" and "Port Chester" corporations is a striking example of the profligate wasting and stealing of the corporate funds of the New Haven Railroad. "The enormous sum of $36,434,000 was expended for a road only 18 miles in extent and which is being operated at an annual loss of approximately $1,250,000, and which will have to increase its earnings four and one-half fold before it can pay its operating expenses and fixed charges."

"The Westchester acquisition was planned and executed by a special committee of the board" (the inner ring) "consisting of Directors Morgan, Rockefeller, Miller, and Mellen." The first information the board had concerning the extravagant acquisition of the Westchester and Portchester securities was on November 8, 1907, which this committee made its only report. It was then learned that $11,155,000 had been expended in obtaining control of these two insolvent promotion schemes. Altogether upwards of $17,000,000 of the companies' funds was wasted or stolen by this "inner ring" in the Westchester deal.

In the Rhode Island trolley deal, which was carried through by these same men, the New Haven Co. was looted of $18,000,000. In the Connecticut trolley company deal "Mr. Mellen testified that these Connecticut trolleys represented a payment of about $10,000,000 more than their value." (Rept. of the I. C. C., p. 12.)

In the steamship conspiracy for perfecting the monopoly of all New England transportation, this Morgan ring of directors expended $24,772,000 of the company's money and then "the testimony shows that the physical valuation of the properties acquired as the result of these outlays approximated about $10,000,000, or a loss to the New Haven of $14,772,000.

In the Harvard & Yale Steamship deal several hundred thousand dollars more of the New Haven money went glimmering, through the medium of dummy companies and dummy directors made up of clerks and employees to do the bidding of the inside ring.

In the Boston & Maine deal, by which a parallel and competing railroad system was seized by unlawful methods, in which the inside ring was assisted especially by Mr. Ledyard, who, through a crooked express contract and manipulation of New Haven and Boston & Maine stock, and "by this extended contract the Boston & Maine is likely to lose, conditioned upon the same volume of business, approximately $10,000,000." The direct loss of the New Haven, as shown "in the market depreciation of the common stock of the Boston & Maine owned by the New Haven, is therefore $20,475,000. * * * There is an additional loss growing out of the unfortunate Billard transaction of $2,748,000, making the total loss on the Boston & Maine transaction $23,223,000.

These are only sample cases of many other similar manipulations on the part of the inside ring of directors, by which it is clear that in the process of increasing the bond and stock obligations of the New Haven from $93,000,000 to $417,000,000 the New Haven Co. was looted of upward of $200,000,000, and the stockholders are now suing the directors for the recovery of some $203,000,000.

The New Haven is a leading eastern railroad, and at the time these looting operations were begun by the inside ring of the directors its stock was worth about $250 a share and for nearly a generation had been paying 8 per cent dividends and accumulating a surplus, so that they would have been able to grant the increase in wages and reduction in hours to its employees without serious difficulty. However, since this looting process the road complains that it is financially so weak that it can not afford to pay its employees better wages or grant concessions by shortening the hours. The above figures plainly disclose the reason.

The Chicago & Alton was a prosperous railroad in the Middle West whose stock was worth around $200 a share, and "for many years had paid an average dividend exceeding 8 per cent per annum, and in addition had expended large sums out of its earnings in the improvement of its property," says the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, No. 943, on page 337; and on page 338 of the same report says:

About this time Mr. Edward H. Harriman, Mr. Mortimer L. Schiff (representing Mr. Jacob H. Schiff), Mr. George J. Gould, and Mr. James Stillman formed a syndicate to buy this stock, and bought it for $200 a share for the preferred and $175 a share for the common, making the total cost of the shares purchased $39,042,200.

In about seven years, to June 30, 1906, the outstanding capital indebtedness of this company was expanded from $33,951,407 to $114,610,937, or an increase of about $80,660,000, and there was expended in actual improvements and additions to the property out of this capitalization only about $18,000,000, leaving an increase of its stock and liabilities, without one dollar of consideration, of about $62,660,000.

This is another one of the roads now complaining that it would be a great hardship for the road to grant any increase in wages or a reduction of hours to its employees, and, as in the case of the New Haven, the reason is quite plain.

The St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, known as the "Frisco" system, was investigated by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which made a report on January 20, 1914, in which they disclosed a similar plan of looting the road and saddling it with millions upon millions of bonded indebtedness that represented no assets whatever by an inside syndicate of directors, who purchased various "cats" and "dogs" companies as a syndicate and then resold them to themselves as directors of the Frisco.

The report of the Interstate Commerce Commission shows that "the profits realized by the syndicates and trust companies in sales to the Frisco" on nine of these transactions aggregated $8,444,000.

The managing ring of the directors so manipulated the shares of the company's stocks and bonds that the commission says:

The discount on bonds and notes other than short-term notes issued by the Frisco lines and lines which it controls * * * and the premiums paid on underlying issues aggregated $32,152,000.

As a result of all these various operations the total capital of the Frisco in May, 1913, amounted to $295,633,000, and the book value of its properties is given by the Interstate Commerce Commission as $187,000,000; in other words, they issued $108,000,000 more stocks and bonds than they had property, and the most significant fact of this is that only $51,000,000 of this is capital stock and $244,000,000 of it is in interest-bearing bonds, which, as the commission says, "is wholly disproportionate when compared with the capital of other carriers."

In July, 1915, the Interstate Commerce Commission made its report on the financial transactions of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Co. and the syndicate which secured control of it in 1901.

In 1902 the main line of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Co. extended from Chicago to Denver, with branch lines to St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Kansas City. The territory served is one of the richest and most prosperous in the country and the system's ramification of lines insures to it a large volume of tonnage. It was then thriving and its prospects were promising, its stock selling in the markets of the world at more than $200 a share. In 1914, the shares had fallen to $20 and the road is now in receiver's hands. The evidence shows that the earnings of the railway company have steadily increased, and that in 1914 they were the largest in its history. (Rept. I. C. C., p. 1.)

The prostrate condition of the capital stock of the road is the result of the management of a syndicate composed of Daniel G. Reid, W. H. Moore, J. H. Moore, and W. B. Leeds, who got control of the road in 1901, and have since increased its capital stock from $49,000,000 to $74,000,000, and its funded debt from $63,000,000 to $235,000,000. The report of the commission shows that the methods by which this was done were quite similar to those of the inside ring of directors in the New Haven, The Alton, and the Frisco systems, and, of course, the Rock Island Railroad directors are among those most strenuously protesting that their corporations would be ruined if they granted their men an increase in wages or a reduction in hours.

It is because of these high-handed methods of railroad finance that the railroads are continually appealing to the public and the Government for an increase in rates. It is because the enormous revenue gains of the railroads have been absorbed by the interest and dividend requirements of fictitious stocks and bonds, and wasted and dissipated by improper and misguided financial management, that the railroads cry out against the fair and reasonable demands of their employees, the men whose brains and brawn make the billions of dollars of railroad revenue possible.

What is true of the New Haven, the Alton, the Rock Island, and the "Frisco" is true of practically every railroad in the country. This sort of plunder and robbery has been going on for years, and is going on on a gigantic scale to-day. The roads I have just mentioned stand out more particularly because they have been the subject of investigation, but with these as a basis it would be reasonably fair to estimate that $10,000,000,000, one-half the capital stock of the railroads of the country, is water and fictitious capital upon which the people must pay annually in excessive rates, figured at 5 per cent interest, the enormous sum of $500,000,000, and it is to the everlasting shame of the present Federal administration, who have acquiesced in this conduct by their failure to aggressively prosecute those who are guilty of these monstrous crimes. If they were as prompt and as zealous in prosecuting the criminal rich as they are the representatives of labor and our citizens of small influence, these criminal practices would long since have been ended.

However, Mr. Speaker, in spite of this high-handed robbery and criminal conduct on the part of these directors of the various railroad systems, the railroads are more prosperous than ever before. In a statement issued just two days ago by the Interstate Commerce Commission, covering the reports of the financial condition of 131 of the largest railroads of the country, we find that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, the net earnings of these 131 roads was $599,508,058, while for the year ending June 30, 1916, the total net earnings of these same roads was $834,079,775, or a total increase in the net earnings of these 131 roads in the past year of $234,571,717. And yet they say that to grant the demands of the railroad employees for an eight-hour day would bankrupt their systems.

The facts and figures do not bear out the contentions of the railroad corporations. They are tremendously in favor of the men. The roads have published far and wide the statement that the demands of the employees would cost them $100,000,000. Even if it did, they would be entitled to it; their request would still be reasonable and moderate. But, on the contrary, these figures are grossly exaggerated. To inaugurate the eight-hour day would not cost the roads even a small percentage of that amount, and greater returns would be received, due to the increased efficiency of the employees. However, they have a twofold purpose in making this contention. The first is that they hope thereby to defeat the employees in their demand; and the other is that in case the men do win in this struggle, they hope to make it the basis of a demand for increased rates.

It is becoming more evident day by day that there can be no permanent hope for the proper advancement of the economic well-being of the railway employees, no adequate protection to shippers, and to the general public, until assurance can be had through the public ownership of our transportation facilities. In the present struggle, however, the sympathy of the country should be with the men. Their cause is just and their demands are reasonable. A pernicious campaign has been conducted to poison the minds of the public against them, but the time has passed when the public can be made to believe that the fair demands of the workers are responsible for the financial difficulties of the transportation industry.

In spite of the fact that the benefits of the eight-hour day have been so well established that there are no grounds for argument to refute them, we find the Trust Press and the Chicago Tribune, the he-devil of the big daily newspapers, always opposing the interests of labor and humanity, writing erroneous editorials to assist the criminal directors and stock-juggling controllers of the railroads in defeating the employees of the transportation companies from securing the eight-hour day, which is essential to the safety of the traveling public, as well as the army of employees, both those united in this effort and otherwise.

It is amazing to me that it becomes necessary for this contention to reach the point of a threatened tie-up of the transportation facilities of the country, and, according to newspaper reports, it would indicate that this Federal Government is exercising its influence to secure arbitration, which would result in a further delay of the railroad employees securing that degree of justice which they should have had without any contention at all if the controllers of the railroads of the country were guided by the spirit of equity and justice.

I also note by statements in the newspapers that a certain Mr. Fraser pretends to be representing the unorganized of the transportation industry and comes to the Capital with a petition supposed to contain 10,000 signatures for the purpose of preventing a strike. My information is that this gentleman comes from the engineering force of a railroad company which has less organized employees than any other. In the railroad industry we have many organizations, among them the machinists, boiler makers, carpenters, bridgemen, trackmen, and so forth, and there is no doubt in my mind that at least 50 per cent of the railroad employees outside of the brotherhoods are organized. However, we do not hear any protest on the part of these organized workers. We do not hear of any petitions coming from labor unions, and I am of the opinion that an investigation would disclose that this petition has been secured by the spotters, lickspittles, and toadies, who are willing to serve the criminal rich at the sacrifice of the interests of the toiling masses who render real service to society.

The railroad brotherhoods are only asking for an eight-hour day, and the fact is that it will cost the railroads very little and perhaps ultimately nothing to comply with this request. They are entitled to it, no matter if it would cost a few million dollars. Their demands are so just that they are entitled to the support of every humanity-loving, public-spirited man, either in public or private life, and anyone who would exercise his influence to obstruct their efforts in securing this eight-hour day is a traitor to the cause of humanity. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order heretofore made, adjourned until Tuesday, August 15, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $300,000 for salaries and expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 1323), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SHOUSE, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 4256) to amend section 5146 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to permit national banks located near the boundary line of adjoining States, subject to the discretion of the Comptroller of the Currency, to select only a majority instead of three-fourths of their directors from residents of the State in which they are respectively located, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1102), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Florida, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6034) to make available a portion of the appropriation for the immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for such counters, booths, screens, railings, seats, bunks, kitchen and laundry equipment, etc., as necessary in connection with said station, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1105), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LOBECK, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 17292) for the regulation of salaries in the custodian service of the Treasury Department, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1106), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII.

Mr. WEBB, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 17331) to permit Seth Shepard, chief justice of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, to retire, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1100), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII.

Mr. BURNETT, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 317) directing the Secretary of Labor to furnish certain information in relation to Ellis Island, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 1101), which said resolution and report were laid on the table.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and joint resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DOREMUS: A bill (H. R. 17396) to amend section 217 of the United States Criminal Code; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. ROUSE: A bill (H. R. 17397) to provide for the retirement of employees in the Postal Service, and for other benefits and purposes in connection therewith; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. GILLET: A bill (H. R. 17398) granting the consent of Congress to the board of county commissioners of the county of Hampden, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River between Springfield and West Springfield, in said county and Commonwealth; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H. R. 17399) to change the name of Point Superior, on Black Lake, near Holland, Mich., to Mari-gold Point; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WEBB: A bill (H. R. 17400) to provide commissioners for the Court of Claims, to amend certain sections of the Judicial Code relating to said court, to regulate appeals therefrom, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NEELY: A bill (H. R. 17401) for the purchase of a site for a public building at Chester, Hancock County, W. Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 17402) providing for the purchase of a site for the purpose of erecting a Federal building thereon in the city of Lima, county of Allen, State of Ohio, and appropriating the money therefor; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. GRAY of Indiana: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 294) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McKINLEY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 295) providing for the appointment of a member of the commission in charge of the Lincoln Memorial in Arlington Cemetery; to the Committee on the Library.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and a joint resolution were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAIR: A bill (H. R. 17403) granting an increase of pension to Ferd Effinger; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BAILEY: A bill (H. R. 17404) granting a pension to Mary E. White; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BENNET: A bill (H. R. 17405) granting a pension to Mary Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BROWNING: A bill (H. R. 17406) for the relief of Eugene Fazzi; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GOULD: A bill (H. R. 17407) granting an increase of pension to William E. Webster; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17408) granting an increase of pension to Louisa N. Corning; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MUDD: A bill (H. R. 17409) for the relief of Lizzie Jones; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17410) for the relief of Richard Riggles; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17411) for the relief of William H. Keys; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17412) for the relief of Eleanor A. Moore; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REAVIS: A bill (H. R. 17413) granting a pension to John Herold; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 17414) to renew and extend certain letters patent; to the Committee on Patents.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17415) to authorize the President to appoint Clarence H. Knight a captain in the line of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 17416) granting an increase of pension to William F. Figley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TINKHAM: A bill (H. R. 17417) granting an increase of pension to George H. Homer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOOD of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 17418) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Boyer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17419) granting an increase of pension to Richard R. Jacobs; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17420) granting a pension to Lizzie Varner; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WOODS of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 17421) granting an increase of pension to George F. Chambers; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GRAY of Alabama: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 293) for the relief of A. D. Davis and W. Marshall Turner; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS ETC.

Under clause of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Memorial of Crocker Post, No. 12, Department of Iowa, Grand Army of the Republic, urging amending of rules granting special-act pensions to soldiers of 1861 to 1865; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BELL: Papers to accompany House resolution 344; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. CONNELLY: Petition of sundry citizens of the sixth district of Kansas, touching the matter of settlement of labor difficulties; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of Miss Irma F. Clarke, of Wellesley, Mass., favoring woman-suffrage amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DILLON: Petition of Rotary Club of Aberdeen, S. Dak., relative to differences between railroads and employees; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. TAGUE: Petition of executive committee of the American Red Cross, relative to appropriation for a tablet in memory of Miss Clara Barton; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, memorial of the Association of Theater Managers of Boston, against tax on theaters; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. Taylor of Colorado: Memorial of Lake County and Garfield County Divisions of Colorado, branch of the National Women's Party and Women's Party of the fourth congressional district of Colorado, favoring woman-suffrage amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: Memorial of Commercial Club of Larimore, N. Dak., favoring submission of railway differences to Interstate Commerce Commission; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, August 12, 1916.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we are the stewards of the ever-increasing wealth of Thy providence and grace. We are the guardians of the sacred rights of men. We have been intrusted with many things pertaining to those riches of life that have been bought with blood. We desire to be faithful to our trust, to hold in reverence Thy name, to advance the interest of Thy kingdom, to increase the happiness of mankind.

Grant us this day Thy grace that our hearts may be opened to every appeal God will make to us, and our hands ready to serve, our lives consecrated to the great purpose of God in human life. Do Thou take away from us every evil thought from our hearts, every unholy thing, and may we serve God with singleness of heart and purpose. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, August 10, 1916, when, on request of Mr. GALLINGER and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of sundry citizens of Washington, D. C., praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented petitions of the Chamber of Commerce of Petaluma and of the Chamber of Commerce of Santa Paula, in the State of California, praying for the settlement of the difficulties between the railroads and their employees by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a memorial of the Bettes Pharmacy, of Jacksonville, Fla., remonstrating against a tax on each 8 ounces of any preparation containing either wine or alcohol, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from W. D. Tidwell, of Denver, Colo., remonstrating against a tax on freight and express bills of lading, telephone and telegraph messages, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BRADY. I present telegrams which I have received from citizens in my State, relating to the proposed tax on copper, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WALLACE, IDAHO, August 10, 1916.

HON. JAMES H. BRADY,
United States Senate:

We desire to protest against that portion of a revenue bill now before the Senate by which it is proposed to levy a tax upon copper. It is the opinion of this body that the proposed tax is unfair and unjust for the following reasons: First, that it is not uniform taxation; second, that it singles out only one of the metals produced in this country, thus placing an undue burden on one industry; third, while it is presumed that it is the intention to tax abnormal copper profits, no provision is made for abolition of the tax when copper prices become normal; fourth, that it is retroactive to January 1, 1916, thus placing a burden upon producers and manufacturers not contemplated in transactions already closed and on which they have no opportunity to protect themselves.

We trust that you will use every effort in your power to prevent the enactment of said tax.

WALLACE BOARD OF TRADE,
M. A. CORNER, President.

WALLACE, IDAHO, August 10, 1916.

HON. JAMES H. BRADY,
United States Senate:

The revenue bill which passed the House on July 8 and is now before the Senate proposed, among other things, a tax on copper production which seems to me very unfair. I do not know why copper should be selected for this purpose in preference to any other commodity. If this principle is accepted and more revenue is needed, the same tax may be applied to any other of the metals. I hope there is no chance for the passage of this bill in its present form.

JAMES F. MCCARTHY,
WALLACE, IDAHO, August 10, 1916.

HON. JAMES H. BRADY,
United States Senate:

We desire to protest against the enactment of the proposed tax on copper embodied in the revenue bill now in the Senate. Believe this tax to be unfair in that it singles out one industry and places upon it an undue burden of taxation; also, that it is unfair in that it is retroactive, taxing business already disposed of in which no opportunity was had to cover this additional expense; and that no provision is made for the abolition of the tax when the price of copper is again normal. Hope you will do all you can to defeat the passage of this tax.

FEDERAL MINING & SMELTING CO.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I present a petition in favor of the workmen's compensation bill, signed by something like 300 members of Detroit Branch, No. 1, National Association of Letter Carriers. I ask to have the body of the petition printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DETROIT BRANCH, No. 1.
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS
OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Detroit, Mich., August 10, 1916.

HON. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
United States Senator, Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned members of Detroit Branch, No. 1, National Association of Letter Carriers, respectfully invite your attention to the Kern-McGillcuddy workmen's compensation bill for injured Federal employees.

This bill passed the House of Representatives on July 12, 1916, by a vote of 285 ayes to 3 nays.

We understand that it has been reported favorably to the Senate by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, and now has a place on the Senate calendar.

As the law would be of particular benefit to the letters carriers, we are very anxious to have it pass this session without amendment. Therefore your petitioners very respectfully solicit your cooperation and assistance in getting early action taken thereon.

S. W. ARKENBRANDT, Secretary
(And others).

Mr. TOWNSEND. I present a telegram from William Livingston, one of the prominent bankers of Michigan, chairman of the Detroit Clearing House Association and former president of the National Bankers' Association, and a telegram from William J. Gray, president of the Michigan Bankers' Association, in reference to the special bank tax which, the papers have suggested, is to be restored by the Senate committee. I move that the telegrams be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. I present telegrams from William Thompson, of Lewiston, Idaho; the First National Bank, the Commercial National Bank, and the St. Anthony Bank & Trust Co., of St. Anthony, Idaho; the Board of Trade, the Federal Mining & Smelting Co., and from James F. McCarthy, of Wallace, Idaho; from the National Defense League, of San Francisco, Cal.; and from W. D. Tidwell, of Denver, Colo., all touching on the revenue bill which, I understand, will soon be considered by the Senate. I move that the telegrams be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I present a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Ralph S. Stacy, president of the Washington State Bankers' Association, remonstrating against reinstating in the revenue bill the special bankers' tax. I move that the telegram be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance a telegram which I have received from W. D. Tidwell, of Denver, Colo., regarding a stamp tax on freight and express bills of lading and telephone and telegraph messages.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DENVER, COLO., August 11, 1916.

CHAS. CURTIS, Washington, D. C.:

The organization which I represent, composed of 12,000 growers, shippers, and distributors of fruits and vegetables living in central, middle, and far western country, earnestly, but vigorously, protest against amending H. R. 16763 to keep in effect stamp tax on freight and express bills of lading, telephone and telegraph messages. Perishable industry carried on by long-distance phone and telegrams. Shipments of freight and express are of small money value, but millions of the stamp tax falls heavily and unevenly upon this industry. Willing to pay our share to support our Government, but stamp tax an unjust burden.

W. D. TIDWELL, Secretary.

RESIGNATION OF FORMER DIRECTOR OF THE CENSUS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, on Thursday we had some discussion about the date of the resignation of Mr. Durand as Director of the Census and the appointment of Mr. Harris. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who I know always desires to be accurate, said that Mr. Harris's nomination was sent in first and Durand resigned a day or two afterwards, or about that time.

That the facts may be correctly presented upon this subject, I wish to call attention to the fact that the Senate records show that the nomination of Mr. Harris was made on the 17th of June. I send to the desk a copy of the resignation of Mr. Durand, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

The honorable the SECRETARY OF COMMERCE.

SIR: I beg to hand you herewith, for transmission to the President, my resignation as Director of the Census.

Very respectfully,

E. DANA DURAND.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it is thus clearly shown that the resignation of Mr. Durand antedated the nomination of Mr. Harris.

Shortly after the confirmation of Mr. Harris as Director of the Census he designated a board consisting of Mr. S. N. D. North and W. R. Merriam, former Directors of the Census; Prof. Walter F. Wilcox, of Cornell University; Chief Statistician W. S. Rossiter; and Daniel C. Roper to investigate the status of the work of the census and to make recommendations with reference to it. I ask that their report, which is short, be printed in the Record without stopping to read it.

No one can read this report without observing the numerous changes recommended to overcome the delay due to lack of proper administration by Mr. Durand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SEPTEMBER 19, 1913.

To the DIRECTOR:

In view of the facts (1) that the act for the taking of the Thirteenth and subsequent censuses requires that the reports of that census shall be completed and published on or before July 1, 1912; (2) that, although three and one-half years have now elapsed since the enumeration, much of the Thirteenth Census work is still uncompleted; (3) that the regular annual reports and other work of the intercensal period have been greatly delayed because a large body of census clerks is still employed upon the Thirteenth Census work; (4) that the value and usefulness of the annual and other reports required by law are largely dependent upon the promptness with which they are compiled and given to the public; and (5) that current appropriations are required for the purposes for which they were made.

The undersigned special agents of the Bureau of Census, instructed by the director to make studies of particular branches of statistical work in the bureau, have now partly completed their several tasks, and advise the director to begin new tabulations or analyses in connection with the unfinished branches of the Thirteenth Census, namely, population and mines and quarries, and to readjust the work on those branches and on the delayed annual reports so as to insure their publication not later than December 31, 1913.

Therefore we advise:

1. That the proposed second machine run of the cards for the purpose of tabulating occupations be abandoned, thus expediting the time of production by about six months and reducing the cost of finishing that branch by about $65,000, and that the tables yielded by the first run of the cards be printed without derivative tables or text. These tables give the number of persons of each sex in each occupation and classify them by race, nativity, and parent nativity, and five age periods, thus insuring the publication of the primary classification of occupational data as reported at previous censuses.

2. That the report upon native tongue be limited to the chapter to appear in the forthcoming final volume on population.

3. That the tables relating to mines and quarries now in the form of printed bulletins, proofs, or manuscript be sent to the Public Printer at once, the same to constitute the final report on mines and quarries, and that no further tabulations or text be prepared in connection with that report.

4. That tables for the benevolent institutions and for the institutional population, namely, prisoners, insane and feeble-minded, and paupers, be prepared and published without percentage or other derivative tables and without analytical text.

5. That the annual compilation of the statistics of forest products be abandoned. There appears to be no authority of law for an annual inquiry of this character, which the records show to have cost from $20,000 to $40,000 a year.

6. That the annual report on the financial statistics of cities for 1912 be completed and published by January 1, 1914, by curtailing the amount of detail to be included; that the schedules and report for 1913 be similarly curtailed; that the reports for the years 1912 and 1913 be printed without text, except such as is necessary for explanation and definition; and that until the annual reports on the financial statistics of cities are brought up to date no attempt be made to prepare a report on general municipal statistics. This recommendation is based on the fact that delay in the compilation and publication of the annual municipal reports detracts seriously from their value.

7. That the reports on mortality statistics for the years 1911 and 1912 be published before the close of the present calendar year. To make this possible, the text of these reports should be reduced to a minimum or omitted, the tables condensed, and no effort made to publish a report on births until the mortality reports are published.

8. That work upon the standardization of death rates, life tables, and occupational mortality be suspended until the above reports have been published. There is no reason why the mortality report for each year should not be compiled and published prior to the close of the succeeding calendar year.

9. That the emergency presented by the delay in completing the Thirteenth Census justifies the director in requesting the Secretary of Commerce to lay the matter before the President with the view of securing his instructions to the Public Printer to give precedence, so far as practicable, to the remaining publications of the Thirteenth Census and the annual reports long overdue.

The undersigned special agents of the Bureau of the Census submit these recommendations. They will severally give their attention to the various questions submitted to each of them by the director and prepare further memoranda for his consideration at an early date.

APPOINTMENT OF SUPERINTENDENT OF COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to make a similar request to clear up the proposition as to whether Mr. Jones is a horse doctor or not. Mr. Sweet, a high official of the Treasury Department, wrote to Mr. Hughes to the effect—I quote his exact words:

Dr. Jones never was a veterinary surgeon.

I do not want in the slightest degree to reflect upon this noble profession, which is most useful in the community, but it does seem incongruous to those who are interested in good government to put a horse doctor at the head of the Coast Survey.

I have here a copy of one of Dr. Jones's prescriptions, a facsimile of which I will ask to have inserted in the Record.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is this being done under unanimous consent? Has unanimous consent been requested?

Mr. PENROSE. I am taking the opportunity afforded the Senator from Georgia. I did not object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon; I propounded a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair—not to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is unable to state whether the Senator from Pennsylvania is taking advantage of the presentation of petitions and memorials or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Pennsylvania just stated that he wanted to read a letter or an affidavit of some description.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator from Mississippi will permit me, the Senator from Georgia, without objection, opened up this subject, and in order to throw further light on it I am going to ask to have inserted in the Record—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, the Senator from Pennsylvania having confessed his object is to show further argument, I object.

Mr. PENROSE. All right. I will take an opportunity later in the day to read it as a part of my remarks.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. SHAFROTH. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably, with an amendment, Senate resolution 244 authorizing the Committee on Finance to hold hearings and employ a stenographer, and I desire the consideration of the resolution now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-fourth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry regarding this resolution. Is it contemplated to employ a stenographer to report hearings before the majority members of the Finance Committee to the exclusion of the minority, as has been the practice heretofore?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think that is the purpose of the resolution. It is in the usual form. The question is as to whether and how he is to be used and to what extent is to be determined by the committee. This simply authorizes the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, to employ a stenographer at the regular rate, and it is presented with an amendment striking out the authority to send for persons and papers, because that is something that the committee has concluded there ought to be a special request for and a showing before the committee before it is authorized.

The resolution is simply an authorization for the committee to employ a stenographer at the rate of $1 per printed page.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that last year a similar resolution was passed, and if we pass this resolution, of course, it will cover the hearings which have already been held before the subcommittees appointed from the majority. That is the object of the resolution. The hearings have already been held, the printing done, and this, of course, is to authorize the payment for the reporting.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not hear the Senator's last sentence.

Mr. SMOOT. I said the hearings had been held and this is to pay for work already done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Utah has covered what I wished to say. It is the usual custom to pass resolutions of this sort at the beginning of each Congress. I found a few days ago that the last resolution of this character had expired by limitation and that it was necessary to pass another to pay for a stenographer.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course, there would be no objection to the resolution if the hearings were before the full committee or a subcommittee upon which the minority were represented. Just why the contingent fund of the Senate should be drawn upon to pay the expense of the Democratic caucus I fail to understand. These hearings were strictly partisan.

I understand that three or four subcommittees have been appointed from the Finance Committee, consisting of three each, every one a Democrat. I have not been invited, as the ranking member of the minority, to participate in any of the hearings. I do not know whether I would have been let into the room if I had asked admission. I have not been able to get any information as to the progress that is being made. Just why the contingent fund of the Senate should be drawn on to take down the proceedings of the Democratic caucus I fail to understand.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is entirely mistaken if he supposes that any person has been employed by the Democratic caucus to take down anything.

We had a stenographer but a very few days, and only then he was taking down testimony taken in the open before one of the subcommittees of the Democratic membership investigating the munitions tax and one investigating matters connected with the income and tariff tax. I do not suppose that the entire expense incurred up to this time will be more than $15 or $20. Those hearings have been open. Those hearings were insisted upon by Members on both sides, and they have been conducted just exactly like similar hearings have always been conducted heretofore, and they have been printed and are in the hands of Senators.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator as the chairman of the committee contend for a moment that any of the minority were permitted to be present to cross-examine the witnesses?

Mr. SIMMONS. If they had desired to be present and cross-examine the witnesses, they could have been present and cross-examined them.

Mr. PENROSE. That was not the understanding while it was going on.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have never heard that the Senator from Pennsylvania desired to be present. The hearings of the subcommittee were absolutely open. Hundreds of people were here to be heard, and they were heard, as many of them as desired, as spokesmen and representatives of certain delegations that came here. There has been no deviation from the usual custom in reference to these hearings. We thrashed out here this thing yesterday morning. The Senator was not here at the time. The trouble is that the Senator does not stay here all the time, and when he comes in he wants to take up something that has been here before.

Mr. SHAFROTH. This is a matter which does not affect the question of the consideration of the resolution, because this is an authority given to the committee to do this thing. If there has been a violation of the terms of it, the Senator from Pennsylvania has a right to appear before the Auditing Committee of the Senate and object to the payment of the bill. So far, however, as the authority of the committee to employ a stenographer is concerned, surely the Finance Committee is not going to be denied that right, whether it be under a Republican administration or under a Democratic administration. I repeat, as to whether there is a violation of the authority given, whether the terms of it are complied with, is a matter for the Senator to object to when the bill is presented to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. For that reason, it seems to me, Mr. President, that this resolution ought to be adopted.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

Mr. PENROSE. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. The chairman of the Committee on Finance has referred to a subcommittee. I should like to ask whether those committees are composed wholly of majority Members or whether they are composed of both majority and minority Members?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have before stated, if the Senator please, that that has been the custom as to all tariff legislation. The bills have first been prepared by the majority Members and then submitted to the full committee.

Mr. WORKS. I was not asking as to the custom. I was asking for the fact in the present instance.

Mr. SIMMONS. I stated that that was the fact. If that is what the Senator desires to know, that is the fact.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not consider that this stenographer has been employed by the Committee on Finance.

I do not consider that the Democratic majority of that committee is the committee or that any subcommittee of the Finance Committee that does not have a minority representation on it is a subcommittee of the Committee on Finance or of any other committee of this body. It is purely and simply a partisan proceeding, of which we get scanty information from day to day in the newspapers. The majority members of the Finance Committee meet in secret session and determine on something and then report to the Democratic caucus, according to the newspapers. We are legislating here in this Capitol without any record of the vote, without any record of the proceedings, leaving the Republicans in this Chamber to maintain a quorum while the majority Members are absent, paying no attention whatever to the arguments and speeches of the minority Members against many of the measures which are pending here.

It is not an official investigation which is being pursued by the Finance Committee, because there are no minority Members on any of these subcommittees or on the subcommittee considering the revenue measure. If this resolution could be amended—and I do not know whether or not the Senator would object to such an amendment—by the addition of this proviso, "Provided, That the said stenographer shall be present at all Democratic caucuses and take down a correct statement of the proceedings, with the yeas-and-nays vote upon every question and amendment," I would cheerfully agree to the passage of the resolution.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, this resolution is in the usual form. It relates simply to the employment of a stenographer who, under the resolution, will report all of the proceedings which the committee may desire to have reported at the next session of Congress. Consequently the resolution does not relate to what has been done particularly; but if there is any violation of the terms of that resolution, then, as I have said, will be the time for the Senator from Pennsylvania to appear before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and object to the payment of the stenographer.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, during the last presidential election one of the leading features of that "uplift campaign" was the importance of the flood tide of publicity upon all public proceedings. Now, why should the Democratic caucus be held in the dark? Is there anything transpiring there that would be disagreeable to the Senator to have printed for the information of the American people?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No. So far as I am concerned, I believe in open caucuses.

Mr. PENROSE. There the Senator has succeeded in overcoming his belief in that matter very successfully.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the truth of the matter is that the more secrecy you have in a caucus the more certainly the newspapers will have printed in the morning exactly what occurred. As a means of publicity the best thing on earth is to call for a caucus.

Mr. SIMMONS. May I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have noticed in the newspapers that the Republican Members had a meeting a day or two ago with reference to the order of legislation—a conference or caucus, or whatever you may call it. Was that an open meeting, with the doors open to the public?

Mr. PENROSE. I do not think there would have been any objection to anyone being present. The doors were not closed that I know of, and the chairman of the caucus gave out the result of the proceedings to the public.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; and so did we.

Mr. PENROSE. That was done by direction of the conference.

Mr. SIMMONS. And so as to our conference, but I asked the question, and I should like to have the Senator answer directly, or indirectly, if he prefers that course, whether at that particular caucus, which was held within the last two or three days by the Republican Members, the doors were open and the public were invited to come in and to look upon their deliberations?

Mr. PENROSE. It was not a caucus, Mr. President; and the Republicans in the Senate of the United States have never held a caucus. I challenge the Senator from North Carolina to point to an instance where the Republicans in this body have held caucuses, so called, to determine the details of legislation. He can not do it.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Pennsylvania is now escaping under the cover of a term. I will ask the Senator if that was not a private meeting at which only Republicans were present, and was it not for the purpose of ascertaining what the Republican Members desired to do with reference to the program of legislation? It does not make any difference whether you call that a church meeting or a caucus or a conference; you may use any term you desire; but I suppose it would mean substantially the same thing, if the meeting were a meeting of the minority membership, and only of the minority membership, for the purpose of passing upon some matter pertaining to legislation.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the meeting was a conference to consider certain propositions of the majority relating to the legislative program. I repeat that I challenge the Senator from North Carolina to cite an instance where the Republicans of this body have ever held a conference or a caucus—call it whichever you may—to consider legislation, and binding Members participating in that conference, against their consciences and their convictions, to vote, when the bill comes out on the floor of the Senate, in accordance with the majority action.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the statement which the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] makes is correct. When the Republican Party was in power the Republican Senators held no caucuses. It was not necessary that they should do so, for there was a man then in the Senate from Rhode Island who got his orders from the great interests in New York; he delivered them here, and they were obeyed. There was then no necessity for a caucus. One man dictated and controlled the Republican policies here.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, that is such an ancient chestnut that it was hardly worth while for the Senator from Colorado to get up and give vent to such a statement. It is not true.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt, Mr. President, that if the misfortune of another Republican majority should be inflicted upon the country the Senator from Pennsylvania will aspire to the toga which fell from the shoulders of the Rhode Island statesman.

Mr. PENROSE. The statement is not true, Mr. President. At no time could the Republicans during the enactment of tariff legislation command the full party vote in this body, but more frequently they were able to get the different schedules through the help of Senators from Louisiana and other Democratic States. And I, for one, were the fact as stated, would rather be advised by a Member of this body than by the occupant of the White House coming down here on personal visits, contrary to custom and even to law and decency, and inducing Democratic Senators to reverse the convictions of a lifetime and pass legislation which they loathe and despise in their inner minds.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PENROSE. It is up, and I suppose we can discuss it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We have been pretty liberal about it.

Mr. PENROSE. I certainly shall object to it, if it is not to be discussed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the resolution will go to the calendar.

Mr. PENROSE. If discussion will be permitted, I shall not object.

Mr. SHAFROTH. How long a discussion?

Mr. PENROSE. I can not tell the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for the regular order, then, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are in order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 6841) to enlarge the scope and purpose of the post-office building at Syracuse, N. Y., asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 5800) to provide for the use of public-school buildings in the District of Columbia as community forums, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 782) thereon.

Mr. WEEKS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to grant the free use, for military drill, of any discarded rifles to any duly accredited camps of the Sons of Veterans Reserve, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16532) authorizing an adjustment of the boundaries of the Whitman National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 783) thereon.

Mr. POMERENE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14822) to prevent and punish the desecration, mutilation, or improper use, within the District of Columbia, of the flag of the United States of America, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 784) thereon.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Fisheries, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11474) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to permit the construction of a public highway through the fish-cultural station in Unicoi County, Tenn., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 781) thereon.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6904) authorizing the conveyance of the United States jail and land on which the same is located at Guthrie, Okla., to Logan County, Okla., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 785) thereon.

SURVEYS OF DISTILLERIES.

Mr. GALLINGER. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 9542) to amend the second paragraph of section 3264 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by section 5 of the act of March 1, 1879, and as further amended by the act of Congress approved June 22, 1910, and I submit a report (No. 780) thereon. I call to the attention of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. Let the bill be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. For what purpose is the bill being read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands it is for unanimous consent.

Mr. PENROSE. I object to the consideration of the measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes to the calendar.

MEMORIAL TO JOHN ERICSSON.

Mr. CLAPP. In behalf of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], from the Committee on the Library, I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 5) for erecting a suitable memorial to John Ericsson, and I submit a report (No. 777) thereon. The bill has passed the House, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let us have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized for the erection, in the city of Washington, D. C., of a suitable memorial to John Ericsson, the inventor and constructor of the Monitor, said sum to be expended for the purposes herein named by a commission consisting of the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives, and the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That the design and location of said memorial and the plan for the treatment of the grounds connected with its site shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLORADO RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 16914) permitting the Needles & Oatman Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Colorado River between the States of California and Arizona, and I submit a report (No. 778) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAVANNAH RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 16905) granting the consent of Congress to A. N. Alford to construct a bridge across the Savannah River, and I submit a report (No. 779) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably without amendment Senate resolution 228, authorizing the Committee on Claims to employ a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had. As there is nothing political in this, I hope that the resolution will be adopted.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-fourth Congress, to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 6846) granting an increase of pension to David Craft (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HOLLIS:

A bill (S. 6847) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Quimby (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WORKS:

A bill (S. 6848) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Batteiger (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 6850) authorizing the transfer of certain retired Army officers to the active list; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 6851) to provide for the establishment of national cooperative banking associations;

A bill (S. 6852) to create a national rural-credit society for the purpose of promoting agricultural credit, of devising forms of obligations eligible for rediscount at Federal reserve banks and acceptable as security for Federal deposits of acting as fiscal agent for the United States Government, and of establishing a suitable form of investment for postal savings bank funds, trust funds in possession of United States courts or departments, and time deposits in national banks; and

A bill (S. 6853) to provide for the establishment of national cooperative rural banking associations; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 6854) to repeal the last proviso of section 4 of an act to establish the Rocky Mountain National Park in the State of Colorado, and for other purposes, approved January 26, 1915; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. CHILTON:

A bill (S. 6855) for the taking depositions de bene esse; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 6856) granting an increase of pension to Henry Arthur (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 163) for an investigation of the live-stock and meat-packing industries and of certain corporations engaged in purchasing live stock and in the packing and distribution of meats; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

STORAGE OF EXPLOSIVES.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I introduce a bill and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Did I understand the Senator to say that he merely introduced the bill?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I introduce the bill and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill ought to be referred to a committee.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, I do not know how long that will take. Let the Secretary read the bill, after which I should like to make a brief statement in regard to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the Secretary reading the bill.

The bill (S. 6849) to regulate the shipment and storage of explosives was read twice by its title.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the bill go to a committee.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, my purpose in introducing the bill and asking unanimous consent for its present consideration is the vital necessity for immediate action. We are all aware that a few weeks ago there were stored at Jersey City ammunition and explosives designed for the bel-ligerents on the other side of the water, and that from some cause, whether by accident or design is not known, a great explosion ensued, which resulted in property damage of over $50,000,000 and involved great loss of life. A similar catastrophe is likely to occur unless some such step as is proposed in this bill shall be taken, whereby the storage of ammunition and other high explosives in the midst of any city shall be barred, without the consent of its corporate power.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is manifest that this bill is of sufficient importance to go to a committee; in fact, no bill should be considered without reference to a committee. I therefore object to its present consideration, and suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEE of Maryland submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $475.45 to pay Ella Warfield, widow of John A. Warfield, deceased, for injuries received by him while in the discharge of his duties as assistant engineer of the United States Treasury Department, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

W. W. WALL.

Mr. STONE. I ask unanimous consent that Order of Business 617, House bill 1373, for the relief of W. W. Wall, be re-committed to the Committee on Claims. It is a bill which has been reported adversely.

Mr. PENROSE. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. STONE. It is a claims bill for the relief of W. W. Wall.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, just a moment.

Mr. STONE. I ask that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

C. HORATIO SCOTT.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, several days ago, when the calendar was under consideration, I happened to be absent from the Chamber for a few moments when Order of Business 632, being the bill (H. R. 4559) for the relief of C. Horatio Scott, was reached. On account of my absence the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] stated that he objected to the consideration of the bill, which is a small claims bill, reported by me. I understand the Senator has examined the bill and does not object to its consideration. If any other Senator has any objection to the measure, I will not, as I am about to do, ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration; but I am obliged to leave the Chamber, and I think this case, although a small affair, of course, and relating to but one individual, is of extreme importance to him.

I will state briefly the object of the bill, and if there is any objection I will not press my request, of course. The bill provides for refunding to the postmaster at Sault Ste. Marie $596.52 on account of the embezzlement of the deputy postmaster, whom the postmaster inherited. The postmaster discovered that the accounts of the deputy were wrong in small particulars, and called upon the department for an investigation. An inspector was sent there, who discovered the irregularities, but recommended that the deputy be allowed to remain until further investigation could be made. In the meanwhile the embezzlement exceeded the amount of the bond by something over $500. This bill seeks to reimburse this postmaster for the amount he was obliged to pay on account of the defalcation of the deputy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I will ask him if the postmaster in question appointed the deputy?

Mr. TOWNSEND. He did not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, I presume the deputy was appointed under civil-service rules, and the postmaster was not in any way personally accountable for his being there?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is my recollection of the matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, if that is the case, undoubtedly the postmaster ought not to suffer. That is one of the bad things about the whole civil-service layout, that instead of giving an official as a confidential subordinate somebody that he trusts you thrust on him a fellow who has passed an examination in geography.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Michigan that when the bill was reached on the calendar

I only asked that it go over because there was no one in the Senate at the time to advise us concerning it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understand that, and that is what I said, that the Senator from Florida heretofore objected to the consideration of the bill because I was not present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to C. Horatio Scott, postmaster at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., $596.52 paid to the United States on account of funds embezzled by Frank Higgins, a post-office clerk in the post office at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

COMPENSATION OF INJURED EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15316, to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15316) to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with an amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there may be some Senators who are interested in this bill and who did not know it would be taken up for consideration this morning. It is for that purpose, and that purpose only, that I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Groana	Oliver	Taggart
Brady	Harding	Overman	Thomas
Bryan	Hollis	Penrose	Tillman
Chamberlain	Husting	Pomerene	Townsend
Chilton	Johnson, S. Dak.	Ransdell	Underwood
Clapp	Jones	Shafroth	Vardaman
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Sheppard	Walsh
Culberson	Lane	Sherman	Weeks
Cummins	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Smith, S. C.	Works
Dillingham	Myers
Fletcher	Nelson
Gallinger	Norris

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] on account of sickness in his family. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to announce the necessary absence from the city of my colleague [Mr. KENYON]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been requested to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I beg the indulgence of the Senator for a few minutes while I explain my position on the bill which is the unfinished business and give some of the reasons why I shall vote for it.

It will be remembered that I was one of the Democrats in the Senate who opposed the so-called shipping bill in the last Congress, and I do not hesitate to say if the bill now pending contained the same provisions that were embodied in the shipping bill then considered that I would now oppose it with every means in my power.

It will be remembered that one of the objectionable features, and perhaps the most objectionable in that bill, was found in the authority given the board to purchase vessels, the only limitation being that they should be, in the judgment of the board, suitable for the purposes of the corporation therein provided. The board was left free to buy any and every character of vessel that might be tendered it, including the interned ships belonging to Germany and Austria, caught in our ports when the war broke out. I had no doubt when the bill was pending in the Senate that the purpose of the originators of the project, and the chief purpose, was to purchase these interned vessels, because they could be put under our flag more quickly and in larger numbers than vessels could be constructed or purchased from individual owners.

I believed then, and believe now, that if that bill had become a law and these vessels had been purchased by the United States and put under our flag, and engaged in commerce between this and foreign countries war would have been the inevitable result, or such strained relations between this Government and the allies as would have absolutely demoralized and destroyed our foreign commerce. If one of these interned ships had been purchased and loaded with a cargo of American products—cotton, if you please, wheat or corn—for one of the neutral ports of Europe, Great Britain or France would have seized the vessel, carried it into port, and confiscated the ship and cargo. We had an experience of this sort with the Dacia, which was purchased by private individuals, loaded with cotton and started for a neutral port. The result was she was captured, taken into port, and the matter has been in the prize courts ever since, as I understand. If this had been a Government-owned ship, it would have meant shot and shell, and no diplomacy of ours could have adjusted the matter. The bill then pending did not put any limitation whatever upon the character of the ships to be purchased, nor did it provide from whom or under what regulations ships should be purchased.

In this connection, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to an amendment those of us who oppose the bill offered, and which was promptly voted down. The amendment is as follows:

Provided, That in making purchases of ships during the continuance of the pending European war no purchase shall be made in a way which will disturb the conditions of neutrality.

Under the provisions of the original bill, the board was left to exercise its own sweet will to purchase vessels of any character at any price and turn them over to the corporation therein authorized. We had not then forgotten the scandal, the outrageous scandal, that grew out of the Spanish-American War, when the United States bought indiscriminately vessels at exorbitant prices that were in many instances entirely unsuited for the purposes for which they were supposed to have been purchased. And we had not forgotten that after the war many of these vessels were sold at ridiculously low prices, some of them almost given away, and that others are now tied up at the docks entirely unseaworthy and unfitted for commerce of any kind.

The bill now before the Senate carefully provides against a recurrence of that shameful and disgraceful performance on the part of the authorized agents of the United States. For instance, the bill provides in section 5 that neither the board nor any corporation formed under section 11 in which the United States is then a stockholder shall purchase, lease, or charter any vessel which is then engaged in the foreign or domestic commerce of the United States unless it is about to be withdrawn from such commerce without any intention on the part of the owner to return it thereto within a reasonable time; nor shall the board purchase any vessel under the registry or flag of a foreign country which is then engaged in war; nor can they purchase any ship which is not adapted or can not by reasonable alterations and repairs be adapted to the purposes specified in said section; nor shall they purchase any vessel which, upon expert examination made under the direction of the board, a written report of such examination being filed as a public record, is not without alteration or repair found to be at least 75 per cent as efficient as at the time it was originally put in commission as a seaworthy vessel.

The bill submitted and considered during the last session of Congress provided that vessels purchased or constructed by such shipping board and conveyed to such corporation as therein provided should be entitled to registry under the laws of the United States and should be deemed vessels of the United States and entitled to the benefits and privileges appertaining to such vessels, except that such vessels should engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands.

The provisions of that bill prevented the vessels so purchased and operated from engaging in coastwise trade. It was contended at that time by those of us who opposed the bill if there was a Shipping Trust in the United States it was that engaged in the coastwise trade. I offered an amendment to that bill providing that these ships might engage in coastwise trade, with a view of breaking up and destroying that coastwise Shipping Trust. The amendment was promptly voted down.

The bill now pending provides that any vessel flying the United States flag may be permitted to engage in the coastwise trade if conditions, commercial and otherwise, require.

The bill considered in the last Congress provided that this shipping board should be composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Navy, and three other persons appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. This was a most objectionable feature, because of the fact that these department heads had no special knowledge of the shipping business, and had not the time to devote to the management of the ships owned and operated by the board, and has been remedied in the pending bill by eliminating the ex officio members and requiring the President to appoint five commissioners, who shall be appointed with due regard to their fitness to efficiently discharge the duties imposed upon them by the bill and with due regard to a fair representation of the geographical divisions of the country. Not more than three of the commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party.

Another very objectionable feature of the original bill was that it fixed no limit of time as to the operation by the board of the ships built or purchased under the authority granted by that bill. They might have been operated indefinitely. While the bill was under consideration, those of us who opposed it submitted the following amendment, which was rejected:

Provided further, That at the end of two years after the conclusion of peace in Europe the Government shall cease to operate said vessels and shall dispose of them, either by transferring them to the service of the Army or the Navy, or both, so far as they may be adapted to these services, or by leasing or chartering them for private operation.

The only difference in this amendment and the provisions of the pending bill is that a five-year period has been substituted for the suggested two years' limitation of Government ownership and operation after the conclusion of the European war.

Therefore, Mr. President, since the objectionable features of the bill considered in the last Congress have been eliminated, and all the suggestions then made by the opponents of the bill have been incorporated, speaking for myself, I shall unhesitatingly vote for the bill, and I believe I speak for the other Democrats with whom I was associated at that time.

If the concessions now made in this bill had been made in the last Congress, the legislation would have been passed last March instead of during this session, and those of us who supported the motion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to recommit the bill for the purpose of making the very changes in it that have now been made in the pending bill, submit that our position in this matter has been absolutely and speedily vindicated.

LEGISLATION OF THE SESSION.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. President, I will impose upon the patience of the Senate for a short while to express some views which I hold upon legislation which has been enacted into law this session and upon some legislation still in the making. I will not take up these subjects in the order in which they have come up, but as they present themselves to my mind.

First, I call attention to H. R. 16763, an act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, intended to raise approximately $200,000,000. I am heartily in accord with the purpose of the bill, but I do not altogether agree with the manner in which or the principle upon which the taxes are sought to be raised. There are many good features in this bill. I call particular attention to that provision creating a tariff commission. I am in no sense a new convert to the principle of a statutory tariff commission. It has been in the public mind for some years, and it ought to be considered as a thing apart from partisanship.

TARIFF COMMISSION.

For many years I have believed that a tariff commission could be made one of the essential things in the management of our import affairs. The bill provides for a nonpartisan tariff commission composed of six men with full power to investigate relations between the rates of duties on raw and finished products, the effects of various duties and in general the operation of customs laws and their relation to the Federal revenues. It is further empowered to investigate the tariff relations between our country and foreign countries, commercial treaties, preferential provisions, the effect of export bounties and preferential transportation rates, the volume of importations compared with domestic production and consumption, and conditions, causes, and effects relating to competition of foreign industries with those of the United States, including dumping and cost of production.

It would seem, Mr. President, that the time has come when the people wish that the profitless discussion of tariff schedules shall be taken out of politics, if that be possible, and my observation is that when the people make up their minds to do a thing they usually succeed. I can see no possible objection to a nonpartisan tariff commission, aided by trained, experienced specialists and the very best scientists, engaged in gathering data, looking into every detail of the cost of an article at home and abroad, and submitting these facts to Congress. Such data will enable Congress to fix intelligently the proper rates of duty on goods coming to this country from abroad, for the purpose of increasing revenue. The tariff question is the line of cleavage which has divided the two great parties for a century, and knowing the business disturbances which a revision of the tariff always brings about, people have searched in vain for a remedy to take this very troublesome and vexatious question out of politics.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is now handling freight and passenger rates for more than 250,000 miles of steam railways in the United States, and in the main is handling this tremendous problem satisfactorily to the people, on the one side, and the railroad companies on the other.

Mr. President, I believe the establishment of the tariff commission, as outlined in this bill, will be groundwork for the building up of a governmental agency which will eventually occupy to the people of the United States substantially the same position in the fiscal affairs of our Government that the Interstate Commerce Commission occupies in the transportation field to-day. After this commission is established and thoroughly organized, I believe that public opinion in the future will demand that it be given power to fix the maximum rates of duty upon commodities imported into this country much like the Interstate Commerce Commission is now given power to fix rates on railroads. We have already observed the general business disturbance at each recurring presidential election, due to the constant threat of agitation on the tariff, and to avoid this disturbance the business man, the laborer, mechanic, farmer, merchant, physician—in fact, everyone who wishes his country well—earnestly desire to remove this contention from politics and to make it a business question pure and simple.

DYESTUFFS.

Mr. President, I am in favor of that section of the bill relating to dyestuffs. It is one of the necessary things entering into the fabric of life of our manufacture which we have heretofore largely depended upon German manufacturers for our supply. The Germans have almost a monopoly in the manufacture and output of this extremely valuable commodity. The helplessness of this Government was recently demonstrated when our State Department appealed to the allies to permit $45,000 of this material to come to our country from Germany in order that our Bureau of Printing and Engraving, engaged in printing money and manufacturing postage and internal-revenue stamps, might not be shut down on account of the lack of foreign dyes or forced to adopt different and unstable colors.

We have as good chemists here as Germany or any country in the world. We have as much brain power in our Nation as any nation on earth and men who are as willing to put their money in enterprises as any class of men found anywhere, but as the Germans have almost a monopoly in the manufacture of dyestuffs, backed by all of the wealth of that empire, manufacturers of dyestuffs in this country have felt that they are unwilling to put capital into this business to compete with long-established and prosperous monopoly unless the rates of duty on this commodity be increased. I do not know whether the contention of men engaged in this enterprise in this country is correct or not. I express no opinion upon that, but I take them at their word, and I am willing to cast my vote to increase the rate of duty upon all dyestuffs.

PUBLIC HIGHWAYS.

Mr. President, Congress has passed much legislation this session which will greatly benefit the people, all of which costs money, but I believe the people are willing to stand for taxation where the object sought to be obtained will in the end benefit them. Recently a bill passed both branches of Congress which is now permanent law, for which I voted, authorizing an appropriation of $85,000,000 to aid the States in the construction of public highways, $5,000,000 of this amount to be appropriated this year and the amount to be increased each year for the next five years on condition that the individual States contribute for the improvement of their respective highways an amount equal to that allotted to them under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. President, there have been few questions which as a private citizen I have taken greater interest in than that of building and maintaining good roads. The State of Indiana, I am sure, is unquestionably in favor of this great work as a great economic proposition benefiting at once each man, woman, and child. If the people of other States are similarly interested, there is no doubt that this entire appropriation will be made available and that future appropriations of the same nature will be even larger. In commenting upon this subject the Indianapolis News, in an editorial, recently said:

When a farmer has been disappointed in selling his produce he has often been told that transportation constituted an important element in marketing cost. It is more expensive to haul grain or cotton over poor roads from the farm to the railroad than to haul the same shipment a much greater distance by railroad. Therefore everything that the farmer does to improve State roads he does indirectly to increase his profits. Out of a total land area of 22,966,400 acres in Indiana 21,299,823 acres are included in farms. Almost 75 per cent of this farm region is improved. Good roads mean cheap transportation for the produce of the farm.

The average haul of farm produce from place of production to market in this country is 8 miles. It is estimated that it costs the farmer $1.25 per ton to haul his produce to market over American roads. In fact, it costs less to ship a bushel of wheat from New York to Liverpool than it does to haul it to the average distance market. It costs the French farmer 21 cents per ton and the German farmer 19 cents per ton for the same haul, both in weight and distance. Why? The reason is found in their improved, almost perfect roads. The article might have gone further and impressed the fact that the cheaper transportation lessens the cost of production because it brings to the producer what he needs for his purposes at the least cost, and would in turn benefit the consumers and if not advance at least sustain and better secure the producers' profit. The question of good roads, not only viewed from the military standpoint, but from a commercial and economic viewpoint and, most of all, in connection with the interests of the farming population, is one that comes home to everyone.

The completion of a perfect system of these great arteries of trade with their feeders reaching to all the farms direct will cause a saving to our farmers of hundreds of millions of dollars annually not only in the diminished wear and tear on their teams and rolling stock but also, as pointed out, in economy of transportation and time.

MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. President, I am also in favor of an ample and aggressive merchant marine. One of the most important features of the shipping bill provides for the control of water rates, but what I have in mind, Mr. President, in connection with this new Government enterprise is the betterment by it of our trade in South America.

SOUTH AMERICAN COUNTRIES.

Some of our Government officials have already visited the South American countries with a view of getting in touch with them, of understanding and learning their ways and manner of doing business, and of learning how to give them an opportunity to become better acquainted with us, as well as our way and manner of doing business. Several of our great banks, recognizing the wonderful possibilities there for development, have lately established branch banks and have thus furnished the means by which the export trade of the United States with those countries can be greatly facilitated. There are now 75,000,000 people living in South America, and in 50 years, it is safe to say, at the prevailing rate of increase there will be over 200,000,000. We ought to have their trade, or at least a lion's share of it. It has been in the hands of European nations. It is within our power to acquire it, if the policy now proposed in our shipping bill, backed up by accommodating banking facilities, is prudently and consistently carried out.

SHIPPING BILL.

The shipping bill in question provides for the use of $50,000,000 of the Panama Canal bonds for the inauguration of this new departure. In my judgment it is a step in the right direction, a businesslike procedure which should be followed in taking care of expenditures for permanent improvement, and to which the unused residue of those bonds could be profitably applied.

OUR INTERNAL NAVIGATION.

I do not see how we can withhold unqualified assent to the scheme of the improvement of our great rivers, the Mississippi, the Ohio, the Missouri, and their important tributaries, as well as to our important harbors. At the same time, I am opposed to frittering away money on trifling projects which do not serve the general good and are of a purely local character. When we spend large sums for such rivers as the Mississippi, the Missouri, the Ohio, and on our seaport harbors, we cast our bread upon waters which will return to us a thousandfold in the enlargement of our commerce.

FLOOD CONTROL OF RIVERS.

I join in approval of the appropriation for a flood control of the Mississippi, and in this line of work I believe the Government should go forward and prevent the floods of many of the rivers of our country, but in doing it I believe the States or municipalities to be benefited, bordering on these rivers, should pay a fair proportion of the cost. Money expended in this way will do more good, benefit the people more than devoting it to little rivers and creeks on which no appreciable, if any, commerce can be made possible, and which do not serve the general purposes of navigation. In controlling the floods, keeping the water within proper channels, we protect life and property and save the Nation's ultimate resources hundreds of millions of dollars in value by making it possible to place in cultivation a vast acreage now lying idle on account of being subject to recurring overflows and destructive floods.

Mr. President, these are all commendable objects for national enterprise. They command the patriotic support of men of all classes, for they make for the public welfare. That which helps one may not always help the great masses of the people, but that which benefits the whole can not but be of advantage to the individual. It is not a question, then, of whether or not we shall do all these things but by what means shall we accomplish them? The question is how to go forward with the least possible friction? Who is to bear the temporary and permanent burdens—we of to-day or those of the morrow? Are all the great sums needed for these great undertakings to come from current revenues? Is the weight of taxation to be put all in one spot instead of being distributed over a more equitable area? Are we to raise the money at once, as the revenue bill would seem to suggest, or are we going to let the future generation contribute its share to the permanent protection of the Nation? These are questions that bring us to the consideration of the problem of running the business of the Nation in a businesslike way. Common sense is the essence of good business. Where it rules the best results follow; where it does not prevail business goes on in a lumbering, happy-go-lucky fashion. There are no uncertainties in mathematics. Business is the very spirit and genius of mathematics. As the first absolutely sound business proposition, I declare that current revenues should be used to pay current expenses, and should not be stretched to cover permanent projects of which generations will reap as large, if not larger, benefits than those to-day who initiated and put the projects in motion.

BUSINESS METHODS.

Let us apply ordinary business methods to the affairs of the Government. Under the law the Secretary of the Treasury must submit to Congress at the beginning of each session an estimate of expenditures, and last November he submitted his estimate for the ensuing fiscal year, aggregating $1,150,783,135.16.

Since these estimates were submitted, at the beginning of this session of Congress, there have been radical changes in conditions determining the expenditures of the Government, and the revenues to be provided to meet them must be viewed from an entirely different angle. It is now estimated for the current year the Government will need nearly $1,636,765,000.

Mr. President, the increased appropriations this year over last for the Army, Navy, and coast defense and fortifications alone amount to $352,074,358. Where is this money to come from? Who are to pay the bills? The revenue bill proposes to raise the additional tax, first, by doubling the income and corporation tax; second, by an inheritance tax; third, by a tax on munitions of war; and, under section 302 of the bill, special taxes covering brokers, theaters, amusement and concert halls, circuses, public exhibitions, and so forth. By doubling the income and corporation tax rate it is proposed by the bill to raise an additional $105,000,000, or $227,000,000 by income tax. By an inheritance tax it is estimated that it will raise $15,000,000 the first year. By a tax on munitions of war, $72,000,000; miscellaneous, which covers special taxes, $14,000,000. Total taxes proposed to be raised by this bill, about $200,000,000. The estimated revenue this year under the present law, from the following sources, are: Customs, $230,000,000; internal revenue, ordinary, $303,000,000; income and corporation tax, $125,000,000; emergency tax, $41,000,000; miscellaneous, $54,000,000. Total of this year, $748,200,000.

This is according to the report of the Ways and Means Committee, and would show an estimated excess of disbursements over receipts, which would have to be taken care of, and this excess is necessary to meet military necessities.

PREPAREDNESS.

Mr. President, for many months there has been a demand for preparedness, expressing it as an admitted necessity and as a conviction on the part of the people that the Government must be prepared to meet all emergencies. To do this effectively covers a wide range, and there are so many things entering into the scheme of preparedness for the Government that it is almost impossible to enumerate them all. Complete preparedness is one of the highest conditions in the life of a country. It goes into every detail of the Nation's forces. It surrounds itself with every feature of the people's common interests. In these times we have chosen to apply the word to one special subject, the problem of our Army and Navy and all the other features of our military program.

We ought to give it a much wider application. If Germany had not prepared except so far as her army and navy are concerned, she in no way would have been able to contend against the odds in the present conflict, but the preparedness of Germany was due to an assembling and a utilization of all of the physical, economic, and sentimental forces of the nation, not at any particular period, nor yet with feverish haste at any time, but steadily, systematically, according to well-ordered plans, leaving as little as possible to chance. We may well afford to pattern after her in thoroughness in the general plan of preparedness in whatever degree we proceed. The whole vast field of industrial and final preparedness is ours to cultivate.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

We have taken a wonderful step forward by reforming our banking and currency systems. One of the most important and useful needs of the Federal reserve act, in my opinion, is that which makes it possible for our national banks to establish branches in foreign countries. This makes preparedness of the right sort. It strengthens us in South America or wherever lies commercial enterprise, since to gain the future hold or enlarge the field already occupied will be of great advantage for facilitating the expansion of our trade.

Mr. President, for many years there has been a demand coming from the rural people for rural-credits legislation. I believe this was a just demand because this legislation was much needed. This is now an accomplished fact. The law was passed, and the Farm Loan Board selected. Soon all the machinery to put it into operation will be put together and the details of the law will be quickly worked out. Heretofore little, if any, attention has been paid toward extending rural credits. This law marshals the credits of the farmers; it will reduce their rates of interest, and will give a longer time for payments of loans. With lower rates of interest and longer terms of payment as embodied in the bill many thousands of people now unable to own a farm will avail themselves of the opportunity through this bill and become home owners, a thing very much to be desired.

Mr. President, I believe in reasonable preparedness of our country not for the purpose of aggression but solely for the purpose of forestalling aggression. I believe it the part of wisdom to reasonably prepare for war in time of peace, and while we hope that war will never come, we had better adopt the old motto: "You had better be prepared than sorry."

OUR REORGANIZED ARMY.

Mr. President, I voted for the Army reorganization bill, which increased the Regular Army from 100,000 to 178,000 men and which coordinated with it the militia of the various States, aggregating 420,000; but, Mr. President, as there are so many things in that bill which go to real preparedness, the mere increasing of the number of men is, in my judgment, of secondary importance. At little cost it provides for the teaching of military training in all of our high schools and colleges, as well as in our military institutes where not fewer than 100 students are graduated. When this part of the bill gets in full operation and working order we will be turning out each year from 25,000 to 35,000 thoroughly trained young men, so that in the course of a few years we will have a trained Army at a small cost the equal of that of any nation.

A GREATER NAVY.

It is recognized that a navy constitutes the real defense of a nation against foreign attack, and while the naval bill carries a large increase of appropriations over those of previous years, it was a pleasure for me to support it. In our preparedness program the Navy takes first place. Whether our Army or Navy be the largest in number, in men, guns, and ships, I want it to be the best. I want our soldiers to be the best equipped, trained, and drilled, and to be expert in protecting their bodies against disease, which is as deadly as bullets. I want our ships to be of the best possible build, manned with the best guns, of the longest range, to shoot the farthest, and hit the hardest, and do the quickest work, if it has to be done. Mr. President, in my judgment, man for man, gun for gun, and ship for ship, we have the best Navy on earth, and when the present program carried in the naval bill is completed with its fleet of battle cruisers, super-dreadnaughts, submarines, torpedoes, and aeroplanes, we need not fear the outcome of battle with any foe, and we will be in a position to protect American citizens at home and abroad.

OUR IMPROVED COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. President, our preparedness program for our Army and Navy, including coast defense, will cost this year much larger sums of money than last year. For instance, there was appropriated last year to the Army $101,974,195.87; this year $267,596,530.10, or an excess of $165,622,334.23 this year over last. There was appropriated last year for the Navy $149,661,864.88; this year $316,726,556.54, or an excess of $167,064,691.66 this year over last. There was appropriated last year for our coast defense, including fortifications, $6,006,216.90; this year $25,742,550, or an excess of $19,687,333.10 over last year's appropriation. The appropriation this year over last for these three items aggregated $352,874,373. This demand for preparedness comes from the people, and I believe they are in sympathy with the response to it of their Representatives in Congress.

NITRATE PLANT.

One of the essentials of our preparedness program is that the Government should be supplied with a nitrate plant for the manufacture of explosives. This is one of the fundamental ingredients of explosives. For our supply of this material we are dependent on the nitrates of Chile. In the event of a war with a power having large naval resources our facilities for importing nitrate from Chile might be seriously interfered with. It is necessary, therefore, that we obviate this danger by the establishment of a nitrate plant, for which the many wonderful water powers of this country afford material facilities. The Army reorganization bill makes provision for the establishment of such a plant, the cost and equipment for which $20,000,000 was authorized to be spent.

It should not be overlooked that when the needs of the Government in this particular are fully served the nitrate plant can and may be utilized for the manufacture of fertilizers to furnish farmers at cost of production. The importance of this provision will be appreciated by anyone who is familiar with the great item of expense to which farmers are put in procuring proper fertilizers. Being furnished by the Government with fertilizer at cost will materially reduce the expense of crops and thus be an incalculable benefit to agriculturists and in turn to the consumer.

WEALTH TO BEAR JUST PROPORTION.

No objection can be made to any plan which causes wealth to bear its just proportion in meeting national expenditures. Wealth should shoulder its responsibility in contributing its fullest share in the general scheme of taxation for the support of the Government. One commendable feature about the present revenue bill is the repeal of some of the stamp taxes. They were very objectionable, and doing away with them is a response on the part of the Congress to make taxes not only as light as possible but the least vexatious.

Mr. President, we are confronted to-day with the serious problem of raising revenue to meet the extraordinary conditions surrounding us in our efforts to put the country in a state of thorough preparedness. There can be no doubt but that the current revenues would have been sufficient to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government. At the close of the fiscal year there was a balance of upward of $170,000,000 in the Treasury; the largest balance the Treasury has had for many years, showing that the current revenue was sufficient to meet all ordinary demands upon it. But we are not dealing with ordinary, but with extraordinary conditions, with conditions the like of which we have not been called upon to meet in the last half century.

Mr. President, we can all realize what efforts have been put forth by the Ways and Means Committee of the House in trying to reach a satisfactory solution of this extraordinary condition. We also realize the efforts that have been put forth by the Finance Committee of the Senate while passing through the same ordeal of trying to raise the money with the least objection.

What should we do to meet these extraordinary conditions? Along what road should we travel? Are there any well-marked highways which private business of this country has traveled when finding itself confronted with similar conditions? In times of stress or storm private business is often compelled to cope with unusual conditions.

Take our great railroad systems, any one of them may serve to illustrate the point. When one of those great corporations wants to make large increases in its rolling stock, erect extensive buildings, construct new branch lines, tunnel mountains, bridge rivers, reduce grades, straighten its tracks, and finds its current revenue is not sufficient to cover these expenses, does it tax the present stockholders to meet the present extraordinary emergencies? Of course not. To make these improvements at once out of current revenues would hopelessly cripple operations. It has recourse, therefore, to the sensible, thoroughly businesslike expedient of issuing bonds for a term of years, and out of its current income it sets aside every year an amount sufficient to pay the interest on these bonds and to create a sinking fund for their redemption. The same principle is followed by other successful corporations, and, in my judgment, their experience serves as a pattern for handling the affairs of the Government. I thoroughly believe in the soundness of the maxim: "Pay as you go," but I would amend its application to the matter under discussion by saying: "Pay as you go, if you can, but do not pay as you go if it will cripple or hurt you by imposing burdens upon the taxpayers of the present time." The business viewpoint would be not to pay for these great permanent improvements, especially those which relate to the preparedness of our country, out of current revenues.

Instead of increasing income and corporation taxes and other ordinary taxes—in fact, doubling them to an objectionable and unjust degree, and yet falling short of revenue because of constantly increasing demands—I would suggest that we capitalize the Nation's credit. Issue long-time, low-rate investment bonds, if necessary, of small denominations, and let the future generation bear its share of this preparedness burden.

Follow the example of the most successful business corporations in the country. Obviously the sensible thing to do is to cover these extraordinary expenses caused by our preparedness program by an issue of bonds redeemable in 30 and payable in 50 years, interest at the lowest rate possible, and sinking fund charges to be provided out of current revenues, and the following generations would then bear their share of paying this preparedness indebtedness, which will benefit them as well as ourselves. When the building of the Panama Canal was decided upon Congress authorized a bond issue of $375,000,000. Of this amount $134,000,000 has been issued thus far, leaving a balance unissued of $241,000,000. I understand that $50,000,000 of these bonds will be issued for the purchase of ships for our new merchant marine if the bill now pending becomes a law, leaving a balance of $191,000,000 of these bonds unissued. Why not issue the remaining $191,000,000 of these bonds in order to meet these extraordinary expenditures for preparedness, instead of imposing additional taxes upon the people? You can not constantly keep raising taxes without eventually affecting the farmer, mechanic, laborer, and business man. It seems to me that it is only fair and just that every citizen of the United States be willing to join hands in proportion to his wealth in meeting this extraordinary burden for the purpose of preparedness. This preparedness is for no single class of American citizens, but for all, not only at present, but for future generations, and they should be permitted to join in the expense.

Mr. President, I have not been a Member of this body very long, but it looks to me that sometimes more attention is paid to spending money than to economy. I wonder what would happen to each Senator and to each Member of the House if he spent or appropriated money in his private affairs as he spends it in public affairs? I wonder how long it would be until we would all find ourselves in a court of bankruptcy? On the other hand, I wonder what would happen to the country if every Member of the Senate and House would make up his mind in the direction of rigid economy, and fearlessly cut off every useless dollar of appropriations? I wonder if the taxpayers of the Nation would rise up and revolt against Congress if such a thing should happen? I favor a liberal but businesslike economy.

I believe the taxpayers of the Nation would like to be given a rest from having their taxes increased every year. I am in favor of giving it a tryout just to see what would happen. I do not believe the people can be made prosperous by taxation, be it direct or indirect.

Mr. President, these enormous increases in appropriations can not go on forever. There must and will be a day of reckoning. The power to tax means the power to destroy, and we do not want to destroy the earning power of the people by over-taxation. Congress is getting in the habit of casting about to find things on which to place a tax, instead of vigilantly seeking where it can economize without injury to the public service.

In 1909, when the Payne-Aldrich bill was passed, the Republican Party found itself short of revenue. It imposed a tax on corporations. Four years later, in 1913, when the Democratic Party revised the tariff, it found the Treasury short of revenue and imposed an income tax. And now we are met in this revenue bill with provisions containing all forms of taxation, except the stamp tax, doubling the normal income and corporation tax and adding an inheritance tax and a tax on munitions of war, also taxing simple pleasures, amusements, and so forth.

Mr. President, the party in control holds the purse strings of the Treasury, and it should assume responsibility for disbursements. If it fails to assume this responsibility, it fails to do its duty. Not a dollar can be put into the Treasury unless Congress enacts legislation to raise the money and provides the machinery for collecting it. Not a dollar can be taken out unless Congress appropriates it. Unless more economy is practiced Congress will soon find itself driven to the necessity of laying and collecting taxes on many other things. It may be a stamp tax, a direct tax, but new taxes must and will eventually come unless economy is practiced in the future.

Mr. President, there is much in the budget plan, or some plan which will coordinate and adjust the revenues and expenditures, to commend itself to legislative favor. It seems to me that Congress is commencing at the wrong end. The first thing Congress does is to determine how much money it wants to appropriate, and then it proceeds to make the appropriations, regardless of whether the revenues are sufficient to meet them. Instead of cutting the appropriations down to meet the revenue, Congress proceeds to increase the rates of taxation and to lay and collect taxes on articles to reach the amounts appropriated.

Mr. President, it seems to me we should begin at the other end and first see whether our revenues are sufficient to meet the ordinary demands. If the revenues are insufficient, then curtail and cut off every useless appropriation. Economy is itself a great revenue. Once Congress embarks on this policy, there would be no necessity under anything like ordinary conditions of laying taxes as suggested in the present revenue bill.

The complaint of the people to-day against the burden of taxation is nation-wide. I do not mean in a partisan sense. Its voice is heard in every township, county, municipality, and State in the Union in regard to local taxation, and I feel sure that if this revenue bill is adopted without some amendment the protest will soon reach Congress.

Mr. President, we should have saved $20,000,000 in the rivers and harbors bill. There should have been several millions saved in the Agricultural bill, and I have no doubt that on all the other appropriations, outside of the Army and Navy, other millions could have been saved. Mr. President, the fault is not in the administrative officers of the Government. No criticism should be made against them. The responsibility rests with Congress. It is for the administration to estimate the expenditures. It is the duty of Congress to provide them.

Mr. President, to show the extravagant tendency of Congress, bills have been introduced this session for public buildings aggregating $100,654,000. This represents the aggregate of the amount asked for public buildings, and in a measure makes this a fixed charge upon the Treasury, because these bills, with many more as the country continues to grow, will be enacted into law at some future time, unless Congress defeats such public-buildings bills as are now on the House calendar awaiting action at that end of the Capitol. A public-buildings bill carrying an authorization for $35,000,000 was recently reported by the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, is now on the House calendar, and I am informed an attempt will be made to pass it through Congress next December.

Mr. President, I recently had an analysis of this bill made by the Architect's Office, which I will insert as a part of my remarks.

Talk about the river and harbor bill being a pork-barrel bill. As compared to the public-buildings bill now on the House calendar there is no comparison whatever, the public-buildings bill being so much worse.

This bill takes care of 297 congressional districts out of a total of 435, and it takes care of every State in the Union except Vermont. Under section 3, I have made a little tabulation. This section carries authorizations for 93 projects. The population in the towns of 39 of these projects ranges from 1,059 to 3,000. The total population in the towns of these 39 projects is 77,579. The average population is 1,980. The total authorization carried for buildings in these 39 projects is $1,125,000, which means, when made, an average appropriation for each inhabitant of these 39 towns of $14.50.

Under section 4, "Authorization for sites and buildings," authorizations are made for 104 projects. I have tabulated 39 of these projects having populations ranging from 537 to 3,000, and for these 39 projects $1,599,000 is authorized.

The total population of these 39 towns is 83,366, an average authorization for each inhabitant of these 39 towns of $19.05.

Under section 5, "Sites only," I find that authorizations are made for 119 sites. Under this section I have tabulated the cost of 79 sites ranging in population from 628 to 3,000. The towns of these 79 sites have a total population of 168,171. The total authorization for these 79 sites is $410,000, or an authorization of $2.43 for each inhabitant of these 79 towns.

It is estimated that a site is about 20 per cent of the cost of the building. At this rate these buildings, when erected, will cost $2,050,000, or an appropriation of $12.12 for each citizen living in these 79 towns, or a total of $14.55 for each resident in the towns.

Mr. President, to some it may appear to be economy to erect public buildings in every little crossroad country town. I select a few of the places where public buildings are to be located and let the facts speak for themselves. For instance, take the following towns:

Eminence, Ky.: Population, 1,274; estimates for the building, $25,000; the bill authorizes $30,000.

Mr. President, these are not my figures. These figures were prepared at the architect's office.

Mr. President, a careful study of this public-buildings bill quickly dispels any idea of economy, but it spells extravagance of the worst sort. If this bill succeeds in getting through Congress, the President should come to the rescue of the Treasury and veto it at once.

Mr. President, for the fiscal year 1915, 5,573 men and women paid an income tax in the State of Indiana amounting to $345,653.92. This year the same number of people must pay an income tax in the State of Indiana of $691,307.84. Last year 5,018 corporations in Indiana paid corporation taxes amounting to $644,147.38. This year double the above—$1,288,294.76—must be paid. Last year Indiana paid into the United States Treasury the following amounts:

For customs, internal revenue, and postal receipts, $32,517,115.62.

There was expended in the State of Indiana by the Federal Government last year the following:

Customs, internal revenue, public health, public buildings, Postal Service, expenses of United States courts, salaries of Senators and Representatives, $7,240,838.05.

Which gives a balance to the credit of the State of Indiana of $25,276,267.57, and the income and corporation tax to be added.

Mr. President, it is unfair, unbusinesslike, to pass items in pork-barrel bills like the river and harbor and public buildings bills at this session or any other session of Congress. To do this those who pay income and other taxes in the State of Indiana and elsewhere must have their tax rates almost doubled; not only increased in life, but their estates, when they exceed $50,000, must be taxed after death.

Instead of squandering money in catching cattle ticks, killing coyotes, poisoning ground squirrels, doctoring wild ducks, treating goats suffering with Malta fever, sending out useless garden and vegetable seeds, passing pork-barrel river and harbor bills, pork-barrel public-building bills, would it not be better to get down to rigid bedrock economy and cut these useless expenditures off; save the people from the never-ceasing visits of the tax gatherer; or if it be the fixed and determined purpose of Congress to go on yearly increasing these appropriations, would it not be better that we turn these wasted appropriations to things that will improve the country, that will help the people, that will bring them peace, prosperity, and happiness in the future? Instead of pouring money into sinkholes never to return a cent upon the investment, would it not be better that we apply this money to vocational education so that every farmer boy on graduating from high school could have a scientific knowledge of intensive agriculture, or where boys in cities on leaving high school will be first-class mechanics, or the girls have a knowledge of domestic science so as to make them better home builders?

Mr. President, I have only been a member of this body for a short time, but be my stay here long or short, I shall always be found using my best efforts and judgment in curtailment and cutting off what I consider useless or extravagant appropriations.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks certain tables and figures in connection with public-building expenditures.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Analysis of sections 3, 4, and 5 of public buildings bill of places where postal receipts are less than $15,000.

NOTE.—Explanation of analysis of sections 3, 4, and 5 of public buildings bill of places where postal receipts are less than $15,000: "Place" indicates location of proposed building. "Estimate" is the amount that the department estimated would be the cost of the project at the place named. "Bill" is the amount provided in the omnibus bill for the place indicated. "Interest" is the estimated interest on the amount named in said omnibus bill with furnishing added. "Depreciation" is the estimated annual depreciation on this same amount less amount paid for site. "Janitor" and "Supplies" are, respectively, estimated annual cost for janitor service and supplies in each instance. "Total" is the sum of the four previous columns, namely, "Interest," "Depreciation," "Janitor," and "Supplies."

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the least desire to delay its passage.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator's remarks would be appropriate under the shipping bill, which comes up at 12 o'clock, and I thought we would do well to take a vote on the workmen's compensation bill and get rid of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the President's demand for a tariff commission, the result of a sudden change of mind, his party has found difficult to understand. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee stated in the House that the party, of which he is the leader in that body, until about two months before he brought in the remarkable revenue bill, was opposed to a tariff commission. But in this matter, as in many others, it promptly changed its mind on demand of the President. There was no call for reasons and no serious consideration given to the change, it being sufficient that the President asked for it. In his canvass in 1912 the President said: "I will not have any commissions playing Providence to me."

Mr. GALLINGER. "Playing what," I will ask the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. "Playing Providence to me."

Mr. GALLINGER. What did the President mean by that expression?

Mr. SMOOT. I should very much prefer to have the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] explain what the President meant, because he has taken upon himself the responsibility of explaining the real meaning of statements made by the President and what was in the President's mind when making them.

Not long ago, in his Indianapolis speech, the President said that the establishment of a tariff commission was unnecessary, as the power had already been given to the Federal Trade Commission. The President said that in framing the Trade Commission law they had "slipped one over" on the Republicans in securing such power for the commission. That statement was not correct, as the Republicans had not been deceived in the least in the matter; but while the President opposed such a commission and was in accord with his party in forcing out of existence the bipartisan commission that was in office at the time he was elected, he now asks for a commission.

The Democratic Party has always opposed a tariff commission. The one appointed by President Taft was indirectly authorized by the tariff law then in existence, as the Democrats prevented the passage of a bill to create such a commission. A tariff board, the Democrats held, was a useless expense, and such a conclusion was the only consistent one to accord with their theory of a tariff for revenue only. Their platform denounced a protective tariff as unconstitutional, and if the only object in framing a tariff law is to secure revenue there is no necessity for any information from a tariff board. The present Speaker of the House of Representatives stated that "such a thing as a nonpartisan board is an impossibility in nature," and he declared that a tariff board was useless. Another leading Democrat in the House declared that the bill to create a tariff commission "violates a well-established and venerated principle in the doctrine of the Democratic Party."

Another leading Democrat asked, "Why do men who believe in a tariff for revenue only want to know what it costs to make or not to make foreign goods that come in competition with our own?" The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], former chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, stated that he was "not in favor of a tariff commission and never had been," and added, "I am thoroughly opposed to a tariff commission in any form whatever." The present Governor of the Philippines, a former Member of the House, declared his belief that the tariff commission was "a useless expenditure of public money," adding, "I do not see any place in the framing of a Democratic tariff bill for revenue only for an inquiry into the difference of cost between production here and abroad. The purpose of such a commission bill is to harass and delay." The present chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House declared that he had never known a Democratic district convention, a Democratic State convention, or a Democratic national convention to declare in favor of a tariff board or tariff commission of any kind. That was true enough until the last Democratic national convention adopted a plank, written by the President, in favor of this proposed commission. The junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] said: "For one, I stand on the traditional ground of opposition to these commissions; of opposition to legislation encroaching on the constitutional functions of Congress." A Representative from Alabama, an associate of the junior Senator from that State, declared that a tariff board was a "make-shift, and a false pretense." A leading Democratic Representative from Indiana [Mr. COX] declared that the tariff board was "wrong in principle and wrong in policy."

A prominent Democrat from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] declared that a tariff board "would be a surrender of the dearest of Democratic principles." The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] said: "I have always been against boards and commissions. I believe that the fathers of the Republic were wise, even wiser than they knew, when they lodged with the great House of Representatives of the people the right to formulate tariff legislation." Another eminent Democrat quoted the well-known lines:

The Devil was sick—the Devil a monk would be.
The Devil was well—the devil a monk was he.

From which it would appear that that Member, now chairman of the Committee on Printing, thinks that the President is a pretty sick man politically, which is no doubt the case.

Mr. President, I shall not take any further time of the Senate at this time; but I have similar quotations that would fill a volume, from leading Democrats of the Senate and of the House and of the country, bitterly opposing the creation of a tariff commission. We find now that all of them will vote for such a commission; all have changed their minds; all fall in line at the command of the captain of the team and march like good soldiers, and they will vote for the creation of a tariff commission, no matter what the character of it may be.

Mr. President, I think that when the revenue bill is before the Senate it will be the proper time to go into the fuller discussion of this subject. I have been in favor of a tariff commission for years, but not one such as proposed. Whatever tariff commission is created ought to be responsive to Congress, report to Congress, its membership be appointed by Congress, and not be in any way under obligation to the President of the United States. If such a tariff commission could be created, or one patterned after the ones in Germany, there would be no harm in having a tariff commission, and would be a source from which information could be secured by the committees of the Senate and House of Representatives at times when they are considering a change in the revenue laws of our country.

Mr. WEEKS obtained the floor.

COMPENSATION OF INJURED EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we have before the Senate the United States employees' compensation bill. Does the Senator from Massachusetts wish to address himself to the bill?

Mr. WEEKS. I desire to take the floor when the Senator from Georgia has finished.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think we desire any special discussion of the United States employees' compensation bill. There are two amendments. I am advised that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] desires to offer an amendment, and for that reason Senators on the other side prefer that we should not vote upon the bill at once.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15455) to establish a United States shipping board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water engaged in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States; and for other purposes.

[Mr. WEEKS addressed the Senate. After speaking for an hour and three-quarters, he yielded the floor for the day. His speech is printed entire in the Senate proceedings of August 14, 1916.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that circumstances make it necessary for me to leave the city to-night. If it were not for that fact I should not at this time attempt to speak upon this bill. In fact, I know that this caucus-made measure will be passed, against all protest and reason, and nothing I can or could say will change the opinion of Senators, because that has already been irrevocably settled. I, however, desire briefly to state why I am opposed to the bill, and why I would vote against it if I were present when it is placed on its passage.

After reading the bill and listening to the arguments that have been made upon it—in fact, being familiar, as all of us are, with all the conditions which caused its conception and birth—I have concluded that it is here for campaign purposes only.

I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] that there are very few Senators who believe that the bill can be worked satisfactorily, and who do not believe that it will probably be repealed before it has had time to go into full operation. I believe it will be repealed if the next Congress should be Republican.

Knowing the record of the President of the United States on the Panama Canal tolls proposition, it is entirely reasonable to believe that he would reverse himself in two years from now if, unfortunately for the country, he should be reelected, and ask his party—nay, compel his party—to reverse the action that it is about to take on this measure. The greatest cause for doubt of his doing this, however, is the fact that he was wrong when he forced his party to repeal the Panama act, and he would be right if he asked for a repeal of the bill about to be enacted into law.

This will make a fairly good campaign document for Democratic Senators, who do not stop to explain to the people the futility of the measure. They can give it an oratorical virtue which it does not possess, and by omitting its defects can have some hope of fooling the people.

The most that is expected of this appropriation of $50,000,000 is that it will build probably 500,000 tons of freight-carrying ships. It is estimated as low as 300,000 tons. Five hundred thousand tons, with from six to ten million tons of American ocean freight, could have no appreciable effect upon the freight rates. It does, however, take $50,000,000 out of the people's Treasury that has already been overdrawn. Or, rather, it is proposed to mortgage, through the issue of bonds, the people's property to the extent of half a hundred million dollars.

The majority have in this Congress appropriated millions upon millions of dollars that they never would have dared to appropriate had it not been believed that they could rely upon the war emergency as an excuse. Yet I assume, Mr. President, there are very few Senators in this body who believe that the war will not be over before any one of these emergency war projects can be put in operation. If ocean freight rates are high now, and no doubt they are high, it is due entirely to the war situation. When the European conflict is over those rates will be reduced, and let it not be forgotten that all the extra ship tonnage that the United States is placing upon the sea under any circumstances would be for the benefit of men who are engaged in the shipping business, and not one dollar of benefit will accrue to the people of the United States who are to pay the taxes for buying or building these proposed boats. Indeed, the high ocean rates on our export shipments are not paid by the producers of this country, but are paid by the foreign buyer and consumer. They are obliged to have the goods and they pay the freight.

You have voted $20,000,000 for an armor plant, a war emergency provision, and it will take at least four years, long after the war is concluded, before the expenditure of that money can be utilized in any degree by the people of the United States, and by doing this you have not insured to the Government of the United States the ability to buy this plate as cheaply even as it can be purchased now.

You have voted $20,000,000 for a nitrate plant. It can not be operated until the war is over, when the emergency is passed.

You have expended public money like a drunken sailor. You have appropriated money that will bring, that can bring no benefit to the people, but which they must pay. You have saddled upon them a debt which they can not cancel in a generation.

This is the time for political exploitation through partisan legislation. You expect that you can go out to the people and say to them, "We are going to reduce ocean freight rates by placing upon the seas Government-built ships of 500,000 tons capacity." You will not tell them that the total tons of American freight requiring boats is 10,000,000, and that 500,000 tons will furnish the same competition to that vast amount that a canoe does to an ocean liner.

Mr. President, I do not like to be considered a scold, but the truth should be spoken and the mask of deception removed. It is time that you dealt fairly and honestly with the people of the United States, that instead of offering them an alleged benefit you know is a sham and compelling them to pay for it; instead of giving them a stone when they ask for bread, you had better be frank with yourselves and with your constituents and have some regard for the deplorable condition of the Treasury of the United States. Fifty million dollars have come to be a bagatelle in the mind of this administration, and it is in comparison with its total stupendous expenditures. The people may not agree with you in this, however, for they know that these $50,000,000 are to be taken from them in the form of taxes, and under your Democratic policy no part of it is to be paid by the foreigner, who, after the European war is over, will be given the benefit of the American market, the same as he was given it during the 10 months before the war.

The most that could be expected from this measure, I repeat, would be to give a little benefit to a few favored shippers, because these few ships could make but few ports, those ports to be selected by the board, and, judged by the boards which have been appointed under this administration, it will certainly distribute these favors for the benefit of the faithful.

Mr. President, I would vote against this bill if I were present, because it is, in my judgment, a fraud upon the people. I am not going into the effect it might have upon private shipping and shipping interests. I do not agree with some of my colleagues on this side that the expenditure of $50,000,000 will materially, at least at the present time, affect those interests very largely, because it is by comparison but a bagatelle. It, of course, is the recognition of a principle which, if enlarged, would be very detrimental to the interests of our country and certainly in opposition to every principle that Democracy has advocated during all its past. It is also antagonistic to an increased merchant marine. It will discourage, not encourage, shipbuilding.

I think it is time to call a halt on this game of playing to the galleries for political purposes only. There are not many Senators on the other side or on this who would propose this bill, much less would they stand on the floor and advocate it seriously, if it were not for the unsettled conditions caused by the European war at the present time. Europe is drunk with blood and the United States is intoxicated with extravagance born of war. I repeat, under your own statements and admissions practically not a ton of this freight can be put into service before the war in all reasonable probabilities will have ended. Have you not incurred enough debts already, without contracting this one?

Possibly you can buy some boats and put them into service at once, but if you buy them you take those already on the sea; you do not add to the total tonnage. You simply take so much tonnage that is already now in service from private management and put it under the management of the Government. If under its present management it is highly profitable, the owner will not sell at a price which the Government can afford to pay. If it is unprofitable now, it would be worse than foolish for the Government to purchase it.

I regret that I had not known a little earlier that the Senate was to adjourn to-day at 2 o'clock. It is now 10 minutes to 2, and I will not prevent Senators who have formal matters to present from doing so before adjournment. There are other reasons for opposing this bill than those I have given, and which I had hoped to present to the Senate; but perhaps I have said as much as I ought to have said already. I have simply voiced my own honest conviction of what the purposes of the bill are and what its results or lack of them will be. I yield now to the Senator from Idaho.

[Mr. BORAH presented petitions, which appear under the appropriate heading.]

FEDERAL FARM-LOAN ACT.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to consider a resolution to print, on the basis of an estimated cost of $500, which is the amount allowed under the law for either branch of Congress to print without a concurrent resolution, additional copies of Senate Document No. 500. It is the Federal farm-loan act annotated and indexed. There is a very great demand for it. The Federal Farm Loan Board alone this morning asked for 6,000 copies. It is a very useful document, and I should like to have it printed.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not intend to object, but I only want to hazard the observation that there are 9,000,000 people in Pennsylvania and I have not had a single request for a copy of the act. I do not think the people of Pennsylvania take a particle of interest in it, and other Senators have told me that they have not had requests from any source for it. I do not object, however.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think requests for it will come from the Senator's State. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution (S. Res. 245) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 23,300 additional copies of Senate Document No. 500, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, entitled "The Federal farm-loan act," for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, August 14, 1916, at 12 o'clock m.

SENATE.

MONDAY, August 14, 1916.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Bishop E. E. Hoss, D. D., of Nashville, Tenn., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Heavenly Father, for the good providence which has been over our lives during all the years that are past and which has brought us in peace and safety to this hour. We pray Thee to let Thy blessing rest upon the deliberations of this body to-day. Grant that everything that is done here may be done in Thy fear and for Thy glory, and may eventuate in the welfare of our country and the common interest of mankind.

Bless Thy servant, the Presiding Officer of this body, and all the Senators from all the States, with their families, their wives and children, and their constituents. Bless our country. We thank God for this country, and especially praise Him at this time that in the order of His providence while all the world is in tumult and storm we are at peace; and we pray that in the years to come we will be kept at peace, with honor. Protect and preserve us, we beseech Thee, from the afflictions that distress mankind. Hasten the coming of peace throughout the world. O God, in Thy own way, in Thy own good time, send peace to the disturbed and restless earth.

Listen to these our prayers. Forgive our sins and save us for His sake, who taught us in prayer to say:

"Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name; Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory for ever and ever." Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

- S. 1781. An act for the relief of Nathaniel Monroe;
- S. 1818. An act for the relief of Nelson T. Saunders;
- S. 3539. An act for the relief of John L. Moon;
- S. 6013. An act to confirm the entry of John Dowd; and
- S. 6331. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to William H. Ingle for homestead entry in Colorado.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11129) for the relief of the owners of the barkentine Mabel I. Meyers and her master and crew, and for the relief of the owners of cargo of molasses late on board said barkentine.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 6369) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3533) for the relief of Mike G. Womack with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

- H. R. 16719. An act for the relief of John P. Sutton; and
- H. R. 16974. An act for the relief of John L. Kelley.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 13982) to extend temporarily the time for filing applications and fees and taking action in the United States Patent Office in favor of nations granting reciprocal rights to United States citizens.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WORKS. I have two telegrams here in the nature of memorials, one from the Los Angeles Clearing House Association and the other from the California Bankers' Association, protesting against the imposition of a special tax upon banks in the revenue bill. I ask that the telegrams may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The telegrams were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., August 12, 1916.

Hon. JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

This association, representing 22 members and affiliated banks of Los Angeles city, respectfully request that you use every influence possible toward preventing the reinstatement in the revenue bill now under consideration of the special bankers' tax of $1 per thousand. We oppose most strenuously any such special tax as being discriminatory and unjust unless applied to all corporations.

LOS ANGELES CLEARING HOUSE ASSOCIATION,
J. F. SARTORI, President.
F. W. SMITH, Secretary.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., August 13, 1916.

Hon. JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At a special meeting held here yesterday afternoon by the executive council of the California Bankers' Association, representing 700 banks in this State, it was unanimously resolved to most earnestly urge you to use your best efforts to prevent the inclusion in the Senate revenue bill of the proposed special tax upon the capital and surplus of banks. This tax, if levied upon capital invested in a particular line of commercial effort, would constitute a most unjust discrimination. Bankers are entirely willing to bear their full share of the burdens of national expense, but vigorously protest against being singled and especially taxed when capital otherwise employed in business activities is not called upon in like manner.

CALIFORNIA BANKERS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I may state in this connection that I have received a number of telegrams of the same purport as those presented by the Senator from California.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire also to state that I have received hundreds of such telegrams, which I have not asked to have placed in the RECORD.

Mr. JONES. I have a telegram relating to the same matter, reading as follows:

HON. WESLEY L. JONES,
Washington, D. C.:

We are told Democratic caucus may reinstate special bankers' tax in revenue bill. We believe such tax is discriminatory and unfair, and respectfully urge your opposition to it.

SEATTLE CLEARING HOUSE ASSOCIATION.

This is from the Seattle Clearing House Association. I have here another telegram from the Spokane Clearing House Association making the same request. I ask that these telegrams may be referred to the Committee on Finance in the hope that the Democratic membership of that committee will call them to the attention of the Democratic caucus.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They will be so referred.

Mr. GRONNA. In connection with the subject referred to by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] I have two telegrams which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Finance, and I also ask that they may be printed in the RECORD. They are very brief.

The telegrams were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., August 13, 1916.

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

* We understand the caucus is considering reinstating the special bankers' tax of $1 per thousand. We solicit your opposition to the measure, because the law discriminates and is unjust. Your assistance will be appreciated.

R. L. RUTTER,
President Spokane & Eastern Trust Co.

SEATTLE, WASH., August 12, 1916.

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

We are informed there is a possibility of the special bankers' tax being reinstated in the revenue bill. The members of this association will appreciate your efforts in endeavoring to defeat such an unjust and discriminatory measure.

SEATTLE CLEARING HOUSE ASSOCIATION.

Mr. CURTIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Arkansas City, Kans., praying for action by the Government to prevent a general railroad strike, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PHELAN presented petitions of the Chamber of Commerce of San Fernando and of the Chamber of Commerce of Redlands, in the State of California, praying for the settlement of the difficulties between the railroads and their employees by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JAMES, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13618) to amend section 4931 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15807) to provide for holding sessions of the United States district court in the district of Maine and for dividing said district into divisions, and providing for offices of the clerk and marshal of said district to be maintained in each of said divisions, and for the appointment of a field deputy marshal in the division in which the marshal does not reside, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 786) thereon.

Mr. REED, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 6843) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a Commerce Court, and to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1910, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 787) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 4500) to incorporate the World's Sunday School Association, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 788) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3180) to authorize the appointment of Clarence C. Kress to the grade of captain, United States Army, Medical Corps, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 789) thereon.

Mr. SWANSON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 4356) to enlarge, extend, remodel, and repair the United States post-office and courthouse building located at Baltimore, Md., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 790) thereon.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 14338) to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, and in connection with the request I will make a short statement.

This is what is known as the lighthouse bill. It contains provision for certain needed establishments in connection with that service. The Senate passed a bill and the House passed a bill on the same subject, but it did not contain all the provisions included in the Senate bill. The Senate bill is now on the House Calendar. The chairman of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce advises me that there will be no further meeting of that committee at this session, and the only way the matter can be properly brought before the House of Representatives in the absence of a reference to the committee is by the course we propose to take now—to strike out the House bill and to insert the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to establish, provide, or improve the following aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, under the Department of Commerce, in accordance with the respective limits of costs hereinafter respectively set forth, which shall in no case be exceeded:

Light keepers' dwellings and appurtenant structures, including sites therefor, within the limit of cost fixed by the act approved February 26, 1907 (34 Stats., p. 996), $75,000.

Constructing and equipping light vessels for general service on the Great Lakes, or for general service, $150,000.

SECOND LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Constructing and equipping a lighthouse depot for the second lighthouse district, $85,000.

THIRD LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Constructing, or purchasing, and equipping a lighthouse tender to replace tenders worn out in service in the third lighthouse district, $120,000.

Improving the light station, moving the fog signal, and constructing a keeper's dwelling at Great Salt Pond Light Station, R. I., $25,000.

Improvement of the offices and laboratory at the general lighthouse depot at Tompkinsville, Staten Island, N. Y., $21,000.

Improving the aids to navigation on the East River, N. Y., $16,000.

FIFTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Constructing and equipping a light vessel for station off Cape Charles, Va., or for general service, $130,000.

Improving lights and fog signals leading to Cape Charles City, Va., $12,800.

Improving aids to navigation and establishing new aids on the eastern shore of Chesapeake Bay and tributaries, Maryland and Virginia, $29,000.

NINTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Removal and rebuilding on another site of the light station and dwelling at or near Point Borinquen, Porto Rico, $85,000.

TENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Aids to navigation at Huron Harbor, Ohio, $4,500.

Improving the aids to navigation at Fairport Harbor, Ohio, $42,000.

ELEVENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Improving aids to navigation and establishing new aids at or near the entrance to Keweenaw Waterway Harbor of Refuge, Portage River, Mich., $110,000.

TWELFTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Improving the light and fog-signal station at Manitowoc North Breakwater, Wis., $21,000.

SIXTEENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Aids to navigation and improvement of existing aids in Alaska, $60,000.

SEVENTEENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

For the establishment of aids to navigation and improvement of existing aids in Washington and Oregon, seventeenth lighthouse district, $35,000.

NINETEENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Constructing and equipping a temporary lighthouse depot at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, pending the establishment of a permanent depot, $5,000; and authority is hereby granted to erect such temporary depot on land to be leased.

Construction and equipment of a lighthouse depot for the nineteenth lighthouse district, $90,000: Provided, That arrangements shall be made to use for the purposes herein lands and property now belonging to the United States and being used by the Navy for naval purposes.

Sec. 2. That hereafter the Secretary of Commerce is authorized, whenever he shall deem it advisable, to exchange any right of way of the United States in connection with lands pertaining to the Lighthouse Service for such other right of way as may be advantageous to the service, under such terms and conditions as he may deem to be for the best interests of the Government; and in case any expenses are incurred by the United States in making such exchange the same shall be payable from the appropriation "General expenses, Lighthouse Service" for the fiscal year during which such exchange shall be effected.

Sec. 3. That hereafter post lantern lights and other aids to navigation may be established and maintained, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Lighthouses, out of the annual appropriation for the Lighthouse Service on the Mobile, Tombigbee, Warrior, and Black Warrior Rivers, Ala.

SEC. 4. That the appropriation "General expenses, Lighthouse Service" shall be available for the purchase and necessary equipment of one motorcycle and the repair and operation of the same for use of the Lighthouse Service in the Hawaiian Islands.

SEC. 5. That hereafter light keepers and assistant light keepers of the Lighthouse Service shall be entitled to medical relief without charge at hospitals and other stations of the Public Health Service under the rules and regulations governing the care of seamen of the merchant marine: Provided, That this benefit shall not apply to any keeper or assistant keeper who receives an original appointment after the passage of this act unless the applicant passes a physical examination in accordance with rules approved by the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 6857) for the relief of John Flanigan; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WADSWORTH (by request):

A bill (S. 6858) to state the rights of nations and to lay the foundations for the establishment of a Court of Nations, a Congress of Nations, and an International Army and Navy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A bill (S. 6859) to amend section 8 of the act of April 26, 1910, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded Paris greens, lead arsenates, and other insecticides and also fungicides, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 6860) granting an increase of pension to Jonas H. Upton (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 6861) granting an increase of pension to David Galbraith (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 6862) for the relief of Amos Dahuff; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CIVIL EMPLOYEES IN THE NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. PENROSE. I introduce a joint resolution which I ask to have read for the information of the Senate and then referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 164) for the relief of civil employees of the Federal Government who are members of the National Guard or Naval Militia of the several States, Territories, or the District of Columbia was read the first time by its title and the second time at length and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant a leave of absence, with pay, to all civil employees of the United States of America, who, being members of the National Guard or Naval Militia of any State or Territory, or of the District of Columbia, by reason thereof, shall have been or shall hereafter be summoned and received into the military or naval service of the United States during the continuation of such service and until his discharge therefrom.

RELIEF OF FLOOD SUFFERERS IN WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. CHILTON. I introduce a joint resolution making an appropriation for the temporary relief of the flood sufferers in West Virginia. I ask that the joint resolution be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 165) for relief of the flood sufferers in West Virginia, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the relief of persons suffering by reason of the recent floods on the waters of the Kanawha, Mud, and Coal Rivers in West Virginia. The Secretary of War, under such regulations as he may prescribe from time to time, is authorized to expend said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in relieving destitution and caring for the injured and homeless who are suffering from the result of said flood and providing sanitary conditions; and he shall keep accounts of his expenditures hereunder and shall report the same to Congress; and shall, as far as possible, cooperate with local and State authorities, relief associations, and organizations; and he may use any Army tents, equipment, or supplies which he may deem proper in affording adequate and immediate relief.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, in connection with the joint resolution I wish to have placed in the Record some telegrams which I have received from the governor and other officials and prominent citizens of the State of West Virginia.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHARLESTON, W. VA., August 13, 1916.

Hon. W. E. CHILTON,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Have just returned from visit through Cabin Creek and Coal River districts. Newspaper reports of the situation are not exaggerated, except possible loss of life, which is approximately 75. More than 5,000 people are homeless and without food and clothing. Thirty to fifty thousand dollars is needed for immediate relief work. I have issued an appeal to people of the State for funds; provisions are being distributed effectively through heroic efforts of 500 men of West Virginia National Guard. West Virginia will be glad to receive any aid from the Federal Government in this disaster, the most destructive in the history of the State.

H. D. HATFIELD, Governor.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., August 13, 1916.

Hon. W. E. CHILTON,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Flood victims have been given temporary relief in way of food supplies and shelter. Nearly 1,000 families lost everything. By using National Guard we have reached practically all victims with food supplies and there is no actual suffering. Permanent relief needed in another week in way of clothing and house furnishings. On orders of governor, I am purchasing and forwarding supplies for immediate needs, but, as you know, there is no appropriation from which to pay for such purchases. About $50,000 needed for permanent relief. Governor has called upon people for relief fund.

BOND, Adjutant General.

ST. ALBANS, W. VA., August 13, 1916.

W. E. CHILTON,

Washington, D. C.:

Coal River Lumber & Coal Co. ruined. Four drowned. Heavy relief will be needed.

A. W. WHEATON, Mayor.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., August 13, 1916.

Hon. W. E. CHILTON,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Loss of life will reach about 60; property loss will exceed $5,000,000. Losses are on the Horse Creek, Mud River, portion of Little Coal, Big Coal River for about 80 miles, and all of main Cabin Creek. About 1,000 families homeless, without clothing or food, are being cared for by liberal contributions. Food and clothing being distributed by the soldiers now encamped at Kanawha City by pack trains; railroad and wagon roads gone. It will take $150,000 to take care of needs of homeless population. Can you do anything to help the people there?

DAVID A. JAYNE,
General Manager Charleston Daily Gazette.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., August 13, 1916.

W. E. CHILTON,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Just returned from Racine and Peytona. Two drowned at Peytona; 600 homeless from Seth to Ashford, with nothing left; 1,500 in this district. Can you get temporary mail service established from Marmet to Peytona via Racine? Great relief. Wire in care Ruffner Hotel.

W. M. OSBORNE,
United States Marshal.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. VA.,
August 13, 1916—5.15 p. m.

Hon. W. E. CHILTON,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Your wire my arrival here this morning. Have just returned from walk and ride mouth to head of Cabin Creek. About 700 families have lost all but clothes on their backs. Hundred thousand dollars should be raised quick in our State to buy beds, bedding, clothing, cooking utensils, etc., to start these people. Though company's loss is appalling, believe they will see that all are fed, but impossible for them to do more. Appreciate your sympathy.

J. R. THOMAS.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., August 13, 1916.

Hon. W. E. CHILTON,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

More than 1,000 families made homeless and left without food or clothing. Roads and railroads washed away. Food taken to them by pack route with difficulty across mountains. This work is being done by members of the National Guard encamped at Kanawha City. Contributions are liberal, but not sufficient to meet the needs of these homeless and destitute people. For 80 miles on Big Coal River not a home left in the bottom lands. From my intimate knowledge of this territory it will take $200,000, in addition to what will be raised here, to take care of these people. I hope you may be able to help people.

SAM'L STEPHENSON.

Mr. CHILTON. I have just received a telegram from R. G. Hubbard, of Charleston, W. Va., which I also ask to have incorporated in the RECORD. Mr. Hubbard is a partner in one of the large wholesale firms in Charleston and is most conservative in his statements.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram is as follows:

CHARLESTON, W. VA., August 14, 1916.

Hon. W. E. CHILTON,

Washington, D. C.:

We are trying to raise here not less than $100,000 for the homeless in Cabin Creek and Coal River. Every new investigation shows situation worse than yet reported. Amount needed not less than $500,000. This is a case where Government aid is needed.

R. G. HUBBARD.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I do not see the chairman of the committee here, but I sincerely hope that the committee will make an early report.

Mr. President, I hesitate to ask Congress to help the State of West Virginia in this direct way, but I wish to state in this connection that our people are responding liberally in this catastrophe. The newspapers of that section are raising large funds. One, I see, has raised two or three thousand dollars. The State government has responded promptly, but the extent of the disaster is such that it is impossible for local help to be adequate. The flood extends over a distance of probably 100 miles. It has destroyed millions of dollars of property and a great many lives and has rendered many thousands of our people homeless. The situation is but partially covered by these telegrams. In addition to the telegrams from Gov. Hatfield and Adj. Gen. Bond, I call attention to that of Mr. J. R. Thomas, a prominent citizen, who is a great sufferer financially himself, who has been personally over that part of the flooded area on Cabin Creek, and he speaks from actual observation; and I know that his statements can be relied upon. Mr. Osborne is the United States marshal and Mr. Stephenson is a prominent citizen, and both are well acquainted with the Coal River section which was inundated, and speak from actual knowledge. Mr. Jayne, of the Gazette, is one of those connected with relief work, and is in a position to have reliable information. Mayor Wheaton, of St. Albans, is in a position to speak with knowledge of the lower Coal River section. In addition to these, I have information, through ex-Gov. MacCorkle and other friends, communicated by telephone and telegrams, which enables me to say that the situation is critical and the Government should extend aid not alone from the promptings of humanity, but in the interests of the public health.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator is not very easy to hear on this side of the Chamber. Does he ask for an appropriation?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PENROSE. How much does the Senator ask for?

Mr. CHILTON. I ask for $200,000.

Mr. PENROSE. I thought I would move to amend the joint resolution so as to give several hundred thousand dollars to Pittsburgh. I have here a newspaper clipping which I should like to have read by the Secretary for the information of the Senate and the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course the Senator will accept the amendment in his benevolence, I have no doubt.

Mr. CHILTON. The joint resolution goes to the committee. I can not accept an amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to have the clipping read.

The Secretary read as follows:

$1,000,000 STORM LOSS IN PITTSBURGH DISTRICT—SOME STREETS COVERED WITH 2 FEET OF DEBRIS AND SUBURBAN TRAFFIC CRIPPLED—TWO LIVES TOLL OF DELUGE—FAMILIES MADE HOMELESS AND RELIEF MOVEMENT STARTED TO ALLEVIATE DISTRESS.

PITTSBURGH, August 6, 1916.

Following the destructive storm which swept this region Saturday afternoon, causing two deaths, endangering many others, and causing more than $1,000,000 loss by fire, lightning, and rain, thousands of men have been put to work repairing damage. The west and south hills district of the city suffered most. Many streets are covered with 2 inches to 2 feet of debris and mud. Traffic will be crippled in Hays, Homestead, West Homestead, Braddock, Turtle Creek, Munhall, Fairhaven, and other suburbs for several days.

Search in Saw Mill Run from the nineteenth ward to the Ohio River by Peter Bandel disclosed no trace of the body of his daughter, Mary Bandel, aged 15, who was drowned near her home in Edgebrook Avenue during the storm, when she went into a chicken coop on the brink of the swollen creek to save chickens.

Edward Duncan, aged 50, was killed instantly by lightning in his home at Trotter while the storm was at its height. His home was damaged.

In Hays, across the Monongahela River from Pittsburgh, where many families were made homeless when the Glass Run Creek overflowed its banks during the tempest, a movement was started to-day to raise a relief fund. Neighbors last night provided shelter for the families whose homes were destroyed.

The foundations of more than a score of houses were washed away in the vicinity of Glass Run. Fifty carloads of debris were removed by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad to-day from Rand Station, where the storm caused a landslide.

Munhall was without water last night and to-day as a result of the South Pittsburgh water main, near Hays, having burst.

Six children who were reported missing from their home in Hays during the storm, and were believed to have perished, were found in the homes of neighbors to-day. Mothers became almost frantic when their children failed to return home during the storm. They hurried to police headquarters, and a squad of police was detailed to investigate.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he is in good faith about this request? The Senator has joked so much with the Senate of late that I never can tell, at least by his expression, whether he is in earnest or whether he is making fun.

Mr. PENROSE. No, Mr. President; if $200,000 is to go to flood sufferers in West Virginia, I want a similar amount to go to Pittsburgh, and other cases I think will occur to me between now and to-morrow to further amend the joint resolution.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I apprehended just what the Senator's motive was. I want to say to him that West Virginia has had a great many floods, a great many misfortunes, a great many terrible things in the way of water catastrophes and fire losses. This is the first time she has ever presented a matter of this kind to Congress, and it was only on the representation of an official character from the governor and other prominent people of the State that many thousands of people were in danger of losing their lives as a result of this terrible catastrophe that I introduced the joint resolution. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that many appropriations of this kind have been made, some of them during the present session. I do not think this request on the part of the officials and prominent people of the State, people who are contributing of their own means to the extent of their ability, who come with a petition saying that thousands of children and women are in distress, should be met in the contemptuous or the laughing way suggested by the remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania and the newspaper clipping he had read at the desk. I do not think it is a time when we should be making merriment over the distress of thousands of women and children. I am introducing the joint resolution in good faith. I ask the committee for prompt work in disposing of it, and I shall ask the Senate to consider it seriously, not in the light vein suggested by the remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, as a resident of Pittsburgh I think I ought to say the suggestion of my colleague did not emanate from that city. We are not asking for any Federal help at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask that an amendment to be proposed to the revenue bill (H. R. 16763), which I send to the desk, may be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

That on and after the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all certificates of stock or investment securities imported from any foreign country to the United States or into any of its possessions the rates and duties as follows:

Upon bonds or time obligations of foreign Governments the customs duty of 1 per cent upon the par value.

Upon bonds or time obligations extending more than one year of all companies incorporated under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof or of the District of Columbia or of any foreign country 1 per cent of the par value thereof.

Upon certificates of capital stock whether common or preferred in all companies incorporated in foreign countries or in the United States or in any State thereof or in the District of Columbia the customs duty of 2 per cent upon the par value thereof.

The above rates of duty shall apply whether the actual bonds or actual certificates of stock are imported or whether only certificates of beneficial interest or legal ownership are imported and they shall apply whether said stocks, bonds, or certificates are imported for or upon purchase and sale or whether they are imported only for the purpose of security for loans or borrowed for use of any sort.

Any person whether owner or consignee or agent acting in the importation of said stocks, bonds, or certificates shall enter them as prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and make a declaration upon a form to be prescribed by him and filed with the collector of the port at the time of entry, similar to what is required in the case of the entering of merchandise by invoice. Any attempt to import such stocks, bonds, or certificates in any other way for the purpose of avoiding the payment of customs duty by concealing the fact of said importation from the customs authorities shall be deemed a violation of law, and any person so violating shall upon conviction be fined for each offense the amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the market value of the stocks, bonds, and certificates so imported or sought to be imported, or be imprisoned for a time not exceeding two years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $7,055.94, being the unpaid part of the appropriation heretofore made to Benjamin Harry Rutledge, administrator of Adam Tunno, surviving partner of Tunno & Co., on the ship Leeds Packet, Richard Bunce, master, in the act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF INJURED EMPLOYEES.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15316) to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15455) to establish a United States shipping board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water engaged in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States; and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—OSCAR W. LOWERY.

On motion of Mr. CUMMINS it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of S. 1181, a bill granting an increase of pension to Oscar W. Lowery, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CHARLESTON &amp; NORFOLK STEAMSHIP CO.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I offer a resolution which I send to the desk in reference to sundry petitions of certain corporations and individuals in the city of Charleston, S. C., looking to a rehearing of a rate proposition. I ask that the resolution be read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The resolution (S. Res. 249) was read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

Whereas the Charleston & Norfolk Steamship Co., a corporation duly empowered by charter from the State of South Carolina to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, steamships and operate the same as common carriers; and

Whereas said company petitioned the Interstate Commerce Commission to put into effect certain proportional rates from Cincinnati, Louisville, etc., to Norfolk and Newport News on traffic destined to Charleston, S. C., such proportional rates now being applied by aforesaid railway companies in connection with rail lines leading south into Carolina territory; and

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission, in an opinion dated June 30, 1916 (docket 8081), dismissed said petition on the ground that the petitioner was not a common carrier; and

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission, in Flour City Steamship Co. v. the L. V. R. R. Co. (1. C. C. Rept. No. 24, pp. 179-186), defined the status of a common carrier by water, such as proposed to operate under nondiscriminatory traffic arrangements, in specific terms; and

Whereas the position of the Charleston & Norfolk Steamship Co. is the same as that of the Flour City Steamship Co., in that said company can not afford to make enormous expenditures in equipment, pending a decision as to whether or not it is entitled to the nondiscriminatory traffic arrangements with the rail carriers leading into Norfolk; and

Whereas subsequent to the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the Flour City Steamship Co. case, the act to regulate commerce has been further strengthened by the passage of the Panama Canal act, under date of August 24, 1912, which empowers the Interstate Commerce Commission to establish proportional rates over rail lines when property may be or is transported to or from port by rail carriers; and

Whereas this act confers additional powers upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to those it exercised when the Flour City case was decided; and

Whereas the Charleston & Norfolk Steamship Co. has been organized by the merchants of Charleston for the express purpose of bringing relief from an unduly discriminatory rate adjustment and for affording an economical means of transportation; and

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission, in its decision in the Flour City case, established the principle that the company was entitled to a decision on the merits of the case before the said company made large expenditures in equipment: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be requested to initiate an investigation upon its own motion, and in conjunction with this proceeding, reopen the case of the Charleston & Norfolk Steamship Co. v. the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co. et al. (docket 8081), and give all parties an opportunity to submit any further testimony or arguments, and that an opinion be rendered by the Interstate Commerce Commission as to whether or not the proportional rates prayed for by the petitioner will or will not be granted, in advance of the actual purchase of the steamships.

EXEMPTIONS FROM CIVIL-SERVICE REQUIREMENTS.

Mr. PENROSE. I submit a Senate resolution, and, as it merely asks for information from one of the departments, perhaps there will be no objection to its present consideration. I ask that the resolution be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 246) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Civil Service Commission be, and it is hereby, requested to send to the Senate a list of the Executive orders issued since March 4, 1913, exempting appointees in the Federal service from civil-service requirements; or placing employees under the civil service previously appointed outside of any eligible list prescribed by the Civil Service Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the resolution lie over until tomorrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over under the rule.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE STATE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. PENROSE. Then, Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have it read, considered, and passed, if there is no objection. The resolution merely asks for information.

The resolution (S. Res. 247) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the Senate as follows:

First. The number of employees who have been appointed to positions in the State Department since July 1, 1913.

Second. What increase in the force of employees in the State Department has been made since July 1, 1913.

Third. The number of employees appointed since July 1, 1913, from eligible lists upon certification by the United States Civil Service Commission.

Fourth. The number of employees appointed temporarily without any civil-service examination or certification by the Civil Service Commission, and who subsequently were covered into the civil service under an Executive order dated May 18, 1916, being Executive order No. 2383.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the resolution go over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over under the rule.

COLLECTION OF DISCRIMINATING DUTIES.

Mr. JONES. I offer a Senate resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 248) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish the information called for by Senate Resolution 133 of March 16, 1916, or report to the Senate promptly why such information can not be furnished.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes, Mr. President, I object to the present consideration of the resolution and ask that it lie over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over under the rule and be printed. The morning business is closed.

ADDRESS BY HON. JOHN A. MAGUIRE.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask to have printed as a public document an address delivered by former Representative John A. Maguire on the practical workings of the Congress, which was a very popular address.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the matter be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have no particular objection to that. Mr. FLETCHER. Under the law the address should be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is a small matter, and the address is a very popular exposition of how Congress operates.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to its being printed as a public document without a reference to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. FLETCHER. Under the law the resolution will have to go to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the law the address will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 530).

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, on behalf of the conference committee on the Philippine bill, to withdraw the report filed by me a few days ago. I shall submit another report later in the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the conference report is withdrawn.

Mr. HITCHCOCK subsequently said: I submit the conference report on the bill S. 381, known as the Philippine government bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will lie on the table and be printed.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

"That the provisions of this act and the name 'the Philippines' as used in this act shall apply to and include the Philippine Islands ceded to the United States Government by the treaty of peace concluded between the United States and Spain on the 11th day of April, 1899, the boundaries of which are set forth in Article III of said treaty, together with those islands embraced in the treaty between Spain and the United States concluded at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900.

"SEC. 2. That all inhabitants of the Philippine Islands who were Spanish subjects on the 11th day of April, 1899, and then resided in said islands, and their children born subsequent thereto, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of the Philippine Islands, except such as shall have elected to preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Spain in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain, signed at Paris, December 10, 1898, and except such others as have since become citizens of some other country: Provided, That the Philippine Legislature, herein provided for, is hereby authorized to provide by law for the acquisition of Philippine citizenship by those natives of the Philippine Islands who do not come within the foregoing provisions, the natives of the insular possessions of the United States, and such other persons residing in the Philippine Islands who are citizens of the United States, or who could become citizens of the United States under the laws of the United States if residing therein.

"SEC. 3. That no law shall be enacted in said Islands which shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or deny to any person therein the equal protection of the laws. Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation.

"That in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to be heard by himself and counsel, to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, to have a speedy and public trial, to meet the witnesses face to face, and to have compulsory process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf.

"That no person shall be held to answer for a criminal offense without due process of law; and no person for the same offense shall be twice put in jeopardy of punishment, nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.

"That all persons shall before conviction be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses.

"That no law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be enacted.

"That no person shall be imprisoned for debt.

"That the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion, insurrection, or invasion the public safety may require it, in either of which events the same may be suspended by the President, or by the Governor General, wherever during such period the necessity for such suspension shall exist.

"That no ex post facto law or bill of attainder shall be enacted nor shall the law of primogeniture ever be in force in the Philippines.

"That no law granting a title of nobility shall be enacted, and no person holding any office of profit or trust in said islands shall, without the consent of the Congress of the United States, accept any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever from any king, queen, prince, or foreign State.

"That excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted.

"That the right to be secure against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated.

"That slavery shall not exist in said islands; nor shall involuntary servitude exist therein except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

"That no law shall be passed abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the Government for redress of grievances.

"That no law shall be made respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and that the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed; and no religious test shall be required for the exercise of civil or political rights. No public money or property shall ever be appropriated, applied, donated, or used, directly or indirectly, for the use, benefit, or support of any sect, church, denomination, sectarian institution, or system of religion, or for the use, benefit, or support of any priest, preacher, minister, or other religious teacher or dignitary as such. Contracting of polygamous or plural marriages hereafter is prohibited. That no law shall be construed to permit polygamous or plural marriages.

"That no money shall be paid out of the Treasury except in pursuance of an appropriation by law.

"That the rule of taxation in said islands shall be uniform.

"That no bill which may be enacted into law shall embrace more than one subject, and that subject shall be expressed in the title of the bill.

"That no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the person or things to be seized.

"That all money collected on any tax levied or assessed for a special purpose shall be treated as a special fund in the treasury and paid out for such purpose only.

"SEC. 4. That all expenses that may be incurred on account of the Government of the Philippines for salaries of officials and the conduct of their offices and departments, and all expenses and obligations contracted for the internal improvement or development of the islands, not, however, including defenses, barracks, and other works undertaken by the United States, shall, except as otherwise specifically provided by the Congress, be paid by the Government of the Philippines.

"SEC. 5. That the statutory laws of the United States hereafter enacted shall not apply to the Philippine Islands, except when they specifically so provide, or it is so provided in this act.

"SEC. 6. That the laws now in force in the Philippines shall continue in force and effect, except as altered, amended, or modified herein, until altered, amended, or repealed by the legislative authority herein provided or by act of Congress of the United States.

"SEC. 7. That the legislative authority herein provided shall have power, when not inconsistent with this act, by due enactment to amend, alter, modify, or repeal any law, civil or criminal, continued in force by this act as it may from time to time see fit.

"This power shall specifically extend with the limitation herein provided as to the tariff to all laws relating to revenue and taxation in effect in the Philippines.

"SEC. 8. That general legislative power, except as otherwise herein provided, is hereby granted to the Philippine Legislature, authorized by this act.

"SEC. 9. That all the property and rights which may have been acquired in the Philippine Islands by the United States under the treaty of peace with Spain, signed December 10, 1898, except such land or other property as has been or shall be designated by the President of the United States for military and other reservations of the Government of the United States, and all lands which may have been subsequently acquired by the government of the Philippine Islands by purchase under the provisions of sections 63 and 64 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, except such as may have heretofore been sold and disposed of in accordance with the provisions of said act of Congress, are hereby placed under the control of the government of said islands to be administered or disposed of for the benefit of the inhabitants thereof, and the Philippine Legislature shall have power to legislate with respect to all such matters as it may deem advisable; but acts of the Philippine Legislature with reference to land of the public domain, timber, and mining, hereafter enacted, shall not have the force of law until approved by the President of the United States: Provided, That upon the approval of such an act by the Governor General, it shall be by him forthwith transmitted to the President of the United States, and he shall approve or disapprove the same within six months from and after its enactment and submission for his approval, and if not disapproved within such time it shall become a law the same as if it had been specifically approved: Provided further, That where lands in the Philippine Islands have been or may be reserved for any public purpose of the United States, and, being no longer required for the purpose for which reserved, have been or may be, by order of the President, placed under the control of the government of said islands to be administered for the benefit of the inhabitants thereof, the order of the President shall be regarded as effectual to give the government of said islands full control and power to administer and dispose of such lands for the benefit of the inhabitants of said islands.

"SEC. 10. That while this act provides that the Philippine government shall have the authority to enact a tariff law the trade relations between the islands and the United States shall continue to be governed exclusively by laws of the Congress of the United States: Provided, That tariff acts or acts amendatory to the tariff of the Philippine Islands shall not become law until they shall receive the approval of the President of the United States, nor shall any act of the Philippine Legislature affecting immigration or the currency or coinage laws of the Philippines become a law until it has been approved by the President of the United States: Provided further, That the President shall approve or disapprove any act mentioned in the foregoing proviso within six months from and after its enactment and submission for his approval, and if not disapproved within such time it shall become a law the same as if it had been specifically approved.

"SEC. 11. That no export duties shall be levied or collected on exports from the Philippine Islands, but taxes and assessments on property and license fees for franchises, and privileges, and internal taxes, direct or indirect, may be imposed for the purposes of the Philippine government and the provincial and municipal governments thereof, respectively, as may be provided and defined by acts of the Philippine Legislature, and, where necessary to anticipate taxes and revenues, bonds and other obligations may be issued by the Philippine government or any provincial or municipal government therein, as may be provided by law and to protect the public credit: Provided, however, That the entire indebtedness of the Philippine government created by the authority conferred herein shall not exceed at any one time the sum of $15,000,000, exclusive of those obligations known as friar-land bonds, nor that of any Province or municipality a sum in excess of 7 per cent of the aggregate tax valuation of its property at any one time.

"SEC. 12. That general legislative powers in the Philippines, except as herein otherwise provided, shall be vested in a legislature which shall consist of two houses, one the senate and the other the house of representatives, and the two houses shall be designated 'The Philippine Legislature': Provided, That until the Philippine Legislature as herein provided shall have been organized the existing Philippine Legislature shall have all legislative authority herein granted to the government of the Philippine Islands, except such as may now be within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Philippine Commission, which is so continued until the organization of the legislature herein provided for the Philippines. When the Philippine Legislature shall have been organized, the exclusive legislative jurisdiction and authority exercised by the Philippine Commission shall thereafter be exercised by the Philippine Legislature.

"SEC. 13. That the members of the senate of the Philippines, except as herein provided, shall be elected for terms of six and three years, as hereinafter provided, by the qualified electors of the Philippines. Each of the senatorial districts defined as hereinafter provided shall have the right to elect two senators. No person shall be an elective member of the senate of the Philippines who is not a qualified elector and over 30 years of age, and who is not able to read and write either the Spanish or English language, and who has not been a resident of the Philippines for at least two consecutive years and an actual resident of the senatorial district from which chosen for a period of at least one year immediately prior to his election.

"SEC. 14. That the members of the house of representatives shall, except as herein provided, be elected triennially by the qualified electors of the Philippines. Each of the representative districts hereinafter provided for shall have the right to elect one representative. No person shall be an elective member of the house of representatives who is not a qualified elector and over 25 years of age, and who is not able to read and write either the Spanish or English language, and who has not been an actual resident of the district from which elected for at least one year immediately prior to his election: Provided, That the members of the present assembly elected on the first Tuesday in June, 1916, shall be the members of the house of representatives from their respective districts for the term expiring in 1919.

"SEC. 15. That at the first election held pursuant to this act, the qualified electors shall be those having the qualifications of voters under the present law; thereafter and until otherwise provided by the Philippine Legislature herein provided for the qualifications of voters for senators and representatives in the Philippines and all officers elected by the people shall be as follows:

"Every male person who is not a citizen or subject of a foreign power 21 years of age or over—except insane and feeble-minded persons and those convicted in a court of competent jurisdiction of an infamous offense since the 13th day of August, 1898—who shall have been a resident of the Philippines for one year and of the municipality in which he shall offer to vote for six months next preceding the day of voting, and who is comprised within one of the following classes:

"(a) Those who under existing law are legal voters and have exercised the right of suffrage.

"(b) Those who own real property to the value of ₱500, or who annually pay ₱30 or more of the established taxes.

"(c) Those who are able to read and write either Spanish, English, or a native language.

"SEC. 16. That the Philippine Islands shall be divided into 12 senate districts, as follows:

"First district: Batanes, Cagayan, Isabela, Ilocos Norte, and Ilocos Sur.

"Second district: La Union, Pangasinan, and Zambales.

"Third district: Tarlac, Nueva Ecija, Pampanga, and Bulacan.

"Fourth district: Bataan, Rizal, Manila, and Laguna.

"Fifth district: Batangas, Mindoro, Tayabas, and Cavite.

"Sixth district: Sorsogon, Albay, and Ambos Camarines.

"Seventh district: Iloilo and Capiz.

"Eighth district: Negros Occidental, Negros Oriental, Antique, and Palawan.

"Ninth district: Leyte and Samar.

"Tenth district: Cebu.

"Eleventh district: Surigao, Misamis, and Bohol.

"Twelfth district: The Mountain Province, Bagulo, Nueva Vizcaya, and the Department of Mindanao and Sulu.

"The representative districts shall be the 81 now provided by law, and 3 in the Mountain Province, 1 in Nueva Vizcaya, and 5 in the Department of Mindanao and Sulu.

"The first election under the provisions of this act shall be held on the first Tuesday of October, 1916, unless the Governor General in his discretion shall fix another date not earlier than 30 nor later than 60 days after the passage of this act: Provided, That the Governor General's proclamation shall be published at least 30 days prior to the date fixed for the election, and there shall be chosen at such election one senator from each senate district for a term of three years and one for six years. Thereafter one senator from each district shall be elected from each senate district for a term of six years: Provided, That the Governor General of the Philippine Islands shall appoint, without the consent of the senate and without restriction as to residence, senators and representatives who will, in his opinion, best represent the senate district and those representative districts which may be included in the territory not now represented in the Philippine Assembly: Provided further, That thereafter elections shall be held only on such days and under such regulations as to ballots, voting, and qualifications of electors as may be prescribed by the Philippine Legislature, to which is hereby given authority to redistrict the Philippine Islands and modify, amend, or repeal any provision of this section, except such as refer to appointive senators and representatives.

"SEC. 17. That the terms of office of elective senators and representatives shall be six and three years, respectively, and shall begin on the date of their election. In case of vacancy among the elective members of the senate or in the house of representatives special elections may be held in the districts wherein such vacancy occurred under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, but senators or representatives elected in such cases shall hold office only for the unexpired portion of the term wherein the vacancy occurred. Senators and representatives appointed by the Governor General shall hold office until removed by the Governor General.

"SEC. 18. That the senate and house of representatives, respectively, shall be the sole judges of the elections, returns, and qualifications of their elective members, and each house may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel an elective member. Both houses shall convene at the capital on the 16th day of October next following the election and organize by the election of a speaker or a presiding officer, a clerk, and a sergeant at arms for each house, and such other officers and assistants as may be required. A majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business, but a smaller number may meet, adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members. The legislature shall hold annual sessions, commencing on the 16th day of October, or, if the 16th day of October be a legal holiday, then on the 1st day following which is not a legal holiday, in each year. The legislature may be called in special session at any time by the Governor General for general legislation, or for action on such specific subjects as he may designate. No special session shall continue longer than 30 days, and no regular session shall continue longer than 100 days, exclusive of Sundays. The legislature is hereby given the power and authority to change the date of the commencement of its annual sessions.

"The senators and representatives shall receive an annual compensation for their services, to be ascertained by law, and paid out of the treasury of the Philippine Islands. The senators and representatives shall, in all cases except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective houses and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either house they shall not be questioned in any other place.

"No senator or representative shall, during the time for which he may have been elected, be eligible to any office the election to which is vested in the legislature, nor shall be appointed to any office of trust or profit which shall have been created or the emoluments of which shall have been increased during such term.

"SEC. 19. That each house of the legislature shall keep a journal of its proceedings and, from time to time, publish the same; and the yeas and nays of the members of either house, on any question, shall, upon demand of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the journal, and every bill and joint resolution which shall have passed both houses shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the Governor General. If he approve the same, he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it with his objections to that house in which it shall have originated, which shall enter the objections at large on its journal and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of the members elected to that house shall agree to pass the same, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of all the members elected to that house it shall be sent to the Governor General, who, in case he shall then not approve, shall transmit the same to the President of the United States. The vote of each house shall be by the yeas and nays, and the names of the members voting for and against shall be entered on the journal. If the President of the United States approve the same, he shall sign it and it shall become a law. If he shall not approve same, he shall return it to the Governor General, so stating, and it shall not become a law: Provided, That if any bill or joint resolution shall not be returned by the Governor General as herein provided within 20 days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him the same shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislature by adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall become a law unless vetoed by the Governor General within 30 days after adjournment: Provided further, That the President of the United States shall approve or disapprove an act submitted to him under the provisions of this section within six months from and after its enactment and submission for his approval; and if not approved within such time, it shall become a law the same as if it had been specifically approved. The Governor General shall have the power to veto any particular item or items of an appropriation bill, but the veto shall not affect the item or items to which he does not object. The item or items objected to shall not take effect except in the manner heretofore provided in this section as to bills and joint resolutions returned to the legislature without his approval.

"All laws enacted by the Philippine Legislature shall be reported to the Congress of the United States, which hereby reserves the power and authority to annul the same. If at the termination of any fiscal year the appropriations necessary for the support of government for the ensuing fiscal year shall not have been made, the several sums appropriated in the last appropriation bills for the objects and purposes therein specified, so far as the same may be done, shall be deemed to be reappropriated for the several objects and purposes specified in said last appropriation bill; and until the legislature shall act in such behalf the treasurer shall, when so directed by the Governor General, make the payments necessary for the purposes aforesaid.

"SEC. 20. That at the first meeting of the Philippine Legislature created by this act and triennially thereafter there shall be chosen by the legislature two Resident Commissioners to the United States, who shall hold their office for a term of three years beginning with the 4th day of March following their election, and who shall be entitled to an official recognition as such by all departments upon presentation to the President of a certificate of election by the Governor General of said islands. Each of said Resident Commissioners shall, in addition to the salary and the sum in lieu of mileage now allowed by law, be allowed the same sum for stationery and for the pay of necessary clerk hire as is now allowed to the Members of the House of Representatives of the United States, to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and the franking privilege allowed by law to Members of Congress. No person shall be eligible to election as Resident Commissioner who is not a bona fide elector of said islands and who does not owe allegiance to the United States and who is not more than 30 years of age and who does not read and write the English language. The present two Resident Commissioners shall hold office until the 4th of March, 1917. In case of vacancy in the position of Resident Commissioner caused by resignation or otherwise, the Governor General may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Philippine Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancy; but the Resident Commissioner thus elected shall hold office only for the unexpired portion of the term wherein the vacancy occurred.

"SEC. 21. That the supreme executive power shall be vested in an executive officer, whose official title shall be 'the Governor General of the Philippine Islands.' He shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, and hold his office at the pleasure of the President and until his successor is chosen and qualified. The Governor General shall reside in the Philippine Islands during his official incumbency, and maintain his office at the seat of government. He shall, unless otherwise herein provided, appoint, by and with the consent of the Philippine Senate, such officers as may now be appointed by the Governor General, or such as he is authorized by this act to appoint, or whom he may hereafter be authorized by law to appoint; but appointments made while the senate is not in session shall be effective either until disapproval or until the next adjournment of the senate. He shall have general supervision and control of all of the departments and bureaus of the government in the Philippine Islands as far as is not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, and shall be commander in chief of all locally created armed forces and militia. He is hereby vested with the exclusive power to grant pardons and reprieves and remit fines and forfeitures, and may veto any legislation enacted as herein provided. He shall submit within 10 days of the opening of each regular session of the Philippine Legislature a budget of receipts and expenditures, which shall be the basis of the annual appropriation bill. He shall commission all officers that he may be authorized to appoint. He shall be responsible for the faithful execution of the laws of the Philippine Islands and of the United States operative within the Philippine Islands, and whenever it becomes necessary he may call upon the commanders of the military and naval forces of the United States in the islands, or summon the posse comitatus, or call out the militia or other locally created armed forces, to prevent or suppress lawless violence, invasion, insurrection, or rebellion; and he may, in case of rebellion or invasion, or imminent danger thereof, when the public safety requires it, suspend the privileges of the writ of habeas corpus, or place the islands, or any part thereof, under martial law: Provided, That whenever the Governor General shall exercise this authority, he shall at once notify the President of the United States thereof, together with the attending facts and circumstances, and the President shall have power to modify or vacate the action of the Governor General. He shall annually and at such other times as he may be required make such official report of the transactions of the government of the Philippine Islands to an executive department of the United States to be designated by the President, and his said annual report shall be transmitted to the Congress of the United States; and he shall perform such additional duties and functions as may in pursuance of law be delegated or assigned to him by the President.

"SEC. 22. That, except as provided otherwise in this act, the executive departments of the Philippine government shall continue as now authorized by law until otherwise provided by the Philippine Legislature. When the Philippine Legislature herein provided shall convene and organize, the Philippine Commission, as such, shall cease and determine, and the members thereof shall vacate their offices as members of said commission: Provided, That the heads of executive departments shall continue to exercise their executive functions until the heads of departments provided by the Philippine Legislature pursuant to the provisions of this act are appointed and qualified. The Philippine Legislature may thereafter by appropriate legislation increase the number or abolish any of the executive departments, or make such changes in the names and duties thereof as it may see fit, and shall provide for the appointment and removal of the heads of the executive departments by the Governor General: Provided, That all executive functions of the government must be directly under the Governor General or within one of the executive departments under the supervision and control of the Governor General. There is hereby established a bureau, to be known as the bureau of non-Christian tribes, which said bureau shall be embraced in one of the executive departments to be designated by the Governor General, and shall have general supervision over the public affairs of the inhabitants of the territory represented in the legislature by appointive senators and representatives.

"SEC. 23. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, a vice governor of the Philippine Islands, who shall have all of the powers of the Governor General in the case of a vacancy or temporary removal, resignation, or disability of the Governor General, or in case of his temporary absence; and the said vice governor shall be the head of the executive department, known as the department of public instruction, which shall include the bureau of education and the bureau of health, and he may be assigned such other executive duties as the Governor General may designate.

"Other bureaus now included in the department of public instruction shall, until otherwise provided by the Philippine Legislature, be included in the department of the interior.

"The President may designate the head of an executive department of the Philippine government to act as Governor General in the case of a vacancy, the temporary removal, resignation, or disability of the Governor General and of the vice governor, or their temporary absence, and the head of the department thus designated shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of the Governor General during such vacancy, disability, or absence.

"Sec. 24. That there shall be appointed by the President an auditor, who shall examine, audit, and settle all accounts pertaining to the revenues and receipts from whatever source of the Philippine government and of the provincial and municipal governments of the Philippines, including trust funds and funds derived from bond issues; and audit, in accordance with law and administrative regulations, all expenditures of funds or property pertaining to or held in trust by the government or the Provinces or municipalities thereof. He shall perform a like duty with respect to all government branches.

"He shall keep the general accounts of the government and preserve the vouchers pertaining thereto.

"It shall be the duty of the auditor to bring to the attention of the proper administrative officer expenditures of funds or property which, in his opinion, are irregular, unnecessary, excessive, or extravagant.

"There shall be a deputy auditor appointed in the same manner as the auditor. The deputy auditor shall sign such official papers as the auditor may designate and perform such other duties as the auditor may prescribe, and in case of the death, resignation, sickness, or other absence of the auditor from his office, from any cause, the deputy auditor shall have charge of such office. In case of the absence from duty, from any cause, of both the auditor and the deputy auditor, the Governor General may designate an assistant, who shall have charge of the office.

"The administrative jurisdiction of the auditor over accounts, whether of funds or property, and all vouchers and records pertaining thereto, shall be exclusive. With the approval of the Governor General he shall from time to time make and promulgate general or special rules and regulations not inconsistent with law covering the method of accounting for public funds and property, and funds and property held in trust by the government or any of its branches: Provided, That any officer accountable for public funds or property may require such additional reports or returns from his subordinates or others as he may deem necessary for his own information and protection.

"The decisions of the auditor shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branches of the government, except that appeal therefrom may be taken by the party aggrieved or the head of the department concerned within one year, in the manner hereinafter prescribed. The auditor shall, except as hereinafter provided, have like authority as that conferred by law upon the several auditors of the United States and the Comptroller of the United States Treasury and is authorized to communicate directly with any person having claims before him for settlement, or with any department, officer, or person having official relations with his office.

"As soon after the close of each fiscal year as the accounts of said year may be examined and adjusted the auditor shall submit to the Governor General and the Secretary of War an annual report of the fiscal concerns of the government, showing the receipts and disbursements of the various departments and bureaus of the government, and of the various Provinces and municipalities, and make such other reports as may be required of him by the Governor General or the Secretary of War.

"In the execution of their duties the auditor and the deputy auditor are authorized to summon witnesses, administer oaths, and to take evidence, and, in the pursuance of these provisions, may issue subpoenas and enforce the attendance of witnesses, as now provided by law.

"The office of the auditor shall be under the general supervision of the Governor General and shall consist of the auditor and deputy auditor and such necessary assistants as may be prescribed by law.

"Sec. 25. That any person aggrieved by the action or decision of the auditor in the settlement of his account or claim may, within one year, take an appeal in writing to the Governor General, which appeal shall specifically set forth the particular action of the auditor to which exception is taken, with the reason and authorities relied on for reversing such decision.

"If the Governor General shall confirm the action of the auditor, he shall so indorse the appeal and transmit it to the auditor, and the action shall thereupon be final and conclusive. Should the Governor General fail to sustain the action of the auditor, he shall forthwith transmit his grounds of disapproval to the Secretary of War, together with the appeal and the papers necessary to a proper understanding of the matter. The decision of the Secretary of War in such case shall be final and conclusive.

"Sec. 26. That the supreme court and the courts of first instance of the Philippine Islands shall possess and exercise jurisdiction as heretofore provided and such additional jurisdiction as shall hereafter be prescribed by law. The municipal courts of said islands shall possess and exercise jurisdiction as now provided by law, subject in all matters to such alteration and amendment as may be hereafter enacted by law; and the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court shall hereafter be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States. The judges of the court of first instance shall be appointed by the Governor General, by and with the advice and consent of the Philippine Senate: Provided, That the admiralty jurisdiction of the supreme court and courts of first instance shall not be changed except by act of Congress. That in all cases pending under the operation of existing laws, both criminal and civil, the jurisdiction shall continue until final judgment and determination.

"Sec. 27. That the Supreme Court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review, revise, reverse, modify, or affirm the final judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands in all actions, cases, causes, and proceedings now pending therein or hereafter determined thereby in which the Constitution or any statute, treaty, title, right, or privilege of the United States is involved, or in causes in which the value in controversy exceeds $25,000, or in which the title or possession of real estate exceeding in value the sum of $25,000, to be ascertained by the oath of either party or of other competent witnesses, is involved or brought in question; and such final judgments or decrees may and can be reviewed, revised, reversed, modified, or affirmed by said Supreme Court of the United States on appeal or writ of error by the party aggrieved within the same time, in the same manner, under the same regulations, and by the same procedure, as far as applicable, as the final judgments and decrees of the district courts of the United States.

"Sec. 28. That the government of the Philippine Islands may grant franchises and rights, including the authority to exercise the right of eminent domain, for the construction and operation of works of public utility and service, and may authorize said works to be constructed and maintained over and across the public property of the United States, including streets, highways, squares, and reservations, and over similar property of the government of said islands, and may adopt rules and regulations under which the provincial and municipal governments of the islands may grant the right to use and occupy such public property belonging to said Provinces or municipalities: Provided, That no private property shall be damaged or taken for any purpose under this section without just compensation, and that such authority to take and occupy land shall not authorize the taking, use, or occupation of any land except such as is required for the actual necessary purposes for which the franchise is granted, and that no franchise or right shall be granted to any individual, firm, or corporation except under the conditions that it shall be subject to amendment, alteration, or repeal by the Congress of the United States, and that lands or right of use and occupation of lands thus granted shall revert to the governments by which they were respectively granted upon the termination of the franchises and rights under which they were granted or upon their revocation or repeal. That all franchises or rights granted under this act shall forbid the issue of stock or bonds except in exchange for actual cash or for property at a fair valuation equal to the par value of the stock or bonds so issued; shall forbid the declaring of stock or bond dividends, and, in the case of public-service corporations, shall provide for the effective regulation of the charges thereof, for the official inspection and regulation of the books and accounts of such corporations, and for the payment of a reasonable percentage of gross earnings into the treasury of the Philippine Islands or of the Province or municipality within which such franchises are granted and exercised: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any corporation organized under this act, or for any person, company, or corporation receiving any grant, franchise, or concession from the government of said islands, to use, employ, or contract for the labor of persons held in involuntary servitude; and any person, company, or corporation so violating the provisions of this act shall forfeit all charters, grants, or franchises for doing business in said islands, in an action or proceeding brought for that purpose in any court of competent jurisdiction by any officer of the Philippine government, or on the complaint of any citizen of the Philippines, under such regulations and rules as the Philippine Legislature shall prescribe, and in addition shall be deemed guilty of an offense, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000.

"SEC. 29. That, except as in this act otherwise provided, the salaries of all the officials of the Philippines not appointed by the President, including deputies, assistants, and other employees, shall be such and be so paid out of the revenues of the Philippines as shall from time to time be determined by the Philippine Legislature; and, if the legislature shall fail to make an appropriation for such salaries, the salaries so fixed shall be paid without the necessity of further appropriations therefor. The salaries of all officers and all expenses of the offices of the various officials of the Philippines appointed as herein provided by the President shall also be paid out of the revenues of the Philippines. The annual salaries of the following-named officials appointed by the President and so to be paid shall be: The Governor General, $18,000; in addition thereto he shall be entitled to the occupancy of the buildings heretofore used by the chief executive of the Philippines, with the furniture and effects therein, free of rental; vice governor, $10,000; chief justice of the supreme court, $8,000; associate justices of the supreme court, $7,500 each; auditor, $6,000; deputy auditor, $3,000.

"SEC. 30. That the provisions of the foregoing section shall not apply to provincial and municipal officials; their salaries and the compensation of their deputies, assistants, and other help, as well as all other expenses incurred by the Provinces and municipalities, shall be paid out of the provincial and municipal revenues in such manner as the Philippine Legislature shall provide.

"SEC. 31. That all laws or parts of laws applicable to the Philippines not in conflict with any of the provisions of this act are hereby continued in force and effect."

- H. R. 14978. An act for the relief of Ida Turner; and
- H. R. 15109. An act for the relief of Catherine A. Fox.

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

- H. R. 8844. An act for the relief of H. B. Rogers; and
- H. R. 11860. An act for the relief of Halvor Nilsen.

H. R. 11288. An act for the relief of S. S. Yoder was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15455, being the shipping bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15455) to establish a United States shipping board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water engaged in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States; and for other purposes.

[Mr. WEEKS resumed and concluded the speech begun by him on Saturday last. The entire speech is as follows:]

Saturday, August 12, 1916.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, yesterday the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING], in that fluent diction which is characteristic of him, in describing the desires of the newspaper man, said that what he wanted was novelty. If that is a correct description—and I assume it is—of what the press require in order to attract public attention, they certainly would find material enough for that purpose in the legislation that is now pending before the Senate. It really should be entitled "A bill to save the face of the administration."

I am one of those who believe that it is a somewhat better bill than the one which did not receive favorable consideration by the Senate in the second session of the Sixty-third Congress. It has one or two features which in some form would be operative and beneficial, but in its present form it is pretty difficult to see how it can be beneficial to anyone. Yet I ought not to say that, because while the bill has been universally condemned by every trade organization in the United States and by everyone, I think, who has any particular knowledge of the subject which is under consideration, yet in two or three instances individuals have been found who were willing to indorse the general proposition, and by so doing they have really received some direct benefit.

Within the last two or three weeks we have confirmed the board appointed to administer the rural-credits bill. Two members of that board are Mr. Herbert Quick and Mr. George W. Norris. Of all the literature that I have been able to collect I have found but three instances where individuals of standing and prominence have been willing to subscribe to this kind of legislation, and two of these three instances are represented by Mr. Quick and Mr. Norris. Mr. Quick's article, published in the Saturday Evening Post of February 5, 1916, is really not an indorsement of the legislation. It is entitled, "Shall We Give Up the Ship? How the Administration Proposes to Build Up a Merchant Marine," and it does say a few kind words about the general proposition. The result is a $10,000 place for Mr. Quick.

Mr. Norris indorses the proposition with a little more emphasis. I have a personal acquaintance with Mr. Norris, and I believe that he will make a good commissioner; but he, too, has received his reward—a $10,000 place—for an address which he delivered in Philadelphia when the bill which preceded this one, on the same subject, was under consideration.

With the exception of one other individual, who shall be nameless, I do not know any prominent man in this country who has either written an article or delivered an address in favor of this kind of legislation. Of course it will benefit five other individuals, and those will be the five commissioners who will be appointed to the positions provided for in the bill, who will also receive salaries of $10,000 a year; but I think it has been or can be demonstrated that it will not benefit anyone else.

The character of this legislation to me is extremely obnoxious. It is the kind which the administration seems to be willing to stand for. The President, in his address to Congress on December 8, 1914, used this expression in referring to economical administration:

But my point is that the people of the United States do not wish to curtail the activities of this Government. They wish rather to enlarge them.

In that statement, Mr. President, is found the basis of much of the legislation advocated by this administration and acted on by this Congress. It covers not only this ship legislation but the armor-making proposition, the projectile-making plant, the construction of the Alaska railroad, and numerous other instances where the Government is more or less gradually being involved in active business operations, sometimes not in competition with our own citizens, but too frequently in competition with them. In this particular case we are not only going to put the Government or the Government's money into active competition with that of our own citizens, but we are going to put it in charge and under the control of a board which shall not only administer this fund but shall also have control, and almost complete control, over those activities which are in competition with the Government in this particular operation.

I can not remember any instance of any kind anywhere in which such a course has been taken. I never have been able to understand, Mr. President, why the Government should not follow the course which is followed by individuals and by organizations of individuals in developing its affairs, and especially its business affairs. No business man, no organization of business men, would ever consider undertaking a new proposition on a large scale, especially if it had not been tried by some one else and found to work successfully, or reasonably so. If that had not been done, they would try it out, experiment a little here and there, and finally develop a basis on which a general project could be undertaken. But this Government seems determined to undertake unusual things without any competent authority having given them approval.

Why should we not follow the course of European countries in the construction of armor for our ships, for instance? Why do we not follow their course in the manufacture of projectiles? Why do we not follow their course in the attempt to build up an American merchant marine, applying what they have done to the conditions which we find in this country? That would be the sensible course to follow.

I wish to say that I am and always have been intensely interested in this question, having had some personal seafaring experience and being interested in the kind of life which goes with a merchant marine, and I am in part representing a State which at one time had large investments and a large portion of its people directly interested in the foreign trade. To some extent that is true now; but it is the wish of the people of my State to try to have developed in this country a merchant marine which will not only be sufficient for our carrying trade, or that part of the carrying trade which will conform very largely with what is being done by other first-class maritime nations for themselves, but at the same time will be an auxiliary for the Navy. For all of these reasons I hope to be able to support legislation of this character, and shall do so when there is any prospect of its success, which I can not believe exists in this case. Incidentally, lest I forget it, I want to suggest that that appeal which appears in the title of the bill and in the bill itself, that it is an attempt to construct auxiliaries for our Navy, does not seem to me to be justified.

Something like two and a half years ago I introduced a bill providing for a steamship line through the Panama Canal to the west coast of South America, the vessels to be used for this purpose to be Army or naval auxiliary vessels. I had three purposes, at least, in introducing that proposition. One was that it did not seem to me that the Government should spend nearly $400,000,000 in the construction of the Canal and not have some means ready as soon as the canal was opened to make a beneficial use of it; and there was no private organization prepared to take advantage of the trade through the canal to the west coast of South America.

Again, I believed then and I believe now that if the Army and Navy had sufficient auxiliaries for all their war purposes, in time of peace many of those vessels would not be usefully or necessarily in use with either the Army or Navy, and they would be laid up or might be employed, and it did seem to me then, and does now, that it would be wise to have them employed in commercial pursuits instead of being tied up at their docks and gradually going to pieces.

Furthermore, I knew, Mr. President, that neither the Army nor the Navy had auxiliaries that were at all efficient; I knew that we were exceedingly limited in our supply, and that there should be some kind of public sentiment developed which would bring about appropriations by Congress for an increase in the number of auxiliaries. It seemed to me that the way to bring about such development was to demonstrate by actually putting such carriers as we had in this service with South America, showing how ill equipped and prepared they were for performing either the service as auxiliaries for the navy or as cargo-carrying ships.

I have suggested that no other country of the world has ever undertaken any such legislation as this. It is sometimes contended that Germany and Japan and England have been interested directly in the merchant marine of those countries. I think this statement is not justified in any respect. Germany, through its ownership of railroads and through its control over industrial affairs, does make rates in such a manner that some particular object like a railroad or a steamship line or a port or a dock even may be directly benefited, but that does not mean that the German Government has any money invested in merchant ships. It never has had, and has not to-day.

As far as I know the only money that the English Government has invested in merchant ships is a loan made to the Cunard Co. for the building of the Lusitania and the Mauretania. Those ships were constructed very largely with money provided by the English Government, at a low rate of interest, of course with the understanding that they were subject to call in case of necessity.

The same general statement is true of Japan. While the relations between the Government and the merchant service of Japan are exceedingly close, there is not any instance in which the Japanese Government has had a direct investment in merchant ships.

I have suggested that practically every commercial body in the United States which has given any consideration to this subject has reported against it, either unanimously or practically so. Almost everyone is familiar with the action taken by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. It was one of the most effective referendums on any subject which has been taken in this country, and the returns show that from 90 to 95 per cent of the bodies represented in this Chamber were opposed to this legislation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARDWICK in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest to the Senator that the action of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States was taken with reference to the bill first introduced in the House. There has been no referendum on the bill as it now appears before the Senate. I think the Senator will agree that that body did not pass upon the bill as it is now submitted, and I do not know of any other commercial organization that has passed on it.

Mr. WEEKS. I presume the Senator means that the bill which it acted on is the bill that came over from the House, which has been amended by the Senate Committee on Commerce. If that is the case, I want to say to the Senator that in my judgment the Senate committee bill is infinitely more dangerous in some respects than the House bill. The provision in section 9 putting these ships into the coastwise service is obnoxious to every interest, commercial, industrial, or political as far as this side of the Chamber is concerned. There is not an excuse for that, in my opinion, and even if there had been improvements made in other features of the bill, I am confident the action taken by any commercial body would condemn that particular phase of the Senate committee bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will call the attention of the Senator further to the communication of Mr. Fahey, the former president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, indorsing this bill and approving its passage.

Mr. WEEKS. That is purely an individual opinion evidently, because the Chamber of Commerce itself and its marine committee made a very strong report against it. I will not take the space in the RECORD to insert the report, because I think it has been sent to all Senators, and the public is generally familiar with it, but the chairman of that committee in making his report did not mince his words. Let me quote one or two things that he said:

The proposed appropriation, therefore, of $50,000,000 to be obtained by the sale of Panama Canal bonds will make impossible the securing of hundreds of millions of the people's money which might be devoted to the upbuilding of a merchant marine if a fair chance were given.

We believe that, no matter what may be the sentiments of the reader regarding the points involved, the method of presenting these points will be applauded. There is, for instance, no beating about the bush here.

The people are not afraid of the words "subvention" and "subsidy." The expenditure of a few million dollars a year would have enabled us to meet at least some of the difficulties we have encountered with shipping in the past 18 months. The President, after his tour, during which he heard the voice of the people, wants the greatest navy ever seen.

Says the committee's spokesman; and he adds:

I hope he will make another tour. After he comes back he will realize the people want the greatest merchant marine.

The New York Produce Exchange is another and the only other commercial body which I will quote in this connection. The Produce Exchange in its membership includes a larger percentage of concerns actively engaged in the shipping business than any other organization in the United States. The exchange had a meeting June 5, 1916, at a time when the provisions of the Senate committee bill were pretty well known, and made a report which is acquiesced in by 432 out of 440 members; and the other 8 members assented in general terms, but dissented from one or two provisions of the report. It can not be possible that a more complete condemnation of the bill could be found than this one of the Produce Exchange, coming, as it does, from men who are perfectly competent to pass on this question.

I will ask to put this report of the Produce Exchange in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

NEW YORK PRODUCE EXCHANGE,
New York, August 2, 1916.

To the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives:

The New York Produce Exchange probably includes in its membership a larger percentage of concerns actively engaged in the shipping and in the export and import business than is found in any other commercial organization of the United States. It is natural then that its members should be very deeply interested in all legislation having for its purpose the building up of the American merchant marine. In order to obtain and give expression to the opinion of the members on this important subject, the board of managers of the exchange, in November last, appointed a committee of seven members "to study matters connected with American shipping and report back to the board a plan the adoption of which would, in its judgment, result in the development of an adequate American merchant marine."

Pursuant to these instructions, and after some months of study and discussion, the following report was prepared by the special committee and submitted to the board of managers on June 5, 1916:

NEW YORK, June 5, 1916.

TO THE BOARD OF MANAGERS OF THE NEW YORK PRODUCE EXCHANGE.

GENTLEMEN: Your special committee on American merchant marine beg to report * * * the following resolutions as their conclusions in the matter. * * *

First. In order to provide for a constructive national policy that shall be consistent and progressive in the upbuilding of the American merchant marine, and to give greater efficiency to the administration of the laws of the United States relating to shipping, a permanent Federal shipping board, to be composed of five members, none of whom shall hold any other Government position, should be appointed by the President, with the approval of the Senate.

The shipping board should have general supervision of the American merchant marine, and should take over the duties now performed by the Steamboat-Inspection Service and the Bureau of Navigation, and should have full charge of the administration and enforcement of the navigation laws of the United States.

The shipping board should have authority to investigate the navigation laws of this and other countries and all conditions affecting American shipping, and should as promptly as possible and from time to time recommend to Congress such changes in the navigation laws of the United States as will place ships of American registry on a competing basis with ships under foreign flags.

Second. We favor a thorough revision of our navigation laws, having as its purpose the repeal of all laws imposing unnecessary restrictions on the construction and operation of American ships in the over-seas trade, and the adoption of such laws as will permit the development of a merchant marine.

Third. Government ownership and operation of vessels, direct or indirect, for commercial purposes, is not consistent with a sound American shipping policy. The restoration of the American merchant marine to the over-seas trade can be best accomplished through private initiative, ownership, and operation. The greatest possible freedom of action should be given private enterprise for the purchase and building of American ships and their operation under the American flag.

Fourth. We believe that the regulation of ocean rates should be left to the natural laws of supply and demand, and that the power of the Federal shipping board in connection with rates should be confined to the investigation and prohibition, with proper penalties, of unfair practices and unjust discriminations.

Fifth. We favor measures that will build up a naval reserve of officers and men, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy and approved by the shipping board, and providing appropriate retainers to such officers and men of American citizenship who serve on American vessels and who shall volunteer for this service.

Sixth. We favor measures to establish direct and regular communication under the American flag with important trade ports in foreign lands, and approve mail subventions if necessary for that purpose.

Respectfully submitted,

E. R. CARIHART,
Chairman.

JOHN ASPEGREN,

Special Committee on American Merchant Marine.

This report having been approved by the board of managers without a dissenting voice, was then submitted to the members of the exchange, with the result that of the 440 members voting, 432 gave their full approval and 8 members dissented from one or more provisions of the report.

The board of managers respectfully submits to the Members of Congress the report of the special committee as containing, in the judgment of this exchange, the principles that should prevail in all legislation having for its purpose the encouragement and building up of the American merchant marine.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM H. KEMP, President.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, this bill proposes to regulate ships which are common carriers, stating that it covers all vessels engaged in foreign trade running on regular routes, and in another paragraph that the term "common carrier by water" means a common carrier by water in foreign commerce or a common carrier by water in interstate commerce on the high seas and the Great Lakes. Presuming that "common carrier" covers the usual acceptance of the term, that it furnishes a means of transportation at reasonable rates to all those who desire to use it for freight or passenger service, it is difficult to understand what the limitation would be as far as water transportation is concerned.

Ships engaged in foreign commerce are, generally speaking, divided into two classes: What are termed "liners," which have a fixed point of departure at both ends of a route and carry passengers and freight over such routes; and "tramps," the movements of which are most irregular, dependent entirely on the business offering and frequently going from one port to another in ballast looking for a cargo.

The ships of the liner class usually have a comparatively fixed schedule of rates, varying, of course, with general conditions, but not changing greatly from time to time. Vessels of the tramp class have no schedule of rates, a rate depending on the volume of freight offering. If freight exceeds in volume at any particular time the amount of shipping in a port, the rate which may be charged greatly exceeds the rates which could be obtained if the tonnage exceeded the demands of that particular port; otherwise, a loss of time and effort would be required for some part of such shipping to get to another port where freight was offered. The classes of freight carried by the two kinds of shipping vary, those of a higher grade requiring a quick passage usually going by liners, where there are ocean lines, and freight of the coarser and lower grade going by tramp steamers.

While these two general classes of vessels exist they are not a fixed quantity, because ships may be transferred without notice from one class to the other, undertaking the service which for the time being is most profitable. Of course, this does not directly apply to a few of the great passenger ships, but we frequently see that vessels are transferred from one locality to another and undertake an entirely different class of service.

It is difficult for me to understand whether or not the "common carrier" treated in the bill applies to both classes. If it applies to the one class which compares to some degree with a common carrier on land, the comparison is not without force; yet, the number of vessels employed in that service, as I have suggested, is a very uncertain quantity. If the term "common carrier" does not apply to the tramp steamer, then the regulation which is proposed in this bill concerning common carriers by water affects but a lesser part of the shipping engaged in foreign transportation.

In what kind of position is the shipping board to be placed if it must treat both classes as common carriers? The one is immobile to a degree, the other has unlimited mobility. But if the term "common carrier" applies to liners only, any action on the part of a board inimical to the earnings of such liner would necessarily and immediately drive it into another class of business not affected by the action of the shipping board.

In this bill common carriers by water are forbidden to pay rebates or to retaliate in any way against shippers, such as by refusing accommodations, and so forth. They are forbidden to make unfair discriminations against one class of shippers in favor of another. They are forbidden to discriminate in favor of localities, persons, or traffic, or to carry at less than a regular rate by issuing false bills or classifications. Also they are forbidden to make rates prejudicial to American exporters and, moreover, if any agreement or arrangement is undertaken relating to rates, it must be submitted to the board and not changed without the approval of the board.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion at that point? Perhaps I should have raised the question the other day when the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] was discussing the bill and made that part of it a very considerable ground of criticism, because he held that the tramps ought not to be subject to the regulatory features set forth in sections 18 and 19 of the bill. At the time I was under the impression that tramps were not included under the terms "common carriers," but I did not interrupt the Senator from Minnesota, and now that the Senator from Massachusetts refers to it again, I think it well to say that the opinion of, I think, all the committee, certainly my opinion, anyhow, is that the tramps are not included under the provisions of sections 18 and 19; that tramps are not common carriers within the meaning and definition set forth in the bill.

If the Senator will refer to the report of the hearings before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, at page 194, he will find a discussion of that proposition, wherein it is contended, and with very sound logic and the citation of authorities, that the legal status of a tramp vessel is not that of a common carrier. When the bill undertakes to define the term "common carrier" by water in foreign commerce it says that it means a common carrier engaged in transportation by water. Therefore a tramp is not a common carrier; that is not its legal status; and it is not affected by the provisions of sections 18 and 19 of the bill. I think that is a sound position. I do not believe tramp vessels would be affected by the provision.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not intend to attempt to pass on what the legal construction of a common carrier by water would be, whether it would include tramps or not. It would be absolutely ineffective, of course, to attempt to put under the control of any board making rates the operations of a tramp steamer, because they change as often almost as the rising and the setting of the sun and depend entirely, as I have suggested, on the volume of trade that may be offered at any particular point at any particular time.

If the tramp is not a common carrier and tramps do not come under the control of this board, then the minute the board attempts to take any action relating to a regular liner included as a common carrier which will militate against the earning power of such a ship, it would undoubtedly immediately change its operations and become one of the tramp class.

Therefore I say that the general course of procedure which is followed in connection with railroads can not be applied with any degree of certainty to ocean traffic. When we get beyond the 3-mile limit we are in competition with the rest of the world.

This is one of the particular criticisms I have of the bill, Mr. President, that we are attempting to do at sea substantially what we have done on shore in the case of transportation companies.

I am one of those who believe that very much that has been done by the Interstate Commerce Commission has been wise and beneficial. I doubt if there are many who would repeal the law providing for that commission. Yet the very fact that we have put such power in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission has had the effect of putting our transportation companies in a strait-jacket, because they can not obtain additional rates except after great public pressure, and as the cost of operation is constantly increasing, the result is, as I pointed out two or three days ago, the net returns obtained by our transportation companies are getting less and less, so that even now they have reached a point where capital does not readily go into the development of railroads. Now, we are proposing to take the same course in cases where we are in direct competition with all foreign nations; that is, we are going to attempt to put under similar restrictions our ocean-carrying trade. What these interests need is a free hand. What our individual investors need is a fair opportunity with the rest of the world to do this service, not to be put in a strait-jacket under conditions which do not obtain in any other country and under which, in my judgment, they can not compete with the shipping of any other country.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WEEKS. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. Allow me to suggest that there I think the Senator is in error. I think he proceeds upon a wrong premise, because I do not find in the bill any such power in this board as can be compared to the power and authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission over railroads. I think that the operation here is limited, as provided in section 18, to preventing any charge or rate "which is unjustly discriminatory between shippers or ports, or unjustly prejudicial to exporters of the United States as compared with their foreign competitors." That is the end of it as far as foreign commerce is concerned. There is no provision authorizing the board to fix freight rates on foreign shipping. The whole power is to prevent unjust discrimination against American shippers in favor of foreign competitors, and that does not involve the fixing of rates at all.

As applied to interstate shipments, to coastwise business, under section 19 the authority is more extended. There the board would have the power to fix the maximum rate, but that does not apply to ships engaged in foreign commerce, it only applies to the coastwise trade, and the maximum rate. There is no provision in the bill against a carrier changing the rate; he may file a schedule with the board, provided he does not increase the rate upon the maximum.

There again a misapprehension apparently has been lodged in the minds of some. Some criticize that provision because they say when the carrier shall file a schedule with the board and it is open to public inspection as to the form and manner of freight and fares, and so forth, they can not change it; but such a provision is not there at all. It says that "no carrier shall demand, charge, or collect a greater compensation for such transportation than the rates, fares, and charges." He can charge less; he can change his rates from day to day and from hour to hour, provided he does not charge more than the rate that has been fixed as the maximum rate; and that only applies to coastwise business, not to foreign business. It simply undertakes to say that the rate shall not be unjustly discriminating between shippers or ports or unjustly prejudicial to exporters of the United States as compared with their foreign competitors. No power is given at all to fix rates and require the filing of schedules, and so forth.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDING. While the Senator from Florida is on his feet I should like to have him explain the provisions of section 20.

Mr. FLETCHER. That refers likewise to carriers of interstate commerce. It has nothing to do with carriers of foreign commerce. That simply refers to interstate commerce, and I do not see that it applies at all to the objection raised by the Senator from Massachusetts that this board is given much power with reference to our foreign carriers.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. WEEKS. I do.

Mr. WORKS. If I rightly understand this discussion, the right of regulation in the bill is confined to common carriers.

Mr. WEEKS. That is a matter that has not been settled. My own judgment would be that it is confined to common carriers.

Mr. WORKS. Then I understand the Senator from Florida to contend that it does not refer to tramp steamers, that they are entirely out of the regulations provided for in the bill.

Mr. WEEKS. That is the contention that I recently made.

Mr. WORKS. What is the contention of the Senator from Massachusetts respecting that feature of it? It seems to me, after reading the bill with as much care as a layman can give to it, that tramp steamers do not come properly under the head of common carriers, and therefore could not be within the provision of the act. The Senator is familiar with the subject and I am not. Can the Senator inform me to what extent tramp steamers participate in the coastwise trade?

Mr. WEEKS. Unless they comply with all the requirements of American registry, of course, they can not engage in the coastwise trade at all. A very large percentage of the carrying trade along our coast is done by vessels that come within the definition of tramp steamers—that is to say, the regular lines are not considerable in tonnage compared with all vessels engaged in this service. I have not before me the exact figures.

Mr. GALLINGER. The regular lines, if the Senator will permit me, are now one-seventh of the entire coastwise tonnage.

Mr. WEEKS. That is my recollection.

Mr. WORKS. Assuming that they have complied with the registry law, the question in my mind is whether they would be subject to the provisions of the bill we are now considering.

Mr. WEEKS. I have strong doubt about that. There are about 30 such lines operating along our coast that would come under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. When I said one-seventh I meant in tonnage, but there is much less than that in the number of ships.

Mr. WEEKS. When I say that this board will put the shipping interests in a strait-jacket I do not mean that the powers of the board would be equivalent to those of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but I want to point out by reading section 18 of the bill what I do mean, that the investor who is thinking of putting his money into this somewhat hazardous undertaking is likely to hesitate when he sees how the operation may result owing to the possible interference of the shipping board acting under the provisions of section 18. And, mind you, ships in this class are going to be in competition with the ships of the world and a free hand is given the ships of every other nation.

Sec. 18. That no common carrier by water in foreign commerce shall demand, charge, or collect any rate, fare, or charge which is unjustly discriminatory between shippers or ports, or unjustly prejudicial to exporters of the United States as compared with their foreign competitors.

Well, if we had an all-wise board to pass on such questions, that provision might not do any harm, but I can say to Senators that I know men hesitate about making investments under such conditions, for the foolish action of the board may bring such results as to render their investments unprofitable. I now continue to read from section 18:

Whenever the board finds that any such rate, fare, or charge is demanded, charged, or collected it may alter the same to the extent necessary to correct such unjust discrimination or prejudice—

In other words, the board may change the rate charged by ships engaged in the foreign trade—and make an order that the carrier shall discontinue demanding, charging, or collecting any such unjustly discriminatory or prejudicial rate, fare, or charge.

Every such carrier and every other person subject to this act shall establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable regulations and practices relating to or connected with the receiving, handling, storing, or delivering of property. Whenever the board finds that any such regulation or practice is unjust or unreasonable, it may determine, prescribe, and order enforced a just and reasonable regulation or practice.

If that does not put powers in the hands of the board which may embarrass, and seriously embarrass, the operations of our shipping, in competition with foreign vessels, I can not understand the English language. It may not do so, but, in my judgment, it will embarrass such operations. In this bill, under this form of legislation, what we are trying to do is to build up an American merchant marine, a result which we have not been able to accomplish up to the present time; but in this attempt to build it up we are putting restrictions around it which are more severe than are placed around the shipping of any other country in the world.

Mr. WORKS. Now, may I ask the Senator whether, in his judgment, the provisions of that particular section of this bill apply to tramp ships?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think so.

Mr. WORKS. To what extent, if the Senator knows, is the foreign business being carried on by tramp steamships?

Mr. WEEKS. It is difficult to state; but the tonnage of foreign ships employed as tramps is very much more than one-half the total. I think something like three-fifths of the tonnage engaged in the foreign trade of the world is of the tramp class, and, of course, that includes substantially all of the cargo carriers.

Mr. WORKS. Does the Senator think that the power to regulate the regular steamers, as we may call them, the common carriers, is going to be detrimental to them as compared with the tramp ships that are not controlled or regulated?

Mr. WEEKS. Oh, undoubtedly.

Mr. WORKS. Then we shall have a part, and what may be called the legitimate part, of the steamship service under control and limitations that may be hurtful to that trade as compared with the tramp-steamer business?

Mr. WEEKS. Undoubtedly. That is exactly what I have been trying to point out.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from Massachusetts may have done so when I was not here; but it struck me as being an interesting feature of the investigation.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not believe it would be possible for a commission like the one proposed in this bill—a shipping board—to make rates for tramp steamers.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WEEKS. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have asked more than once with regard to section 18, whether or not it applies to foreign ships? The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] said yesterday, I think, that it did. I should like to put to the Senator from Massachusetts this inquiry: Discriminatory rates are forbidden. Suppose that we have an exporter shipping goods to Hongkong; Great Britain has an exporter shipping goods to Hongkong; and the rate from Liverpool to Hongkong discriminates against the shipper who is compelled to ship from New York to Hongkong. Some instance of that kind is the only one of which I think now that section 18 would apply to. Does the Senator from Massachusetts think that we could prescribe the rate from Liverpool to Hongkong, either by raising it or lowering it, so that the New York exporter could enjoy a rate that was comparatively just? I confess that I do not understand how those who are advocating this bill intend to apply its provisions to foreign ships.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I do not think they intend to apply it. I think they intend to pass this bill to save their own faces, and then they expect a Republican administration, which will repeal the law before it takes effect. I do not think they care very much about the questions which we are now considering.

Mr. CUMMINS. The effect of that construction, if that be the proper construction, would be that our ships, under the necessity of competing with foreign ships, would be subject to this law; the foreign ship would be free from any regulation; and our ships, not being able to meet the competition, would have to go out of business.

Mr. WEEKS. That is it exactly, Mr. President, if we have any ships on the ocean, we can regulate them off the ocean by putting restrictions around their operations, but we can not in any way control the foreign ship, except when it is within our 3-mile limit. We have not been able to compete successfully against foreign shipping in recent years for various reasons which I am not going to now discuss. If we have not been able to compete when our ships had all the latitude that was possible, how are we going to be able to do so when they are restricted to some degree, as they must be under this bill, and foreign ships escape all such restrictions?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator from Iowa to refer to section 18?

Mr. CUMMINS. I was referring to section 18.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he doubts the power of Congress to enact legislation of this kind and to enforce it? Do I understand the Senator to question whether Congress has the power to enact this kind of legislation and to enforce it?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think, Mr. President, that the Senator from Iowa made any suggestion about Congress not having the power to enact such legislation. I did not so understand him.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no doubt about our power to enact such legislation so far as our own ships are concerned, but I am waiting to hear some discussion of the way in which we can apply the regulation of section 18 to foreign ships.

Mr. FLETCHER. In that connection—and I shall not interrupt the Senator to enlarge on that now—I will call the attention of the Senator to page 128 of the hearings before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the other House to the statement of Mr. J. Parker Kirlin, who is a lawyer in New York engaged extensively in the practice of admiralty and maritime law there, and a member of the subcommittee of the chamber of commerce. He came down here and appeared before the committee of the other House. I ask the Senator to look at Mr. Kirlin's statement upon that subject.

I may say now that I believe I am absolutely within the facts when I report what has been said to me, that section 18 is in accordance with the suggestions of Mr. Kirlin before the House committee. If it is not precisely so, it is so in substance.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me, I wish to make this suggestion: I have not read the testimony or statement of Mr. Kirlin, but somebody in the Senate ought to be able to explain the application of this section. Apparently it is intended to protect our exporters against discriminatory rates which may be given by some steamship company to the exporters of foreign countries. They would need no protection unless they were endeavoring to reach the same markets substantially. If anyone can show me how the United States can control a rate from some foreign port to a foreign market in order that our exporters may be able to reach that market upon comparatively even terms, I could see some good in the section; but I have been utterly unable to discover how it could be applied in any way, except to embarrass and to restrict our own ships.

Mr. WEEKS. That is exactly the conclusion to which I have come.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to say something about the shipping board.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator, before he leaves that point, allow me to make an inquiry for information? Regardless of what the regulations might be and what are necessary to be considered, this idea struck me in listening to the colloquy between the Senators: In the first place, the suggestion made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is, in my judgment, unanswerable; that is, we can not legislate to regulate traffic between one foreign port and another foreign port; that is certainly beyond our jurisdiction; but, notwithstanding that, would not section 18 still apply to transportation either by an American vessel or by a foreign vessel from a foreign port to an American port or from an American port to a foreign port; and if such regulation is desirable, ought we not to protect such shippers the same as we protect railroad shippers against any extortionate rate or rule or practice?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I agree we ought to do it if we can; but we are trying to protect the exporters of the United States in this section of the bill, because the section specifically limits its operations to those rates or charges or practices which are unjustly prejudicial to exporters of the United States. When we export a thing we export it to some foreign port; and, if our shippers are discriminated against, it must be because some other shippers can reach that foreign port at a rate which is comparatively low; that is, our exporters are charged more for reaching that port than are their competitors in some foreign country. In order to carry out the provisions of the section we have got to control the rates from the foreign country in which the goods may be manufactured to the foreign market in which they are sold. I quite agree with the Senator from Nebraska that our export business should be as carefully protected as our domestic business, but I have not been able to discover how this section will do it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that section 18 applies to all ships coming in or going out of United States ports, whether American vessels or foreign vessels. Of course, the section does not attempt to regulate vessels trading between Liverpool and a foreign port. We can not do that; but it only refers to ships passing in and out of our own ports.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to ask the Senator from Florida a question?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator that we can not regulate the rates, the rules, or other matters in connection with ships passing from one foreign port to another foreign port, but yet it seems to me that there is some foundation for the criticism of the Senator from Iowa in regard to section 18, because does it not attempt to do that very thing? Section 18 provides:

That no common carrier by water in foreign commerce shall demand, charge, or collect any rate, fare, or charge which is unjustly discriminatory between shippers or ports, or unjustly prejudicial to exporters of the United States as compared with their foreign competitors.

I should like the Senator from Florida, or some other Senator, to explain what that language means. It says the rates shall not be so discriminatory that they will injure our foreign commerce; or, in the language of the bill, rates shall not be "unjustly prejudicial to exporters of the United States as compared with their foreign competitors." American exporters are men who ship out of the country, and their foreign competitors are men who ship out of a foreign country to the same market to which American exporters ship. How can we regulate the rates of our foreign competitors in that case?

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, we can not regulate rates so far as our foreign competitors are concerned, but we can go so far as to say that they can not discriminate against our exporters by affording unjust advantages to the foreign competitor. That goes really to the question of conference agreements and arrangements whereby the ships are operated for the benefit of certain interests in other countries that are directly prejudicial to the interests of shippers in this country. We can not, of course, regulate the rates from a foreign country to another foreign port, but we can provide that ships shall not discriminate against our exporters by way of entering into arrangements and agreements which afford rebates, and what not, favoring the foreign competitor.

Mr. NORRIS. That is true; but the Senator from Florida does not answer the question which I propounded. I concede that we can and that we ought to regulate foreign commerce just so far as we can do so; but the Senator from Florida agrees with me that we can not regulate foreign commerce between one foreign port and another foreign port. Vessels must come into our ports before they are subject to our jurisdiction. In the case I put and in the question I asked, I took the case of an exporter from the United States. Let us take a particular port. Suppose there is an exporter at San Francisco sending his goods to Hongkong, China, and there is a firm in Liverpool exporting from Liverpool to Hongkong, China. This section says:

Or unjustly prejudicial to the exporters of the United States as compared with their foreign competitors.

There is a case where the provision will apply, it seems to me, if I understand the language. How, then, could we protect the exporter at San Francisco from any injustice of any kind, either because of a rate or a rule or a rebate or a regulation of any kind existing in favor of the exporter from Liverpool to Hongkong?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, this whole question—

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to make an announcement?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on yesterday I gave notice that I would continue the discussion of this bill to-day. I understand that an early adjournment has been arranged, and I now give notice that on Monday morning—

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator at that point why is an early adjournment necessary to-day?

Mr. GALLINGER. I can not answer the question, but I have been informed that there is to be an early adjournment.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps the Senator from Florida can tell us why it is necessary to adjourn at 2 o'clock. Is that because there is to be a Democratic caucus at that hour?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will complete my notice. In view of what I understand to be the purpose of the majority to have an early adjournment, I will conclude what I have to say on this bill on Monday morning.

Mr. WEEKS. I can tell the Senator from Nebraska the reason we are adjourning at 2 o'clock. We are adjourning to enable the majority to hold a caucus. At that caucus they are going to consider the proposed finance bill, and in the secret caucus to be held they are going to bind every Democratic Senator to vote for the bill which they are to report so that we can not change it in any way or shape when it comes before the Senate. That is the purpose of adjourning at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator from Massachusetts mean that the official body, the Senate, must adjourn in order that the unofficial body, the caucus, can get in its work?

Mr. WEEKS. That is exactly what the Senator from Massachusetts means, when that caucus completes its work every Democratic Senator's hands will be tied, and, so far as the ultimate result is concerned, the finance bill will have passed the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I can not quite admit that what the Senator from Massachusetts says is entirely accurate. It may or may not be that there will be held a caucus. I presume that is likely to follow, but whether everybody is going to be bound by what is done there and everybody's hands will be tied in the manner the Senator from Massachusetts suggests is quite another proposition. He may know more about that than I do; but I imagine it is entirely agreeable to the other side to adjourn at 2 o'clock. We have been adjourning on Saturdays somewhat before the usual hour. If the other side desires to vote on this bill in the meantime, we on this side are perfectly willing to do so, and will be very glad to do so. We will continue the discussion, anyhow, until 2 o'clock, and perhaps we can get a vote on the bill; or, if Senators on the other side will agree to fix a time when they will agree to vote on the bill, I am willing to do that. If the other side is willing to fix a time on Monday to vote on this bill, I will be glad to have that done.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Massachusetts, I will say to the Senator from Florida that we will not be prepared to vote on the bill, nor will we be prepared to make an agreement to vote on it, on Monday. There are to my knowledge four or five Senators who want to speak on Monday; but, I think, on Monday we can easily get an arrangement to vote probably on Tuesday.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am very glad to hear the Senator give that assurance.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, is the suggestion just made by the Senator from Florida upon the hypothesis that this bill is not going to be changed in any way? I have some amendments which I intend to propose to the bill, and I had hoped I could propose them to open minds. I think it would take an hour or two to place those amendments before the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not suggested that no amendment would be considered or that the bill could not be changed at all. What I mean by voting on the bill is to vote on it in the regular way.

Mr. CUMMINS. I thought the suggestion of the Senator from Florida that we might before 2 o'clock or by 2 o'clock vote on the bill must be based upon the idea that there was to be no change in the bill. I am very sure that I can point out some modifications that will appeal to every mind that is not foreclosed by some prior arrangement or decree.

Mr. WEEKS. Of course, Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa knows that the mind of every Democratic Senator is foreclosed on this subject and that the bill is going to be passed as it is now pending before the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know of any conclusion to that effect; in fact, I have one or two amendments which I intend to offer myself. They will not interfere materially with the substance of the bill, but I think they will improve it a little.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida whether the amendments which will be proposed by him have been submitted to the Democratic caucus?

Mr. FLETCHER. They have not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This bill has never been submitted, Mr. President, to any Democratic caucus. If so, I never heard of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then the newspapers gave a very false and misleading account of the proceedings of the caucus, because it has been published that certain members of the majority who were opposed to the bill a year ago had, after conference with their fellow members, found in this bill a measure which they could support.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is true. It was announced this morning by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] in his address that they would support this bill, and, so far as I know, he stated it as fully as anybody could.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Iowa that there has been no caucus on this bill by Democratic Senators; that every Senator is entitled to present any amendment he desires and to have it acted upon, and I have no doubt, if it is a good amendment, it will be adopted.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am delighted to hear that, because I have some meritorious amendments, and, if my friends upon the other side will listen to them when they are proposed and will feel perfectly free to act, I know they will be adopted.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, getting back to the inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] with reference to this bill, of course I can not presume to interrupt the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts by entering upon a full discussion of the question; but I suggest this is a matter to be thought of by the Senator from Nebraska. To state it very briefly, what is meant by section 18, as I understand, is this: Suppose, for instance, a ship sailing from Liverpool to Buenos Aires, in order to benefit an English merchant, puts down its rates so that it can undersell American merchants. In such a case the shipping board would have something to say as to the rates on ships sailing from New York to Buenos Aires in order to prevent that sort of discrimination. That can be elaborated, and will be later; but I can not interrupt, of course, the Senator from Massachusetts further than to make the suggestion.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the discussion has gone somewhat afield from the line which I was taking; but I want to say that I do not subscribe personally to the general principle of regulation of foreign shipping which this bill proposes. Some Senators have said that the principle accords with their ideas; but in my judgment, in the case of foreign shipping, we have got to follow the methods of other nations or we are not going to get satisfactory results.

Competition is as free as the ocean in the foreign carrying trade of all nations, and competition has been sufficient in the past, except under unusual conditions, to meet the demands of the shipping public, and meet those demands on a basis which did not bring large or certainly extravagant returns to the capital invested in the shipping.

For example, to show how variable the returns on capital invested in this way may be, I read from the London Fair Play under date of July 1, 1915:

The rates paid are the average rates paid to British shipping engaged in a regular service—

That is, line service—for a period from 1904 to 1914.

In 1904 the net return was 1.7 per cent; in 1905, 2.52 per cent; in 1906, 0.68 per cent; in 1907, 0.29 per cent; in 1908, 1.53 per cent.

It will be noted that in those five years the average rate obtained by British line service was not more than 1½ per cent on the money invested. Now, of course money never would go into shipping or anything else unless there were a possibility of a larger return under some conditions that might develop. Are we going to regulate our shipping so that when that possibility does develop we are going to say that the rate is unfair and should not be charged? If we are, then there is an end of our merchant marine engaged in the foreign trade. We might just as well recognize that now as later.

I continue to read the returns to British shipping:

In 1909, 3.87 per cent; in 1910, 3.78 per cent; in 1911, 0.66 per cent.

Now we come to a period when shipping became very profitable:

In 1912, 11.11 per cent; in 1913, 33.27 per cent; in 1914, 18.79 per cent.

In other words, for that 11-year period the average return was not very far from 6 per cent, and may have justified the investment of capital in that kind of service. But if our shipping board were to say, during the years 1912, 1913, and 1914, that a return on the capital of 33 or 18 or 11 per cent is unwarranted, and should be reduced, the possibility of making up for the lean years by the large profits made in the years like those which I have last instanced would cease. In other words, if we are going to restrict the shipping to a limited rate which it may charge in years when business is good, we will not have any shipping at all, because the probable average net result would not be a fair return on the capital required.

Let us go back over the course of shipping for the last 100 years in periods of unusual conditions. During the period before the peace of 1815 we had an embargo which continued seven years, during which time our manufacturing development was very considerable in the United States; but our shipping was tied up, the docks rotting. At the end of that period, or in 1815, we had an entire reversal of these conditions. Our people needed the kind of goods which were produced abroad which they had been unable to get for so many years, many of which were not produced in this country. The result was that the available shipping made enormous profits for practically a year. At the same time many goods came in which were in competition with our own manufacturing which had been developed during the embargo period and practically shut down the mills of this country; this caused the tariff of 1816.

Similar conditions have developed at other times. In 1900, for example, when the Boer War was being fought, when it was necessary to transport a million or more men from England, and all the supplies and other things that are necessary in carrying on the operations of an army of that size, there was a great dearth of shipping. The result was that the rates charged by ships engaged in that kind of trade doubled and in some cases trebled. But as soon as the war was over those rates took a tumble, going down to rates which could not have been profitable. The truth of the matter is that for the period after the Boer War, say from 1902 to 1912, there was a great quantity of idle shipping the world over, and the results were unprofitable in the case of all nations.

We are going to have to meet exactly the same result when this war is over, Mr. President. The amount of shipping available in the world has not decreased very materially. Perhaps there has been a million tons destroyed since the beginning of this war; not more than that. There has been something like 6,000,000 tons of German and Austrian shipping tied up, and Russian shipping to some degree has been tied up. At the largest estimate not more than 9,000,000 tons out of, say, 48,000,000 tons of shipping has been destroyed or tied up or diverted during this war; but that has been sufficient with the increased trade which the war has developed, especially with the United States, to boom rates beyond any figure which we have heretofore known. But we are building, and every country in the world is building, more than ever before. We have more than a million tons of shipping contracted for or on the stocks in this country to-day; and for the first time within the memory of any Senator in this body we are able to build ships in this country cheaper than they can be built abroad, largely because of the pressure on the other side for vessels to be used for war purposes. Now, if we are building more rapidly and other countries are building as rapidly as possible, if there has been only a million tons of shipping destroyed, which will be replaced and more before the war is over, if there is a slackening in trade, which everyone who has followed trade conditions believes will be the result at the end of the war, the shipping of the world which will then exist will be sufficient, and probably will be more than sufficient, for the needs, and therefore it will become unprofitable again.

So we may rest with absolute assurance on this statement—that if we build ships under these conditions they will cost us substantially twice as much as they would if they were built under normal conditions. If we buy them, we will buy them on the same basis. We will pay substantially twice the price that those ships should command under normal conditions. Therefore we are going to make a very great loss on the capital investment in this shipping if we go into it; and if we keep the ships and do not sell them, undoubtedly we will be operating them after this war is over at a loss, as they will be in competition with all the shipping of the world. So from any standpoint it is not a promising prospect to engage in this business from the purely financial point of view.

I want to add a word about the shipping board. I am in favor of a shipping board, limited to certain definite purposes. I think it is one of the boards which we have really needed. We are doing very many things through other agencies which the shipping board might do better.

The head of the British Board of Trade is a cabinet officer, and it has to do with all of the great industrial affairs of the Empire. One of its branches represents the merchant marine of Great Britain; it is noticeable that this bureau has no power over the merchant marine which is of a restrictive character, especially in the case of rates, but devotes its activities to those policies which will develop the efficiency and the profits obtained by the merchant marine. We should have a board of that general character. We have now a Bureau of Navigation, we have a Steamboat-Inspection Service, we have certain functions connected with the Treasury Department that would come within the province of this board, as well as the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the State Department, the Immigration Service, or some features of it, and some of the work connected with the Department of Justice. All of those activities might properly, at least to some degree, be put under the control of a board of this character.

Furthermore, if the board will study the questions involved in shipping, and will submit to Congress its recommendations as to what should be done about our navigation laws, if it will devote the expert knowledge which its members should have to a study of the real fundamental reasons, if they exist, on which a law of this kind, or any other kind, should be based, then such a board will have ample opportunity to perform good service, avoiding the kind of duty which some of the features of this bill provide, which I think will be inimical to the best interests of our merchant service.

As to the shipping board, the bill develops unusual condition. We put $50,000,000 into the hands of this board of five men, unknown to any Senator now, I assume, with powers to buy, sell, lease, charter, and many other things. It is really a trading brokerage and managerial board, all in one, under the provisions of this bill.

It has, to be sure, with the formal approval of the President, the right to buy ships, the right to sell ships, the right to lease ships, the right to charter ships. It has greater powers than any board connected with our Government or any board connected with any government in the world that I know anything about. More than that, Mr. President: It may not only spend $50,000,000, which the Government will furnish—because I can not imagine any private individual who will be eccentric enough or unwise enough to put any money into this operation as a minority stockholder—it will not only furnish that $50,000,000, but, under this bill—and I hope the Senator from Florida will listen to this—as I read it, the board is not limited in the obligations which it may incur. In other words, it could buy $100,000,000 in value of ships, or $200,000,000, and give the obligation of the board for their purchase. I do not see anything in the bill which would prevent incurring an indebtedness of that kind.

If that is the case, Mr. President, there being no minority stockholders, the Government might not only be involved for this $50,000,000, but for a tremendous amount in addition thereto. I am going to discuss later with some comprehensiveness the question of the coastwise trade and the undesirability, I believe, of allowing these ships to go into the coastwise trade; but I want to make this comment at this point: If my general conclusion about the powers conferred by this bill is correct, not only may this board spend $50,000,000, every dollar of which may go into ships which may be used in the coastwise trade, but it might buy $50,000,000 worth of ships, sell them to people who might use them in the coastwise trade, go abroad and buy ships to the extent of $50,000,000 more, and continue that process until the American shipyard would be a thing of the past. We could not build ships in this country under that condition. Under the best conditions it will militate so greatly against American shipyards, and the tens of thousands of men employed in them, that we will hear from both without any question as soon as this bill is put into effect. But unless there is a limitation on the power of selling, the $50,000,000 which may be invested in ships, enabling the board to sell as it pleases, to buy more and sell at once might mean that we would have one or even two hundred million dollars invested in ships of foreign construction engaged in our coastwise trade.

I do not say that the board will take that action. I do not know whether they will do it or not; but under the terms of this law it seems to me that it may do so, and such a possibility is one which I do not think the Senate ought to consider favorably for a moment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I take it the Senator has observed the provisions of section 14:

That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of sections 5 and 11, no liability shall be incurred exceeding a total of $50,000,000.

That is the provision with reference to the total liability which the board shall incur.

Mr. WEEKS. I take that, Mr. President, to mean liability as far as stock is concerned.

Mr. FLETCHER. Oh, no.

Mr. WEEKS. I will read that again, with pleasure; but that was my conclusion after reading it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think not. It specifies that "for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of sections 5 and 11," the Senator will observe, the liability is limited to $50,000,000; and section 5 is the section which authorizes the construction and purchase of ships.

Mr. WEEKS. In any case that would not prevent the board taking the action which I have just described. It is proposed, Mr. President, to form a corporation under the laws of the District of Columbia to operate these vessels. The board must hold at least 51 per cent of the stock. The directors are to be dummies. So are the officials of the company to be dummies. The board is going to manage the affairs of this corporation. On the dissolution of the corporation, which must come in five years, the ships are going to revert to the board, and the board is the Government. So that we have in a way the Government, the board, and the corporation, which are really the same thing. You might just as well appoint a general manager for the corporation, directly representing the Government, as to go through these steps of forming a corporation which is to have no effect whatever, unless it has some unwary citizen to put his money into the stock and the officers of which are to be dominated by the members of the board.

What an outcry there would be, Mr. President, if we were going to turn over to the Interstate Commerce Commission a billion dollars, authorizing that commission to use the money to buy railroads, to sell railroads, to lease railroads, or to do all of the other things that may be connected with the operation of railroads.

It would be just as logical and a great deal more sensible, in my judgment, to do that, because the railroads are within our territory; they are under our control, while the shipping provided under this bill is going to be away from our control very much of the time.

No one would think for a moment of appropriating a billion dollars and putting it into the hands of an unknown board to buy and sell railroads. If that is the case, why should we undertake this very unusual procedure of spending $50,000,000, at least, putting it into the hands of five men about whom we know nothing, and telling them to go on and operate as they please without our imposing any restriction on their activities? I want to call attention to the fact, too, that money does not have to be appropriated from year to year for the purposes of this board; but when the money is once appropriated and invested in ships, Congress absolutely loses control over it. When a ship is sold, the money goes into the Treasury to the credit of the board, and the board may spend it for the purposes provided under the law at any time it sees fit. In other words, this is a general trading proposition, without the possibility of any restriction whatever on the part of Congress after the first step has been taken.

Under the provisions of this law the American citizen may buy a ship abroad, but when he wants to sell that ship he can not sell it abroad without the permission of the board. The board may be broad minded; it may be all wise in handling such questions, and its judgment about the price at which the ship should be sold may be quite to the interest of the owner. But, on the other hand, the board may be narrow-minded; it may be prejudiced, and having permitted our citizen to buy the ship abroad and put it into operation where it may have been in competition with the operations of the board, which operations have made it unprofitable, it may say: "You can not sell that ship abroad, where you purchased it, without our permission."

All of these steps, while they may seem minor in themselves, are going to have an influence on the investment of capital in operations of this kind. Capital is timid at best; but it certainly is not going into an operation like shipping unless there is an assurance that there is going to be a suitable return on the investment. And I think we are providing every assurance which may produce a doubt in the minds of capital and probably prevent doing just exactly what the framers of this bill hope will be done.

Let us suppose that the board has purchased ships to the value of $50,000,000 and put them into operation. It is a part of the general proposition that this is going to benefit somebody. Benefit whom? Benefit the shippers? How is it going to benefit the shippers? If it is going to benefit them, it must be by reducing rates—reducing rates in competition with our own citizens who are operating ships which year in and year out do not give them more than an adequate return.

It should be understood by everyone who favors this legislation that the competition which is proposed here is going to be very largely against our own citizens, and a kind of competition against which they will have no redress. In other words, I think it will drive private capital away from the shipping business instead of encouraging private capital to go into the shipping business.

There is one thing in the bill which I want to commend, because I think it has a distinct advantage over the original proposition. This bill in its present form, as I understand, provides that the five members of the board shall in no case be connected with the administration. That was a distinct error in the bill which was considered a year ago last winter. In the first place, the administration officers, if they are attending to their duties, have sufficient work laid out for them to employ all their time to the advantage of the Government; and in cases where members of the Cabinet or others connected with the administration are members of a board at the same time it is the history of such operations that they do not give any detailed attention to the work of the board. This has to be done by some one else. Then, necessarily, the members of the administration are parts of a political organization, and it is impossible when a Secretary of the Treasury or a Secretary of Commerce or any other member of a Cabinet is a member of a board that that fact shall not have some influence on the activities of the board. Such boards like the shipping board, if they are going to be of any value at all, must be entirely removed from the immediate political influence which happens to be in control of the Government.

My judgment is that one of the weakest phases of the Federal-reserve law is the provision inserted in the bill by the insistence of the administration that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency should be members of the Federal Reserve Board. It has been the history of that board that they have been a disturbing element in it; that they have not given any detailed attention to the work of the board; and, very largely, it has been the orders issued by the comptroller that have prevented State banks from coming into the Federal Reserve System. I have no doubt this well-known condition was given consideration by the committee in framing this bill, and it came to a wise conclusion. I distinctly approve of having this board entirely removed from any administration influence.

The board has power to have constructed ships in American shipyards, navy yards, and elsewhere, giving preference to American shipyards, other things being equal. What other things being equal? The cost of construction, evidently. There never has been an instance in the history of our Government until within a year's time when we could construct ships in this country as cheaply as they could be constructed in foreign yards, and that will be the condition again as soon as this war is over. Paying the wages which we do in this country and paying the prices for materials which we do, we can not permanently compete with foreign shipyards in the construction of ships. The result will be that we will not construct any ships in our shipyards after this war is over. Neither will we construct ships in our shipyards before the war is over, because they have all the orders they can handle for the next two years. So we may be sure that this $50,000,000, instead of being spent in American shipyards, is going to be spent in foreign shipyards, or we are going to buy foreign ships which were built in foreign shipyards. In other words, the American shipbuilder is going to get no benefit whatever, it seems to me, from the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WEEKS. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is it not a fact that we can manufacture steel at a lower price than in any other country in the world?

Mr. WEEKS. Some types of steel products undoubtedly we can.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Can we not manufacture the steel at a low price that enters into ships? Most ships are now steel ships. Will not that give us an advantage in constructing ships in the future?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think the Senator is correct in saying that we can manufacture or produce the average quality of steel that goes into ships cheaper than it can be done abroad in normal times.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have so understood. I may be mistaken, however.

Mr. WEEKS. By doing work on a large scale we have developed some lines of business in steel products, like bridge building, in which we have been competing successfully with Europe.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Are we not and have we not for a number of years been exporting large quantities of steel that goes in the construction of ships and bridges and other things?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not want to admit anything on that line without looking up the conditions under which the exports were made, and what the condition of the market was abroad, and other similar matters which may have a bearing on whether we could do so or not. Of course, we are shipping more and more products, due to the fact that we manufacture on a larger scale than we used to do; due also to the fact that we have perfected machinery to a degree which has enabled us to compete with foreign countries. For example, we have developed all the machinery used in making shoes in the United States, and much of this class of machinery is now used in making shoes in Europe. In other words, our shoemaking machinery has excelled any that has been developed elsewhere in the world; so that we do compete with other countries in shoemaking. That is the only reason why we have been able to export shoes which we do, to the extent of seven or eight million dollars a year. It is because our machinery has been so much better than the machinery which was produced abroad that we could make the shoes and ship them abroad in competition with their own products. But now our shoe machinery is going into those countries, replacing foreign machinery; and whatever other conditions may be, we are almost sure to lose the exportation of shoes which we have enjoyed for the last 10 or 15 years.

Under the provisions of the bill which we considered a year ago last winter, a vigorous effort was made by opposition Senators to prevent the purchase of ships belonging to belligerents. Those who were in control of the bill—the majority of the Senate—at that time refused to consider an amendment which would prevent the purchase of a belligerent ship. I believed then, and I believe now, that the original purpose of that legislation was to buy the interned ships in this country, the German ships very largely, and that the legislation would never have been considered if it had not been for that purpose. That is my personal belief. It did seem to me extremely unwise that we should buy belligerent ships under the conditions which then prevailed, and I greatly regretted that those in charge of the bill at that time were not willing to consider an amendment which would prevent the possibility of our buying a quarrel. Now they have exactly reversed their position at that time, and we find that the principle of not buying belligerent ships is considered sufficiently sound, so that they refuse to permit the selling of our ships when we are engaged in a war. I commend that change at least.

The shipping board, which I have discussed somewhat, has a dual function, and it is to that particular point I want to bring the attention of those who are listening to me.

First, it regulates the American merchant marine and its operations.

Secondly, it manages a part of it which may be directly in competition with the privately owned portion.

In other words, the duties of the board must necessarily be conflicting in this respect. Suppose we spent a half billion dollars for the purchase of a great railroad system in this country and we put it under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission and that this railroad were in direct competition with three or four other lines running between Chicago and the Pacific coast, the other lines being privately owned and privately managed would be under the control, as far as rate making is concerned and in other ways, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the road that we bought were operated by the Interstate Commerce Commission. There would be great pressure on a Government road as there will be on Government ships for low rates, and no board can withstand, in my judgment, the political pressure which will be brought.

An illustration of this condition is indicated in the European countries where the Governments own the railroads. The passenger rates are relatively low, while freight rates in those countries are relatively high. The number of shippers is not great, of course, compared with the number of passengers who travel. The pressure of the great traveling public is so great that rates are constantly reduced for that service, while the freight rates are maintained in many cases to twice the level that obtains in this country.

That would be the case if we owned one railroad and put it in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission to operate in competition with privately operated roads. They would feel a pressure which would compel the reduction of rates on the Government line and which would probably affect the rates made for privately owned lines, so that all such investments would be unprofitable.

The same result will obtain in the case of shipping, if we buy ships and operate them under the control of a board, the board at the same time controlling the operations of privately owned ships directly in competition with them. We are going to have the result of a dual operation, a conflicting operation, and one in which the Government's investments are going to bring a less and less return as the pressure for lower rates continues.

I said some little time ago the board is given the power to buy and sell and charter and lease or do any other act which it sees fit along those lines. The limitation is put in the bill that the act of selling shall have the approval of the President. Of course that would be an absolutely formal action on his part. So in effect we are turning over to this board this $50,000,000 with the power to trade as it pleases.

Fifty million dollars under present conditions would probably build about 500,000 tons of the kind of ships which should be built for the purposes which this bill contemplates. In normal times $50,000,000 would build about 1,000,000 tons, or about twice as much tonnage as now. So we may assume that we will lose 50 per cent of our investment as soon as conditions become normal after the war. But even if we build 500,000 tons of ships, that is only a small element in the total shipping of the United States. We have some eight and a half million tons flying our flag at this time, so that the 500,000 tons would be about one-seventeenth of our total shipping. There are about 48,000,000 tons of shipping in the world. Therefore the 500,000 tons would be about one ninety-sixth of the total shipping of the world, not a large element in either case, either in connection with our own shipping or the shipping of the world.

The fact is that, undoubtedly, when the war is over there will be ample shipping for all needs without this unusual construction, even if we could get the ships constructed. So this measure will simply add that additional amount of tonnage to reduce the possibility of the shipping which is already constructed earning decent returns on the money invested.

When the bill was under consideration in the Sixty-third Congress an amendment was offered providing that ships purchased under the provisions of the bill should be used in the coastwise service and a further amendment that such service should be opened to foreign ships of all kinds.

Monday, August 14, 1916.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, when I yielded the floor on Saturday last on account of the early adjournment of the Senate I had reached that point in the discussion to which section 9 refers—that is, the question of the admission of Government owned and operated ships into the coastwise trade—and it is that subject I now wish to discuss at some length.

The question will be asked in connection with the amendment to section 9, Why should not the Government have the right to employ its own ships in any trade it pleases?

The question is a plausible one, but it ignores some important considerations. One is fair play on the part of the Federal Government toward American citizens. Another is the maintenance of the national defense.

There is no lack, and in normal times there is no pretense of any lack, of sufficient tonnage in the great domestic trade of the United States. Unlike the over-seas trade, this coastwise trade has always been a protected industry—absolutely protected for 100 years, because Federal law has forbidden foreign shipowners, with their low-wage crews and, perhaps, with subsidies and bounties, to engage in it. This home trade has been left to American private capital and enterprise, with the result that, unlike the over-seas trade, where for many years there has been no protection except to a few ocean mail lines, American ships employed in coastwise carrying have steadily increased in tonnage until this American domestic fleet of 6,852,536 tons in 1914 exceeded by 1,500,000 tons the entire coastwise and over-seas fleet of the German Empire, and, next to the vast fleet of Great Britain, was the largest merchant shipping in the world.

American coastwise shipping has grown and prospered in the same way in which agriculture and manufactures have grown and prospered, and there is no more need of Government participation in this than in the other great national industries. There is no more need of it and there is no more justice in it in the one case than in the other. Government ownership and operation of merchant ships in the over-seas or foreign trade is defended on the plea that private capital and enterprise have failed to provide tonnage sufficient for more than one-tenth of the value of our export and import commerce—the fact being wholly ignored that shipowning in this over-seas trade is the one American industry that has had no share in the general system of national protection—if the few mail lines already mentioned are excepted.

But any such defense for Government ownership and operation of merchant vessels in the coastwise trade is wholly impossible. This means Government ownership and operation for the sake of Government ownership and operation, and it puts the Federal Treasury into direct competition with an industry that has grown with the growth of the country and successfully met all the needs of the American people.

It is as if Congress were to propose to set the Government up into competition with the cotton planters of the Southern States or the corn or wheat producers of the Middle West—establishing a certain number of Government cotton plantations or corn or wheat growing farms in every county, and operating them by Federal money, without regard to profit, in rivalry with the planters and farmers who have to pay interest on the money used, and earn a livelihood for their families and themselves.

If such a proposition were seriously made in Congress, it would be fought to the last extremity by all Senators and Representatives from the cotton and grain growing States as an intolerable abuse of the power and wealth of the Federal Government. But why should the same proposition, involving the same element of injustice, be made toward the shipowners and shipbuilders of the ocean and the Lakes? All that is wrong and indefensible in it in the one case is equally wrong and indefensible in the other, and fair-minded men of all sections of the country ought to stand together against any invasion by the Government of any normal business in which any part of the American people is engaged.

There is no more reason why the Government should purchase and operate coastwise merchant vessels than why it should purchase and operate plantations or farms or factories. In any case it would be a usurpation of the natural rights of private capital, enterprise, and labor. The question, Why should not the Government use its ships in any trade it pleases? is no more convincing than the question why the Government, having once acquired plantations, farms, and factories, should not use them in any way it pleases. It is not the function of the Government to compete with and destroy the established business of any of its citizens, whether that business be on the land or on the sea. Even if the Government were forced by temporary conditions to acquire for its own auxiliary defense a fleet of merchant steamers, those ships could be most properly and advantageously employed not in the home trade of the United States, where there are enough American ships, but in the foreign or over-seas trade, where the great present lack of ships exists, and where, in chief part, the competition would be with alien flags and alien corporations and not with the American flag and American shipowners.

It has been falsely urged that the coastwise shipping industry is a "monopoly," and that thereby a Government attack upon it is justified. This is a "monopoly" of all American citizens, made such by Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and their contemporaries, who deliberately sought to reserve this domestic commerce to American-built ships, American owned. But it is a monopoly that is open to all of us. A report of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives, presented in 1914 by Chairman ALEXANDER as the result of a study of shipping combinations and conferences in the foreign and coastwise trade, has been hastily read and misunderstood by some Senators, and its real significance has been misinterpreted. The pretext for every accusation that American coastwise shipping is dominated by trusts and combinations is always found in a statement in volume 4, page 406, of the report, to the effect that the 30 lines of steamers on the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts and the Great Lakes that are controlled by railroads or shipping combinations, "operate 330 steamers of 868,741 gross tons, or nearly 70 per cent of the total number of steamers and 74 per cent of the tonnage."

This statement has been repeatedly referred to in Congress as equivalent to 70 per cent of the vessels and 74 per cent of the tonnage of the entire American merchant marine in coastwise trade. As a matter of fact, as the context of Chairman ALEXANDER's report shows, and as he himself has repeatedly stated, this report related only to "the regular line services," which make up altogether only a fraction of the total coastwise tonnage of the United States.

That total coastwise shipping on March 31, 1916, consisted of 23,593 vessels, of 6,363,149 tons, of which 14,796 vessels, of 4,487,556 tons, were steamers. Thus the 330 steamers of 868,741 tons described in the Alexander report as controlled by railroads or shipping consolidations constituted only about 12 per cent, and not 74 per cent, of the total coastwise tonnage of the United States, or only 18 per cent of the total steam tonnage. Making allowance for the tow barges owned by coal-carrying railroads on the Atlantic coast, it is certain that fully six-sevenths of the entire coastwise tonnage is controlled by private shipowners, by individuals, firms, or corporations competing independently with each other. This is the industry which this bill proposes to attack by means of Government owned and operated ships, including such foreign-built ships as the Government may acquire, though foreign-built ships can not now be lawfully operated in the home trade by American citizens.

Such a proposition has never been made toward any other American business, in which there are thousands of independent proprietors actively competing with each other all the time. The great bulk of American coastwise shipping is composed not of regular-line services carrying passengers and fast freight but of general-cargo or "tramp" vessels, steam or sail, of widely distributed ownership, designed particularly for the carrying of lumber, grain, coal, and all kinds of heavy merchandise. These vessels, as a rule, are not controlled by great corporations. Their competition is intense, their profits are moderate, and their resources will not admit of withstanding the wealth and power of the Federal Government. The "regular-line" services would suffer least from Government competition. The sharpest injury would fall upon the smaller concerns, the independent firms, the individual shipowners. Government competition in the general coastwise business would inevitably mean that in a few years most of the small shipowners would have disappeared, leaving the business a monopoly of large, rich combinations, which would, of course, have the best chance of standing out against the Treasury in Washington.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WEEKS. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. If I may interrupt the Senator at this point, the Senator claims that the Government, as he expresses it, will be able to operate ships, including all that it may acquire of foreign-built vessels. I think the Senator is falling into the same error as did the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] if his view is that under section 5, which provides for the construction, purchase, charter, or lease of vessels, the vessels so chartered or leased may be employed as provided in section 7. If the Senator will examine carefully the two sections, he will find that the only vessels which can be chartered, leased, or sold by the board are the vessels that are purchased or constructed under section 5 or transferred under section 6. Those vessels that may be leased or chartered under section 5 the board is not given power to charter, lease, or sell, as a reading of section 7 will show.

The language of section 5 is:

That the board, with the approval of the President, is authorized to have constructed and equipped in American shipyards and navy yards or elsewhere, giving preference, other things being equal, to domestic yards, or to purchase, lease, or charter vessels suitable, as far as the commercial requirements * * * may permit.

But in section 7 the language is:

That the board, upon terms and conditions prescribed by it and approved by the President, may charter, lease, or sell to any person, a citizen of the United States, any vessel—

Not chartered or leased at all, but—so purchased, constructed, or transferred.

So that the limitation is—as to the power of the Government to charter, lease, or sell these vessels—to those which are purchased or constructed under section 5, and not to those that may be chartered or leased under section 5. They are limited to those which are purchased or built, preferably, in American shipyards.

So I think the Senator is in error when he assumes that all vessels which may be acquired by the board may be chartered, leased, or sold to other people by the board and operated in the coastwise trade. The authority to charter or lease under section 7 is confined to those vessels which are purchased or built under section 5.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I do not think I misunderstand the sections to which the Senator has referred. The provision that vessels may be built by the Government "at Government navy yards or at private shipbuilding establishments in the United States or elsewhere, other conditions being equal," means that as soon as the war is over other conditions will not be equal; that the foreign shipbuilder will be able to compete successfully with our shipbuilders; and therefore, if they are to be built under those terms, other things not being equal, they will be built abroad. That is one of the definite objections to this legislation.

But the Government is either going to build ships or it is going to buy them. If it builds them within the next two years, it must build them abroad, because our shipyards are fully employed for that time.

Something like 1,100,000 tons of shipping are being constructed in the private shipyards of this country at this time. If the Government buys them, it must buy them abroad, under the provisions of this bill, unless possibly some regular liner is to be taken off the service which it is now performing. Therefore I assume that the ships which the Government purchases or builds are going to be built by foreign labor and by foreign capital, and that under the provisions of this bill those ships may be leased or chartered or sold to others who may use them in the coastwise service.

I do not know how much of this is going to be done. If it is not going to be done to a considerable extent, it should be stricken out of the bill entirely. It is a radical step for us to take, and unless it has some definite purpose other than that indicated by the Senator from Florida, it ought not to be considered at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. It seems to me the Senator from Massachusetts is possibly admitting too much of the claim made by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. WEEKS. I did not intend to admit anything.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not read the bill in the way he does. It is my opinion that any ship which is either bought from the board, chartered from the board, or leased from the board is admitted to the coastwise traffic.

Mr. WEEKS. Undoubtedly. That is my understanding.

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, ordinarily one would think that the board would only have the authority to sell or charter or lease ships that it owned. That is not true. The board, in section 5, is authorized to acquire the possession of a ship either by purchase, construction, lease, or charter. Of course, in the two latter instances it would own only a qualified title; but if the board leases a ship from some owner, so far as this bill is concerned, it can re-lease the ship to an operator, and the ship would be entitled to admission to the coastwise traffic. There can be no doubt about that construction of this act.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I had assumed that the board would not lease or charter vessels, generally speaking, because these vessels are to be a part of our naval auxiliaries; and it did not seem to me that in any case the board would lease a boat having a foreign ownership for that purpose, and probably it would not lease vessels having a domestic ownership.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, these words must be in the proposed statute for some purpose. If the board is given the power to lease or charter from an owner a ship, it must be that those who stand for the bill expect that in some instances the board will do that thing. Now, if the board does that thing, then it can lease or charter the ship to another corporation or person, a citizen of the United States, and the ship will be admitted to the coastwise business. That is inevitable under the language of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think the Senator makes the same error as did the other Senator in discussing that, because in section 7 it will be found that the board is given the power to "charter, lease, or sell to any person a citizen of the United States any vessel so purchased, constructed, or transferred," not "any vessel so chartered, leased, constructed, or transferred" but only those that are purchased, constructed, or transferred to it under section 6.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me to reply to that—

Mr. WEEKS. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. When the board takes a lease of a ship from an owner the vessel is transferred to the board, and the words

"or transferred" must necessarily apply to that transaction, because you have already used the words "purchased" and "constructed"; and if the words "or transferred" do not cover the case of a transfer by lease or charter, they have no application whatever.

Mr. FLETCHER. They have the application that follows necessarily from the preceding section, section 6:

That the President may transfer either permanently or for limited periods to the board such vessels belonging to the War or Navy Department.

That is what is meant by the use of the word "transferred" in section 7.

Mr. CUMMINS. That may be the intent of the committee, but that would not be the construction of the act, in my opinion.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I think there is proper ground for criticism in the suggestion which the Senator from Iowa has made; but it is not likely that the Government will lease or charter vessels and then lease them or charter them to some one else. If it did not use them for its own purposes, it would naturally give up the charter or lease. I think, in the final result, it will be found that it is only the ships which are bought or built which will be put into the coastwise trade. However, any possibility of getting any of these ships into the coastwise trade is bad.

Government competition with the 24,000 vessels in the coastwise trade of the United States would be sufficiently unjust even if it were conducted on equal conditions, or conditions as equal as they could be made when the collective national wealth and influence are invoked against the resources of individual citizens, firms, or corporations. But in the proposed bill the Government is definitely exempted from an important requirement of the national maritime law, which all American shipowners must obey unless, indeed, according to this bill, they are to be privileged to purchase or lease their vessels from the Government. From the beginnings of our national life, first in 1789 by heavily discriminating tonnage taxes, and afterwards, in 1817, by absolute prohibition, the American coastwise trade has been constantly reserved to American-built ships owned by American citizens. This proposed bill for the first time breaks down the policy of Washington and his colleagues and successors in these words in section 9:

Provided, That foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry or enrollment and license under this act; and vessels owned, chartered, or leased by any corporation in which the United States is a stockholder, and vessels sold, leased, or chartered to any person a citizen of the United States, as provided in this act, may engage in the coastwise trade of the United States.

Already, by a provision in the emergency shipping act of August 18, 1914, foreign-built ships may be admitted free to American registry for the over-seas trade of the United States. This proposed bill, admitting foreign-built vessels free to American enrollment and license for the coastwise trade if owned by the Government or leased, chartered, or sold by the Government, breaks down the century-old policy of protection to American shipyards and establishes, in effect, a policy of absolute free trade. For it must be manifest that the fact that the Government is allowed to use foreign-built ships in the coastwise trade, and the further fact that it is authorized to lease or charter or sell foreign-built ships to private shipowners for employment in the same trade, will create at once a condition so unequal that shipowners now employing American-built ships will be constrained to apply to the Government to secure foreign-built vessels for them also; so that eventually American shipyards will face the prospect of being reduced to the production of tugs, barges, lighters, and small local craft, which can not be safely brought across the ocean.

The tariff duties, even under a policy of tariff for revenue only, like the present one, give some measure of protection to almost all forms of American manufacturing and to many branches of American agriculture. Tools, cutlery, clothing, rice, sugar, Angora-goat hair can not be brought into this country on a free-trade basis; but the proposed bill would provide, in effect, for absolute free trade in completed ships, which are the greatest, most costly, and most elaborate manufactured product in existence, the product which employs more labor and a larger number of different occupations than any other.

Absolute free trade in ships is not only bitterly unjust to the thousands of American workmen and the millions of dollars of American capital engaged in shipbuilding, but is a direct menace to the national defense. The prime purpose of Washington and the other fathers of the Government in reserving the whole coastwise commerce of the new Nation to American ships built in American shipyards was to insure forever the existence in this country of a sufficient number of yards and a sufficient body of skilled mechanics to create and maintain an adequate Navy in case of a foreign war. A few Government shipyards were at the same time established, but the fathers of the Nation recognized a fact that is just as true to-day, that exactly as it has been the national policy to reinforce the Regular Army in every war by a great body of volunteers, so in the same crisis the Government shipbuilding resources must be strengthened by the very much greater facilities of commercial shipbuilding.

As Thomas Jefferson, then Secretary of State in the Cabinet of President Washington, put the case, in 1794:

To force shipbuilding is to establish shipyards; is to form magazines; to multiply useful hands; to produce artists and workmen of every kind who may be found at once for the peaceful speculations of commerce and for the terrible wants of war. * * * For a navigating people to purchase its marine float would be a strange speculation, as the marine would always be dependent on the merchants furnishing them. Placing, as a reserve, with a foreign nation or in a foreign shipyard, the carpenters, blacksmiths, calkers, sailmakers, and the vessels of a nation, would be a singular commercial combination. We must, therefore, build them for ourselves.

What Jefferson then said of carpenters, calkers, sailmakers, and so forth, in those days of wood and canvas, is equally true to-day of riveters and machinists in these days of steel and steam. There is no change in this fundamental principle of statesmanship. American shipyards by the score, American shipyard workmen by the thousands and the tens of thousands, are as indispensable to the national defense to-day as they were in the Revolution and the second war with England.

This proposed bill, under the specious plea of allowing the Government to use its ships in any trade it may see fit, would undermine and destroy the American shipbuilding industry, and annihilate an essential element of national defense. While this present war lasts it may be true that the enhanced cost of materials abroad, the scarcity of workmen, and the absorption of commercial yards in the imperative duty of naval construction and repair work will keep foreign shipbuilding costs as high as our own. But all this will suddenly change when the war has ended. Material, such as steel plates and shapes, may cost as much in Europe and Japan after the war as they cost in the United States, for they cost as much before the war began. But in the wages of labor there will be again a substantial difference. All foreign yards with naval work reduced or suspended will be hungry for employment, and there is not the shadow of a doubt that even with all the increased experience which American yards have gained during the war our yards will be underbid by their foreign competitors.

An American ocean ship before the war cost on the average 40 to 50 per cent more than a similar foreign ship, because of the higher wages—from 60 to 100 per cent higher in this country—and the advantage which some foreign yards enjoyed from direct bounties and other forms of national aid, and all foreign yards enjoyed from their relatively greater and more constant volume of production. Even assuming that on the conclusion of peace this former difference in cost will be reduced, it is certain to remain at approximately 25 or 30 per cent; and 25 per cent of the price of an average ocean ship of a capacity of 8,000 tons is $100,000. It is so clear as to be undeniable that if the Government of the United States, as authorized by the proposed bill, can go to Great Britain or Germany or Japan and purchase there ten 8,000-ton ships for $4,000,000 and place them in the American coastwise trade in competition with American shipowners who have paid $5,000,000 for 10 American-built ships of similar capacity the Government will inevitably drive these American-built ships off the ocean. The interest charge on the $1,000,000 additional cost of the American-built fleet will be at least $50,000 a year; the insurance charge $30,000 more; the depreciation charge $40,000; or a total handicap of $120,000 a year on the private shipowners and American construction.

Under such conditions the private shipowners in order to exist can do only one thing, and that is to go also to Great Britain or Germany or Japan for another fleet that would place them on equal terms with the Government.

After a very few years of such a policy of free trade run mad there would not be a commercial shipyard left in the United States that could produce a large cruiser, to say nothing of a battleship. And it must be remembered that the commercial shipyards of this country, far larger and more completely equipped than the few Government yards, and managed on business principles, have constructed all but 4 of the 37 battleships now possessed by the United States.

This proposed bill, in section 9, confers upon foreign nations, our rivals in trade and possible enemies in war, an almost immeasurable commercial and naval advantage, which would be the certain result of the adoption of a complete policy of free trade in shipbuilding. Some foreign Governments already give substantial sums of public money at the rate of so much per ton to encourage their native shipyards and to keep them ready in case of an emergency. Japan, for example, has such a policy, which, coupled with her low rate of wages, would enable her to construct American coastwise ships far below the cost at which they could possibly be produced by American workmen. This proposed bill means, in section 9, that American shipyards and the skilled and well-paid labor on the Pacific coast are to be brought into direct and merciless free-trade competition with the 50-cent per day bountied and subsidized shipyards of the Japanese Empire.

The bill, in section 5, authorizes the shipping board "to have constructed and equipped in American shipyards and navy yards or elsewhere, giving preference, other things being equal, to domestic yards," and so forth. What this obviously means is that if an American shipyard will build a given ship for $400,000 and a Japanese or other foreign yard for $400,000—that is, "other things being equal"—the American shipyard shall receive the contract from the Government. But if the American shipyard, because of its higher wage scale, must charge $500,000 for a ship which can be built in Japan or elsewhere for $400,000, it is manifest that other things are not equal, and that under any possible reading of the bill the shipping board will be constrained by the law to place the contract in Japan or Europe.

A bill of such momentous consequences to the commercial shipbuilding of this country, to the American merchant marine, and to the national defense, ought not to be forced to passage on the eve of a national election. It ought to be referred to the people of this country in the present campaign—let them decide for themselves whether (to recall Jefferson's graphic phrase) they wish to "place as a reserve with a foreign nation or in a foreign shipyard" the power to construct the ships for American commerce—which eventually means the power to construct our ships of war.

Furthermore, Mr. President, even if we construct the ships which are provided for under this bill, it will be but a drop in the bucket compared with the total shipping of the world or our total shipping. The total shipping of the world aggregate 48,000,000 tons, and there can only be constructed under this provision about 500,000 tons. So it would not have any material effect in reducing the present cost of the ocean carrying trade, but it would add that amount of additional tonnage to the shipping of the world, to help make all shipping unprofitable at the end of the war, which is likely to occur in any case.

An American merchant marine sufficiently large to relieve 60 per cent of our carrying trade from dependence on foreign ships would about put us in the position now held by England. To add to our capacity to that extent would require about twelve times as much shipping as we propose to construct or can construct under the provisions of this bill.

At the beginning of the present war 4,000,000 tons of British shipping were engaged in shipping between foreign ports having no connection with those of Great Britain. The shipping of Great Britain at this time is enormously profitable, and a special tax is imposed of one-half of the profits in excess of the normal returns received, which means that not only British importers but all others who pay the freight on goods carried in British vessels contribute to England's war budget. In other words, of every dollar we pay British ships for freight or other transportation facilities 50 cents goes to the British Government to assist in carrying on the war.

That is another consideration which we may well give to legislation in favor of the real development of our merchant marine. If we had a merchant marine sufficiently great to carry the proportionate part of our commerce that the British marine carries of that of Great Britain, we could impose a tax which would be a material influence in affecting our revenues under such circumstances.

Furthermore, as I discussed the other day, if tramp steamers are not common carriers, this will not affect at least three-quarters of our shipping. Seventy per cent of the British steam shipping consists of tramp vessels. In 1915, 1,871,000 tons of American shipping carried 14.3 per cent of our total foreign commerce. If we wish to carry 60 per cent of our foreign commerce, which would be the amount of the proportionate part carried by Great Britain, then we would have to build, as I have suggested, something like 6,000,000 tons of shipping.

This legislation should be limited to the establishment of a permanent shipping board, which should investigate all matters relating to shipping and to the construction of naval and Army auxiliaries and then report to Congress its conclusions. The board should constitute a permanent advisory body, and should take over the functions now performed by the Bureau of Navigation and any other kindred work being done by other bureaus. Every question relating to this subject should come under the scope of the investigations made by the board, such as measures necessary to maintain our shipping upon an equitable competitive basis with that of other nations, the cost of construction and operation of American ships, the rates of interest on shipping mortgages, insurance rates, such permanent lines of ocean carrying as should be undertaken, recommendations as to means of encouraging these undertakings by private capital, whether it is desirable to modify the act of 1891 relating to the carrying of mail so that additional service of the same character may be furnished, whether any features of the seamen's act should be modified or rescinded, whether the navigation laws of the United States should be changed in any way, and make recommendations of methods which will tend to bring about a reconstruction of our merchant marine.

It should report on and produce information as to—

(a) Greater diversification of European export trade.

(b) Larger number of traffic-producing ports at which vessels may call in early stages of outbound and last stages of homeward voyages.

(c) Profitable passenger traffic (including emigration).

(d) Financial support by Governments to insure communication with colonies or distant strategic points.

The National Foreign Trade Council, in referring to this subject, gives the following as its opinion of what a truly national policy should do, and I agree entirely with its conclusions:

First. To increase the national income and domestic prosperity through greater facilities for the sale abroad of products of the soil and industry of the United States, the importation of materials indispensable to life and industry, and through the freights collected from world commerce.

Second. To maintain under the flag communication with distant possessions.

Third. To aid the national defense and maintain commerce during war, whether the United States be belligerent or neutral.

Mr. President, there is not any element of our population that is not interested in a suitable development of the merchant marine. I undertake to say that the unusual, untried method proposed by this bill will hamper and restrict the development of a merchant marine rather than assist it. We have been drifting in this country into a policy which puts in a practical strait-jacket the business affairs which may be controlled by a commission or by other governmental agency. It is a wrong tendency. What we should do is to increase and develop the individual's ability to do for himself, and encourage him through the Government rather than restrict and hamper him. As long as we undertake to develop the merchant marine or to develop anything else along the lines proposed in this bill it is going to be a failure, and we are going to find ourselves in the case of the carrying trade and in all other industrial matters in the hands of our competitors instead of doing our own business.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if there is a provision in the bill as to what is to be done with these ships if the board is unable to lease them to private persons or corporations?

Mr. WEEKS. Then the Government is to operate the ships.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is the Senator able to turn to that provision in the bill?

Mr. WEEKS. I think I can find it. Possibly the Senator from Florida may have it before him.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is the Senator from Florida able to refer me to it?

Mr. FLETCHER. The power to operate is found in section 11. Only upon the conditions and terms and requirements as set forth in section 11 is there any power to operate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thank the Senator.

[Mr. GALLINGER resumed and concluded the speech begun by him on last Friday. The entire speech is as follows:]

Friday, August 11, 1916.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, at a later hour in the debate, probably to-morrow, I shall review the bill now under consideration in an endeavor to show that under its terms no substantial help can possibly come toward the rehabilitation of the American merchant marine, and that it will be a reckless waste of public money and a humiliating failure in the end. I shall also point out the handicaps under which American ships are laboring in their competition with ships of the other great maritime nations of the world, and also the danger that lurks in the proposition to allow these Government-owned ships to enter the coastwise trade of the United States.

To-day it will be my purpose to hurriedly review the legislative attempts that have been made by the Republican Party during the past 11 years to secure legislation looking to the upbuilding of American over-seas shipping, and to point out the fact that all such attempted legislation has been made impossible by the solid opposition of the Democratic Party.

Mr. President, more than 11 years ago, on January 4, 1905, it was my duty and pleasure as chairman of the Merchant Marine Commission to present to the Senate the report of that commission, which had been authorized on the recommendation of the President of the United States in the act of April 28, 1904. There served with me on that commission of those now living and Members of this Chamber the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. With us there served, too, the honored and lamented Senator Mallory, of Florida. On the part of the House there were Representative Grosvenor, of Ohio; Representative Minor, of Wisconsin; Representative HUMPHREY, of Washington; Representative Spight, of Mississippi; and Representative McDermott, of New Jersey, of whom Representative HUMPHREY now alone remains a Member of the House. The Senate members of the commission, with one exception, were all chosen from the Committee on Commerce, the House members from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. All of us were not unfamiliar with the work in hand, and all felt a deep interest in the subject of the inquiry. Between May 23 and November 19, 1904, the commission visited the principal ports of the Atlantic, the Great Lakes, the Pacific, and the Gulf of Mexico, hearing several hundred witnesses and receiving evidence which in the final report filled nearly 2,000 printed pages.

It was a laborious task, but it was performed with a deep sense of patriotic duty by all of the Senators and Representatives of the commission, and at the end we had the satisfaction of believing that it was the most thorough and elaborate study ever made on behalf of our Government into the question of the American merchant marine. Only one regret accompanied it, and that was that the conclusions and recommendations of the commission were not unanimous. It was our fervent hope from the beginning—the hope, I know, of the Senators from Virginia and from Florida, no less than of us on this side of the Chamber—that all personal and party differences might be forgotten, as, indeed, they were in the long and careful gathering of the testimony, and that there might be complete agreement as to the wisest solution of the great problem that had for more than half a century baffled all the efforts of American statesmanship.

Originally most of the members of the Merchant Marine Commission from both Houses were believers in a return to preferential duties, "the policy of the fathers," as the proper method of reviving our ocean carrying trade. That was our belief as the investigation started, and it received much powerful support from the practical shipowners and merchants who appeared before the commission on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Preferential duties then seemed to be distinctly favored by the major part of the maritime and mercantile communities of the United States. But as the hearings continued and were concluded in Washington during November and December, 1904, a majority of the commission was slowly and reluctantly forced to the conviction that under radically changed conditions the legislation of Washington, Adams, Jefferson, and Madison could not be revived, because of the vast growth of the tariff free list, the prohibitions of 30 or more commercial treaties, and the risk of reprisals from foreign Governments. Therefore, there was nothing for the majority to do but to recommend a cautious system of mail and general shipping subsidies or subventions, and this we did. Unfortunately the minority of the commission felt that it could not subscribe to general shipping subsidies, though no objection was offered to mail subventions, and there was, therefore, a divided report, the minority urging preferential duties.

BILLS OF THE MERCHANT MARINE COMMISSION.

The Senate adopted the majority report and passed the bill recommended on February 14, 1906, by a vote of 38 to 27. No action was taken by the House at that session, but at the next session the House amended the measure in some particulars and passed it on March 1, 1907, by a vote of 157 to 145. Many of the Senators will recall that on the question of concurrence by the Senate in the House amendments a filibuster, directed by the late Senator Carmack, of Tennessee, prevented action in the closing hours of the Fifty-ninth Congress, and thereby defeated the effort of the majority to strengthen our ocean shipping and increase our naval reserve.

I will pause, Mr. President, to say that, in my opinion, had that bill become a law—and it would have become a law had it not been filibustered against in the closing hours of that session—we would have had no trouble during the years that have intervened in having an abundance of shipping between the United States and South America, as well as across the Pacific Ocean to the Orient and to Australasia. But it was defeated.

In the following, or Sixtieth, Congress, at the first session, I reintroduced the bill "to amend the act of March 3, 1891, entitled 'An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce.'" In this form the proposal received very earnest and powerful support in arguments advanced on both sides of the Chamber, and on March 20, 1908, the Senate passed the bill without a roll call, and without any vote being recorded against it. On March 2, 1909, a motion in the House to suspend the rules and pass the bill was defeated by a very narrow margin—172 yeas to 175 nays. It will be observed that it required only 2 Democratic votes to pass the bill, but no Democratic votes were forthcoming. On May 22, 1908, an effort to have the ocean mail bill accepted in the House as an amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill, in which the Senate had placed it, was defeated 143 to 155, and on the following day defeated again, 145 to 153.

In the Sixty-first Congress, second session, I again introduced the ocean mail bill, and it passed the Senate February 2, 1911—the roll call showing 39 yeas to 39 nays, and the deciding vote being cast by the Vice President. This bill was not acted on in the House of Representatives.

In the Sixty-third Congress the bill was again introduced in substantially the same language as before, but received no consideration in the Democratic committee. In the present Congress I have introduced two bills, both of which, with slight variations, seek to aid the merchant marine by mail subventions, but they are lying unacted on in the committee.

I have recalled these events for the purpose of emphasizing to the Senate and the country that we on this side of the Chamber have not been unmindful of the national need of a great merchant marine, and that nothing but party and perhaps sectional differences have prevented us from long ago achieving it. On every occasion when the ocean mail bill was rejected in the House, it was by a very slender majority.

FOREIGN "RESTRAINT" OF AMERICAN TRADE.

Much of this opposition to the encouragement of American ocean shipping, I regret to say, came from the splendid, great agricultural States of the Northwest, though there were Senators from that section whose loyal help I gladly acknowledge in the long struggle for some measure of relief for our merchant marine. The distinguished senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] will find strong confirmation of the wisdom of his own course on this question in a significant statement that has recently been published by the Federal Trade Commission. "Many business men," the commission says, "emphasize the handicap resulting from the lack of American ships." A northwestern milling company declares:

We are particularly interested in securing protection for the American manufacturer or shipper against restraint of foreign trade resulting from difficulties and handicaps imposed by foreign-owned steamship lines. We realize more every day that the American manufacturer or shipper is entirely at the mercy and in the hands of foreign-owned steamship lines.

Foreign-owned steamship lines are receiving in return for hauling wheat and wheat products from American seaports to European seaports at least 50, if not 75, per cent of the total value of American wheat and products that are being exported to Europe. We are in position to substantiate our statements with specific and dependable data in our possession.

Mr. President, those Senators who through these many years have steadfastly contended for the application to our ocean shipping industry of the principle of adequate protection and encouragement that has wrought such wonderful results as applied to agriculture and to manufacturing must decline to be held responsible for the present condition of the overseas carrying trade of the United States—the only great national industry exposed to foreign competition that has been forced to go on year after year unprotected by the Nation which it serves. In my judgment, Mr. President, there can be no more impressive object lesson of the essential truth of the protective system than the vivid contrast between this one unprotected industry and the great tariff-protected domestic industries of America. Yet the natural skill and aptitude of Americans who live on and by the sea have always been unsurpassed in their bold and arduous calling.

As shipbuilders, shipowners, and sailors, men of our race were leading the world when agriculture was still a rude art and manufactures were in the infancy of their development. Whenever to-day, as in the great coastwise trade, the Panama trade, and on the West India mail lines, American ships are given a fair opportunity, they are splendidly upholding the traditions of their Nation and the glory of their flag. Our American Navy, its noble ships, officers, and men are in their way only what an American over-seas merchant fleet would be if the Congress of the United States had not failed or refused for 60 years to take the necessary measures to create one.

OTHER AND FUTILE EXPEDIENTS.

Since my own efforts were rendered unsuccessful by party or sectional opposition, I have watched with keen interest the various experiments undertaken on the other side. Three years ago a clause was inserted in the new tariff law ostensibly reviving the successful policy of 1789 and granting a rebate of 5 per cent of the customs duties on goods imported in American ships. This clause was due to the earnest advocacy of the accomplished former chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, since so cordially welcomed to this Chamber, the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. His devotion to the upbuilding of our merchant marine, I doubt not, is as wholehearted and persevering as that of any Senator on this or the other side, and it would have been cause for profound gratification to us all if the preferential-duty policy of the tariff law of 1913 could have received a fair test in actual operation. But it has been suspended by the Treasury Department because of supposed conflict with the terms of important treaties with foreign Governments and is now before the Supreme Court for a final test of its validity. This experience is not encouraging as to the practicability of a renewal of the preferential-duty plan, but is rather a confirmation of the doubts and objections of a majority of the merchant marine commission, so earnestly expressed in their report of a decade ago.

THE "FREE SHIP" EXPERIMENT.

Another expedient not favored by the majority and not recommended by the minority of that commission has been actually tested under conditions made extraordinarily favorable by the great European war. This is the "free ship" policy embodied in the emergency free registry law of August 18, 1914. A previous trial of that policy, provided for in the Panama Canal act of August 24, 1912, had proved a complete failure. The Panama Canal act, reversing a national policy of a hundred years, had opened American registry for purposes of over-seas commerce to all foreign-built vessels owned by American citizens or corporations, the conditions being that these ships should be fit to carry dry and perishable cargo and should be not more than five years old. In the face of this invitation, two years had gone by and not one foreign-built ship had sought the American flag. No experiment could have proved more disappointing to its advocates.

But the war-emergency act of August 18, 1914, opened the doors wider still by eliminating the 5-year age limit and the requirement of fitness to carry dry and perishable cargo, and offered American registry for the over-seas trade to foreign-built ships of any description if owned by American citizens or corporations. Moreover, the new act authorized the President to exempt these foreign-built ships from our survey, measurement, and inspection laws, and to exempt them also from employing American citizens as officers. An Executive order promptly gave these foreign-built ships the indicated advantages over American steamers of native construction and previous registry.

Whether this wider free-ship law would have had any more effect under normal conditions in time of peace can never be determined, for it found most of the world at war and an extraordinary value vesting in the protection of the flag of the most powerful of neutral Governments. Several German ships, owned by the Standard Oil and other American concerns, were promptly naturalized in order to escape the swarming cruisers of the British navy, and many British ships also owned by American capital were hurried under the Stars and Stripes to escape the Emden and her consorts. The shelter of our flag and the more favorable marine insurance rates constituted a generous subsidy for the time being to these fortunate shipowners. Nearly all of the vessels thus brought into American registry were American owned before the war began and were being operated under foreign flags to secure the advantages of lower wages of foreign officers and crews, less exacting laws and regulations, and lower cost of maintenance.

"FREE SHIPS" A FAILURE.

For a few months foreign-built ships came in rapidly, the principal fleets being those of the Standard Oil Co., the United Fruit Co., and the United States Steel Corporation. These were welcome and important accessions to the American flag. Many of these vessels—the newer and more efficient craft—could have been naturalized under the law of 1912, but their owners did not act until the war had offered a powerful inducement. If ever a free-ship policy were to be effective it would be under the extraordinary conditions of this great world war. Yet after a few months there came a significant halt in the seeking of American registry. Fewer and fewer foreign-built vessels applied for the American flag. This was noticeable even before the present seamen's law received the approval of the President, on March 4, 1915. Up to that time it had been believed that the seamen's bill would fail of enactment, and it was not being actively taken into the calculations of shipowners. It may be added that even now the seamen's law bears less heavily on foreign-built than on American-built ships, for by Executive order foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, have been exempted from its most onerous provisions. Therefore it is not possible to seek in the seamen's law an explanation of the virtual failure of the free-ship experiment, though undertaken in time of war when all circumstances were most propitious for its success.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF SECRETARY M'ADOO.

The Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. William G. McAdoo, in an address before the Chamber of Commerce of the United States February 4, 1915, declared without contradiction: "What effect has the ship registry bill had on our commerce? Nothing; literally nothing." This is true in the sense that though the law has added more than 600,000 tons to American shipping registered for foreign commerce, nearly all of these vessels were American-owned and employed in American trade beforehand. There were confident predictions by the advocates of free ships before the law was passed that it would add millions of tons of foreign shipping to the American fleet. The actual meager results are undeniably a great and bitter disappointment, and from day to day our actual experience under the free-ship law has become more and more unsatisfactory. In the present fiscal year few foreign-built vessels have sought American registry, and unfortunately the right of some of these to fly the American flag has been disputed by the British Government. In one month lately only three foreign-built vessels were naturalized, and one of these was a small pleasure yacht. All the chief maritime Governments have now forbidden the sale of merchant ships in this war emergency, and the registration of foreign-built vessels has practically ceased in consequence. But it was ceasing even before this prohibition was imposed.

WAGES HIGHER ON "FREE SHIPS."

I believe that it must be manifest even to the most ardent champion of a free-ship policy that that policy itself is never going to create an adequate mercantile marine. Experience has demonstrated the truth of the contention of this side of the Chamber year after year that a free-ship policy at its best would only equalize construction costs, and would fail of full effect because it did not equalize the equally important cost of wages and of maintenance. In the winter of 1914-1915, when the former ship-purchase bill was under discussion, I took occasion to address inquiries to the chief shipowners of the country who had brought foreign-built ships into American registry whether there had been any increase in the cost of operation under the American flag. Without an exception these gentlemen replied that there had been a very considerable advance in the rates of wages and the cost of maintenance. I caused some of these answers to be published as a part of my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 7, 1915, and February 26, 1915, and because of their direct bearing on the question now before us I wish to commend them again to the serious attention of the Senate. First is a letter from the Standard Oil Co., which, as the Senate knows, is operating a large fleet of tank steamers under American and foreign colors:

STANDARD OIL CO.,
New York, February 16, 1915.

The Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In reply to your letter of February 10, we would answer your inquiries as follows:

1. The foreign ships we have transferred to the American flag have been confined to vessels formerly operated under the German flag. In these transfers we have followed the practice of substituting Americans for the German officers, engineers, and crews. This has made it necessary to pay the American scale of wages on these vessels. Below we give you a comparison of the wages paid on the same steamer under each flag:

Steamship Washington (German), now steamship Brindilla (American).

Total wage bill under German flag, per month.....	$936.10
Total wage bill under American flag, per month.....	1,765.00

Increase under American flag.....	828.90
-----------------------------------	--------

So that the wages under the American flag show an increase of 88.55 per cent.

2. It is difficult to make a categorical answer to this question. Our reply will have to be more or less general. The standard of living on steamers under the American flag is quite different from foreign flags, resulting in increased expense. It is also difficult to obtain and retain experienced men for American ships, and this is another item that contributes to increased cost by frequent replacement of men at out-of-the-way ports. We have also found that in the case of petty officers, sailors, and firemen the same men sailing under the American flag demand and receive much higher wages than they are willing to accept under foreign flags. Another increased item under the American flag is brought about by the fact that the American measurement laws result in a larger measurement for the steamer than under foreign registry. This particular item is in suspense at the moment, but when again put into force will result in the steamer paying higher port charges, a good portion of which will be paid to foreigners, as they will be subject to tonnage dues in foreign ports based on the American registry.

Respectfully,

D. T. WARDEN.

HIGHER WAGES IN WEST INDIES TRADE.

Another significant statement is that of the Munson Steamship Line, a well-known American concern operating both passenger and cargo steamers from New York and southern ports to the West Indies:

MUNSON STEAMSHIP LINE,
New York, February 11, 1915.

MR. J. H. GALLINGER,
Chairman Conference of the Minority,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We have the honor of replying to your esteemed favor of the 10th instant.

1. There is a very decided increase in the wages of officers and crews on foreign-built ships which are admitted to American registry, and in cases where the crews of such ships have been signed on abroad for a period of 12 months, immediately the registry is changed the crews either demand the American scale of wages or their discharge and transportation to their home port.

2. Beyond the increase of wages the operations of loading and discharging, port charges, etc., are practically the same on a foreign as on an American ship.

Very respectfully, yours,

MUNSON STEAMSHIP LINE,
A. H. BROMELL, Vice President.

FOREIGN CREWS AND AMERICAN PAY.

Another important shipping house of New York is that of W. R. Grace & Co., which for many years has been engaged in trade between New York and the west coast of South America, and later entered the Panama Canal coast-to-coast trade between New York and San Francisco. The firm of W. R. Grace & Co. used to employ entirely foreign ships, but under the free registry law of August 18, 1914, has secured American registry for some of its British steamers. The firm has also constructed a number of steamers in American yards, particularly for the Panama Canal coastwise service:

W. R. GRACE & CO.,
New York, February 13, 1915.

HON. J. H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We have your letter of February 10 in reference to foreign steamers transferred to American flag.

We have been operating American and British steamers side by side for some years, and we estimate difference in cost of operation to be as follows:

	American, per month.	British, per month.
Wages.....	$1,970	$1,342
Victualing.....	803	649
(American steamers have larger net tonnage measurement than British and, as tonnage and light dues are paid on net register, that is against the American boat.)
As dues vary in the different ports of the world, the difference in money is difficult to state, but may be estimated at.....	35	.....
(This tonnage item will not go into effect on foreign steamers transferred to American flag until Aug. 18, 1916, by reason of President's proclamation.)
American steamers require annual inspection, while British steamers are inspected each four years; estimated extra cost by reason of annual inspection.....	25	.....
Total.....	2,833	1,991

Or, say, $842 per month extra for American boat. The extra cost of victualing is not by statute, but by reason of less economy on American steamers.

On British steamers which we recently transferred to American flag the foreign crews struck for American wages the day of transfer, and received them. As soon as foreign crews are replaced by Americans we will have the increased cost of victualing.

We trust this gives you the information which you desire.

Yours, very truly,

W. R. GRACE & CO.,
N. BOWIE, Vice President.

STATEMENT OF THE STEEL CORPORATION.

For the great export trade of the United States Steel Corporation conducted by the United States Steel Products Co., regular steamship services have been maintained to South America and elsewhere. The United States Steel Corporation was one of the concerns that early in the war for the first time placed foreign-built ships under the American flag, and following is the result of its experience:

UNITED STATES STEEL PRODUCTS CO.,
30 Church Street, New York, N. Y., February 24, 1915.
HON. J. H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 10th instant, addressed to Mr. J. A. Farrell, president United States Steel Corporation, has been referred to us for attention, as this company is the subsidiary of the corporation which owns the foreign-built steamers recently transferred to the American flag. The present and former scale of wages on our steamers and the percentage of increase is shown in the following statement: Wages of captains under American scale vary according to seniority. Wages of other officers and the engineers are fixed, being same on all steamers.

Crew.	British.				American.
	First year.	Second year.	Third year.	Average	United States currency.	Increase.

Second assistant engineer.....	10 10	11 0	12 11	11 3 4	54.34	90.00 65.6
Third assistant engineer.....	8 0	8 10	9 8	8 10	41.38	80.00 93.4

Safe-navigation money to captains $300 per year, payable annually January 1, on showing a clean record for the previous 12 months.

The wages of the following members of the crew vary on the different steamers, depending upon the supply available and the port at which signed on. The steamship San Francisco is quoted as an example:

Crew.	British.		American.	Increase.
	Rate.	United States currency.
Chief steward.....	£ 8 0	$38.93	$55.00	Per cent. 41.2
Second steward.....	4 0	19.47	25.00	28.4
Mess-room steward.....	3 0	14.60	22.00	50.7
Chief cook.....	7 0	34.07	40.00	17.4
Second cook.....	5 0	24.33	25.00	2.8
Carpenter.....	7 0	34.07	40.00	17.4
Boatswain.....	6 10	31.63	35.00	10.7
Sailors.....	5 10	26.76	28.00	4.6
Firemen.....	5 10	26.76	32.00	19.6
Oilers.....	6 0	29.20	35.00	19.9
Donkeyman.....	6 10	31.63	35.00	10.7

Owing to the unsettled conditions which have prevailed throughout the world since the outbreak of the present war in Europe, the increased cost of operation in the other departments can not be fairly stated, as we have no basis upon which to make a definite comparison.

Yours, very truly,

UNITED STATES STEEL PRODUCTS CO.,
JOHN HUGHES, General Agent.

FURTHER STATEMENT OF THE STEEL CORPORATION.

I have also another later and very interesting letter on this same subject:

UNITED STATES STEEL PRODUCTS CO.,
30 Church Street, New York, October 6, 1915.

HON. J. H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Cost of operating foreign-built vessels transferred to American flag:

Your letter of September 10 on this subject, addressed to Mr. James A. Farrell, president United States Steel Corporation, was referred to this company for attention, with respect to the foreign-built steamers owned by this company and transferred to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914.

The cost of operating our steamers, with respect to wages and victualing, under British and American registry is shown by the following statement:

Wages of captains under American scale vary according to seniority. Wages of other officers and the engineers are fixed, being the same on all steamers.

Crew.	British scale.		American scale.
	Average.	United States currency.	Immediately after transfer.	Increase.	Present.	Increase.

The wages of the crew in the several departments vary on different steamers, depending upon the supply available and the port at which signed on.

This company operates nine steamers, transferred from British to American registry, namely, steamships Bantu, Kentra, Santa Rosalia, Buenaventura, San Francisco, Howick Hall, Craster Hall, Crofton Hall, and Charlton Hall. The total numbers of the crews of these vessels and their total monthly wages under British and American registry are shown in the following statement:

	Nine steamers named above.
	Total crew.	Total monthly wages.
American registry.....	393	$17,537
British registry.....	373	12,478
Increase.....	20	5,059
Percentage of increase.....	5.36	40.54

There has been an average increase of 19 per cent in the cost of victualing our steamers during the past year.

Yours, very truly,

UNITED STATES STEEL PRODUCTS CO.,
JOHN HUGHES, General Agent.

NOT THE RESULT OF NAVIGATION LAWS.

It should be carefully noted by the Senators that the navigation laws and requirements, or their most onerous provisions, were considerably lifted from these foreign-built ships by the action of the President, who, in pursuance of the act of August 18, 1914, relieved them from the requirement that their officers should be American citizens and exempted them further from our survey, measurement, and inspection laws. Thus these foreign-built steamers have been enabled to come under the American flag with foreign officers and crews throughout. They have been privileged to hoist the Stars and Stripes, though not a man aboard in any capacity was an American citizen. It appears that the Standard Oil Co., for reasons of manifest prudence, replaced German officers with Americans, but it is probable that in most other instances officers and crews have remained unchanged, of foreign nationality. Yet these foreign officers and crews of the newly naturalized steamers have demanded the full American wage scale and the food habitually provided for American officers and seamen. This has had the result in the case of 9 steamers of the United States Steel Corporation, of increasing the total monthly wages from $12,478, under the British flag, to $17,537 under the American flag, while there has been an average advance of 19 per cent in the cost of victualing these steamers.

A PREDICTION FULLY CONFIRMED.

I wish to invite the Senate to give most careful attention to these profoundly significant facts. It has been asserted year after year in this Chamber, with apparent sincerity by those Senators who opposed even mail subsidies to American shipping that all that was necessary was to pass a free-ship law and to amend or repeal our navigation laws and requirements.

This has now been done by act of Congress and order of the President. American shipowners under our present legislation are enabled to buy foreign-built ships and bring them freely under the American flag for purposes of foreign trade, with foreign officers and crews, and without compliance with our survey, inspection, and measurement laws and regulations. And yet the demonstrated facts are that the wages paid to foreign officers and crews on these naturalized foreign-built ships are exactly the same as they are on American-built, American-manned vessels, that the cost of food is the same and that the problems of the merchant marine, except that first cost of construction has been equalized, remains exactly the same as it was before the free-ship law of 1914 was enacted.

Mr. President, I am not at all surprised at this result. It is exactly what was predicted by those Senators on this side who have constantly urged that subsidy or some equivalent encouragement was absolutely necessary to the restoration of our mercantile marine. What has occurred has been precisely what was outlined by practical shipping men a decade ago, at the hearings throughout the country before the Merchant Marine Commission. It was pointed out then as the universal experience that whenever a foreign-built vessel had by special act of Congress been brought beneath the American flag, the wages of its officers and seamen automatically rose to the level of wages on American-built ships, and that the cost of maintenance rose in proportion.

Nor is there anything unexpected or surprising in this circumstance. There is not and never has been any requirement of law that none but American citizens shall be employed in the iron and steel mills or cotton mills or woolen mills or other great industrial establishments in America. The doors of these great workshops are open to foreigners equally with Americans. And yet, as we all know, the experienced and capable foreign workman who lands on our shores and enters these mills and factories does not labor for the wages that had contented him at home, but expects and receives the established wage of American citizens doing the same kind of work with the same kind of machinery. What is now happening on the sea is simply what has always happened on the land. You have foreign-built ships, foreign officers, and foreign sailors under the American flag, but you are paying these foreign officers and sailors the same wages given to Americans. The free-ship experiment has equalized the first cost of ships, but it has not solved the problem of the American merchant marine. The difference in the cost of operating ships, due to a difference in wages, food, and standards of living, remains exactly what it was before the free-ship experiment was tried—and on regular lines and established routes there is the further handicap of foreign subsidies. Secretary McAdoo is right in authoritatively pronouncing the free-ship experiment a failure—an official acknowledgment from the administration directly responsible for it.

THE DIFFERENCE OF WAGE COST.

Let us return to this vital question of the difference in wages on American and foreign ships—the very heart of the question of American shipping. I will submit to the Senate an important comparison of wages paid to the crews of a typical American and a typical British cargo steamer, each of a capacity of about 5,000 tons dead-weight:

Comparative wages, 1914, on American and British cargo steamers of a capacity of about 5,000 tons.

Total American pay roll, per month..... 1,655

Total American crew, 32 men.

Total British pay roll, per month..... 994.66

Total British crew, 27 men.

It will be observed with some interest that the crew of the American steamer consists, all told, of 32 men as against a British crew of 27. This increased number on the American ship is due substantially to the requirements of our Steamboat-Inspection Service that there shall be a third officer, a third engineer, and three oilers, not carried by the British ship. But even if the number of the two crews were equal, the total pay roll of the American steamer would be approximately 50 per cent greater than the pay roll of the British steamer—the same kind of a vessel, of the same capacity, adapted to the same general trades.

Or to take another comparison, that of somewhat larger cargo ships of a type particularly valuable in modern commerce:

Comparative wages, 1914, on American and British cargo steamers of a capacity of about 8,000 tons.

British cargo steamer Ninian (6,385 gross tons, 4,068 net tons, length 400 feet).		American cargo steamer Hawaiian (5,597 gross tons, 3,651 net tons, length 406 feet).

In this other comparison we find a strikingly similar difference, the pay roll of the 44 officers and men on the American ship being approximately 50 per cent greater than the pay roll of the 44 officers and men of the British steamer. The real question of the American merchant marine, so far as ordinary cargo steamers is concerned, is a question of how the Government of the United States is going to equalize this wage difference, which prevails without any reference to our navigation laws and regulations and without any regard to whether the officers and men of the American ship are Americans or foreigners.

PROVISIONS OF PROPOSED BILL.

In an effort to equalize this difference so that American ships may have a fair and even chance in competition for the carrying of American commerce, I have introduced a bill "To encourage American shipbuilding and navigation, to establish American ocean mail lines, to increase the naval reserve, and to promote the commerce of the United States." This bill provides in brief for the payment to American vessels certified by the Secretary of the Navy as fit for auxiliary service of a compensation, retainer, or subsidy at the rate of 1 cent per gross registered ton for every 100 miles of the outward voyage, on condition that such vessels shall convey the United States mails free of charge, shall carry American boys to be trained in seamanship or engineering, and shall be placed at the disposal of the Government whenever required. The bill also provides for an amendment to the ocean mail law of 1891, increasing the compensation, which many years of experience has proved to be inadequate, for steamers of the second and third class on routes to South America south of the Equator, the Philippines, Japan, China, and Australasia, and offering a new rate not to exceed $10 a mile to ships of the highest speed on routes to Europe.

The compensation of 1 cent per gross registered ton for each 100 miles of the outward voyage is intended for cargo vessels not under mail contract with the United States, and is calculated to increase the number of useful freighting ships of the customary commercial speed, while the amendment to the ocean mail bill seeks to encourage the employment of swifter steamers on regular routes where the interests of trade demand a fixed-schedule service. Ships of both classes are requisite to a well-balanced merchant marine. By the terms of existing law vessels receiving one form of compensation can not receive the other.

Nothing can be clearer and more undeniable than that cargo ships under the American flag can not under normal conditions compete with foreign ships manned and maintained on a lower wage scale without substantial aid from some source. The distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, officially acknowledges this truth in his proposal for Government ownership and control of merchant shipping. There is no dispute about the fundamental facts; the only question is, How shall this essential aid be best administered?

I believe that the plan proposed in the bill which I have introduced—a plan originated some years ago by the eminent Senator from Maine, Hon. William P. Frye, who devoted the best years of his public life to a profound study of American shipping—offers the best solution of the problem, the most straightforward, economical, and effective. The number of miles traversed by a ship of given size in our export trade most accurately measures the value of the commercial service which she is performing for the American people. If in addition to delivering American goods the ship in design and construction is capable of rendering further service as an auxiliary to the fighting fleet in war, she has a double claim upon the favorable consideration of the nation whose flag she bears. There is one way, and one way only, in which we can secure these valuable ocean ships in the numbers essential to the promotion of the commerce and the maintenance of the national defense, and that is by equalizing the conditions of competition between American ships and foreign ships—between American and foreign seamen.

This the proposed bill does through the compensation offered to cargo ships and mail ships in return for fitness and readiness to respond to the call of the Nation in time of need. To deny that the United States has the right or the power to pay such compensation as this—such subsidy, if you will—is to deny to the United States the right or power of self-defense.

A CASE IN POINT.

The rate of compensation for cargo vessels of ordinary commercial speed proposed in the bill which I have introduced is, as I have stated, 1 cent per gross registered ton for each 100 miles covered in the outward voyage from a port of the United States to the foreign port or ports of destination. Let us apply this rate to the actual case of the steamer of 5,000 tons carrying capacity—a typical freighter of moderate tonnage, of which there are hundreds now operating on all the seas of the world. More steamers of about 5,000 tons carrying capacity are probably to-day employed in the over-seas carrying trade than of any other class or capacity. The American-built steamer Pleiades is a ship of this description. With 5,000 tons carrying capacity her gross registered tonnage, according to the Bureau of Navigation, is 3,753. It is the estimate of the bureau that a cargo steamer of this kind, of a speed of 10 knots an hour, will cover about 42,000 miles outward and inward in a year of ordinary service, which would be equivalent, in round numbers, to a total mileage outward of 21,000.

At the rate of 1 cent per gross registered ton for every 100 miles sailed on the outward voyage such a steamship would receive in compensation under the proposed bill the sum of $7,881.30 a year, or $656.77 a month.

Now, it happens that the difference in wages, according to the comparative table already presented, between the American cargo steamer of 5,000 tons carrying capacity and the typical British cargo steamer of the same tonnage is $660.34 a month, or $7,924.08 a year, which corresponds very closely with the compensation proposed in the bill for the American steamer, based on her fitness and readiness for the naval-auxiliary service of the United States in war.

If a still larger steamer were selected for the purpose of comparison, it is possible that the compensation provided might be somewhat more than the difference in wages instead of a few dollars less, as in the case of the steamer of 5,000 tons capacity. I do not profess that the rate proposed will fit with exactness the case of every American ship in over-seas trade, but I do believe that the rate is as close an approximation as can be secured to the average difference in the wage cost between American and the better class of foreign-cargo steamers run at the average commercial speed.

TRANSATLANTIC MAIL SERVICE.

Now, a word in regard to the ocean mail lines. The existing ocean mail law of March 3, 1891, has received a great deal of consideration in this Chamber in the past 8 or 10 years in connection with efforts to amend it and increase the proffered rates of compensation on routes to South America and elsewhere, where no fast, regular lines of American steamers have been established. The law of 1891 has saved the American merchant marine from almost absolute destruction in the foreign trade of the United States. It is to this legislation that the American people owe the existence not only of several West India lines but of the one American line of mail, passenger, and freight steamers to Europe—the St. Louis, St. Paul, New York, and Philadelphia, running weekly from New York to Great Britain. This line has proved to be of inestimable value to the United States during the present war. While fast German liners have wholly disappeared and most of the swift British and French ships have been withdrawn to serve their Governments, the American steamers have maintained an uninterrupted service, week after week, carrying the United States mails and offering absolute protection to the lives of American passengers and the property of American merchants.

My only regret is that these American liners are so few, and that new, larger, and swifter ships have not been constructed. The manager of the American trans-Atlantic service, Mr. P. A. S. Franklin, of New York, has stated on several occasions that his company stood ready to match the Mauretania and Lusitania, of the Cunard Line, if equivalent aid and encouragement were offered by the United States. I believe most earnestly that the time has come when the Stars and Stripes should be borne by the greatest and noblest ships on the Atlantic Ocean, and with this end in view I have inserted in the proposed bill an amendment to the ocean mail law offering a compensation not to exceed $10 a mile on the outward voyage to ships "of a speed equaling or exceeding that of the fastest foreign vessels in the same service." I do not profess that this proposed compensation is altogether an equivalent to the very generous encouragement extended to the Cunard Line by the British Government, which lent to the Cunard management out of the British treasury a sum understood to be about $13,000,000 for the building of the Mauretania and Lusitania, on which there was required only the very low interest rate of 2½ per cent. At the same time the British Government gave to the Cunard Co. for 20 years a subsidy in round figures of $1,100,000 a year, or sufficient to repay the entire loan with interest. In other words, the Mauretania and Lusitania were virtually given to the Cunard Co. by the Government of the United Kingdom.

If the maintenance of an unexcelled mail, passenger, and fast-freight service across the North Atlantic, and the strengthening of the naval reserve by the swiftest steamers in existence are worth so much to the United Kingdom, a superior service under the American flag is worth something to the United States. I believe that the creation of American ocean mail ships, excelling even the splendid Cunard ships, would be abundantly worth the subvention I have proposed.

INES TO SOUTH AMERICA AND THE ORIENT.

Though some American cargo steamers are now running under the abnormal conditions of the war to Brazil, Argentina, Chile, and Peru, no swift and regular line of American steamships carrying the United States mails under the law of 1891 has been established to any of these great countries of the Southern Continent. Some months ago the Pacific Mail service, which was given up when the seamen's bill became a law, was temporarily revived with much smaller and inferior steamers, but any proposal to strengthen the American merchant marine would be incomplete without generous provision for swift, superior steamship service under the American flag to Japan, China, and the Philippines. The measure which I have the honor to present offers an increase of compensation from the rate of $2 and $1 a mile, respectively, for vessels of the second and third class, to not exceeding $4 and $2 on routes to South America south of the Equator, and to Japan, China, and the Philippines, and also to Australasia, whither an inferior American steamship service now runs, recently revived under the law of 1891, but contending under heavy handicaps against subsidized British competitors.

OCEAN MAIL PAY UNDER NEW POLICY.

Ocean mail compensation or subsidy is not a new departure in the practice of the United States. Many years ago mail subsidies were granted, originally by a Democratic Congress, on the recommendation of a Democratic President, Mr. Polk, to American steamship lines to Europe and the West Indies and between both our North Atlantic and Pacific ports and the Isthmus of Panama. That legislation was approved by men of all parties and was entirely successful in the rapid increase of American steamship tonnage, which for a while exceeded the growth of British tonnage. But it is a matter of history—and sorrowful history—that that ocean mail legislation was destroyed in the fierce sectional struggles in Congress that preceded the Civil War.

The proposed amendments of the existing ocean mail law embody an application of principles that have worked satisfactorily in our own experience and in the experience of all other great maritime nations of the world. Swift and regular ocean mail service in ships of more than ordinary commercial speed is a particular service rendered to the Nation, which requires and deserves fit compensation from the National Treasury. We have offered a certain rate of compensation for many years on the long routes to South America and across the Pacific Ocean. These rates have not proved sufficient to create and maintain a service under the American flag. In the light of these facts it is the part of prudence and of patriotism to offer a properly increased rate of compensation that will produce such a service.

FOREIGN SHIPS NEVER "CHEAP."

Every argument that has been made in this Chamber for ocean mail and similar legislation, to give national aid and encouragement to the American merchant marine, has been absolutely confirmed by our national experience since the outbreak of the great war in Europe. Once there were Senators who were disposed to question the need of an American ocean shipping. I have heard Senators express the belief that so long as foreign shipowners were carrying our commerce cheaply it was just as well that they should be allowed to do so, and that it was best that our country should make no effort to participate in ocean navigation. However plausible that argument may have seemed in time of peace, this war has utterly and forever shattered it. We have discovered to our cost that a cheap service in foreign ships may in the end prove a most extravagant service.

When war came the German merchant marine vanished from the ocean, and the best steamers of Great Britain and her allies were immediately "commandeered" for the military or naval service of their Governments. If there had been a great, adequate merchant shipping under the American flag, this shipping, whose first interest and duty would have been to serve the American flag, with additions from our great coast fleet, would have sufficed to save American ocean trade from serious injury. But with American ships carrying less than 10 per cent of our commerce, and foreign ships, principally British and German, carrying the remainder, before the war began, it was inevitable that sooner or later the condition that now confronts us should arise, when grain and cotton and other export products are piling up day after day on steamship docks and in railroad yards for lack of tonnage to deliver them to over-seas customers.

Moreover, the American people, arousing themselves to the need of national preparedness, are dismayed to find how small and feeble is the existing auxiliary Navy under the American flag—for through many years we have been paying many millions in mail, passenger, and freight money to maintain the auxiliary navies of foreign Governments.

No longer is the plea heard in this Chamber that if foreign ships can carry our trade at "cheap" prices they ought to be allowed to do so. Never again will that argument be heard from the lips of an American Senator. The blindness of it, the folly of it, have been made forever manifest. After long years of controversy and hesitation we have all come together at last in frank recognition of the fact that an American merchant marine is as essential to this Republic as an American Navy, of which, indeed, merchant auxiliaries are an indispensable part. I have offered the bill for which I am invoking the friendly consideration of the Senate because out of many years of conscientious study of the question I am deeply convinced that this measure points the better way.

BOTH ARE SUBSIDY BILLS.

It is a subsidy bill. But, if I mistake not, the word "subsidy" has lost most of its power to affright the American people, even the people of our Inland States, whose grain and provisions can not be marketed because of a lack of ships to carry them to Europe. The loss which the West and the South are now suffering because of our long neglect of our own merchant shipping mounts far up into the millions and would pay subsidies for a hundred years.

The whole Nation is now face to face with the demonstrated truth of the proposition that national aid to American ships is not merely a matter of concern to the ocean States that build and own them, but is as valuable to Minnesota and Nebraska as to Massachusetts, to Kansas and Texas as to Pennsylvania.

Both the bill urged by the President and his Cabinet and approved by Democratic Senators and the bill which I myself offer are subsidy bills. They are both based upon the fundamental proposition that national aid is necessary to enable American ships to meet the competition of the low wages and the subsidies and bounties of foreign Governments. You will find this fact stated in express terms in every address which the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, has delivered on behalf of the proposed legislation of which he is the champion. He points out everywhere and always the fact that the wages and standards of living are lower on foreign ships, and that subsidies are liberally paid by foreign nations. Then, he contends that these adverse conditions can be met only by the wealth and power of the Government of the United States in building or purchasing steamships of its own and operating these ships in foreign commerce out of funds from the National Treasury, or, as a possible alternative, in some cases of leasing the Government ships to private shipowners at a low rental that will enable these shipowners to operate them without disaster.

In either case, under the Government-ownership bill or under the bill which I have introduced, the difference between the cost of operation of foreign ships and of American ships, due to low foreign wages or foreign subsidies or both combined, is to be borne by the Government of the United States on behalf of all of the people of the United States, some of whom are to be admitted by the Government as fellow stockholders in Government shipping corporations.

These Government-owned ships are to be as distinctly subsidized ships as the cargo vessels and the ocean mail liners of the alternative measure which I have presented. Under the existing ocean mail law and the restrictions provided in regard to cargo vessels in the proposed bill, that they must be fit for auxiliary service, carry American boys, and be held at the disposal of the Nation, the Government would be able to wield a considerable measure of control over these American vessels. If further and reasonable precautions are necessary to guarantee that these privately owned ships shall everywhere and always serve the public interest, I am willing that such precautions should be enforced by Federal law. But I wish again to emphasize the fact that both of these alternative measures before the Senate are national-aid measures, subsidy measures, and that no criticism of the subsidy policy or principle can hereafter come from those Senators who have already committed or are prepared to commit themselves to the support of the legislation so eloquently urged by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the President himself.

LESS COSTLY, MORE EFFECTIVE.

Of the two proposals, I prefer the plan which I have introduced—first, because it conforms to tried and established policies and methods which have proved successful in the experience of other maritime nations, nations that can now have no possible reason or excuse to retaliate, and, second, because I believe that the bill which I offer is the more direct and effective, and in the long run will prove the less costly to the Government.

The control and management of commercial shipping is a complex, difficult art, in which our Federal Government has had practically no experience, for the one small Government line to the Isthmus of Panama has been a mere auxiliary in the work of canal construction, and has not been a financial success. My own plan would leave the design, building, and maintenance of our ocean ships in the hands of the men who have been trained from youth to this particular business. I believe that these men, of whom there are hundreds in America, may well be trusted to operate these ships not only with more economy but with more alertness, vigor, and enterprise than could any cumbrous machinery provided in our Government itself. I believe that where the plan which I have outlined would cost the Treasury one dollar Government ownership and operation would cost the Treasury many dollars, or that if the expenditure were equal the plan which I advocate would provide many more ships, would create more trade, and would insure a far stronger addition to the American auxiliary navy.

The sum of $2,000,000 annually, it is estimated, would provide the proposed mileage subsidies to all the ships fit for auxiliary naval service and now regularly engaged in over-seas commerce under the American flag. An ocean mail expenditure of $3,000,000 a year, as I have shown to the Senate in previous years, would create splendid American ocean mail lines to South America, Australasia, and the Orient. All of these sums and undoubtedly larger sums would be required under the Government-ownership plan to equalize conditions on American mail and cargo ships against the competition of foreign ships and foreign Governments. And in addition many millions more would have to be taken from the Government Treasury to build or buy the ships which it is proposed that the Government shall own. Under that plan the Government would pay all the subsidies and run all the risks. Under the plan which I present the Government would pay the subsidies and would equalize conditions, but there it would stop; the risks and liabilities would have to be assumed by the steamship management and stockholders.

Though, as I have said, a majority of the Merchant Marine Commission in 1905, after its long inquiry, could not approve a revival of the historic plan of preferential duties, nevertheless I personally would not be averse to giving that plan a full and fair trial at the present time if no other plan could be adopted, and with that end in view I have offered a comprehensive bill along these lines. Certain it is that in our own national experience from 1789 for many years afterwards preferential customs and tonnage duties wrought a magnificent growth of the American merchant marine in foreign commerce. I realize, of course, that tariff and other conditions were more favorable then than now, and that there were no commercial treaties trammeling the maritime policy of the United States, but these commercial treaties have been and can be modified in many particulars. They can even be abrogated, and it may prove that they will have to be abrogated at the end of this war in order to give proper freedom to the maritime advancement of America.

After all, it is the object we seek—the restoration of our merchant shipping—which is the important consideration—a consideration so important that as patriotic citizens we must all approach the subject in an open-minded spirit of give and take. Preferential duties, with all their difficulties, are certainly far preferable to Government ownership and operation, to Government participation in a purely commercial trade.

The moment that the Government, with all its wealth and power, goes into the ocean steamship business, that moment there falls a paralysis on private enterprise and personal initiative; for no shipowners, however capable, no steamship corporations, however rich, would ever dare to enter the field of competition against the Congress and the Treasury of the United States. Success of the Government-ownership project means that ultimately the Government must own and operate all American ships in over-seas commerce, that, in other words, this trade must be a Government monopoly. To many, and I believe to a great majority, of thoughtful American citizens the adoption of Government ownership of ocean shipping will mean a threat of Government ownership and control of other great national industries and a violent departure toward blind and destructive State socialism, the end of which no man can now foresee.

Mr. President, as I suggested in the beginning, I will on tomorrow, or at the first favorable opportunity, take occasion to discuss the bill that is now before the Senate, and which I have only touched upon casually in the observations I have made to-day.

Monday, August 14, 1916.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on Friday last I addressed the Senate briefly on the history of attempted legislation by the Republican Party in behalf of the American merchant marine, and to-day I will occupy a little time in examining the salient features of the bill now under consideration.

Alexander R. Smith, of New York, a noted writer on maritime affairs, in a recent communication to the New York Sun, declares that the ostensible purpose of the administration shipping bill is to help restore American shipping to foreign carrying, but its real result will be to deliver over to foreign shipowners and foreign shipbuilders the control of our coastwise carrying, the cream of our domestic maritime business. "Everybody knows," says Mr. Smith, "and no one better than the administration, that to appropriate $50,000,000 with which to do a work that would require from $750,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 is to attempt the impossible, and yet it is doubtful if the last-named sum would suffice to replace with American ships the foreign ships now engaged in our foreign carrying."

And in this connection I want to say here and now that if this money is to be expended I want a part of it to go to New England, because I know that if this bill becomes a law the bankers of New England will not listen to any proposition to advance money for shipbuilding while the Government is in competition with them.

On that point I beg to quote from a letter just received from Mr. H. D. Cleveland, of the Boston Pacific Line, a gentleman who has had much to do with raising capital for shipbuilding purposes. Mr. Cleveland says:

At the request of the merchant marine committee of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, I wish to detail to you the facts in regard to proposed developments here in Boston as effected by the administration shipping bill.

This company, at present owning no steamers, has at great expense had plans drawn for a fleet of steamers to operate from this port through the Panama Canal to Pacific coast ports. The money for this development is available, but owing to the administration shipping bill and the uncertainties as regards the future in connection with the regulating features, and the menace of Government operation, we have been compelled to postpone our plans pending legislation in Washington.

The main difficulty encountered is in persuading our banking affiliations that we were not going to be so regulated that we could not at the start be sure of a successful operation, for those who have operated on the ocean know that the first year or two is very problematical until such time as the proposed service reaches its normal flow.

In connection with this development there are a group of men who have been interested in shipbuilding who were prepared to start a new yard if given the contract for building these boats.

Mr. Franklin, of New York, a gentleman who approves of some features of the pending bill, especially the provision which creates a shipping board, has pronounced opinions on the Government-ownership proposition. In a recent letter to me, Mr. Franklin says:

I am opposed to Government ownership; it will not create an American merchant marine, but simply establish services between certain specified ports, and would probably result in the withdrawal of the existing services between those ports, and create antagonism and jealousies in other ports. It would be impossible to interest capitalists in shipping, as they would be afraid that the Government might establish services in competition with them.

In a recent letter received from Mr. O. S. Dearborn, president of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co., I am told that that company is distributing its surplus earnings to its stockholders rather than applying them to new ships, in the belief that this bill, which Mr. Dearborn calls "the most vicious legislation that was ever attempted," is to be passed. Mr. Dearborn says that if his company believed that the Government would operate a service in our coast-to-coast trade, doing business at a loss, as they did with the Panama Railroad, rates being dictated by shippers, they would be derelict in their duty to their stockholders if they did not dispose of their fleet at the present fabulous prices being paid by foreigners, and he adds that they have just sold two new 9,000-ton steamers.

Facts like these ought to be of sufficient weight to defeat the bill, but evidently the eyes of Democratic Senators are closed to every consideration except that dictated by the President and indorsed by a Democratic caucus.

So far as I have observed, almost every leading newspaper of the country is in opposition to the proposed legislation.

The New York Herald aptly denominates the pending bill "An old snake in a new skin," and the New York Evening Post, in reviewing the optimistic utterances of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, alludes to him as "Col. Sellers reincarnated," both of which criticisms seem to be justified by the facts.

It is proper that I should call attention to the circumstance that in a referendum taken by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States there was an overwhelming majority of the members of the chambers of commerce and boards of trade of the country who declared themselves opposed to the principles of the administration ship-purchase bill.

In answer to the question, "Do you favor the Government undertaking the purchase, construction, or charter of vessels for mercantile purposes, together with the operation of such vessels," the vote was 600 against and 82 in favor.

In answer to the further question, "Do you favor the ownership of merchant vessels by the Government, and operation by private parties under lease," the vote was 711 against and 54 in favor.

In answer to the question, "Do you favor subsidies from the Government sufficient to offset the difference in cost between the operation of vessels under the American flag and under foreign flags in the deep-sea trade," the vote was 508 in favor and 186 against.

In answer to the question, "Do you favor subventions by the Government to establish American mail and trade lines to countries in which the commercial interests of the United States are important and to American dependencies," the vote was 718 in favor and only 18 against.

That certainly is a remarkable demonstration of the fact that the business interests of the country are absolutely opposed to the legislation now under consideration.

The New Orleans Association of Commerce had this matter under consideration, and made the following report:

Your special merchant marine committee begs to report as follows: We have considered House bill 15455, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, a measure known as the Alexander bill, "to establish a United States shipping board," etc.

It is our opinion that the association of commerce, through its board of directors, should go on record as reaffirming its position on this bill in line with its vote on referendum No. 9 of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

The vote of the association of commerce on this referendum was as follows:

1. The association of commerce voted as being opposed to the Government undertaking the purchase, construction, or charter of vessels for mercantile purposes, together with the operation of such vessels.

2. Opposed to ownership of merchant vessels by the Government, but with operation by private parties under leases.

3. In favor of subsidies from the Government sufficient to offset the differences in cost between operation of vessels under the American flag and operation in the same deep-sea trades under foreign flags, provided that the navigation laws of the United States can not be changed or some other way be found to accomplish the same purpose.

4. In favor of subventions from the Government to establish regular mail and freight lines under the American flag to countries in which the commercial interests of the United States are important and to American dependencies.

I want to repeat, Mr. President, that that was the action of the merchant-marine committee of the New Orleans Association of Commerce, which was approved by the board of directors of that great body.

The New Orleans Board of Trade (Ltd.), when the former bill was under consideration on December 29, 1914, declared as follows:

It would be a startling and dangerous step toward socialism, and, if the Government succeeded in starting on a small scale, it is difficult to foretell to what extent this dangerous precedent might lead.

The enactment of such legislation would be a serious blow to our American merchant marine, in that it would destroy the initiative on the part of private capital, and no one would think of attempting to build, buy, or operate merchant vessels in competition with the United States Government, and the private-owned vessels which are now under the American flag would, in our judgment, diminish to such an extent as to actually reduce the aggregate tonnage of the American merchant marine rather than to increase it.

We do not believe it would be a business proposition for the Government to engage in the steamship business, as, in our judgment, it would prove an expensive failure. We seriously doubt if, after the Government had taken 51 per cent of the capital stock of any corporation organized for the purpose of taking advantage of this bill, individuals would take the other 49 per cent. It is a well-known fact that the operation of the Panama Railroad steamers from New York has proved an expensive undertaking for the Government, notwithstanding they were in a better position to provide these ships with tonnage and passengers than any private corporation.

The Philadelphia Maritime Exchange, in a protest dated December 31, 1914, said:

That the proposed legislation would place the Government in direct and complete competition with a number of our citizens who, with investments of many millions of dollars, are engaged in a business essentially private in character and readily controllable both by competition and governmental regulation. No private enterprise, however capably and economically administered, where the management is accountable to its stockholders, can compete with the Government in the same industry where there is no such accountability.

Furthermore, the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange went on record as declaring its opinion that—

The ownership and operation by the Government of merchant vessels is a backward rather than a forward step, and will not only discourage but destroy all private initiative in the direction so earnestly desired.

Let me call the attention of Senators to the policy that France has recently adopted on this subject. A year ago a project for Government ownership of merchant shipping appeared in France, and at first commanded some signs of popular favor. But careful examination of the subject quickly destroyed all the support which the project had received. Minister of Finance Ribot and Minister of Marine Lacaze, whose approval of the measure was necessary, pronounced against the plan after having examined it, and the bill authorizing the State to purchase a merchant fleet of 50 ships was thereupon withdrawn from the Chamber of Deputies, being condemned as both ineffective and extravagant. In substitution for it a plan was prepared to aid French shipowners by careful loans of public funds to increase the number of their ships and to meet the emergency which the war had brought upon French commerce.

In the Commerce Reports of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce for February last there appeared a description of the new plan prepared by Mr. Charles W. A. Veditz, commercial attaché at Paris, who said:

A measure tending to strengthen our merchant marine should be passed without delay.

While the war lasts we may reap the advantages of being able to benefit French commerce by recovering, in part, the heavy tribute which we are paying to foreign shipowners in the form of marine freights.

After the war our maritime commerce will need a number of ships sufficient to insure a continuation of the services heretofore maintained by our companies and to make possible the organization of new lines. It is on this condition only that the economic life of France will be able to recover and to create large resources necessary for the work of national rehabilitation.

Our ports will be visited by a larger number of ships from now on, and the free play of economic laws will tend to lower the freights. Furthermore, the proportion of French tonnage in our foreign trade will be larger, and action by the Government, if demanded by circumstances, would be of greater effect in the domain of transportation.

The vicissitudes of war have reduced the effective strength of our merchant fleet. The strenuous service to which our ships have been subjected since August, 1914, the resulting wear and tear, the impossibility of reopening our shipyards before the termination of hostilities—all this compels us, if we would be ready in time, to obtain without delay a number of ships from other countries to replace those lost and to supplement those in active service.

In its earnest desire to improve the conditions under which the country procures its food supply, to stop the waste of the national wealth, and to secure the future of our merchant marine, the Government has examined various solutions proposed. It is of the opinion that the end sought can only be achieved by encouraging private initiative and giving aid to shipowners in order to induce them to buy ships in allied or neutral countries.

The granting, under proper guaranties, of loans repayable in annual installments, and the determination of a fixed sum to be paid as indemnity in case a ship so acquired should be requisitioned by the Government, are the measures which will best meet the present needs of the shipowners. There seems to be no doubt of the general utility of these measures, as the shipowners will be under the double obligation of keeping the ships so acquired as part of our merchant fleet for five years at least and of employing them in the French import trade until the crisis now prevailing in maritime transportation shall have moderated.

Some of the provisions of the proposed law are further stated by Mr. Veditz to be as follows:

Until the expiration of 12 months after the conclusion of peace the Government may invest a sum not exceeding 100,000,000 francs in loans to French shipowners, to cover a part of the sums necessary for the purchase of ships with mechanical propulsion, from citizens of allied or neutral countries. The interest to be paid on such loans shall be calculated at the rates charged by the Bank of France on loans on securities. Navigation companies possessing a fleet of 20,000 tons or more may receive 70 per cent of the purchase price; those possessing a smaller fleet 80 per cent.

After making provision for repayment by the shipowners the bill provides that Government experts shall inspect the ships, which must be seaworthy and in good condition. Article V indicates the formalities to be complied with by the shipowner desiring to obtain a loan, the shipowner being obliged, among other things, to give the State a first mortgage on the ship after it has been registered as French.

Article VI provides that in the case of a transfer of the ownership of a ship, made during the present war or within five years after the conclusion of peace, the owner shall pay a sum of money equal to the purchase price. He is under the additional obligation, until the expiration of six months after a treaty of peace has been signed, to carry imports intended for French ports only, though one-fourth of the cargo may be carried to allied or neutral countries. Similar provisions are made for owners of tugs and fishing vessels.

And, finally, the indemnity to be paid for ships so acquired when requisitioned by the Government shall be determined in accord with the prevailing charter rates, reduced by 15 per cent.

It will thus be seen, Mr. President, that the French Government, after fully discussing several suggestions that were presented proposing that the Government should enter upon the purchase of ships and should operate them under the terms that the Government might provide, decided them adversely, and that instead a large loan was authorized to be made to shipowners on very liberal terms, so as to increase the merchant fleet of France in that way.

ITALY HAS SCHEME FOR SHIP SUBSIDIES.

Only four days ago the New York Herald had a dispatch from Rome which is of very great significance in this debate. That dispatch says:

The ministry to-day—

That is, the Italian ministry—

The ministry to-day adopted the following measures designed to effect the building up of the national merchant marine and relieve shippers from the burdens of high freight rates:

Ships bought abroad by Italian citizens or companies within the next two years will be exempt from taxation for a period of three years. Ships built in Italy during the same period will be exempt from taxation for four years; the materials for such ships will be permitted to enter free of duty, and subsidies will be paid of $16 a ton on the hull and $20 on machinery.

Ships built under the provisions of the act will be liable, however, to requisition by the Government for one year, and such ships must also remain under Italian registration for five years.

The interesting feature of this proposition is the full provision for a direct Government bounty to Italian-built ships of $16 a ton on the hull and $20 on the machinery. Section 9 of the Government-ownership bill would then bring American shipyards into competition for the building of Government-owned ships, for both foreign and coastwise trade with Italian shipyards, which, under this provision, will receive from their Government, $80,000 on a ship of 5,000 tons and considerably more on the machinery.

Section 9, therefore, forces American shipyards into free-trade rivalry, so far as Government-owned ships are concerned, not only with foreign yards but with the treasuries of foreign Governments. France and Austria have similar provisions for direct Government bounties to ships built and engaged in native yards, and Japan has the same. This proposition, under the circumstances, may well be described as free trade run mad.

In the Commerce Reports of Friday last Commercial Attaché William C. Downs, writing from Rio de Janeiro, gives the following information concerning a subsidy for Brazilian coastwise navigation, which is deserving of very serious consideration. It shows that the South American countries are following the example of the great maritime nations of the world in subsidizing their steamships. Mr. Downs says:

According to the new contract between the Federal Government of Brazil and the State of Bahia, approved by the President of the Republic on May 31, 1916, an annual subsidy of 270,000 paper milreis (about $67,500 United States gold) is granted for the maintenance of coastwise steamer services from the port of Bahia. This subsidy is divided as follows:

1. For two round voyages per month between Bahia and Pernambuco, with stops at Estancia, Aracaju, Villa Nova, Penedo, and Macelo, 131,588 milreis ($32,897) for 22,224 miles.

2. For one round voyage per month between Bahia and Belmonte, stopping at Marahu, Rio das Contas, Ilheos, and Cannavieiras, 31,832 milreis ($7,958) for 5,376 miles.

3. For two round voyages per month between Bahia and Mucury, stopping at Ilheos, Cannavieiras, Porto Seguro, and other small ports, 106,580 milreis ($26,645) for 18,000 miles.

This service will be maintained by seven steamers.

It is true that the subsidy given by Brazil to its coastwise ships is not a very large one, but it nevertheless emphatically shows the difference in the policy of that Government and ours. Brazil subsidizes her coastwise ships, while we propose to open our coastwise trade to ships that under existing laws are not entitled to such privilege.

On January 30, 1915, a very interesting communication appeared in the London Spectator, as follows:

THE AMERICAN GOVERNMENT AS A SHIPOWNER.

To the EDITOR OF THE SPECTATOR:

SIR: Your correspondent, "A Jeffersonian Democrat," asks in his letter under the above title in the Spectator of January 16 whether there is any modern precedent for State ownership of a merchant marine. One is to be found in Australia, where the labor factions have had a good run of late. According to the Shipbuilding and Shipping Record of August 6 last, the Fisher government some two and a half years ago bought a steamer, the Stuart, from a private company for £10,400, and another £5,900 was expended in refitting her. She earned in two years £2,381, and was sold last summer for £6,200, the estimated loss of £10,000 falling on the shoulders of the electorate. Another State-owned steamer is the Western Australia, purchased in 1912 by the labor-governed State bearing the same name. She was bought for £39,500, and altogether cost about £73,000. The government was then trying to sell the ship for £45,000. There are, of course, other instances, particularly where a shipping company has been so backed up, subsidized, and financed by a State as to make the concern to all intents and purposes a State-owned company. One of this class is the Lloyd Brasileiro fleet, which the Brazilian Government put up for sale last year, without, however, finding a purchaser.

I am, sir, etc.,

SHIPOWNER.

(Our correspondent forgets an earlier precedent, the London County Council's attempt to run a fleet of passenger steamers on the Thames. The result is never mentioned in progressive circles in the metropolis.—Editor Spectator.)

That same paper, Mr. President, one of the great papers of Great Britain, in February, 1915, contained this editorial:

All over the world experience has shown that the intervention of the State in any particular industry frightens away private capital. American economists are fond of emphasizing this point when they contrast the American railway system, constructed by private enterprise, with the railways of India, constructed by Government enterprise. The disproportion of mileage is enormous, and far greater than can be explained by the difference, admittedly great, between the industrial conditions of the two countries. Therefore from the point of view of the British shipping industry we certainly hope that President Wilson will persist in this bill, which might be briefly described as a scheme for handicapping American commercial enterprise by State competition.

Under date of August 3, 1916, one of the great newspapers of this country, the New York Sun, contained an article headed "Net tonnage cleared largest in history—shipping total for fiscal year reaches 25,475,103." The entire article is as follows:

Merchant shipping, American and foreign, cleared from seaports of the United States 25,475,103 net tons for Europe, South America, Asia, Africa, Australia, and Oceania during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, was the largest in the history of the United States, notwithstanding the European war, the capture of the port of Antwerp, the closing of the Black Sea, the blockade of the ports of the central powers, the withdrawal of the German and Austrian vessels from trade, and the dangers from mines and submarines, according to figures compiled by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Up to the year just closed the greatest volume of clearances from the United States for the over-seas continents named was 24,872,403 net tons during the year ended June 30, 1914, just before the outbreak of the European war. Much of the tonnage in that year was space for passengers on ocean steamers, while during the fiscal year just closed such fast steamers to a large extent had been withdrawn from trade to serve as allied transports and hospital ships, and their places have been filled by cargo steamers.

American shipping cleared for the over-seas continents during the year just closed was more than threefold that in 1914, 2,448,305 net tons, compared with 745,242 net tons for the fiscal year 1914. The American net tonnage, a net ton being 100 cubic feet of closed-in space available for cargo or passengers, cleared from the United States for these continents in the years ended June 30, 1914 and 1916, the foreign tonnage so cleared, and the combined American and foreign tonnage were as follows:

	American.		Foreign.		Total.

During the past fiscal year our shipping facilities (net tonnage) for the export trade to Europe have been the greatest in our history, according to the report. Although the net tonnage in 1914 was a trifle larger—half of 1 per cent—much of that net tonnage in 1914 was for the passenger trade, as stated, which in 1916 was relatively small, and cargo space in 1916 was supplied to help meet the great volume of exports. During 1914 the American Line mail steamers to Southampton and the Red Star Line passenger ships to Antwerp were virtually the only American ships in trade with Europe; in 1916 American ships traded with the maritime nations of Europe, except Belgium and the blockaded central powers. The total tonnage clearances to France and Italy almost doubled, the clearances to Norway, Denmark, and Sweden more than doubled, and to Greece increased over threefold. The following summarizes the net tonnage clearances to European countries:

American shipping in trade with South America has developed more rapidly in the past fiscal year than in any other direction. The American tonnage cleared was almost five times greater than in 1914, and in trade with Argentina particularly the increase is notable. The withdrawal of foreign ships has been made good by increased American tonnage. The increase in total clearances is partly due, of course, to improved financial conditions in those countries, except Peru, and to the removal of the risk of destruction which checked trade with South America for some months after the outbreak of the war. The clearances for South America follow:

Destination.	American.		Foreign.		Total.

That article shows, Mr. President, that in spite of the war the tonnage cleared from American seaports in the foreign trade during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, was the largest in history, the American tonnage cleared in this over-seas trade being more than threefold that of 1914. This shows how much enterprise American shipowners have manifested in building or buying new shipping, or diverting all available vessels from the coastwise trade. It is particularly interesting to note that the American tonnage cleared in the trade with South America was also five times greater than in 1914. These are practically all freight carriers, however, and not in any case a regular line service. Such regular service can not possibly be established in time of war without subventions from the Government guaranteeing protection.

I have also, Mr. President, a most interesting article from a great American newspaper, the New York Journal of Commerce, of August 10, 1916, headed "Decline in World's Steamship Tonnage." The entire article is as follows:

Statistics showing the number and tonnage of steam vessels owned by the various nations of the world, contained in the new issue of Lloyd's Register, indicate that war losses and the curtailment of new production have caused a slight reduction in the total since the beginning of hostilities. The number of vessels listed under date of June, 1914, was 24,444, with an aggregate gross tonnage of 45,403,877, as compared with 24,132 of an aggregate gross tonnage of 45,247,724 on June 30, 1916. The sailing-ship tonnage totals 3,435,412 tons now, compared with 3,685,875 tons two years ago, pointing toward the fact that there has been little effort to supply new tonnage for that which has been lost, even though sailing ships have recently been operated with good profit.

The United States has made the greatest gain recorded by any nation, as shown by the figures. This increase has been confined entirely to ocean-going vessels, which have increased in number by 172 and in tonnage by 825,627 gross tons. To offset this increase there has been a slight decline in the number and tonnage of American lake vessels, some of which have been withdrawn for ocean service. The shipping of the Philippine Islands has also decreased somewhat. Taking these losses into consideration, the gain of the American merchant marine has been 147 steamships of 786,137 gross tons.

It is interesting to note that in spite of the fact that Norway has lost more ships due to war causes than any other neutral nation, she shows the second largest gain, amounting to 139 ships of 306,547 gross tons. Japan's increase has been less than might have been expected, measured by 48 ships of 139,067 gross tons.

It will be seen from the following table that the steam tonnage under the British flag has decreased by only 59,825 tons, the French tonnage by 71,166 tons, while Russian steam tonnage has increased by 23,197 tons, and Italian tonnage by 255,245 tons, so that, taken altogether, the allies have 147,451 tons more than in 1914, while Austria and Germany have lost 1,405,421 tons. That these figures do not represent accurately the relative position of the belligerents is to be inferred from the absence of definite information as to what ships Germany and Austria have been building, details of which will not be known probably until after the war ends.

The allies together own 27,292,011 tons, Germany, Austria, and Turkey 4,864,732 tons, and neutrals 13,090,981 tons. Great Britain still maintains a long lead over all rival maritime nations, as indicated by the Register, while the seagoing merchant fleet of the United States yields second place to Germany. The following table shows the number and tonnage of steamships owned in the countries listed on June 30, 1914, and on June 30, 1916, as recorded by Lloyds:

This article shows that, while the world's tonnage as a whole has fallen off, due chiefly to war depredations, American shipping on the ocean has increased from 2,026,908 tons, in 1915, to 2,852,535 tons, in 1916. This excludes, of course, the immense Great Lakes tonnage, the figures being those of Lloyd's. There is no nation, according to Lloyd's statement, which begins to show such a vast gain as our own country—all due thus far to private capital and private initiative.

ALMOST UNIVERSALLY CONDEMNED.

Mr. President, seldom has an important legislative proposal met with more overwhelming public objection than the measure of the previous Congress, now revived in the present bill (H. R. 15455), for the ostensible purpose of "encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and a merchant marine." Under this impressive title there has been cloaked a determined attempt to force the United States Government into the commercial shipping business—"a startling and dangerous step toward socialism," as a great southern mercantile organization has well described it. (New Orleans Board of Trade (Ltd.), 1915.) Under the sharp fire of criticism from all elements and sections of the country, and in the fear of another defeat, the bill has now been materially restricted and some of its capacity for harm reduced. But the principle of Government participation in trade and industry remains, some very unwise and obnoxious provisions have been added, and the bill as a whole is as deserving of defeat and rejection as the futile effort of a year ago.

These are the three main points of objection in the amended bill:

1. Government ownership and operation of merchant vessels.

2. Drastic and impracticable regulation of shipping freight rates.

3. Free admission to the coastwise trade of foreign ships cheaply built through low wages or bounties abroad.

Either one of these three policies would involve a grave menace to our merchant marine; taken altogether they constitute a virtual declaration of war by the Government of the United States on American shipbuilding and navigation.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP ALMOST UNKNOWN.

In the history of the world there is not one recorded example of successful government ownership and operation of a merchant fleet. Great Britain, Germany, Norway, and Japan—which of late years has shown the most notable maritime growth—have never adopted or contemplated such a departure, nor have the maritime powers of the second class, such as France, Holland, Sweden, Italy, Russia, Spain, or Austria.

These Governments have all aided private maritime enterprise by national credit or funds or other forms of official encouragement. But in time of peace or even in time of great emergency, when there has been public requisitioning of ships, they have not taken actual title of ownership or deliberately entered as Governments into ocean traffic.

For an instance of Government ownership and operation even in a halting and inglorious way, it is necessary to turn to the principality of Roumania, or to the colony of Western Australia, or to Brazil, which became a shipowner perforce through having to assume a fleet to which State aid had been unprofitably extended. And in all these instances the experiments proved disastrous.

Every strong and efficient merchant fleet in existence to-day under any flag on the globe is due to private capital and personal initiative. It is stated that the Australian Government has just purchased 15 "tramp" craft to convey staple products to Europe. But this is relatively a petty transaction, for several hundred large steamers would be necessary to serve the Australian trade, and the experiment is acknowledged to be conditional on the war and only a temporary expedient. Several single American shipyards now have under construction a much larger fleet than this improvised tonnage of Australia, where experience has brought sad enlightenment. The Shipbuilding and Shipping Record states that one of the Australian colonies bought a steamer "from a private company for £10,400 and another £5,900 were expended in refitting her. She earned in two years £2,381 and was sold last summer for £6,200, the estimated loss of £10,000 falling on the shoulders of the electorate. Another State-owned steamer is the Western Australia, purchased in 1912 by the State bearing the same name. She was bought for £39,500, and altogether cost about £73,000. The Government was then trying to sell the ship for £45,000."

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP HAS ALWAYS FAILED.

Wherever Government ownership and operation of a merchant shipping has been tried—and it never has been attempted except on a petty scale—the result has been insignificant or futile. Brazil a short time ago was reported as desiring to dispose of its Government-owned fleet but could find no purchaser. Roumania, which sends a few Government wheat ships to western Europe, has all told only 34 merchant steamers of a total of 56,164 tons. Brazil's steam tonnage, of only 302,513, or less than that of little Belgium, is steadily decreasing.

There is one Government steamship line under the flag of the United States—the Panama Railroad Steamship Co.'s fleet plying between New York and the Isthmus of Panama. This fleet was acquired as a part of the assets of the French Panama Canal Co., and has been operated by the War Department. An analysis of the three years' operation of the Panama Co.'s vessels for 1912, 1913, and 1914 shows that if the proper and necessary charges for depreciation and insurance on the six steamers of the fleet—such charges as private companies have to meet—had been made for these three years, they would have left a deficit in operations of $219,494. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 63d Cong., 3d sess., Feb. 17, 1915, pp. 3952, 3953.)

If an allowance of 5 per cent on the capital invested on the valuation of the six ships had been provided for, this deficit would have been greatly increased. Yet the Panama Railroad Steamship Co. was highly favored through that period in the carrying of Government supplies and official passengers and employees. The experience of the United States in this Panama Canal line has been such that no serious effort has ever been made or contemplated to increase the fleet or extend the service.

It is a sound axiom of business or of statesmanship that the National Government should not engage in business undertakings, which, under suitable conditions, can be conducted by private enterprise. The business of building ships and carrying mail, freight, and passengers by lake or ocean is satisfactorily conducted by private enterprise in every nation which has a merchant shipping worthy of the name. There is inherently no more reason or justification for forcing the United States Government to build and operate merchant ships than there is to force it to grow wheat or cattle or cotton, or to enter upon any form of manufacturing or selling ordinary merchandise. The plea that the United States must build and operate merchant ships because "private capital will not or can not do it," will not stand intelligent examination for a moment.

OUR SHIPPING—PROTECTED AND UNPROTECTED.

The merchant fleet of the United States on June 30, 1915, consisted of 26,701 documented vessels of a total of 8,889,429 gross tons. As the report of the Commissioner of Navigation declared, "In tonnage and value the merchant shipping under the American flag is surpassed only by that under the British flag, and in tonnage it equals that of any other two foreign flags combined except the British." Of this enormous American shipping the tonnage enrolled and licensed for the coastwise or domestic trade—that is, for the trade between one American port and another—included 23,903 vessels of 6,517,886 gross tons, while the shipping registered for the foreign trade—the trade with ports of other countries—included 2,794 vessels of 1,871,543 tons. The American tonnage registered for foreign trade is now upward of 2,000,000 tons, an increase of 100 per cent since the opening of the European war—but even this enlarged over-seas fleet is only less than one-fourth of our total merchant marine, when normally it should be, as it is with other nations, the greater part of the entire merchant tonnage.

Every maritime power has a coast fleet and an over-seas fleet, but our own country is the only one which shows such a contrast between home and foreign commerce. The reasons for this are not far to seek. In the first place, the United States has the most extended seacoast and the greatest system of lake navigation in the world. In the second place, the national policy for more than a hundred years has rigidly protected and encouraged domestic or coastwise shipping, while for 60 years it has left almost unprotected the over-seas or internationally competitive tonnage flying the Stars and Stripes.

One of the first acts of the first Federal Congress in 1789 imposed heavily discriminating tonnage taxes that were intended to and did bar foreign ships and seamen completely from the home coast trade of the United States. In 1817 the prohibition of foreign shipping in this home trade was made specific and absolute. By successive acts the noncontiguous possessions of Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico have been included in the coastwise legislation, and the great trade between our Atlantic and Pacific seaboard has always been kept beneath the American flag.

That part of our national maritime industry which has been thus so completely protected has grown and prospered beyond precedent. No other nation has a coastwise shipping comparable in size, enterprise, and efficiency with our own. British tonnage, steam and sail, engaged exclusively in the home trade of the United Kingdom in the year 1913—the last for which records are available—was only 869,090, or about one-ninth of the American coastwise tonnage of that same year, while 616,154 tons of British ships were engaged partly in home and partly in foreign carrying out of a total British merchant tonnage of 19,000,000.

The growth of protected American coastwise shipping has been more constant than that of any other shipping in the world. In the year 1860, before the outbreak of our Civil War, the two great divisions of our merchant marine were almost equal. There was in 1860 a total American tonnage of 2,379,396 registered for the foreign trade and a total of 2,644,867 enrolled or licensed for coastwise commerce. The over-seas branch of our merchant shipping—the registered tonnage—decreased with some fluctuations to a minimum of 726,213 in 1898, and then rose with some fluctuations to 1,066,288 in 1914. But the coastwise branch of our merchant shipping—the enrolled or licensed tonnage—advanced to 6,818,363 in 1914. In 1860 only a little more than one-third of the coastwise tonnage consisted of steam vessels, while in 1914 far more than two-thirds of the coastwise tonnage consisted of steam vessels. Assuming that one ton of steam shipping is as efficient for carrying purposes as three of sail shipping, the tonnage efficiency of the American coastwise fleet has increased from 4,000,000 in 1860 to 16,000,000 in 1914—a fourfold expansion, or a gain in coastwise tonnage far greater than the growth in the country's population, which has been about threefold in the same period.

This enormous growth of the coastwise shipping of America is all the more significant because it has occurred during an era of unexampled expansion of the great railroad systems of the United States, with a large part of which the coastwise shipping directly and sharply competes on the Great Lakes and on the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. It is manifest, therefore, that there is not the shadow of an excuse for government ownership and operation of merchant shipping so far as American coastwise shipping is concerned. This coastwise industry has splendidly justified the protective policy with which the fathers of the Nation surrounded it, and has abundantly met the needs of the American people.

WHY THE OVER-SEAS FLEET HAS DWINDLED.

The records of American over-seas shipping tell a very different and unhappy story. When the European war broke out in 1914 our total registered tonnage, as has been said, was only 1,066,288, or less than one-half of the 2,379,396 tons of 1860 and only a little greater than the 981,019 tons of 1810; that American over-seas fleet of the year 1810 conveyed 91 per cent of American imports and exports, while the fleet of 1914 was conveying only 8.6 per cent of our imports and exports, leaving a monopoly of more than 90 per cent of our own ocean carrying to the ships of foreign nations.

And here, Mr. President, I will take occasion to suggest that the records of American shipping, the over-seas and coastwise shipping of this great country, conclusively prove that if there is any need of an addition to the fleets of the United States, it is in the over-seas trade. The coastwise trade has all the ships it needs. It has given 4,000,000 tons of shipping to the over-seas trade during the past two years; and why any Senator who examines the record on this question should think it necessary to invade the coastwise shipping surpasses my comprehension. The ships will not be needed. If they are put into that trade they will displace ships already there, built by American capital in American shipyards, owned and navigated by citizens of the United States.

The reason for this singular disparity between our coastwise shipping and our over-seas shipping in the last 60 years—for the unexampled growth of one branch of our merchant marine and the appalling decrease of the other branch—may be summed up in the single phrase that, one was protected and the other was not. This fact is the real heart of the problem to-day of the American merchant marine. In the beginning the record of history shows that both the coastwise fleet and the over-seas fleet were liberally protected and encouraged by the National Government. At the same time when Washington, Adams, Jefferson, and Madison barred foreign ships out of the coastwise trade by heavily discriminating tonnage taxes, they took effective action to encourage American ships in the over-seas trade of the United States. By an act of July 4, 1789, a discount was allowed of 10 per cent of the tariff duties upon imports brought to this country in ships built and owned by American citizens, and by act of July 20, 1789, these same fathers of our Nation provided that American-built ships, owned by American citizens, should enter our ports with the payment of tonnage duties of 6 cents a ton, while 30 cents a ton were demanded from American-built ships owned by foreigners and 50 cents a ton from foreign ships built as well as owned abroad.

When this vigorous American maritime policy was adopted foreign shipping controlled our over-seas commerce almost as completely as at the present time. In 1789 American shipping registered for over-seas traffic amounted to only 123,893 tons, carrying only 23.6 per cent of our imports and exports. The stalwart protectionism of Washington, Adams, Jefferson, and Madison bore such prompt results that by 1800 American shipping registered for foreign commerce had increased to 667,107 tons, and the proportion of American imports and exports carried in American vessels had grown to 89 per cent. Discriminating duties and tonnage taxes had proved a successful declaration of maritime independence.

Under that policy American shipping continued to grow, even under the handicap of the Napoleonic wars and grievous impressment and embargo, up to the second war with England. At the end of that war, in the framing of commercial agreements where the United States was hopelessly overreached by the more wily and experienced diplomacy of Europe, the preferential policy of Washington and his compeers was set aside in favor of British ships trading directly between the United Kingdom and the United States.

Similar offers were made—unwisely, as it proved—to other maritime nations, but the preferential policy of 1789 remained in partial force, because our mistaken reciprocity was not immediately and generally accepted until the year 1850. Thus there was protection for American shipping in East India commerce, for example, against the British ships that were our most formidable competitors, until the wonderful development of the trade to California, the Crimean war, and other temporary causes gave the American merchant marine a powerful impulse in the first half of the decade preceding the Civil War. It is significant that when these temporary causes lost their effect and American over-seas shipping became for the first time virtually an unprotected industry the tonnage built in American shipyards fell off in a very swift and startling manner from 583,450 tons in 1855 to 156,602 tons in 1859 and to 214,797 tons in 1860.

It is often asserted, but it is not true, that the decline of American ocean shipping began with and was almost wholly caused by the Civil War of 1861 to 1865. That decline had begun before the Civil War. In 1845 and 1847 Congress, on the recommendation of Democratic Presidents, had granted mail subsidies, after the British example, to American steamship lines running to Europe, the West Indies, and the Isthmus of Panama. For a time American steam shipping registered for foreign trade increased more rapidly than British steam shipping—or, from 16,068 tons in 1848 to 115,045 in 1855. In one year, 1849–1850, the gain of American ocean steam tonnage was 113 per cent. American steam shipowners were as successful, so long as they received the encouragement of mail subsidies, as they had been in the building and operation of packet and clipper sail ships, and American steamers held the record for size, power, and speed on the great routes of the North Atlantic. But for reasons associated with the sectional quarrel between North and South that preceded the Civil War, the mail subsidies were reduced and finally withdrawn by Congress, and the American steamship services which ran out of northern ports were one by one abandoned before the firing on Fort Sumter.

OCEAN MAIL THE ONLY AID.

Since 1860 the American merchant marine in over-seas trade, as contrasted with the shipping in the coastwise trade, has been an absolutely unprotected industry except for the small encouragement given by the ocean-mail law enacted in 1891. This law grants to American steamships carrying the United States mails under contract with the Post Office Department a rate of compensation fixed according to speed. It has maintained for many years a weekly American mail line to Europe, which has proved of immense value to American commerce in the emergency of the present war, and other American lines to the West Indies, Mexico, and near-by ports of South America—and for most of the time in recent years a line across the Pacific to Australia.

Except on these four or five postal routes, American shipping in ocean trade has had no aid or protection whatever from the Government of the United States. As successive inquiries have always shown, the cost of building and operating an American ship, because of the higher wage scale and standards of living in the United States, has been substantially as much greater than the cost of building and operating a foreign ship as the cost of building and operating an American factory is greater than the cost in the case of a similar European factory. The protective tariff has compensated American manufacturing for this difference, but except in the case of the few ocean mail lines there has been no similar compensation for American shipbuilders, owners, and seamen. American shipping in the over-seas trade has remained since 1860—except on these postal routes—the only important American industry exposed to foreign competition and unprotected by our national laws. Other governments without exception have protected and encouraged their ocean shipping in some form or degree by mail subsidies or subventions or by tonnage subsidies or by bounties to shipyards or by preferential railway rates or the use of Government credit or Government favor in some other effective fashion. The lower wages and cost of maintenance of all foreign ships and the subsidies or other aids of some foreign ships have been allowed to drive the American flag almost entirely from the great trade routes of the world.

The American people are second to none in their native genius for shipbuilding and navigation. The growth of our Navy, the building of it and the manning of it by Americans have shown what could be done by men of our race under favorable conditions. The immense increase of the protected coastwise shipping, without an equal in the world, has also demonstrated the capacity of the builders, owners, and sailors of the United States, on the Great Lakes and on the ocean. In the protected coastwise and lake trades and on the ocean mail routes, capital and ships and officers and men have been forthcoming. It is only where Americans, unprotected, face a hopeless competition with the low wages or the subsidies and their equivalent of Europe and Japan that the Stars and Stripes have failed to hold their own. If private capital and enterprise have failed in the development of an over-seas fleet in the United States, it is simply because they have had no chance, they have had no protection and encouragement, they have not had a fair and equal opportunity.

Now, it is the irony of fate that the one American industry that has for many years been unprotected, that has had no chance under the national policy since the years before the Civil War, should be faced with the threat of Government ownership and operation. Just as the policy of this Nation, unlike the policy of any other maritime nation in the world, and unlike our own policy toward all other industries, has neglected and starved the over-seas shipping of this country, so this Government-ownership bill proposes to kill and extinguish what is left.

A BILL FOR DISCOURAGEMENT AND DESTRUCTION.

Instead of "encouraging, developing, and creating a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States," this proposed bill, in its effects upon our over-seas shipping, in its Government ownership and operation, and in its minute regulation of rates, is a scheme for discouragement and destruction.

A corporation or corporations, in which the United States is to be the majority stockholder, the total capital stock not to exceed $50,000,000, are provided for in section 11 of the bill to build, buy, lease, charter, and operate merchant vessels in the commerce of the United States. Such corporation or corporations are to be dissolved at the end of five years from the conclusion of the present European war. Thus the operation of merchant ships by the United States is to be made a temporary expedient, and there is a further limitation that these Federal shipping corporations shall not operate any vessel "unless the shipping board shall be unable after a bona fide effort to contract with any person a citizen of the United States for the purchase, lease, or charter of such vessel under such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the board."

These limitations are made a matter of much merit by the advocates of the proposed legislation, who are apparently afraid of their own expedient when they are brought actually face to face with it. But five years after the conclusion of the present European war may be a long time in the future—long enough to give a quietus to American enterprise in the over-seas trade of the United States. And in that trade at least the provision that the Government shall not operate ships unless private capital will not undertake it is nothing less than meaningless. It is known to all men that American shipowners have not been able to operate ships under the American flag in the foreign trade of the United States except on the mail routes, where a postal subvention has been paid, or in some other exceptionally favored service. Presumably they will not be able to do this when normal conditions have been reestablished.

The reasons for this inability of American shipowners to compete with foreign shipowners are also known to all men. Ships built on a higher wage scale and in smaller numbers in American shipyards cost more to construct than in the shipyards of Europe and Japan, all of which have low-paid and yet experienced and efficient labor, and some of which have the additional advantage of direct bounties from their Governments. But even when foreign-built ships are admitted to American registry, as provided in the Panama Canal act of August 24, 1912, and the emergency shipping act of August 18, 1914, American operation is still handicapped by the higher wage scale of the officers and men and other factors that make the maintenance of American ships more expensive.

Thus, W. R. Grace & Co., of New York, have reported early in this war that wages and food on a given steamship under the American flag amounted to $2,773 a month as compared with $1,991 under the British ensign. Nine steamers of the United States Steel Corporation transferred to the American flag paid $17,537 a month in wages to their crews under American registry as compared with $12,478 a month under British registry.

In addition, certain steamships under all foreign flags receive postal or other subsidies or bounties amounting annually to about $50,000,000. These and other forms of national encouragement are an added handicap upon American vessels in certain services, and of course are instantly forfeited if the foreign ships in question are acquired by American merchants and brought beneath the Stars and Stripes.

Low foreign wages and standards of living and foreign subsidies or their equivalent, not met by any similar aid under our own flag had well-nigh driven American shipping from the over-seas trade of our own country before the war began. These factors in a greater or less degree will inevitably reassert themselves when the war has ended. American shipowners then can not compete on even terms with their foreign rivals unless there is some change in our national maritime policy.

Under this bill, if enacted in its present form, the United States will then impose a new and heavy competition, and American capital and enterprise in ocean trade will have to face the wealth and power of the Federal Government. Between foreign low wages and foreign subsidies and bounties on the one hand and the Federal Treasury on the other it is not difficult to imagine what will become of the present American merchant marine in over-seas commerce—a marine that has risen since the war opened to 2,000,000 tons, 50 per cent larger than the entire fleet of France and almost equal to the large fleet of Norway.

A BAD SUBSIDY IN DISGUISE.

This proposed bill has been advocated as a substitute or alternative to subsidy. It has been accompanied by much denunciation of subsidies as unwise, unjust, and extravagant. Yet the bill is nothing more nor less than a very bad subsidy measure, grossly unfair, and ill-disguised. A subsidy may be granted frankly to all vessels performing real commercial service, or may be restricted to vessels of a stipulated speed and power performing certain special service, under contract awarded to the lowest bidder by the Government. The subsidy bills that have recently been before the Congress have all been of one form or another—chiefly of the latter form, confined to postal and auxiliary naval services. Such subsidy legislation, whatever may be the merits or demerits of the policy, has all aimed to embody at any rate a certain recognition of the principle of fair and even play for all concerned.

But the proposed bill is guilty on the face of it of the very worst evil of which subsidy legislation has ever been accused. It is a bill of rank favoritism and partiality. It creates in these Government owned and operated ships, that alone after the war can be maintained under the American flag in foreign trade, a special fleet singled out for Government support that is summarily denied to all private-owned American ships, whose owners with unusual vigor and courage have kept them afloat in ocean commerce in the face of Government neglect and grave economic disadvantages.

If this proposed bill is enacted, nobody will be able to own and operate American ships in over-seas commerce but the Government itself. These Government-owned ships will not be openly, but they will be none the less surely, subsidized by the Treasury of the United States. That $50,000,000 fund will provide the resources. No Government ship will be allowed to fail. If there is a deficit in its year's operations, due to unequal competition with foreign vessels that cost less to man and maintain, and in some cases enjoy foreign subsidies also, that deficit will be quietly made up out of the $50,000,000 fund. If a regular Government steamship service to South America comes out of the year owing the $500,000 which might have been a proper subvention for carrying the United States mails, the subvention will be paid out of this same fund without invoking a special act of Congress.

"But this subvention paid by the United States will go back to the United States Treasury," say the advocates of the scheme. Not necessarily. If there is any profit, almost half of it will go to the private investors, who may hold 49 per cent of the capital stock of the Government shipping corporations. Thus the proposed bill, with its loud protestations of single-minded devotion to the public weal, actually creates not only a small special class of subsidized Government-owned ships but a small favored class of subsidized shipowners, partners of the Government.

It is urged that under this bill if it becomes a law the United States will not enter into competition with private American capital on routes in foreign trade where regular American steamship lines have already been established. Let us assume that this will prove true; there is no assurance and there can be no assurance whatsoever that the Government-owned freight vessels of the "tramp" or general cargo type will not compete with the same class of private-owned American vessels all over the world. Fifty million dollars at present prices will provide perhaps 75 moderate-sized "tramp" steamers. The duty of these vessels is to go wherever there is a cargo to be carried. Under normal conditions the Government-owned "tramp," because it is virtually subsidized in being guaranteed against loss in any service, can invariably underbid the private-owned American "tramp," which is thereby completely driven from the field. Thus the American owner of a general-cargo steamship, already fighting hard against the cheap-wage foreign craft, will find himself under this bill confronted by a new and formidable antagonist—his own Government.

This is a matter of much importance at the present time, for within a few years a considerable fleet of "tramp" or general-cargo steamers has appeared under the flag of the United States. Many such craft have been built in American yards on lake or ocean. Others have been transferred from foreign registry under the act of August 18, 1914. This is a new and valuable evolution in the American shipping industry, but one particularly sinister result of the proposed bill would be to cripple if not destroy this new fleet, so essential to the prosperity of American farmers, miners, and lumbermen, whose products these ships are especially adapted to convey to distant markets.

It is a fact well established by testimony before committees of Congress that the introduction of this bill and the menace of Government ownership and operation embodied in it have discouraged the building of other American cargo steamers of this useful type, and have, therefore, instead of "developing" a merchant marine, distinctly prevented a gain which would otherwise have resulted from the efforts of private capital and enterprise. These cargo vessels, designed primarily for the protected coastwise traffic, are adaptable also for foreign voyages wherever there is need. Most of these already launched are now, and in these war years have been, engaged in over-seas service, transporting grain, cotton, provisions, coal, and lumber to all quarters of the world. A list published on July 19 by the Department of Commerce showed 196 American steamers, nearly all of the general-cargo or tank type, engaged in trade with South America, Europe, Africa, and Asia. (Commerce Reports, No. 168, pp. 227-229.)

REGULATION OF RATES.

No government of a maritime State in time of peace or of normal conditions has ever attempted to enforce the regulation of water-borne freight rates in the manner proposed in this bill. During the present war, because of the abnormal conditions which have accompanied it, some foreign Governments have endeavored to restrict freight rates, just as they have endeavored to restrict the prices of certain articles of merchandise. But these are all confessedly emergency measures—war measures—while this bill would make the regulation of shipping rates a permanent policy of the United States.

There can be no objection to prohibiting discrimination or extortion or other unfair practices in water-borne commerce, but these objects can be accomplished without forcing all common carriers, however small, to file their maximum charges and abide by them. In fact, the authors of this bill have shown sufficient respect for the sensibilities of foreign Governments and the comfort of foreign shipowners to exempt common carriers in over-seas trade, chiefly of foreign nationality, from the drastic requirement, enforced in full rigor upon American carriers in domestic commerce, of filing and keeping open for inspection all their "maximum rates, fares, and charges," which can not be increased except with official approval and after 10 days' notice. It is worthy of more than passing note and consideration that the great, wealthy, and powerful European steamship corporations, sustained by the subsidy or equivalent assistance of their Governments, which have long monopolized nine-tenths of the over-seas carrying trade of the United States, are discreetly released from compliance with these particular exactions which the framers of this bill impose upon the American owners of the humble alongshore carriers of our Atlantic and Pacific seaboard.

This filing of rates for Government inspection and regulation can be most easily complied with by the corporations operating regular-line passenger and freight services. They have, as a rule, their established schedules, while the all-cargo ships in the coast trade as a rule have had no fixed rates, but have actively competed with each other all the time for the carrying of any given merchandise, the business going to the lowest bidder, whoever he may be. Most of the inconvenience and loss attending this wholesale effort to regulate all American domestic water-borne freight rates from Washington will fall upon the thousands of smaller ships and the thousands of smaller shipowners whose vessels perform the great bulk of our coastwise carrying.

But even if the regulative system proposed were honest and equitable, bearing equally on the great corporation controlling a considerable fleet and the individuals of modest means who own in small shares one, two, three, or four vessels, the policy of endeavoring to regulate water-borne commerce in the same minute way in which railroad commerce is regulated must be open to very serious question in the minds of thoughtful men. There has certainly been no general complaint that coastwise freight rates on lake and ocean in America were discriminating or excessive. Such abnormally high rates as the European war has brought about have been in foreign or international and not in American domestic commerce. Our water-borne coastwise rates have all the time compared very favorably with the competing rail rates, and especially in the case of bulk cargoes on the Great Lakes have been classified as among the lowest, service considered, in the world. It is difficult to understand how the framers of this bill can justify their course in dealing so sharply with their own people and so leniently with foreign shipowners.

LAND AND SEA CONDITIONS DIFFERENT.

But any kind of regulation of water-borne traffic demands the most careful consideration, because of the vital difference in conditions between land and water carrying. A railroad has an exclusive right of way, the paralleling of which by a competing line is not an easy undertaking. But there can be no such thing as an exclusive right of way upon the broad surface of lake or ocean. Another ship or ships may appear at any time and underbid any ship or ships that may seem to have an established service. Cargo "tramps," of course, are competing all the time for transportation of almost all kinds of merchandise—ships that, like nomads, are here to-day and there to-morrow. A ship can not be subdivided, as a freight train can, into any number of units that may be required for the accommodation of the exact amount of freight to be handled at any given time. It is the habitual practice of water carriers everywhere to make a quick low rate to secure a tonnage that may be necessary to give a partly loaded ship the requisite stability or seaworthiness, nor can such a sudden change of rate rightly be regarded as "discriminative."

All the Governments in the world have instinctively recognized that the fluctuating conditions of ocean trade demand that water-borne commerce be kept as free as possible from all restrictions except those pertaining to safe navigation. As in the matter of Government ownership and operation, so also in this other matter of minute rate regulation the proposed bill marks a violent departure from the long-accepted practice of the maritime nations whose success has been most conspicuous and enduring. Like the feature of Government ownership and Government competition, this rate regulation imposes a new and heavy burden upon the American merchant marine, discouraging it and by so much encouraging its carefully fostered foreign competitors. Europe and Japan need have no occasion to dread the growth of a vigorous merchant shipping under the flag of the United States, so long as repressive policies like these are deliberately advocated by American lawmakers.

It is not remarkable, Mr. President, that that great London newspaper from which I quoted felicitates itself upon the fact that President Wilson is going to force through the Congress of the United States a law of this kind.

A DEADLY ATTACK ON COASTWISE SHIPBUILDING.

Nor are these the only directions in which the proposed bill is directly and bitterly hostile to the future of the American merchant marine. Section 9 of the bill as amended by the majority of the Committee on Commerce strikes at the very life of American shipbuilding by freely opening to foreign-built vessels for the first time in our national history the entire coastwise trade of the United States on lake or ocean. The bill as reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and passed by the House recognized the peculiar importance of reserving to American labor the construction of the ships destined to convey our American home trade, and barred from this trade all foreign-built vessels, even if owned and operated by the Government. But the patriotism and fairness manifested in this provision are utterly ignored in the bill as reported to the Senate, which admits to the entire coastwise trade not only all foreign-built vessels owned or operated by the Government but all foreign-built vessels which the Government may sell, lease, or charter to private individuals or corporations.

The policy of reserving the home trade of the United States to home-built vessels, as has previously been said, was deliberately adopted by the wise founders of our Government because of broad considerations of prudence, as is suggested in these words of Jefferson himself:

To force shipbuilding is to establish shipyards, is to form magazines, to multiply useful hands, to produce artists and workmen of every kind who may be found at once for the peaceful speculations of commerce and for the terrible wants of war. . . . For a navigating people to purchase its marine afloat would be a strange speculation, as the marine would always be dependent on the merchants furnishing them. Placing as a reserve with a foreign nation or in a foreign shipyard the carpenters, blacksmiths, calkers, sailmakers, and the vessels of a nation would be a singular commercial combination. We must, therefore, build them for ourselves.

Mr. President, those are the words of Thomas Jefferson, the patron saint of the Democratic Party, but the Democratic Party in the year 1916 has evidently forgotten those words and is proposing to do precisely what Jefferson declared would be a "strange speculation," passing over the building of ships to foreign Governments rather than encouraging the shipyards of our own country.

Washington's foresight, Jefferson's wisdom are thrown to the winds by the majority of the Committee on Commerce, who propose the destruction of the policy of the Fathers of the Republic through this new expedient by which foreign-built vessels purchased and operated by the Government or purchased by the Government and transferred to private firms and corporations can be introduced in wholesale fashion into the general coastwise trade of the United States.

Two years ago a similar attack upon the historic maritime policy of this country was proposed to the Senate, in an amendment to the emergency shipping bill at the outbreak of the European war, admitting foreign-built ships to American coastwise commerce. After some days of enlightening debate, the amendment was defeated on August 17, 1914, by a vote of two to one, a majority even of the Democratic Senators finally recording themselves in the negative, after earnest protests against the amendment had been received from the chambers of commerce and boards of trade of the principal seaports of the country and from thousands of skilled mechanics employed in American shipyards. What new light have Democratic Senators seen since then?

The situation has not changed since 1914, except that the largest fleet of ocean-going steel steamships on record is now under construction in this country—195, of a total of 1,037,000 tons. (Commerce Reports No. 173, July 25, 1916, pp. 310-311.) Not even the poor pretense that ships can not be had and are not being built in this country is now left to the champions of this extreme free-trade expedient.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN SHIPYARD WAGES.

Under normal conditions before the war it was a well-established fact that the cost of ship construction was greater in the United States than in Europe or Japan. This higher cost was placed in the report of the Merchant Marine Commission at 37 or 47 per cent on the average. (Report of the Merchant Marine Commission, vol. 1, p. 8.) The difference was due not to steel or to other materials, which as a rule were no higher in price in this country than abroad, but to the far higher range of American wages—higher by from 60 to 100 per cent—and also to the fact that foreign shipyards as a rule were kept more constantly employed and were thereby enabled to standardize their output and to achieve the economies that attend a large and steady volume of production.

Because of the war and its consequences the cost of foreign shipbuilding has increased to a point where it is comparable with the cost in the United States, but it is not believed anywhere by well-informed, practical men that these conditions will remain when the war has ended. For the present, and perhaps while the war lasts, it is not likely that the Government would find it advantageous to purchase foreign vessels and employ them in the coastwise trade or sell them to private shipowners or corporations for the same purpose. Indeed it is not probable that foreign vessels could now be secured at any price unless "interned" craft of belligerent flags were first sold to individuals or corporations of neutral nationality and then retransferred to our Government.

But nothing can be more certain than that when the war has ceased foreign-built vessels will be pressed upon the Government for employment in the foreign trade at prices which will admit of no American competition. Take Japan, for example. Her shipyards have had an extraordinary development. Her mechanics will work for 40 or 50 cents a day. All the ships produced by her yards are generously subsidized, and in addition a direct bounty, which has been in the neighborhood of $12 per ton, is provided for all new construction. Under these circumstances there is no room for conjecture as to what would inevitably happen, with free foreign-built ships provided by our Government in the coastwise trade, to the shipyards of the Pacific seaboard of the United States, including the yard that launched Admiral Dewey's flagship Olympia and the still more famous Oregon. All the Pacific coast shipyards, and the same fact is substantially true of the Atlantic coast shipyards, have been kept in existence for many years only by the demands of the coastwise trade, eked out by some spasmodic naval construction.

If the cheap wages, the bounties, and the subsidies of Europe and Japan can draw even this coastwise construction from American shipyards, the end of ocean shipbuilding in the United States is near and certain. And with the closing of these shipyards would vanish our ability to construct our American ships of war, except as the meager and already overtaxed facilities of a few Government navy yards could supply them.

Therefore section 9 of this bill, in the amended form in which it has been reported by the majority of the Committee on Commerce and is before the Senate, not only imperils the life of every American ocean shipyard but aims a deadly blow at the national defense. It is a proposal of incalculable value to foreign nations and of incalculable injury to our own.

If there were no other objection to the proposed bill, this section 9, with its violent attack upon the very foundations alike of the American merchant marine and of the American Navy, would demand the condemnation and defeat of the measure which thus assails the dearest interests of the American people.

NO LACK OF COASTWISE SHIPPING.

For the Government purchase and operation of foreign-built and other ships in the over-seas trade of the United States, the chief plea has been a lack of private-owned American vessels for the purpose. "American capital can not and will not," the country has been told, "buy or build ships for foreign commerce," and therefore the Government must undertake it. This plea is a poor, insincere one at best, for it ignores the very definite reasons why American capital in this international trade can not unaided compete with the lower wages, lower standards of living, and often the subsidies, bounties, or equivalent assistance of foreign Governments.

But so far as regards the protected coastwise trade of the United States, even this plea, poor as it is, is utterly impossible. American private capital, skill, and labor have gone into the coastwise trade of the United States on lake and ocean in such abundance and with such effect that the coastwise tonnage of this country is incomparably the largest and most efficient in the world. Up to the outbreak of the present war there was not, and could not be, the slightest pretense of any lack of American coastwise tonnage. Our enrolled and licensed shipping on June 30, 1914, amounted to 24,538 vessels, of an aggregate of 6,852,536 tons. The entire merchant shipping of the German Empire at that time, a month before the war, amounted to 5,459,296 tons, according to Lloyd's, and our domestic fleet was equal to the total tonnage of France, Norway, and Italy combined.

A proposal to force Government ownership and operation—including both Government and favored private ownership of foreign-built ships—upon the great American coastwise trade, which has grown beyond the growth of the country and met every demand of the domestic commerce of the American people, strips the mask off this proposed legislation and exposes the real purpose of its authors to compel at any cost a desperate experiment in State socialism, of a kind and degree unheard of among the nations of the world. This purpose is still further emphasized by the fact that while the bill as passed by the House permitted Government ownership and operation of even American-built ships in domestic trade only with the non-contiguous possessions of Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, and there only if the shipping board found such trade is not being adequately served by a regular line or lines of vessels, the bill of the majority of the Committee on Commerce now before the Senate provides for Government ownership and operation of both American and foreign built vessels in the whole coast trade indiscriminately—subject, indeed, to the stipulation of uncertain value that the Government itself shall not compete unless after a bona fide effort it can find no individual, firm, or corporation willing to purchase, lease, or charter a given vessel under terms and conditions which the Government prescribes.

A SHIPPING BOARD.

To one feature of this bill, providing for the establishment of a Federal shipping board, there can in itself be no objection. It is probably true that the usefulness of such a board is increased by the omission from it, in the Senate form of the bill, of two already busy members of the Cabinet who would not necessarily have any direct personal acquaintance with maritime problems or conditions. This board is entrusted in section 13 with the authority to investigate in a broad way the whole question of the merchant marine in the foreign trade and of the navigation laws of the United States. But all promise of large beneficent results from such an investigation, undertaken in the proper spirit, is nullified in practice by those other sections of the bill which compel the board to direct the Government ownership and operation of merchant ships through Federal corporations, and so forth, and the minute regulation of the freight rates and practices of common carriers.

If the regulation of the rates and practices of railroads has overtaxed the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, how can this new board be expected not only to perform the same detailed, laborious work toward shipping, but at the same time be responsible for the purchase, maintenance, lease, charter, and sale of merchant ships and an examination of the whole vast subject of our navigation laws and policies? It must be manifest that the new board is hopelessly overloaded at the very outset. Inquiry into our maritime industry, its strength and its weaknesses, with a view to recommending sound and effective legislation and a well-defined supervision of the merchant shipping of the country, would be a sufficient task to set for five commissioners of large ability and experience.

Government ownership and operation, minute regulation of freight rates, and an "entering wedge" of foreign invasion of our coastwise commerce make the entire bill obnoxious to the spirit of American fair play and destructive of hope of American shipbuilding and navigation. Such a proposal at this critical hour in the affairs of our own and of other nations demands the united opposition to the very last of all who honor the wisdom of the fathers of our Government and believe in the principle of protection to every great national industry, alike on land or sea.

Mr. President, in connection with my remarks I ask to have printed as an appendix the very interesting and instructive report of the special committee on merchant marine of the Boston Chamber of Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE OF THE BOSTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

A concise account of the rise and decline of our over-seas shipping industry is helpful to a right understanding of the present-day problem of the American merchant marine. This problem relates wholly to that part of our merchant marine that is engaged in the external trade of the United States—the trade with the ports of foreign nations. The home trade of the United States on ocean, lake, or river has been reserved to American vessels ever since the founding of the Federal Government. Under this policy our coastwise tonnage has grown steadily from 68,607 in 1789 to 6,852,536 in 1914. This is incomparably the greatest coastwise shipping in the world, greater than the entire coastwise and over-seas tonnage of the German Empire, or equivalent to threefold the entire tonnage of France or Norway, and fourfold the tonnage of Japan. American coastwise navigation is a well-developed and reasonably prosperous business, a trade of vigorous competition, dominated by no trust or monopoly, and steadily and swiftly growing. It needs no more national encouragement, and it asks none.

But with the shipping registered for trade overseas it is very different. Normally, this should be by far the larger proportion of our merchant marine; actually, it has shrunk to such relative insignificance that on June 30, 1914, one month before the outbreak of the European war, our shipping registered for foreign commerce amounted to only 1,066,288 tons, or less than one-sixth of our home-trade shipping.

More than a century ago, in the year 1810, the United States, with only one-fourteenth of the population of to-day, had 981,019 tons of shipping registered for foreign commerce, and was carrying under its own flag 91.5 per cent of its own imports and exports. In the fiscal year 1914 American ships conveyed only 8.6 per cent of our imports and exports.

This very great expansion of our coastwise shipping, even against the intensifying competition of the railroads, stands in sharp contrast with the long decline of our over-seas shipping, and is manifestly to be explained by the fact that in the one trade it is American against American, with substantial equality in wages and other conditions, while in the other it is American against foreigner, with the overwhelming advantage of lower wages and requirements and certain powerful forms of national assistance on the foreign side.

EARLY SHIPPING LAWS.

Though Americans of the colonial period won success as shipbuilders and seamen, the effect of the Revolution was such that at its end, in "the critical period of American history," most of our over-seas carrying trade fell into the hands of British shipowners. Our entire merchant fleet registered for foreign commerce amounted to only 123,893 tons in 1789, and only 23.6 per cent of our own trade was being conveyed in American vessels. In other words, the condition of the ocean shipping business of this country, when the Federal Constitution was adopted and Washington became the first President, was not very unlike its condition at the present time.

Washington, Adams, Jefferson, and Madison all joined in urging immediate relief for the merchant shipping industry, and the very first act of the First Congress under the new Constitution, passed on July 4, 1789, "for the support of the Government, the discharge of the debts of the United States, and the encouragement and protection of manufactures," contained an important clause allowing a discount of 10 per cent of the tariff duties on all goods imported in ships built and owned by American citizens. Moreover, on tea imported direct from the East Indies in American vessels a further and far heavier rebate was provided, and the third act of this new Congress, on July 20, 1789, gave American vessels a marked preference in tonnage duties and virtually barred foreign vessels from the coastwise trade. In 1794, in place of a discount of 10 per cent was added to the duties on goods imported in foreign vessels—a change of method, but not of principle. There was no sectional or party division over this early legislation for the encouragement of the American merchant marine. Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia, then Secretary of State, wrote in 1794, "To force shipbuilding is to establish shipyards; is to form magazines; to multiply useful hands; to produce artists and workmen of every kind who may be found at once for the peaceful speculations of commerce and for the terrible wants of war."

SUCCESS OF THE PREFERENTIAL DUTIES.

These laws of the founders of our Government, so frankly and strongly preferential to American shipping, instantly destroyed the British monopoly of three-quarters of our ocean carrying. As a historian of the period has well said, "The growth of American shipping from 1789 to 1807 is without parallel in the history of the commercial world." American tonnage registered for over-seas commerce increased at once from 123,893 in 1789 to 346,254 in 1790, 363,110 in 1791, and 411,438 in 1792. It was at this time and under this policy that Boston and Salem laid the foundations of their great East India commerce. The proportion of our total imports and exports carried in American ships rose from 23.6 per cent in 1789 to 40.5 per cent in 1790, to 55.9 per cent in 1791, and to 64 per cent in 1792. By 1795 no less than 90 per cent of our commerce was conveyed in American vessels. Foreign flags, which a few years before had dominated our commerce almost as completely as they do to-day, well-nigh vanished from our ports of the North Atlantic. In 1800 there were 667,107 tons of American shipping registered for over-seas voyages, and in 1810, 981,019 tons.

This wonderful growth of our ocean fleet was achieved in spite of European impressment and embargo through the power of wise laws which made it advantageous for American merchants to employ American vessels whenever they had occasion to bring goods from foreign lands—and preferring these ships for the import trade, they naturally utilized them for the export trade also. Thus assured of constant employment, American shipowners, building many vessels in succession from the cheap and abundant timber of the Atlantic coast, developed models that combined capacity with speed, and American officers and crews navigated them with the utmost skill and daring. National encouragement of this maritime industry had quickly produced a smartness and efficiency, the like of which the world had never seen.

MISNAMED "RECIPROCITY" AND ITS RESULTS.

So confident had our statesmen grown of the superiority of American ships under any circumstances that in a commercial convention with the British Government, framed shortly after the end of the naval war of 1812-1815, the United States withdrew its preferential duties as against British ships in the "direct" trade with the United Kingdom. Moreover, under pressure from inland and agricultural interests our Government, through commercial treaties and acts of Congress, gradually withdrew the shipping preference from other trades, though this was not completely effective until 1850, against our chief competitor, Great Britain. These "reciprocity" acts were passed in the face of the earnest protests of the merchants and shipowners of the coast, who best understood the situation.

American shipping continued to grow slowly up to the Mexican War period, but there was not again such a marvelous expansion as that of 1789-1810. In 1832 a tonnage of 614,121 was registered under the flag of the United States, carrying 83.1 per cent of our imports and exports; in 1845, a tonnage of 904,476, carrying 81.7 per cent. Foreign vessels were figuring more largely in our over-seas trade, but, on the other hand, our ships were conveying a part of the trade of other nations.

Just how reciprocity on the sea would have resulted in the long run can not be known, for it soon proved that it was not real reciprocity at all, but something very different and delusive. The United States in entire good faith, in the years between 1815 and 1850, entered into commercial agreements with foreign Governments that ships of either nation should be admitted on terms of equality into the ports of the other so far as tariff and tonnage duties, etc., were concerned. In other words, the preference or encouragement which Washington, Adams, Jefferson, and Madison had given to American shipping was step by step abandoned. One result was that British ships, manned at a lower wage scale, increased nearly 400 per cent in our own ports between 1831 and 1840, while our own ships gained but 40 per cent in all the ports of the world.

BRITISH SUBSIDIES TO STEAMSHIPS.

This was while the competition was with sail ships, wooden built, on either side. But just before 1840 the British Government began to invoke a new form of encouragement. In 1834 a subsidy of $85,000 a year was given to the Rotterdam and Hamburg steam packets of a British company, and another subsidy of $150,000 to the packet service to Gibraltar. These British royal payments were found to be so valuable in their influence on the new art of steamship and engine building in the United Kingdom that in 1838 another and much larger subsidy was offered for a British steamship service across the North Atlantic. In the year following a subsidy of $425,000 a year was secured by Samuel Cunard for a steam line from Liverpool to Halifax and Boston. "It is beyond question," declares James Russell Soley, the historian, "that the sum paid to the Cunard Co. in its early days, amounting to about 25 per cent per annum on the cost of the running plant, and subsequently increased to $550,000, to $750,000, and to $850,000, was clearly a subsidy; that it was given with the plain intention of establishing firmly in English hands, the trans-Atlantic traffic, and that it accomplished the desired result."

Other British subsidies quickly followed the Cunard—to the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., for lines to the West Indies, Brazil, and Argentina; to the Pacific Steam Navigation Co., for a line to the west coast of South America (this was established by an American, William Wheelwright, of Newburyport, who had first sought a subsidy in vain in Washington); to the Peninsular & Oriental, for lines to the East Indies; and to other companies in all quarters of the world. In a few years British subsidies totaled $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 annually.

The United States had been outwitted by British diplomacy and statesmanship. First, the preferential policy of Washington and his colleagues had made American shipping the most prosperous in existence. "That starved flag," the London Times lamented, "is now conspicuous on every sea, and will soon defy our thunder." But we were adroitly persuaded to lay aside the weapons that had served so well, and when we had bound ourselves by solemn treaty no longer to employ them the British Government introduced the new and potent expedient of subsidy, which the treaties and agreements did not forbid.

AMERICA ADOPTS SUBSIDIES ALSO.

This new departure did not pass unchallenged in the United States. It is almost forgotten now, but it is a fact of record that the American Government for a time resolutely met subsidy by subsidy and was brilliantly successful in the contest. It was an American, Fulton, who created the first efficient steamboat, in the Clermont of 1807. Steam craft came into immediate use on rivers, sounds, and bays here, and in 1830 appeared in the ocean coast trade. Ericsson, with his screw propeller, was rebuffed in England, but received and honored here, and in 1841 the first seagoing screw steamship was built for an American line from New York to Habana. At that period, when the Cunard subsidies began, the United States was clearly ahead of Great Britain in steam navigation. Moreover, ships had begun to be built of iron here; the Bangor, for example, for New England coast service, in 1844. American ingenuity and enterprise were as quick and competent to deal with steam as with sail, with metal as with wood. The idea that iron steamships could not be built in the United States before the Civil War is the invention of malice or of ignorance.

It is a profoundly significant fact that the initiative in the movement to meet British steamship subsidies by American subsidies was taken by southern men who were Democrats in national politics. Senator Thomas Butler King, of Georgia, was the pioneer. In 1841, soon after the first Cunard steamers had reached the United States, he began to advocate in Congress the granting of mail subsidies, no less liberal than the British, to put the American flag into equal competition. "British statesmen," he said, "are resolved to monopolize the intercourse between America and Europe. Of all the lines of sail packets which cross the Atlantic not one is owned in Europe, and it is not to be doubted that American merchants, properly encouraged, will assuredly excel in them (steamship lines) as they have done in sailing vessels."

President Polk, a southern man and a Democrat, advocated subsidy legislation in his message to Congress. "The national policy," he said, "by which a rapid communication with the various distant parts of the world is established, by means of American-built steamers, would find an ample reward in the increase of our commerce and in making our country and its resources favorably known abroad"—but President Polk went on to argue that the national advantage was "still greater of having powerful steamships available for war," and "having the privilege of taking the ships already equipped for immediate service at a moment's notice." This, he declared, "will be cheaply purchased by the compensation to be paid for the transportation of the mail over and above the postage received. A just national pride, no less than our commercial interests, would seem to favor the policy of augmenting the number of this description of vessels."

THE COLLINS AMERICAN LINE.

So a southern Democratic President wrote, and a Democratic Congress acted on his recommendations, the project being supported by Members of Congress without regard to party distinction. A subsidy of $200,000 was granted to a new American steamship line to Havre and Bremen—less than half the sum paid to the Cunard line, and the American ships were larger. This was under the ocean mail laws of 1845 and 1847, by which additional American steamship services were established to the West Indies, the Isthmus of Panama, and up the Pacific coast to Oregon.

In 1847 a contract was concluded by our Government with the head of the celebrated Collins line of trans-Atlantic steamers for a subsidy of $385,000 a year. When Mr. Collins built steamships much larger and more powerful than the Cunard ships his subsidy was increased to $858,000 a year—the Cunard Line was then receiving $856,000 from the British Government. This new American line began under the brightest auspices. Its steamers beat the Cunard steamers regularly in passages from land to land and secured the bulk of the first-class passenger traffic. Moreover, as Lindsey, the historian of British shipping, said, "Before the Collins Line was established, the Cunard steamers were receiving £7 10s. sterling per ton for freight, which was so much a monopoly rate that in two years after the Collins Line had commenced the rate of freight fell to £4 sterling per ton." Under the impulse of the mail subsidies American ocean steam shipping rose from 16,068 tons in 1848 to 115,045 tons in 1855. As Dr. David A. Wells says of the period:

"During the single year 1849-50 we increased our ocean steam tonnage 113 per cent, and the seagoing qualities and performances of our vessels were so admirable that the Cunard Co., which had then been in operation 10 years, was obliged to bring out new ships to compete with them. The prospect, therefore, at one time was that the United States, although late in the start in this new department of foreign shipping, would soon equal, if not overtake, her great commercial competitor."

It was an era also of immense expansion in the sail shipping of America, due to a succession of extraordinary causes—the famine of 1847 in Ireland and an abnormal demand for foodstuffs in Europe, the gold rush of 1849 to California, and the Crimean War of 1854-1856. The famous American clippers, built particularly for the California and China trade, belonged to this era, when in 1855 no less than 583,450 tons of shipping, including 381 ships and barks, were launched from American yards.

LOSING OUR SHIPS BEFORE THE WAR.

In that year, 1855, the American merchant marine in over-seas commerce reached its climax. There set in immediately a sharp and startling decline—six years before the Civil War. Though the tonnage nominally registered for foreign carrying did not immediately show a decrease, shipbuilding fell off from 583,450 tons in 1855 to 156,602 tons in 1859, and rallied only to 214,797 tons in 1860. This heavy shrinkage in the product of the shipyards indicated that six years before the first shot was fired at Fort Sumter grave discouragement and disaster had befallen our merchant marine. This historic fact is exceedingly important to remember, because it has so often been asserted that the loss of our ocean shipping began with and was wholly due to the great war between North and South. The records of shipbuilding afford conclusive proof that the decline had set in long beforehand.

The causes of this decline were in part economic, but in much larger part political. It has often been alleged or assumed that the change from sail to steam and from wood to iron gave Great Britain, our old and formidable rival, an overwhelming advantage over the United States. But the United States in 1855 had long been building steamships for coastwise navigation; some of these were iron ships, and American-made iron was declared by architects and engineers to be the very best for maritime construction. There were iron shipbuilding plants at New York and Philadelphia and, before 1860, at Boston. It was a period of low tariff for revenue only, and the high customs and internal-revenue taxation of the Civil War, that undoubtedly for a time did burden the shipbuilding industry, had not come into existence. Americans were naturally as adept at ironworking and at boiler and engine building as their British kinsmen—a fact soon to be demonstrated to all the world by the great armor-clad fleet of the Federal Navy.

Great Britain in 1855 was manufacturing more iron than the United States, and to a certain degree the transition from a material of which the United Kingdom produced almost none at all to a material which it possessed in particular abundance was a benefit to British yards, but it was by no means a conclusive factor. There was enough iron of admirable quality in America for the construction of great fleets of ships. For the main cause of the decline of our ocean shipping from its climax of 1855 to the outbreak of the Civil War it is necessary to look in quite a different direction.

AMERICANS AHEAD IN STEAMSHIPS.

Rivalry between American and British ocean steamship lines on the north Atlantic from 1850 to 1855 had demonstrated that the Yankees were as skillful in engineering as they had long been in seamanship. Capt. McKinnon, of the British Navy, after voyages of observation in both the Collins and Cunard liners, reported to his Government that "there are no ocean steamers in England comparable with the (American) Baltic."

But there was one serious weakness in the situation. All of the new American ocean steamers were built in the North, owned and manned by northern men, and registered at northern seaports. The sectional slavery feud between the States was growing more and more bitter every day, and southern men were in control of Washington. These ocean steamships, maintained by subsidy from the National Treasury against their equally subsidized British rivals, were a formidable addition to the commercial and naval power of the North. For the same reasons why the strengthening of the Federal Navy was suspended, the mail subsidies were taken away from the great successful American ocean steamship services in the very crisis of their contest with their British competitors.

OUR SHIPPING THE VICTIM OF SECTIONAL ATTACK.

This was done, after a memorable struggle, in 1856 and 1858, under the direction of several distinguished southern men—Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi, afterwards President of the Confederacy; R. M. T. Hunter, of Virginia, afterwards Confederate secretary of state; S. R. Mallory, of Florida, Confederate secretary of the navy; Robert Toombs, of Georgia, a leading member of the Confederate congress and secretary of state; Judah P. Benjamin, of Louisiana, Confederate attorney general; and J. M. Mason, of Virginia, well remembered with Mr. Sildell as Confederate envoy to Europe.

These able and eminent southern statesmen doubtless believed that they were serving vital interests of their own people, but not all of their own section coincided in their action. Though they received some help from agricultural States of the West and Southwest, Senator Bayard of Delaware eloquently protested against the abandonment of American steamship enterprise as a surrender to the British Government, and the action of Congress in withdrawing the subsidies was generally condemned by men of all parties in the North as blindly sectional and disastrous.

HOW BRITISH SUBSIDIES WON.

Disastrous, indeed, it quickly proved. When, in 1856, the southern lawmakers reduced the Collins mail pay from $858,000 to $385,000—the British Cunard ships were then receiving $856,000—the managers of the chief American line to Europe refused to give up the fight and struggled on for a time. But the odds were hopeless and they were forced to quit the field. Their largest ship, the splendid Adriatic, was sold to a new British subsidized line from Galway and held the Atlantic record under the British flag. One by one the other American Atlantic lines succumbed, and when Commodore Vanderbilt, with all his wealth and genius, attempted to compete with the British subsidized lines he was unable to withstand the treasury of the British Government. When the Civil War opened in 1861 only occasional American steamships were running to Europe. British subsidies had won the fight.

The Collins Co. had lost two steamships by wreck and its failure is sometimes attributed to this misfortune. But many more ships were lost by the British Atlantic lines. The Royal Mail had seven steamers destroyed in quick succession. But the British Government, instead of abandoning the Royal Mail, stood by it more resolutely than before and enabled it to build new ships and maintain its service.

Perhaps the greatest New York merchant and shipowner of this time was A. A. Low, Esq., the distinguished father of Hon. Seth Low, formerly mayor of New York and president of Columbia University and now president of the New York Chamber of Commerce. The elder Low, in a formal statement to Congress, speaking as an eye witness thoroughly familiar with the facts, declared:

"I only know the English have always, in peace and war, manifested a determination to hold the supremacy on the ocean and the supremacy which they acquired by arms in war they have in peace acquired by subsidies. They have deliberately and intentionally driven the Americans from the ocean by paying subsidies which they knew our Congress would not pay. * * * They have driven us from the ocean by that policy just as effectually as they ever did drive an enemy from the ocean by their guns."

Great Britain, in 1860-1, was expending $4,537,223 in the encouragement of steamship building and mail communication with all parts of the world. France, following the British example, in 1858 offered subsidies of $620,000 a year for a line from Havre to New York, $940,000 for a service to Brazil, and $1,300,000 for a service to the West Indies and Mexico. Germany, at about the same time, began to subsidize the North German Lloyd on the routes from which the swift American ships had disappeared. The slavery feud had killed the American merchant marine in trans-Atlantic commerce.

EFFECTS OF THE CIVIL WAR.

After the destruction of our trans-Atlantic mail lines came the Civil War. Anglo-Confederate cruisers between 1861 and 1865 burned or sank 110,000 tons of American shipping and drove 751,595 tons under foreign colors; nearly one-third of our whole fleet registered for over-seas carrying. This ocean trade fleet, which had amounted to 2,496,894 tons in 1861, controlling 65.2 per cent of our imports and exports, had shrunk to 1,387,756 tons in 1866, controlling only 32.2 per cent of our imports and exports.

For a while after the war our ocean shipping actually increased. Shipowners and builders would not surrender without another effort. Our registered tonnage in 1867 reached 1,515,648 and remained at or near the same figures for a decade thereafter—the total registered tonnage in 1878 was 1,589,348. But in this same period the proportion of our imports and exports carried in American vessels had steadily decreased from 33.9 to 26.3 per cent, and after 1878 both total tonnage and proportionate carrying fell together, reaching a tonnage minimum of 726,213 in 1898 and a proportionate carrying minimum of 8.2 per cent in 1901. From 1898 onward there has been a gradual, though not constant, increase in our registered tonnage to the 1,066,288 tons of 1914. But this increase is more apparent than real, for it includes a considerable fleet of vessels employed in the long-voyage coast trades, like that via the Panama Canal. These vessels and others passing near or by foreign ports sail under register instead of enrollment, for purposes of safety and convenience. There was virtually no real increase up to the opening of the present European war, in the proportion of our imports and exports carried under the American flag. From 8.2 per cent in 1901 this rose to 12.1 in 1905, but fell again to 8.6 per cent in 1914. The development of American ocean shipping when this great war started was substantially where it had been 16 years before.

THE OCEAN MAIL LAW OF 1891.

From 1865 to the present time Congress has refused to adopt any vigorous and comprehensive measure for the relief of American shipping in over-seas commerce, though a cautious and, as it proved, inadequate mail-subsidy system was established in the ocean mail act of March 3, 1891. As passed by the Senate, this provided both subsidies for postal lines and bounties for cargo vessels, but the bounty feature was rejected and the proposed mail rates were heavily reduced by Middle Western insistence in the House of Representatives. The legislation was so crippled that its authors despaired of any definite results, but even with its lowered compensation the act of 1891 has proved to be of substantial value to the American merchant marine.

It was this legislation which made it possible for the International Navigation Co. to undertake in 1895-96 a weekly service in American steamships from New York to England and France, the New York and Philadelphia being specially admitted to American registry for this purpose, while the St. Louis and St. Paul were built in the Cramp shipyard, in Philadelphia. These four swift ships were of great value as auxiliary cruisers in the Spanish War. Though the company controlling these steamers has several times signified its willingness to build new ships equal to the best on the Atlantic if the United States Government would enter into an agreement equivalent to that of Great Britain with the Cunard Co., no action has been had, but the weekly mail service to Europe is maintained with great regularity by the existing steamers, and this has been of much advantage to our Government and our merchants throughout the present war.

The ocean mail act of 1891 maintains also the Ward Line of American steamers from New York to Cuba and Mexico, the Red D Line from New York to Venezuela, and the Oceanic Line from San Francisco to Australasia. Total expenditures under this act in the fiscal year 1914 were $1,089,361, of which $673,998 was received by the American trans-Atlantic service. Every great maritime nation spends much more for mail subsidies than our own—even Canada two or three times as much annually.

THE MERCHANT MARINE COMMISSION OF 1904-5.

Congress in 1904 authorized a Merchant Marine Commission of five Senators and five Representatives, of which Senator GALLINGER, of New Hampshire, was chairman, to make a new and thorough investigation of the ocean shipping question. This commission published its report in 1904-5, recommending national encouragement to regular steamship services to the West Indies, South America, South Africa, Australasia, and the Orient, and the granting of tonnage subsidies to cargo vessels. A bill carrying these provisions passed the Senate, but the subsidy to cargo ships was eliminated in the House, and the mail-subsidy measure which the House passed was defeated by a filibuster in the Senate, conducted by two Senators who were retiring to private life. The Senate subsequently passed the ocean mail bill, but it was twice defeated in the House, though by the narrowest of majorities.

In the congressional contests over the measures recommended by the Merchant Marine Commission most of the opposition came from the South and Middle West, thus repeating the experience which had destroyed the American steamship services on the North Atlantic before the Civil War. But from both South and West there appeared also strong advocacy of a forward policy by individual Senators and Representatives, and the ocean mail bills were actually defeated in the House by the defection of a group of Middle Western Republicans who, though strong partisans of tariff protection for the agricultural interests of their States and section, were unwilling that national encouragement of any kind should be extended to the ocean shipping industry of the Atlantic and Pacific seaboard. Another influence was the hostility of certain powerful European steamship corporations which had become strongly entrenched in American ocean carrying. From their headquarters in Europe and New York these foreign steamship organizations sent out earnest arguments against the subsidizing of American steamship services, and these appeals undoubtedly counted for a great deal with some public men and people of European birth or immediate descent in this country, to whom they were particularly addressed.

A FREE SHIP EXPERIMENT.

As a part of the Panama Canal act of August 24, 1912, Congress changed the traditional policy of the United States by offering free registry for the over-seas trade to American-owned, foreign-built vessels not more than five years old. This "free-ship" experiment proved absolutely fruitless up to the outbreak of the war in Europe—not one foreign-built ship was at any time registered under its provisions. The reason assigned was the higher cost of operation that would have to be assumed under the American laws and colors.

As an emergency measure Congress, on August 18, 1914, passed an act amending the previous act so that there could be admitted to American registry for purposes of foreign commerce American-owned, foreign-built vessels without regard to age. At the same time the President was authorized to suspend the requirement of law that the officers of these foreign-built ships should be American citizens and to exempt the ships in question from compliance with our inspection and measurement laws and regulations.

A considerable movement of American owners of foreign-built ships to naturalize their vessels under the new law quickly followed. The United Fruit Co., the Standard Oil Co., and the United States Steel Corporation were the principal factors to take advantage of the new legislation. Most of the foreign-built ships added to the American overseas fleet under the new policy were American owned before the war began. There have not been many new purchases of foreign-built ships, and a very large proportion of vessels controlled by American capital, notably in the regular trans-Atlantic trade, still remain under foreign colors. The total number of ships naturalized under the act of August 18, 1914, is 171, of a total tonnage of 583,733. Most of these were brought in in the early part of the war. Only three vessels, one of them a small yacht, were granted registry in the entire month of September, 1915, and only three more were admitted up to December 18, 1915.

FOREIGN CREWS DEMAND AMERICAN WAGES.

It has been discovered in actual experience that the suspension of the navigation laws by the President, so that the foreign-built ships admitted to American registry can come in with their foreign officers and remain exempt from our inspection and measurement laws and rules, has not prevented these foreign officers and their foreign crews from demanding the wage scale and food scale of Americans. The result has been an immediate and large increase in the cost of manning and maintenance, so that in these regards the naturalized ships are on the same basis compared with foreign-registered ships as are American ships of native construction. For example, W. R. Grace & Co. find that wages and food of a steamship under the American flag amount to $2,773 a month as compared with $1,991 under the British flag. "On British steamers which we recently transferred to the American flag," says this firm, "the foreign crews struck for American wages the day of transfer, and received them."

The United States Steel Products Co., which handles the export trade of the United States Steel Corporation, has nine steamers transferred from British to American registry. The 373 members of these nine crews under British registry received in wages $12,478 a month. The 393 members of these nine crews under American registry receive $17,537 a month, an increase of 40.54 per cent, and in addition there has been an increase of 19 per cent in the cost of food.

The steamship Brindilla, of the Standard Oil Co., has a total wage bill under the American flag of $1,765 a month as compared with $936.10 a month when this same ship was the German steamer Washington.

These great corporations have precise systems of record, and so these comparative figures are available and trustworthy, but theirs has doubtless been the experience of all owners of foreign-built steamships who have secured American registry. The great war has introduced new complications. Because of war risks wages of seamen have risen under foreign flags, but there is every reason to believe that when the war has ended the normal difference in wages between American and foreign ships will be substantially what it was before the war began. This difference on typical cargo-carrying ships was as follows:

WHAT SHOULD NOW BE DONE?

Assuming that the free-registry law of August 18, 1914, has the effect of equalizing the first cost of ships—for American shipowners can now go to Europe or Japan for vessels for over-seas commerce if such ships can be procured there at a lower price than from American yards—there manifestly still remain, in spite of the suspension of our navigation laws, a wide difference in wages and maintenance. Of the two factors in the problem the construction cost has been equalized, but not the cost of operation. This is still as heavily against our flag as ever—and this is now a matter of demonstrated fact—it has been wholly removed from the field of dispute and speculation.

How is this factor of the higher cost of operation to be met?

The special committee on merchant marine of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, in a report presented June 7, 1915, and subsequently approved by the directors of the chamber, recommended that carefully guarded subsidies be granted by the Government, sufficient to offset the difference in cost of operation between American and foreign vessels, with the condition that all vessels receiving subsidies should be so constructed as to render efficient service as transports, fuel ships, supply ships, ammunition ships, etc., in case of war, and be held subject to the call of the Government.

This plan would equalize conditions, so far as typical cargo vessels are concerned. But all maritime nations assist regular steamship services carrying mail, freight, and passengers on fixed schedules at more than ordinary speed, by means of mail or naval subsidies, amounting in the aggregate to not much less than $50,000,000 a year. It is obvious that such regular line steamship services under the American flag would require special additional encouragement, and for this purpose the committee in its report recommended an amendment suitably increasing the rates of compensation offered under the ocean mail law of 1891.

The committee also opposed the proposal of Government ownership and operation of commercial steamships, for reasons stated in a separate report, and approved the creation of a Federal shipping board, after the example of the British Board of Trade, and a revision of our navigation laws and regulations, so far as they unnecessarily increase the cost of operation of American as against foreign vessels. Such a revision is an essential part of any movement for the revival of American Ocean shipping, but, as has already been demonstrated by experience under the free-registry act of August 18, 1914, a revision or a suspension of the laws and regulations will not of itself equalize the cost of manning and maintaining American and foreign vessels.

SHIPBUILDING ALL IMPORTANT.

At present, because of the great European war, its abnormal effect upon wages and materials, and the absorption of foreign shipyards in naval repair and construction, the first cost of commercial steamships is believed to have risen in Europe to or near a parity with the cost in the United States. American ocean shipyards are now fully employed upon new tonnage, nearly all of it designed primarily for coastwise commerce, but a large part of it of a type adaptable also to over-seas carrying if conditions in that trade can be properly equalized. This is a fortunate circumstance for the country. Full employment will greatly assist American ocean yards to extend their experience, standardize their output, and reduce their costs, and the price of commercial steamers of American construction should be very much nearer the foreign price after the war has ended than it ever has been before. It should be understood that steel plates and shapes for shipbuilding are normally obtainable at as low a cost in the United States as in Europe.

The importance of judicious encouragement of the art of ocean shipbuilding can not well be overestimated, both because of the imperative need of well-equipped shipyards in the problem of national defense and because history affords no example of a nation permanently great in ship owning and navigation which depended for the construction of its ships upon its rivals in trade and possible enemies in war. It is still eminently true in principle, as Thomas Jefferson declared more than a century ago, that "for a navigating people to purchase its marine afloat would be a strange speculation. * * * Placing, as a reserve, with a foreign nation or in foreign shipyard the carpenters, blacksmiths, calkers, sailmakers, and the vessels of a nation would be a singular commercial combination. We must, therefore, build them for ourselves."

AMERICAN MARINE INSURANCE.

One essential of complete success in American shipbuilding and navigation is a thoroughly American inspection, survey, and classification service capable of performing for the United States a work which Lloyd's has long rendered for the British Empire. For many years American shipowners and merchants, even in the coast and lake trade, have been largely dependent for marine insurance upon foreign corporations. To realize the full benefits of an independent American shipping industry it must be possible to effect adequate insurance in companies domiciled in the United States, preference being given by our shipowners and merchants to insurance in American companies, and to this end a strong classification society must be at once established, so that American insurance interests can undertake marine risks with all proper safeguards and necessary information. There is abundant capital in this country and abundant technical and administrative skill, and they should be brought into effective cooperation. There should be resources in American companies sufficient to provide at least $1,000,000 of insurance on any single hull to handle the marine business now offering, which is about three times the amount of insurance at present available.

Every important nation which has developed a merchant marine of its own has appreciated the need of creating at the same time a classification and insurance system of its own, instinctively recognizing the unwisdom of depending for such an indispensable service upon the resources of foreign competitors. It is earnestly believed by many American shipowners that the decline of our own mercantile marine has hastened by certain arbitrary discriminations of powerful marine insurance authorities of Europe, and it is the manifest course of prudence to make such discriminations impossible hereafter by providing requisite American standards of construction properly adapted to meet the particular needs of the widely varying types of ships required for American domestic and foreign commerce. Private capital and enterprise can best supply this need, with due recognition in the law and regulations of the Government.

A FLEET ESSENTIAL FOR COMMERCE AND DEFENSE.

The merchant marine—the building and operation of overseas commercial carriers—is, or should be, a great national industry, as deserving as any other great industry of the friendly interest of the American people and the intelligent consideration of their Government. Just as every adequate department store, for its own self-protection, insists upon its own delivery service, so every mercantile nation demands a suitable fleet of its own ships. Great Britain fought three wars with Holland and France primarily to secure its own sea trade. The new German Empire, when under Bismarck it first began to look abroad for markets, refused to depend upon British ships but sought at once the creation of a German merchant navy. France would not rely upon the fleet of either Germany or Britain, but has laboriously wrought its own merchant marine, and Japan, the latest of commercial powers, secured its ships first and its trade afterwards. Not one commercial nation, save the United States, has ever been willing to trust its overseas delivery service to its eager and aggressive competitors—the instinct of self-preservation imperatively forbids.

If the United States had possessed, as it should normally have possessed, 10,000,000 or 15,000,000 tons of overseas shipping in August, 1914, at the outbreak of the present European war, its ocean delivery service could not have been broken down by the wholesale diversion of foreign ships, whose first duty was owed to foreign Governments. Reduced or disrupted steamship services and abnormally increased freight rates have cost the American people uncounted millions of dollars since the war began, and, as agriculture still supplies the major bulk, if not the major value, of our exports, the heaviest loss has fallen upon the cotton-growing South and grain-growing West, many of whose public men have historically been most blind and indifferent to the need of a merchant fleet that would serve "America first."

If an adequate merchant shipping is important to our commercial security, it is absolutely indispensable to our military and naval defense. In the event of war between the United States and a foreign enemy our Government would instantly require hundreds of auxiliary vessels—scouts, transports, mine layers, fuel ships, ammunition ships, supply ships, hospital ships—which could be provided only from the merchant service.

Many of these can be procured from the coastwise fleet, but not enough, for a large part of this domestic tonnage is not adapted to open-ocean voyaging. The country has not yet forgotten the humiliation of seeing its proud battleship fleet escorted around the world by a motley crowd of British, Dutch, and Italian colliers, because no American vessels were to be had. That was in time of peace, but the lack of such auxiliary ships, and especially of loyal American officers and men, in war might fatally cripple our fighting force and bring appalling disaster to the Nation. A strong mercantile marine is one of the great essential elements of American "preparedness."

Denmark	145,000
Belgium	55,970
Portugal	50,000

Total 45,224,513

Outside of Europe and Japan, subsidies and mail payments have been reported for 1908 by the Bureau of Navigation as follows: Chile, $253,195; Mexico, $75,000; Egypt, $54,512; Brazil, $1,300,000; in all, $1,682,707, making, with the above, a total of $46,907,220.

(In the fiscal year 1914 the United States paid in subsidy to American steamers under contract the sum of $1,089,361.83, and the report of the Post Office Department states that "The net cost of the service performed was $55,155.51 less than it would have been if the steamers performing it had not been under contract and had conveyed the same mails and received pay on a weight basis.")

The figures above are the latest official enumeration by the United States of foreign steamship subsidies, bounties, etc. These subsidies and bounties have been somewhat increased since 1909 in most of the countries mentioned, together with a corresponding increase in their merchant shipping tonnage.

(Germany, in addition to subsidies, grants preferential rates on her State railroads on cargoes to be carried in German ships.)

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hughes	Phelan	Smoot
Brady	Husting	Pittman	Sterling
Bryan	James	Pomerene	Stone
Chamberlain	Johnsen, S. Dak.	Reed	Swanson
Chilton	Jones	Saulsbury	Taggart
Clapp	Lane	Shafroth	Thompson

Gallinger	Myers	Smith, Ariz.	Wadsworth
Hardwick	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Warren
Hitchcock	Oliver	Smith, Md.	Williams
Hollis	Overman	Smith, S. C.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of sickness.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say that my colleague [Mr. CLARK of Wyoming] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators having responded to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I shall not occupy the time of the Senate at any great length, comparatively speaking; and while I do so I shall not pretend to speak as an expert on ships or on shipbuilding. The more technical phases of this question, especially as it relates to vessels in the foreign and coastwise trade, respectively, have been discussed, and ably discussed, by those more familiar with those phases than am I, notably by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who has just spoken, by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], and by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. There are, however, certain things in regard to the efforts of this administration to put through a ship-purchase bill or a shipping-board bill to which I wish to call attention. They go largely to the methods employed and to what I deem the needlessness of a measure designed to put the Government into the business of owning ships for the merchant-marine service.

And let me at the outset emphasize the point that the majority proposes anew this scheme at a time when appropriations will exceed by several hundred millions of dollars what they have ever before been; when the revenues from the old reliable sources are vastly diminished; when, to meet these appropriations, new forms of taxation must be adopted and new subjects of taxation must be resorted to. It would seem that ordinary prudence would dictate that we stop short of incurring this wholly unnecessary additional obligation of more than $50,000,000 and of making the requisite appropriation therefor. The prudent business man will not embark in an enterprise involving large expenditures unless justified by his needs, his facilities, and the resources at his disposal, and, least of all, will he throw away money upon a project which experience and common sense and the facts before him show would be futile and without beneficial result.

I take it that statesmen should be governed by the same practical considerations as business when it comes to new governmental ventures involving, as this does, its very expensive administrative features and, second, a tremendous outlay of money to effect the full purposes of the bill.

And, Mr. President, I can not help here suggesting the further consideration: Congress is not the business man spending his own money, responsible to himself alone. Congress is supposed to represent the people. In the provisions it makes for the raising and disbursement of revenues it acts rather in the capacity of agent or trustee. It can not at will summon hither or to the Treasury of the United States the resources of a nation and at will disburse them in the promotion of any and every enterprise which appeals to the imagination of Members of Congress or, I may say, to an administration obsessed apparently with the idea that to spend $50,000,000 in building, buying, or leasing ships will be a grand party achievement. It can not do this, I say, at will and in disregard of the interests of the people. The principle of "strict accountability," though badly shattered in certain fields, is not dead. It may be invoked elsewhere, possibly at the ballot box.

Those who pay the taxes—internal-revenue taxes, taxes on incomes, and who will pay Government inheritance taxes, as well as those who pay indirect taxes in any form—have the right to know that the money is judiciously and, for the Nation, wisely and profitably spent; that a worthy national purpose will be served and that no great and beneficial interest will be impaired or destroyed.

This is not in any sense a preparedness measure. It is not like the Army and Navy bills, which, perhaps, properly enough, appropriated unprecedented millions in the interests of national defense. To pretend that the bill provides for the construction or purchase or leasing of vessels suitable both for the marine trade and for naval auxiliaries should deceive nobody, for, as I shall show, the bill does not go that far. The use of such ships for naval auxiliaries was merely incidental in 1914 and 1915, when the Senate was kept guessing from week to week as to what new form the ship-purchase bill would next take. Everybody knew that that bill was based on an alleged emergency in our ocean transportation business and not on any need for naval auxiliaries. The discussion centered on that point.

The bill introduced by the Senator from Missouri on December 9, 1914, and reported with amendments by the Senator from Florida on December 16, 1914, provides that the object of the corporation to be formed under the act—shall be the purchase, construction, equipment, maintenance, and operation of merchant vessels in the trade between the Atlantic, Gulf, or Pacific ports of the United States, etc., to meet the requirements of the foreign commerce of the United States.

True, a subsequent provision is to the effect that the vessels purchased or constructed shall be of a type as far as the commercial requirements of the foreign trade of the United States may permit, suitable for use as naval auxiliaries in the Naval Establishment of the United States. But who believes that had that bill passed and it had been found otherwise expedient or in accordance with our neutrality to purchase a few interned German merchantmen an offer of sale by the German owner would have been rejected. No objection would have been made on the ground that the vessel was not of a type suitable as a naval auxiliary. The title of that bill was:

To authorize the United States, acting through a shipping board, to subscribe to the capital stock of a corporation to be organized under the laws of the United States or of a State thereof or of the District of Columbia to purchase, construct, equip, maintain, and operate merchant vessels in the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

And thus we see from the language of the bill itself and from the absence of any expression in regard to naval auxiliaries in the title how remote, or merely incidental at least, was the question of providing naval auxiliaries to the main purpose of the bill.

Then came the amendment in the nature of a substitute for the original bill and all amendments thereto and theretofore reported from the Committee on Commerce. It was reported January 26, 1915. The changes were many and material. The Senate entered on the discussion of a new bill. The language I have referred to, however, in regard to naval auxiliaries was retained in the substitute.

We recall the fate of the substitute. It was discussed day in and day out and night in and night out, until on February 17, 1915, it yielded up the ghost and was replaced by Senate bill 5259. This, as Senators will remember, was a bill introduced by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] and was entitled "A bill to establish one or more United States Navy mail lines between the United States and South America and between the United States and the countries of Europe." This bill contained four sections. It had passed the Senate and been amended in the House by attaching thereto as an amendment the provisions of the ship-purchase bill we had been discussing, with some new features, and with a final section which made inoperative sections 1, 2, 3, and 4, being the only sections relating to Navy mail lines, until two years after the conclusion of the present European war. It contained the same inconsequential provisions in regard to naval auxiliaries as its two predecessors. And then, after more weary days and nights, the welcome end came on March 3, and incidentally, I may say, there also came an apparent vindication once more of the principle of unlimited debate in the Senate. There came also, I think, general approval throughout the country of the course of Republican Senators and of the seven Democratic Senators who joined with them in invoking the ancient rule of unlimited debate, a rule at one time the subject of most favorable comment by our present Chief Executive. I think it eminently proper in this connection to quote what the President has said of the Senate practice. He says, page 218, Congressional Government, among other things:

But the Senate is small and of settled habits, and has no such bugbear to trouble it—

Referring to cloture in the House—

It—

can afford to do without any cloture or previous question. No Senator is likely to want to speak on all the topics of the session, or to prepare more speeches than can conveniently be spoken before adjournment is imperatively at hand. The House can be counted upon to waste enough time to leave some leisure to the Upper Chamber.

And then, a little further on, page 219, he says:

Still, though not much heeded—

We have evidence of that, of course, every day—

The debates of the Senate are of great value in scrutinizing and sifting matters which come up from the House. The Senate's opportunities for open and unrestricted discussion and its simple, comparatively unencumbered forms of procedure, unquestionably enable it to fulfill with very considerable success its high functions as a chamber of revision. (Page 219.)

And then, in a footnote, on page 211 of this book, entitled "Congressional Government," by Woodrow Wilson, we find this unqualified indorsement of the Senate's practice in regard to debate:

An attempt was once made to bring the previous question into the practices of the Senate, but it failed of success, and so that imperative form of cutting off all further discussion has fortunately never found a place there.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to inquire if the author of the book from which the Senator is reading is the same as the author of the book entitled "The New Freedom"?

Mr. STERLING. It is by the author of The New Freedom.

It is quite instructive now to look back upon the history of that struggle and note what the obduracy of the administration in regard to the ship-purchase bill cost the country in the way of other and needed legislation. There were the water-power bill; the oil land leasing bill; conservation measures to which the Democratic Party was understood to be pledged; rural-credit legislation, to which it was also pledged—all reported to the Senate after extensive committee hearings and in ample time for full consideration and action by the Senate, but all doomed to failure by that fatuous leadership which made believe that the fate of the Nation depended on its building or buying at once $30,000,000 worth of ships. All other legislation was, in comparison, not worth while. Two great appropriation bills, the products of many weeks of faithful committee work, shared the same fate, and the Indian Service and Postal Service, which were to have been benefited and improved by new provisions, were obliged to be content with the same conditions and the same appropriations as for the preceding fiscal year. Mr. President, apparently the direct and immediate responsibility for the course of the majority in regard to the bill lay with the Democratic caucus. On that point I desire to quote from the same authority, and I feel like exclaiming, "Oh, that mine adversary had written a book!" He did write a book, and here is what he said, among other things, in regard to the caucus—

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRADY. Is the book from which the Senator is about to read a different work or is it the same book from which he has already quoted?

Mr. STERLING. It is the same book from which I read in regard to the advantages of unlimited debate in the Senate; and, of course, it is by the same author. He says:

That the silvery speech spent in caucus secures the golden silence maintained on the floor of Congress, making each party rich in concord and happy in cooperation.

That is, those who favor a caucus would put it in that way. Then the distinguished author goes on to say:

The fact that makes this defense of the caucus not altogether conclusive is that it is shielded from all responsibility by its sneaking privacy. It has great power without any balancing weight of accountability. Probably its debates would constitute interesting and instructive reading for the public were they published; but they never get out except in rumors often rehearsed and as often amended. They are, one may take it for granted, much more candid and go much nearer the political heart of the questions discussed than anything that is ever said openly in Congress to the reporters' gallery. They approach matters without masks and handle them without gloves. It might hurt, but it would enlighten us to hear them. As it is, however, there is unhappily no ground for denying their power to override sound reason and personal conviction. The caucus can not always silence or subdue a large and influential minority of dissentients, but its whip seldom fails to reduce individual malcontents and mutineers into submission. There is no place in congressional jousts for the free lance. The man who disobeys his party caucus is understood to disavow his party allegiance altogether, and to assume that dangerous neutrality which is so apt to degenerate into mere caprice, and which is almost sure to destroy his influence by bringing him under the suspicion of being unreliable—a suspicion always conclusively damning in practical life.—From Congressional Government, by Woodrow Wilson, pages 328, 329.

And yet this same unrighteous caucus, with its "sneaking privacy," its "power to override sound reason and personal conviction," was the instrument employed by the President to bind men to the support of a measure which their judgments and their consciences condemned. For back of the caucus always, as we know from our experience here since 1913, was the President to whom the caucus was blindly obedient.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senator if he will give his recollection of the remarks made by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. STONE] with reference to Senators who did not abide by the caucus action and of the dire anathemas visited by him upon the Senators who would not support the caucus legislation and surrender their convictions?

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator from Illinois that, while I do not remember the language of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I do remember the circumstance and remember something of the fierce anathemas he delivered at that time.

And now, Mr. President, comes this bill, the product, undoubtedly, of much anxious thought, of "days of toil and nights of waking," on the part of its many framers. I can not think it is the product of any one legislative genius. It has the earmarks of collaboration, of joint authorship, of studied attempts to harmonize conflicting views. One man or set of men got in their views in regard to a naval auxiliary and the prominence that should have in the bill. They did not, however, get any further than the title of the bill. Another set sought to get in their view of the commercial importance of the $50,000,000 fleet which the Government is to build or buy or lease; another set thought it expedient to make the shipping board the overshadowing feature, and that their influence was great is quite patent when we read the bill, title and all.

But, Mr. President, I think one thing is evident: Though the Members of the minority were denounced as obstructionists and filibusterers against the ship-purchase bill or bills of 1914 and 1915, the representatives of the administration, with a majority of 17 in the Senate, would not have dared to again present a bill in terms like either of the bills mentioned and debated at such awful length.

This in itself is a vindication of all the Republican opposition marshaled against these bills. It shows that Republican Senators, with their seven Democratic coadjutors, knew better the public need and understood better the trend and force of public opinion in regard to this great question of Government ownership than did their Democratic opponents. And still the majority, under the dictation of the President, are persistent and ambitious to achieve something new, notable, and striking in governmental activities. Foreign commerce, or our commerce generally, for this bill embraces both coastwise and foreign trade, is the one inviting, seductive field. Under the belief—and I venture to say that this is the exact situation—that they can create the belief that they have accomplished something great for the country, they still persist in building and owning a few ships—for a short time, of course—but long enough for a demonstration and to cause more or less worry to American shipbuilders and shipowners.

But, Mr. President, the lesson has been brought home to our Democratic brethren that if they would pass a shipping bill, something must be done to popularize it; and hence we have before us what they would call a shipping-board bill instead of a ship-purchase bill, a bill which brings out in bold relief (in the title only) the naval auxiliary features, and which confers extensive jurisdiction on the shipping board created by the bill.

But again I insist no careful student of the history of this proposed legislation and of the terms of the bill will be deceived. Here is the high-sounding title:

To establish a United States shipping board, for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water engaged in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States; and for other purposes.

Now, just think of that title! The casual reader might say, why, the fundamental thing about this bill is a Government shipping board, and the primary function of the shipping board will be to encourage, develop, and create a naval auxiliary and a naval reserve, since these are first mentioned, and that a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States was a wholly incidental or subsidiary matter. But such is not the case, nor is such the object of the bill. The title is a misnomer and is designed to mislead. There is in the country an overwhelming sentiment for naval preparedness. Of this sentiment the administration seeks to take advantage and through it win popular support for a bill which ostensibly makes the naval auxiliary the paramount thing, but which in reality has in this regard exactly the same purpose as the ill-fated ship-purchase bills of 1914 and 1915. To this end the peculiar title of the bill. But somewhere in the bill the real purpose must be disclosed, and we find it in section 5, in substantially the same language as is found in all its predecessors. Here is the language:

That the board, with the approval of the President, is authorized to have constructed and equipped, in American shipyards and navy yards or elsewhere, giving preference, other things being equal, to domestic yards, or to purchase, lease, or charter, vessels suitable, as far as the commercial requirements of the marine trade of the United States may permit, for use as naval auxiliaries or Army transports, or for other naval or military purposes, and to make necessary repairs on and alterations of such vessels.

So, whatever its disguises, this bill, like those that have gone before, is a bill to empower the United States Government through a shipping board and one or more corporations organized under the laws of this District to engage in the business of constructing, buying, owning, and operating ships for the alleged commercial requirements of the marine trade of the United States. The same objections lie to it as to the other properly called ship-purchase bills. If they merited defeat, so does this. If the people were quite resigned to the fate of those bills, they would, I am sure, rejoice at the defeat of this at a time when it is evident there is less need than there was then, and when, too, the enormous appropriations already made, and the new and excessive taxes threatened, themselves cry out against this unwarranted and costly experiment.

Mr. President, I have felt justified in discussing and comparing at such length these several bills, those successively debated during the last Congress under the general designation "ship-purchase bill," and the present pending bill—justified because I have the very strong conviction that in attempting to pass this bill the majority are seeking to win public favor for it by false pretenses. But whether intended or not, the country has been more or less deceived by the title and the language of this bill. There has been misapprehension as to its real object. The Senator from Washington, as we all remember who heard him, spoke the other day of a Congressman who was inclined to support it because of its supposed naval auxiliary features, and who showed by his statements that he had been misled. And I myself have heard many well-informed men say that the only redeeming feature of the bill was the provision in regard to auxiliaries for the United States Navy or that it was a better bill than the old ship-purchase bill, because the ships to be constructed or purchased under it would all be naval auxiliaries. But look at the language of the bill! It is only so "far as the commercial requirements of the marine trade of the United States may permit" that the shipping board is authorized to construct, buy, lease, or charter vessels suitable for use as naval auxiliaries. In other words, this bill is for the purpose of acquiring vessels to serve the commercial requirements of the marine trade. It never would have been introduced otherwise. The President and our insistent Secretary of the Treasury are pushing it on no other grounds. In the purpose for which vessels are to be acquired it differs in no essential from the old bills which long ago, when through discussion their purport was understood, were condemned by the general public.

I have examined the reports of the Committee on Commerce on the ship-purchase bill and on this bill, the one presented by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the other by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I think it highly significant that in neither of these lengthy reports no reference whatever is made to any report or statement made by the Secretary of the Navy or any naval officer to the effect that these ship-purchase bills in any of their provisions in regard to naval auxiliaries will supply a need of the Navy, and, in fact, it seems not to have occurred to the Navy Department that any reliance could be put in such provisions for the supply of naval auxiliaries.

The Navy Department is not working in cooperation with the administration or with the Treasury Department in trying to push through this bill which bears such a portentous title in regard to naval auxiliaries. We all know that the several main fleets, the Atlantic and Pacific coast fleets and the Asiatic fleet, with their reserve fleets, have their supply or quota of colliers, transports, tugs, hospital ships, supply ships, and so forth. I will not say that it is sufficient or what it ought to be. I am inclined to think that the supply is not quite what it ought to be; but they must have some supply or quota of vessels of that kind. It may be presumed that only in case of war or threatened war will the activities of these fleets be such as to require many additional auxiliaries; and these are, in fact, provided for by general law enacted in 1887, which provides as follows: "That in time of war or threatened war preference and precedence shall, upon demand of the President of the United States, be given over all other traffic for the transportation of troops and material of war, and carriers shall adopt every means within their control to facilitate and expedite military traffic."

This provision, as I think Senators will remember, is carried forward into this year's naval appropriation bill with an amendment providing for shipments consigned to the United States in time of peace. Under this provision the President may in time of war or threatened war practically commandeer every United States merchant vessel afloat as a naval auxiliary and for all the purposes of military traffic.

This ought to effectually dispose of any claim that this bill should be made a law for the purpose of meeting any emergency so far as the needs of the Navy are concerned.

Mr. President, one more reference to the history of this legislation. The ship-purchase bill was urged upon us as an emergency measure. It was again and again pointed out by Republican Senators in the debate that they could not be constructed in time to meet the emergency. Furthermore, the Secretary of the Treasury to the contrary notwithstanding, I think it became settled opinion here that we would be in danger of violating our neutrality should we purchase German interned vessels, or in fact the vessels belonging to the citizens of any of the belligerent nations. Mr. President, as evidence of that and of the conclusion to which we came, Senate bill 5259, which was the last bill considered on the 3d day of March, 1915, contained a provision prohibiting the purchase of any vessel in a way which will disturb the conditions of neutrality.

That situation and that danger has been recognized in the pending bill, which prohibits the shipping board from purchasing any vessel "which is under the registry or flag of a foreign country which is then engaged in war." Hence if there was then any emergency we were practically powerless under the then existing conditions to remedy it.

This bill adds to the already long list of boards and commissions created under this administration still another—the shipping board, with its five members each to receive a salary of $10,000 a year—$50,000 for their salaries alone—$5,000 for a secretary, to say nothing of the cost of the services of the attorneys, officers, naval architects, special experts, examiners, clerks, and other employees authorized to be employed by the board—an elaborate and expensive administrative machine, with power to form a corporation with a capital stock of $50,000,000, with power to expend $50,000,000 of the money of the United States in the construction, purchase, or leasing of ships to meet the commercial requirements of the marine trade of the United States, and not, be it observed, for the purposes of a naval auxiliary.

There is no emergency now, although this bill is to meet the commercial requirements of the marine trade of the United States.

Mr. President, there ought to be no escape from the proposition that without an emergency this measure is not warranted. I go further. Granting there is an emergency, the enactment of this measure will be without warrant unless it is made to appear that it will have the effect of remedying the untoward conditions we call an emergency; the effect of relieving from the emergency.

I deny, first, there is at present an emergency, and, second, granting there is, I deny that the bill, if it becomes law, will afford relief.

And now, Mr. President, what ought we to consider here seriously and earnestly? In seeking to determine whether or not the bill is practicable, or whether there is any practical need or demand for it, whom should we consider?

Our first great consideration should, of course, be the welfare of our own citizens. But who can say that our producers of corn, cotton, wheat, oats, flax, rye, or meats—anything, in fact, in the form of clothing or food products that enters into the export trade—have suffered from the want of shipping facilities for that trade unless indeed the producers of cotton for a few short months only after the breaking out of the war? But early in 1915 they were advised as I now remember by our consul at Rotterdam that they were shipping too fast and that it would be wise policy and in the interest of higher prices to refrain from crowding the market.

And so with all products of the mines and manufactories for which there has been the unusual demand abroad. They have all commanded top-notch prices, war prices, the highest for many American products ever known. True, the extraordinary demand abroad for food and clothing products, for war material and munitions of war, has made rates for carriage high, exceedingly high, but that is for the most part in pursuance of a law of trade and that was a burden which fell on the foreign consumer. He paid the freight, is paying it now, while all the agencies of production at home for consumption abroad, instead of being impoverished, revel in the prosperity consequent upon the high prices made by the war. It should not be cause for wonder that because of the great demand for ocean tonnage exporters, some of them, may have sometimes suffered delay and great inconvenience; but that, I undertake to say, has been rarely if ever reflected in a lower price to the producer or has resulted in much ultimate loss to the exporters themselves.

No, Mr. President; there has not been nor is there now any emergency growing out of the needs of the producers of grain and live stock and cotton and clothing or war material of any kind that would warrant this socialistic experiment in Government ownership, with its initial cost of $50,000,000. And in regard to what other class than these—the farmers, manufacturers, the miners, producers all—could an emergency arise from want of shipping facilities? There are none.

But, Mr. President, the activities of American shipyards conclusively show that there is no warrant for Government interference in the shipowning business. Our own Department of Commerce shows that the shipbuilders in the United States have taken the lead in the construction of merchant ships. They are now constructing more such vessels than any other country in the world, and the output during the present year it is confidently believed will exceed that of all the countries in the world combined. This is an activity we have been hoping for, and lamenting for 50 years because it did not exist. Individual enterprise and capital is doing it in the true American way, without Government help or intervention or expense. Is it not the time of all times for us to say to the Government, "Hands off!"

I here read an excerpt or two from a special dispatch from the city of Washington to the New York Times, under date as long ago as December 26 last. The article is inspired by the annual report of Mr. Chamberlain, Commissioner of Navigation. This article is headed:

America second in sea trade now—Ship tonnage equals that of any two foreign nations, except England—Due to war and new law—

The new law being the law we enacted here giving ships of foreign construction but owned by Americans, American registry.

This heading further reads:

Year's increase in merchant marine largest in history of the Republic.

Reading from the dispatch:

[Special to the New York Times.]

WASHINGTON, December 26.

Changes in American merchant shipping during the first year of the war in Europe have had no parallel in extent in our maritime history. The absolute increase in the tonnage of ships under the American flag during that period was 460,741 tons and has never been equaled in American history.

At the same time there was an increase of 389 vessels, with an aggregate gross tonnage of 795,391, in American shipping registered for the foreign trade, and this increase is three times as great as the increase in registered tonnage during any previous year of American history. During the year 200,000 tons of American shipping formerly plying in the domestic trade obtained employment in the foreign trade. In tonnage and value the merchant shipping under the American flag is surpassed only by that under the British flag, and in tonnage it equals that under any two foreign flags combined, except the British.

I will not read further from this dispatch, Mr. President, but I will ask leave to have printed in the Record the whole of it as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The effect of the European war and American legislation on the American merchant marine and the resultant unparalleled changes are set forth in great detail and discussed most interestingly in the annual report of Eugene Tyler Chamberlain, the Commissioner of Navigation, to Secretary Redfield, of the Department of Commerce, and made public to-night. Mr. Chamberlain asserts that the nearest approach to the fiscal year 1915 in the importance of the changes in American merchant shipping was during 1863 and 1864, when the Confederate cruisers were in operation and 523,064 tons of American shipping were sold to foreigners.

EFFECT OF REGISTRY ACT.

Pointing out that during the early days of the war in Europe the American ship-registry act of August 18, 1914, was passed, Commissioner Chamberlain states that a total of 148 vessels, of 523,361 gross tons, were transferred from foreign flags to the American flag and register. "These transfers, however," says Mr. Chamberlain, "unlike those of 1863—64, in very few cases involved a change in the actual beneficiary ownership, but a change in the ownership of record, possible only through the passage of the act of August 18, 1914, which enabled American owners to secure American registry and the use of their own flag for ships built in foreign countries. The transfer of very few of these ships, accordingly, involved an increase in the investment of American capital in maritime ventures. They represent in all an investment of $33,392,756.58, but Americans had invested nine-tenths of this capital in these ships long before the outbreak of the European war. At prices current during the year these ships, if purchased, would have cost much more than the amount stated."

Mr. Chamberlain explains that until the act of 1914 was passed it was not possible for shipowners to give to their ships their true national character. "It may be," he asserts, "that had full opportunity been afforded earlier, it would not have been seized. That question is somewhat academic, as in any event the door was closed against them. The more pertinent question is whether the national advantage gained during the last year is to be retained by legislation giving freer scope in maritime ventures to American citizens of enterprise and capital, who in a few months have given to the American merchant flag on the sea a rank and importance second only to the British. In the bitterness of feeling that followed immediately on the close of the Civil War the opportunity to recover a lost position was thrown away when Congress, by the act of February 10, 1866, specifically forbade the return to American registry of ships which had been sold to foreigners 'during the existence of the rebellion.'"

AMERICA'S OPPORTUNITY.

"The European war," continues Mr. Chamberlain in his most illuminating presentation of the American shipping situation, "has created an opportunity for the development of the merchant marine in foreign trade which this generation at least is not likely to see repeated. The most efficient instrumentalities for the prosecution of that trade are ocean steamers of 3,000 gross tons and upward. Such ships are economical by comparison with smaller vessels, and it is by means of larger steamers that the great volume of our bulk exports must be carried abroad."

UNITED STATES SECOND.

The 544 German steamers are not able to engage in foreign trade because of the command of the seas by the British. Eliminating these, the table shows that the American fleet of steamers of over 3,000 tons ranks second only to that of Great Britain, and is about one-tenth the size of the British fleet of ocean steamers of over 3,000 gross tons. Of the 305 large ocean steamers which give the United States second place in foreign trade to-day, 90 were registered in the 10 months from September, 1914, to June, 1915, inclusive, under the registry act of 1914, based on the principles, Commissioner Chamberlain says, "which Great Britain has followed for several generations."

Commissioner Chamberlain recommends that Congress enact legislation to prevent the transfer of any of these vessels back to foreign flags after the war in Europe is over. "Congress may see fit," says the commissioner, "to consider the question whether the transfer of a ship under the American flag to an alien should not be conditioned upon the approval of the Secretary of Commerce. A general transfer back to foreign flags of ships which have been admitted to American registry under the act of 1914 is possible under existing law after the close of the European war, although not anticipated. To mention only one matter telling against such transfer, the enormous debt burdens incurred by belligerent nations must be met by very heavy taxation, and shipping, of course, will be expected to bear its share. Foreign taxes on shipping as a rule are not ordinarily onerous. Thus, in the last year of peace, the calendar year 1913, the Hamburg-American Steamship Co. paid an income tax of only 1,158,561 marks on a profit from the year's operations of 58,521,730 marks, its entire property being valued at 354,943,555 marks."

The taxes which German ships will pay after the war may prove to be a heavy burden. The income tax of the Cunard Co. for the same year was only £17,226 on a profit balance of £1,124,581, its total property being valued at £7,974,925. The income taxes of Great Britain have already during the progress of the war been heavily increased. On the other hand, there is no present reason to look for any material increase in Government taxes on American shipping in the near future. Other advantages which we shall have over belligerent nations, and even over some of the neutral powers, will readily present themselves."

Mr. STERLING. I continue the evidence from the same reliable source. Here is an excerpt from the last Department of Commerce report as it appears, or rather as it is outlined in the Journal of Commerce. I read just a short extract:

Late in 1915 and early in 1916 belief that the European war would last three years led to an exceptional development of shipbuilding by the maritime powers not actively engaged in war. In the first six months of 1916 the United States launched and put into operation 192 ships of 228,016 gross tons (each over 1,000 tons)—more than the entire year's output for 1914 or 1915. On July 1, 1916, private American shipyards were building or had on order 385 steel merchant ships of 1,225,784 gross tons. The builders' returns indicate that of this tonnage 159 ships of 444,090 gross tons will be launched before December 31, 1916, thus indicating a total output by the United States, for the 12 months, of 351 steel ships of 672,106 gross tons.

Mr. President, it may be of interest to know how the people out West feel about the shipping bill—how they reason about it. The Sioux City Journal is published in extreme northwestern Iowa and but a few miles from my own home town in South Dakota. While a Republican paper, it has not been for some years at least intensely partisan. It seeks to be fair and is not averse to favorable mention now and then of some Democratic measure or policy of which it approves. It is one of the strong and ably edited papers of the Northwest. To illustrate, in a recent issue is an editorial entitled "Bipartisanship in Congress," in which it is inclined to approve of the course of five Republicans in the House from Iowa, three from Nebraska, and two from South Dakota in voting for the revenue bill.

Without committing myself to the same view at all, I read the last short paragraph from this editorial:

Granting that the cost of preparedness must be paid and assuming that the public which has been applauding preparedness pleas will pay it cheerfully in the least burdensome way, it is doubtful if the administration financiers could have devised a set of new impositions that would arouse less popular criticism. Criticism there will be, but it will come from a class in which the average Congressman—particularly of the West—is not greatly interested.

But, Mr. President, ye editor has also something to say on the shipping bill. He says it in the same issue in an adjoining column under the title "The Shipping Anomaly." I shall not take time to read the entire editorial, but this selection is worthy of note, and I believe the statement of facts and opinion herein made will appeal to the general good judgment and common sense of the people of that great region we now call the Northwest.

Here is what he says with reference to the shipping bill:

The shipping bill, if enacted in its present form, will be the least meritorious effort at constructive legislation made under the leadership of President Wilson. This is putting it mildly. The bill is anomalous and mischievous. It is difficult to explain the assiduity with which the President has persisted in wishing it upon a reluctant party and country. The ship-purchase plan was proposed as an emergency matter in the early weeks of the European war. In the general demoralization of commerce at that time American trade was suffering severely for lack of ships. It was feared desperate efforts would be needed to lift the blockade. The President proposed to meet the situation by Government purchase of ships, the fear being that private capital would be afraid to take the war risk. It was part of the original idea that the Government should buy belligerent ships tied up in neutral ports on account of the war.

When the shipping bill failed to pass in the autumn of 1914 its merit as an emergency measure evaporated.

He is a little mistaken there as to the date. The actual failure came—the final failure—March 3, 1915.

Since that time American foreign commerce has broken record after record for volume and value. Shipping has grown to be the most profitable business in the world. Many new American ships have gone into commission, and our tonnage in foreign trade has more than doubled. Every foreign shipyard is building at its full capacity. Every American shipyard is working at capacity, with orders enough now in sight to keep it busy for several years. Shipowners who are lucky enough to be able to put new bottoms into commission are getting their investment back in one or two voyages.

Why should the United States Government go into the shipping business in such circumstances? In the first place, where is it going to get the ships? An amendment agreed upon by the Senate Democrats forbids it to purchase a ship bearing a belligerent flag or a ship already engaged in American trade unless it is about to be taken out of that trade? If it can not buy idle belligerent ships or American ships, and if both American and foreign yards are engaged for years ahead of the orders now in hand, how is the contemplated American shipping board to mobilize the fleets with which to do business?

Mr. President, I want to add to that the thought brought out the other day by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], namely, that we are unable to buy ships of the neutral maritime nations of the world to-day because of their laws, which prohibit their citizens from selling such ships.

Possibly some one who likes the idea of Government ownership will suggest that there is no hurry about getting the Government lines started, but the important thing will be to build up a merchant marine under public ownership after the close of the war, when rates drop and world competition in shipping becomes keen. Unfortunately the point can not be made in behalf of the pending bill. As passed by the House and approved by the Senate Democrats the bill provides that the Government must get out of the shipping business within five years after enactment. This means that just about the time the Government would be getting hold of some ships and working out plans of operation for them it must turn the enterprise over to private capital, presumably at a substantial loss.

There are some strong economic arguments against Government ownership and operation of ships, but it is not necessary to go into them at this time. The shipping bill as now planned is so inconsistent and impracticable that objections to it on these grounds ought to be sufficient to defeat it.

Mr. President, briefly, I want to go from the West back to the East for a moment and refer to and read partially an editorial from, I think, if not an independent Democratic paper what we might term a near-Democratic paper, the New York Times. This is the editorial:

THE SHIPPING BILL'S MISFORTUNES.

The shipping bill has had many misfortunes, but none greater than—

I should like to have Senators just observe this one particular point—but none greater than the promptness with which official statements of prosperity following its defeat have contradicted equally official claims that the defeat was disastrous. This week the Department of Commerce announces that the United States is building more shipping than any other country, and perhaps more than all other countries.

This is of date July 28, a few days ago.

Nothing like that was ever before known, or could have been anticipated even a few months ago. Yet last week Secretary McAdoo was lamenting that the failure to pass the shipping bill had prevented the purchase of $40,000,000 worth of shipping, which would now have been worth $80,000,000, and which would have earned perhaps $100,000,000 while carrying American goods at one-third the extortionate rates which have been paid.

Now—

There are some who would think the promised profits dearly bought at the cost of embarking the Government upon such a socialistic experiment. But there can be none who would think it possible that if the Government had gone into the business it would not have prevented the marvelous revival of the general shipbuilding industry. The Government shipping would not have been an addition to the output of 672,106 tons of privately owned vessels, and would have been a paltry substitute for them. No Government subsidy can be imagined equal to the extortionate freights which led private capital at its own cost and risk to make profits which were paid by the foreign buyers of our four billions of exports.

Four billions the value of our exports, and yet an emergency such as to call for the Government engaging in the building and ownership of ships. Think of it!

The salvation of the country from the undemocratic adventure into Government ownership was pure gain, added to progress in shipping which makes the proportions of the Government's proposals seem ridiculously small. The Secretary is not to be blamed because he could not anticipate that yesterday it would be officially announced from Washington that tonnage of ocean-going merchant vessels being built or ordered in the United States July 1 was 1,000,000, or one-fourth greater than that of vessels under construction in German yards January 1, 1914, the date of the greatest activity in German history.

The number of ocean vessels of more than 1,000 gross tons being built is 195.

Unless the Secretary challenges the statement of the Bureau of Navigation, how can he allow to stand uncorrected his words of last Saturday?

And these were the words:

Of all the crass follies that were ever perpetrated on a nation, the worst was the blocking of our efforts to begin the groundwork of a great merchant marine.

I leave the words of the Secretary of the Treasury to speak for themselves and leave anybody to judge of their truthfulness in the light of our experience since the defeat of the ship-purchase bill and in the light of what is transpiring in American shipyards.

Mr. President, I said this bill would not afford relief even if an emergency exists.

By the terms of the bill itself we can not buy ships of the citizens of any of the several belligerent nations now at war. This closes the doors to any purchases from Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria, Russia, Italy, and Belgium.

The citizens of neutral maritime nations who have ships are not permitted under their laws to sell. And our own American shipyards, crowded to full capacity, have orders awaiting that will require at least, according to all estimates, two years to fill. Where will the Government buy and where will the Government build under the terms of this bill?

When would there be an emergency that in time of such vast national indebtedness, involving appropriations for the year amounting to $1,500,000,000, with the ingenuity of statesmen taxed to the utmost to devise forms and subjects of taxation to meet it all, which would justify a measure like this?

What, I say, would be the emergency that would in the eyes of the American people justify this extraordinary proposal of Government ownership involving $50,000,000 of expenditure at the outstart and leading no one knows where.

When commerce languishes or dies, when prices wane and profits fail, when business depression and stagnation exist or are imminent, when these conditions assume the proportions of a national evil all because the ships are wanting to get our goods to the markets, hungry and anxious to get them, we may then say there is an emergency, one that would justify us in doing this thing for which there is no constitutional authority. For power to regulate commerce is not the power to engage in commerce or own the instrumentalities of commerce, and a power like this not conferred should be exercised only in the face of impending national injury, in the exercise of a power of sovereignty which may be above the Constitution itself, but which is akin to the law of self-preservation.

But here we are; shipbuilding going on at a rate unparalleled, exports in quantities and values beyond the wildest dreams. American individual capital, enterprise, and commercial genius are doing it, and we are prating about an emergency that will justify this vast expenditure, leading, as it will, to the discouragement of that individual initiative and enterprise in which we have always boasted and which is the source in the last analysis of all our greatness.

I feel like saying in common parlance, "Try it on." Let other great and beneficial measures of legislation go by the board. Let the immigration bill, affecting deeply, as it does, our social, industrial, and political life, the one great measure which organized labor everywhere in the United States demands for its just protection—let that beneficial measure go by the board with the rest. "Try it on," I say, and then make your defense and your apologies to a people whose sense of what is fitting, of what is just and fair to them, of what is a wise policy for the Government, has been shocked and outraged by the time spent in the effort and by the final passage of the Shipping Bill.

Mr. SHERMAN addressed the Senate. After having spoken for more than an hour,

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator yield for me to submit a unanimous-consent proposal in this matter? I did not want to interrupt the Senator, but the afternoon is passing, Senators may be going away, and in order to submit the proposal we shall have to have a quorum present. I ask the Senator if he will allow me to submit a proposal for unanimous consent?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Florida that if he proposes to fix a time for a vote I do not think that we are yet ready for that.

Mr. FLETCHER. That was to be the suggestion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will yield the floor probably in the course of an hour. If I do not get through this evening, I would like to have the floor in the morning.

Mr. FLETCHER. My proposal was to limit debate to five minutes after 4 o'clock to-morrow, and the proposer of an amendment to be allowed 10 minutes. That would bring us somewhere down to about 6 o'clock.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I will state that nobody in this direction can hear anything of the proceedings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is complaint of the colloquy that the Senators can not be heard.

Mr. SMOOT. It would be hardly worth while to ask unanimous consent and have a quorum called if there would be some one who would then object to the agreement.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator from Illinois yield for that purpose?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois understand that if he is taken from the floor by a roll call he will lose his right to the floor?

Mr. JONES. I suggest that the Senator from Florida put off his request for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois will be taken from his feet and he will have to be rerecognized.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I would lose the floor, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to submit to the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Florida this question: The Chair recalls that a predecessor in the chair ruled that where a Senator yielded for the call of a quorum he yielded his place on the floor and would have to be rerecognized. The Chair does not think that ought to be visited on the Senator from Illinois unless he understands that to be the result.

Mr. FLETCHER. I withdraw the request for the present.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Chair that since then the Senate has passed on that very question and a Senator now does not lose his place on the floor by the interruption unless a Senator from the floor requests the Chair to enforce that rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was only solicitous that no wrong be done any Senator through misunderstanding what is his right.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to take exception to the statement of the Senator from Utah. That is not the rule of this body and never has been.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree it is not; I will say it was a ruling.

Mr. GALLINGER. A ruling.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it is the disposition of the Senate not to have a Senator lose his place by virtue of the call of a quorum. This occupant of the chair will certainly enforce that which seems more just. Does the Senator from Florida yield the floor to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FLETCHER. I withdraw the suggestion and request the Senator from Illinois to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN resumed his speech. After having spoken in all about two hours and a quarter,

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator be willing to yield to a motion to adjourn or to take a recess?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest to the Senator from Florida that the motion be made either to adjourn or to take a recess. The Senator from Illinois will yield for that purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will yield for that purpose, with the understanding that I may complete my remarks in the morning.

Mr. FLETCHER. If it is agreeable to the Senator from Illinois, I should like to have him go on until the usual hour for recess or adjournment.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator is tired and does not want to speak any longer to-day—

Mr. PENROSE. I do not think the Senator is tired, but his speech is so impressive and interesting I should like more Senators to hear him, and I was about to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. PENROSE. Very well, if the Senator is going to move an adjournment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to suggest that if it is practically agreed that we shall vote on this bill to-morrow, we ought to take a recess in place of an adjournment.

Mr. SMOOT. It will not make any difference.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; it does. If we adjourn, we shall probably consume an hour or two in routine morning business and matters connected with it.

[Mr. SHERMAN's speech is printed entire in the Senate proceedings of August 15, 1916.]

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, August 15, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.
